"Rebutting the revisionist studies of Benson and McCormick, Cole . . . [attempts to] explain the shape of politics in the Granite State. He contends that there was continuity from the party of Jefferson to the party of Jackson, that Democrats and Whigs represented opposing regional and economic groups, that there was genuine disagreement between the parties on significant issues, and that therefore the concept of 'Jacksonian Democracy' is valid for New Hampshire. In support of his thesis he traces the rises of Isaac Hill's Republican faction to dominance between 1822 and 1829 and provides a detailed analysis of the 1832 presidential election, correlating votes by towns with geographic, economic, and religious variables." (J Am Hist)

"What this study sets out to do, it does well. The book's weakness, however, lies in the narrowness of what it sets to do. From the outset it proceeds on the assumption that political development may be entirely seen through the public rhetoric and private machinations of prominent politicians. It takes politicians' talk too seriously. Party organization and legislative activity, while frequently alluded to, are treated only from that limited perspective. . . . Those in the ivied East who share the author's narrow and elitist assumptions about the nature of history may find this a wholly satisfying study. There will be others, I fear, who will be exasperated by its calm anachronism." L. L. Marshall

Ann Am Acad 399:215 Ja '72 600w

"A study of Jacksonian politics in New Hampshire is long overdue, in view of its importance to the Democratic party on the national scene. Cole uses most of the newer tools of quantitative historical political analysis to tell the story. . . . On occasion the book falls short of its aims as the author offers stronger conclusions than are warranted by the evidence presented."

Choice 8:604 Je '71 140w

"[The author's] methodology is open to criticism, as is his interpretation of the crucial gubernatorial election of 1827, but his argument is skillfully presented. . . . Cole highlights the furor in 1829 over the management of the Portsmouth branch of the Bank of the United States, probably exaggerating the relationship of this incident to Jackson's decision to attack the bank. He deals effectively with the careers of Hill, Woodbury, and Pierce in national politics, explaining the basis of their pro-southern attitudes. Cole's interpretations should engender controversy." R. P. McCormick

J Am Hist 58:746 D '71 380w

COLE, HERBERT M., jt. ed. African art & leadership. See Fraser, D.

COLE, MARGARET. The life of G. D. H. Cole. 304p pl $10 St Martins

B or 92 Cole, George Douglas Howard
SBN 333-00216-4 LC 72-164666

"In this biography of her husband, Dame Margaret Cole sets forth the . . . range of his activities, from his initial fellowship at Oxford in 1912 through his numerous research directorships in the labor movement, his participation in general strikes, Labour Party politics, union leadership, pioneer efforts in adult education, Fabian Society strategies, as book publisher, [author] newspaper correspondent, constant New Statesman contributor and one-time editor, a professor at Oxford, and [al] leader of the 'Cole Group' which rivaled the J. M. Keynes' circle at Cambridge." (New Repub) Chronology. Index. List of books by G. D. H. Cole.

Choice 9:867 S '72 170w

"[Dame Margaret Cole] has written a lively and candid biography to prove her husband was . . . as a writer and and above all a teacher, a formative influence on the Labour movement for half a century."

Economist 241:xi N 6 '71 370w

Reviewed by Max Beloff

Encounter 38:62 F '72 800w

"[This book] resembles most an extravagantly long account of a notable man's achievements in Who's Who. There is not one remembered conversation, not a single dramatic scene, a confrontation, a challenge, a tender exchange, an obstacle triumphantly overcome, or a bitter disappointment. Cole as a human being remains an effectively preserved mystery. . . . Perhaps someone someday who knew him better than his wife, or who has the will and the ability to communicate that which perhaps she has withheld, will tell us who he really was." M. J. Ulmer

New Repub 166:27 Ap 15 '72 800w

"Wives rarely make good biographers of their husbands. Dame Margaret Cole is the exception. She was associated with Cole's political activities almost from the first and presents them with some of his own clarity. Occasionally she slips too much from biography into general history and sometimes she exaggerates the importance of what were really coterie affairs. Broadly speaking she holds the balance right. She is equally admirable on the personal side of the story: frank as only a wife can be, devoted and yet without illusions. Cole was often prim, even priggish, and might easily have turned into a figure of fun. He was redeemed by an innocent sincerity which Dame Margaret has fully recaptured." A. J. P. Taylor

New Statesman 82:441 O 1 '71 1600w

Reviewed by Paul Johnson

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ja 7 '73 250w

"The problem of how to divide one's energies between doing, writing, and teaching comes up . . . sharply when one considers the life of G. D. H. Cole, described most vividly and with admirable detachment yet devotion by his wife. . . . [Her book is] more a lively narrative than an ideological analysis (with gorgeous asides like the visit of the Webbs, bearing a moderate-sized cod as an offering to the young couple) is first-rate reading, even for those with no particular socialist sympathies."

TLS p1391 N 5 '71 550w

COLE, MICHAEL. The cultural context of learning and thinking. See The cultural context of learning and thinking

COLE, MICHELLE. Checking it out; some Lower East Side kids discover the rest of America, by Michelle Cole and Stuart Black. 324p il $5.95 Dial press

917.3 U.S.—Description and travel
LC 74-14374

"This report of a cross-country car tour taken by a group of ghetto adolescents is in the form of a daily journal. . . . The kids' own photographs complement those taken by a professional." (Library J)

"The accounts are straightforward and liberally spiced with gut responses in ghetto vernacular. The experiences recounted go a long way in describing our country's shocking weaknesses as well as its heart-warming strengths. . . . The thoughts and reactions of the group leaders intensely portray the conflicts encountered in attempting to explain to the kids what they were experiencing together. Unfortunately, many readers will be offended by the honest reporting and thereby be blinded to a unique view of their country." P. E. McDowell

Library J 96:4023 D 1 '71 70w

"[Cole and Black] chronicle their experiences in journal entries—the boys' first horseback rides in Yellowstone Park, a deluxe weekend at San Francisco's Fairmont Hotel, a visit to a Hollywood studio, a meeting with Chicano activists in New Mexico. Their tale recalls encounters with stiff-necked hotel personnel in Toronto, obtuse waitresses in roadside stands, dull-minded policemen in Montana, pretty girls in Los Angeles, friendly college students on many campuses—for the rest of America had much to discover in them. . . . A both depressing and encouraging picture of our land today."

N Y Times Bk R p34 Ap 9 '72 180w

COLE, WILLIAM. ed. Oh, that's ridiculous! poems sel. by William Cole; drawings by Tomi Ungerer. 80p lib bdg $3.75 Viking 821.08 Nonsense verses—Juvenile literature.

Poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature
SBN 670-52107-8 LC 70-183334

Limericks and nonsense rhymes by various authors, including Gelett Burgess, Ogden Nash,

Theodore Roethke, A. E. Housman, and others. "Grades four to seven." (Library J)

"Cole's third collection of nonsense poetry strives to include less familiar verses than the oft anthologized (and better) ones by Lear, Carroll, et al. . . . Though not as good as . . . Oh, What nonsense [BRD 1966] and Oh, How Silly [BRD 1971] this collection does contain enough goodies to tickle the slightly sadistic juvenile funny bone and make the book an acceptable addition for libraries with no budget problems." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 97:2236 Je 15 '72 90w

"Neither the poems nor the accompanying Unger drawings seem quite as hilarious as they might. There are saving exceptions, though: the Spike Milligan poems and illustrations possess a demonic, angry-young-mannish freshness. So does Michael Dennis Browne's 'Song for Joey,' and Shel Silverstein's comment on the causes and consequences of war is strikingly apposite." L. E. Sissman

N Y Times Bk R p8 Je 25 '72 130w

COLE, WILLIAM. ed. Pick me up; a book of short short poems. 183p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

808.81 Poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature
LC 78-165103

An anthology of over 200 poems. "divided into seven parts: Beginnings, 'The Wit of Poets,' 'The Poetry of Wit,' 'The Things of Nature,' 'Portraits,' 'Pictures,' and 'Ends.' . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

"This is a delightfully varied collection of world-wide poetry. There are poems of wit, sad poems, descriptive poems, poems of life and death, nature poems, and fanciful poems. Some are by well-known poets (Frost, Whitman, Nash, and Milne); others are by lesser knowns (Kinnell, Ignatow, Morgenstern, and Vaughan). There are many traditional rhymes and anonymous verses. . . . Though it lacks illustrations, the brevity of these poems may make this book appealing to reluctant readers who have heretofore been discouraged by poetry." S. F. Rinkoff

Library J 97:2482 Jl '72 120w

"[This is] indisputably superior to [the same editor's Oh, That's Ridiculous! BRD 1972]. 'Pick Me Up' takes . . . good poems that happen to be short—not all, by any means, poems written specifically for children—and puts them into a small, handy format with big type and a pleasing series of subject headings. . . . Mr. Cole is bracingly untroubled by introducing serious poets—Blake, Coleridge, Goethe, Herbert, Hopkins, Keats, Pound, Robinson, Yeats—and serious subjects—war, death, greed, ingratitude, sloth, corruption of power, unrequited love—as well as purely joyous ones. His tasteful and judicious selection cannot help introduce a child to the real world, and to the world of real poetry." L. E. Sissman

N Y Times Bk R p8 Je 25 '72 130w

COLE, WILLIAM. Poems from Ireland; sel. by William Cole; drawings by William Stobbs. 237p $4.50 Crowell

821.08 Irish poetry—Collections
ISBN 0-690-63898-1 LC 77-132294

The poems in this anthology spanning twelve centuries "tell of country pastimes, of the vagaries of love and of the weather; there are . . . commentaries on the state of the nation and the conditions of the neighbors' souls; [and] there are the laments for martyred rebels. . . . Arranged alphabetically rather than chronologically, the poems end with selections from Yeats." (Horn Bk) Brief biographies of the poets are included. Indexes of poets, of titles, and of first lines.

"This is that rare thing for an anthology (or almost any book of poems)—a book you read through from start to finish, as if you have to find out what happens. . . . There's hardly a poem here without one or two lines that come alive and touch something in you. Cole has not only a sure sense of 'the real thing' but a wide range of enthusiasm: Many occasions and moods, passing and deep, are spoken for. . . . The familiar names are here . . . but the book is drawn less from 'names' as from what the anthologist likes. And he likes the work of a good many of the younger poets." Jean Valentine.

COLE, WILLIAM—Continued

Book World p10 My 28 '72 450w

Choice 9:1291 D '72 180w

"[The editor] has returned to the high standards set by some of his earlier collections and compiled an outstanding volume of Irish poetry. . . . Although there is little that is intellectual or metaphysical in the poems (with the exception of Patrick MacDonough's 'Donna's Oaks Were Still,' an eloquent expression of the existential predicament), they are filled with an earthy, almost pagan sense of life that leaves no room for artificiality. . . . It is a tribute to [Yeats'] colleagues that his verses seem a natural culmination to the poems that have gone before. Understated woodcuts evoke the brooding rural beauty of Ireland." S. D. L.

Horn Bk 48:277 Je '72 230w

"Revealed is a poetic richness of language and ideas, both in those poems translated from Irish and in those originally written in English. Stobbs' illustrations add to the haunting mood of the lyrics, which range in subject matter from descriptions of rural life to rebel laments. . . . At a time when Ireland is much in the news, Cole's selections will be of interest to high-school students." Anne O'Toole

Library J 97:3811 N 15 '72 100w [YA]

COLE, WILLIAM, ed. The poet's tales; a new book of story poems; il. by Charles Keeping. 320p $6.95 World pub.

821.08 English poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature. American poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature. Children's poetry
LC 72-101841

The selections in this volume are "grouped into eight categories: 'Strange and Mysterious,' 'Characters and Individualists,' 'Birds, Beasts, and Bugs,' 'Adventures and Disasters,' 'Love Stories,' 'Fighting Men,' 'At Sea,' and 'Odd and Funny.' . . . Grade six and up." (Library J) Index of authors. Index of titles. Index of first lines.

"The choice of poems, whether by famous masters, by lesser knowns or anonymous, is intelligent and tasteful. The selections are readable enough to appeal to recalcitrant readers and may even convert poetry haters. Cole's latest effort at anthologizing differs from his Story Poems, New and Old [BRD 1957] in that it includes such modern poems as Conrad Aiken's 'And in the Hanging Garden' and J. P. Donleavy's 'When I brought the News.' On the other hand, it is regrettable that Cole fails to include such old favorites as O. W. Holmes' 'The Deacon's Masterpiece' and Longfellow's 'Paul Revere's Ride' . . . The young adults at whom this book is supposedly aimed probably never have encountered these and should not be deprived of poems that are traditionally accepted as masterpieces within their genre." Daisy Kouzel

Library J 97:1920 My 15 '72 250w [YA]

"While the anthology has many old favorites and folk ballads, it also includes some new narrative poems by May Swenson, Alastair Reid, and others. The selection is discriminating, the lively preface is actually addressed to young readers rather than to adults, and the illustrations are striking." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 55:84 Ap 22 '72 60w

COLEMAN, DOROTHY GABE. Rabelais; a critical study in prose fiction. 241p $11.50 Cambridge

843 Rabelais, François
ISBN 0-521-08125-4 LC 76-173822

This study views Rabelais "as a literary artist giving special attention to the form and language of his fiction. Mrs Coleman . . . sees him as finding a particular form—Menippean satire—in which he could achieve a balance between seriousness and irony, involvement and detachment, direct address to the reader and distance, and in which he was able to develop his own unique language." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"A study which is admirable in its attempt to put some of the laughter back in Rabelais (as well as to view him as a creative artist, rather than a philosopher or moralist). Coleman has done scholarship a service in challenging the categorization of the Gargantua-Pantagruel cycle as novelistic in conception, suggesting Menippean satire instead. . . . [Her book is] a highly readable, interesting effort of somewhat limited scholarly scope (American opinions are practically nonexistent for the author). Helpful index, scanty bibliography. For graduate student consideration."

Choice 9:513 Je '72 180w

"The magic words 'Menippean satire' (in Dr Coleman's special sense) sound uncomfortably like an incantation as they are invoked time after time to explain some already familiar phenomenon. . . . When it comes to linguistic analysis [she] shows the same tendency to employ impressive words to account for the obvious. . . . This pleasantly scholarly book results in neither a new nor a full interpretation of Rabelais's great work."

TLS p1389 N 5 '71 550w

COLEMAN, J. WINSTON, ed. Kentucky; a pictorial history [by] J. Winston Coleman, Jr., ed. [and others]. 256p $7.95 Univ. press of Ky.

917.69 Kentucky—History
ISBN 0-8131-1256-7 LC 74-160043

"Approximately one-third of the book traces Kentucky history chronologically up to the end of the Civil War. The balance of the book is arranged by broad subject areas, with an emphasis on social and cultural aspects of Kentucky life." (Library J)

"This impressive book could stand as a model for other pictorial representations of state and local history. . . . [This is] a clear and occasionally unique portrait of Kentucky. . . . The text is clear and accurate, but it is the photographs which lift this book above the ordinary. Many of them are rare, some are in color, and none are extraneous. The section on mountain culture and crafts is particularly effective. The book is well bound and designed, and its price is astonishingly low. However, the absence of an index may limit reference use." Mark Neyman
Library J 97:679 F 15 '72 170w

"The material in this pictorial history . . . is unfortunately put together in a format which is not very cohesive. It may be odd in a literary journal to criticize a book for its visual aspects, but here the jumbling together of text and photographs, often colored and uncolored on the same page, presents a positive barrier to the absorbing information the book contains."

Va Q R 48:1xxiv spring '72 70w

COLEMAN, LESLEY. A book of time. 144p il col il $5.95 Nelson

529 Time
ISBN 0-8407-6144-9 LC 73-164969

The "author recounts the history of the measurement of time from the era of Sumerian priests, who in 3,000 B.C. made the first respectable calendar, to the atomic clocks at Greenwich [England], which err only one second every 1,000 years. . . . The book also considers some . . . hypotheses about space-time relationships and some general notions about time as relative rather than as linear." (Horn Bk) Bibliography. Index.

"Unfortunately, because of long and difficult quotes from dated sources, because of unsubstantial explanations, and because of confusing alternations of past and present occurrences, the writing fails to enlighten the reader properly about many aspects of the subject. A few more drawings and illustrations might have helped, although most of the illustrative material has been perfectly chosen. The elegant production of the book lends value to the not always satisfactory presentation of the fascinating subject." A. L. S.

Horn Bk 48:158 Ap '72 240w

"[This book is for] backward-looking mortals who like science a shade fantastical. [It is] packed with curious information about calendar changes and clockmakers." Clair Tomalin

New Statesman 81:783 Je 4 '71 30w

"Intriguing questions [are] comprehensively answered in this pleasant book. The mysteries of time zones and the international date line, and the significance of the six pips time signal are also clarified. But it is more difficult to explain the nature of time itself. This is a good subject, well treated in text and illustrations."

TLS p778 Jl 2 '71 80w

COLEMAN, RICHARD P. Social status in the city [by] Richard P. Coleman [and] Bernice L. Neugarten. 320p $9.75 Jossey-Bass

301.44 Social classes. Kansas City, Missouri Social conditions
ISBN 0-87589-081-4 LC 70-132820

A "study of social status in Kansas City. Methods were adapted from earlier studies in smaller communities as well as data that had already been gathered by a local social science research organization. From their modifications [the authors] have developed an Index of Urban Status and offer guidelines for its use in future comparisons. . . . Several changes in the concept of status were presented, including the educational level of the wife, the newer status perceptions of the professional and research categories [and the] inclusion of a working class." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[A] critical problem is the description and rationale of the multidimensional Index of Urban Status itself and the authors' general failure to incorporate in any serious way the recent advances in statistical and methodological techniques in building and evaluating such an index. . . . [Nevertheless, the book] is enjoyable to read as well as intellectually stimulating. Nowhere is this feature more evident than in the second part . . . which provides stimulating ethnographies of the five major classes and their subdivisions, filled with perceptive insights and suggestive interpretations well worth following up in future studies. . . . [However] the final chapter, while . . . filled with speculations about the changing nature of the American 'class structure' in the 1960s, is almost totally devoid of citation or discussion of the relevant current literature." E. O. Laumann

Am J Soc 78:268 J1 '72 1800w

"Methods of delineating the status structure are excellent. The index and scale would be appropriate for other urban areas. . . . Highly recommended as outside reading for courses in sociology, behavioral science, and social research."

Choice 8:1095 O '71 170w

"The many vignettes of the life-styles at various status levels are genuinely interesting reading, for the authors' style is lucid and jargon-free. . . . [The book] will raise the hackles of both hard-nosed methodologists and conflict theorists. . . . [It] is methodologically sparse in that key research steps are not spelled out. The authors also present only a fraction of the vast quantity of data on which their conclusions must have been based. The book is thin in theory as well. . . . The conception of society implied throughout this work is static, or at best evolutionary. . . . Perhaps the best part of the book is the authors' delineation of the Kansas City status system circa 1955." D. A. Tennant

Contemp Social 1:436 S '72 700w

COLEMAN, TERRY. Going to America. [Eng title: Passage to America]. 317p pl $8.95 Pantheon bks.

325.73 U.S.—Immigration and emigration. Irish in the U.S. British in the U.S.
ISBN 0-394-47988-2 LC 79-39602

This book concerns "emigrants—who they were, and why they left, and how, and what happened then. . . . [It describes the experiences of those] who left Great Britain and Ireland in 1846-55." (Foreword) Bibliography. Index.

"The terrible story of the Irish famine refugees has been told before, but there was a great deal of emigration from the rest of Britain to the United States going on at the same period. Mr. Coleman has written a thoroughly interesting history of the whole emigrant traffic, with much detail on individual experiences, the ramshackle lack of government control on both sides of the Atlantic, and the intractability of shipping companies." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:113 Je '72 70w

Reviewed by Rev. J. M. Murphy

Best Sell 32:164 J1 '72 450w

Choice 9:711 J1/Ag '72 130w

Christian Century 89:672 Je 7 '72 50w

"This moving book . . . reveals our lamentable dependence on myth rather than history for knowledge of the past. While the United States did turn out to be the promised land for many newcomers, it did so particularly for those who arrived with some cash and physical strength. . . . The conditions under which the steerage passengers made the journey were no better than those of a concentration camp. . . . The length of the journey itself doomed many of the weak and aged. . . . This is a worthy, readable book that misses being a major one. The author has failed to encompass his subject and to set the heart-rending stories, meticulously dredged out of the documents of the period, into a solid historical matrix."

Economist 243:55 Ap 15 '72 400w

Reviewed by Dorothy Sinclair

Library J 97:2087 Je 1 '72 140w

"Coleman is a journalist, but also a thoughtful social historian and a first-rate writer."

New Repub 166:24 Mr 25 '72 280w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett

New Statesman 83:492 Ap 14 '72 1600w

"This is a book which is essential reading for British social historians, and for other historians tempted to consider Ireland and the Irish during the mid-century in purely statistical terms. But it is, as the foreword explains, primarily about the emigrants themselves. There will be few readers who will not find the story compulsive."

TLS p1096 S 22 '72 330w

COLEMAN, WILLIAM. Biology in the nineteenth century: problems of form, function, and transformation. 187p il $7.50; pa $3.95 Wiley

574 Biology—History

ISBN 0-471-16496-8; 0-471-16497-6 (pa)

LC 73-151725

"Coleman takes as his theme the emergence of biology as a science in its own right during the 19th century. Tracing its emergence, he discusses . . . the development and interrelationships between such fields as cell theory, embryology, and evolutionary theory (including historical geology); the beginnings of biochemistry; and the development of an experimental attitude among biologists toward the end of the century." (Library J) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[This book is] addressed to a wider audience than that composed of specialists. [It] is essentially a series of connected essays, not attempting to be comprehensive, but selecting for thoughtful treatment a certain few of the major preoccupations of the biologists of the period. Coleman is well read in the biological literature of the time and has chosen important problems. . . . He emphasizes the contrast between historical and mechanical explanation, and deals ably with repercussions from neighboring fields such as linguistics and sociology. There are a few well chosen illustrations. The writing does not appear to be well suited to the audience sought. The style is anything but limp; it abounds in unfortunate choices of wording and ambiguous phraseology."

Choice 8:1345 D '71 180w

"This informative and well-written book presents an interesting point of view, and anyone who has had a good elementary course in biology should be able to follow it without much difficulty." B. L. Stern

Library J 97:886 Mr 1 '72 120w

COLERIDGE, SAMUEL TAYLOR. Coleridge on Shakespeare; the text of the lectures of 1811-12; ed. by R. A. Foakes; pub. for the Folger Shakespeare Library. (Folger monographs on Tudor and Stuart civilization, no 3) 171p $5.75 Univ. press of Va.

822.3 Shakespeare, William—Criticism, interpretation, etc.

SBN 8139-0340-8 LC 78-150748

"The only substantial text of a series of lectures on Shakespeare by S. T. Coleridge is that provided by J. P. Collier's Seven Lectures on Shakespeare and Milton (1856). His text of these . . . lectures given by Coleridge in 1811-12 has been the basic of all modern editions. . . . This new edition is based on hitherto unpublished transcripts of the lectures, now in the Folger Shakespeare Library, made by Collier when, as a young man, he attended Coleridge's lectures . . . seeking to take down [the poet's] words accurately. Professor Foakes' Introduction and Appendices demonstrate the extent to which Collier revised and altered Coleridge's words for the edition he published forty-five years later." (Publisher's note) Index.

"One must be very grateful to R. A. Foakes for bringing us a little closer to Coleridge's original voice in his lectures of 1811 and 1812."

COLERIDGE, S. T.—Continued

... We are still not quite within earshot of Coleridge. . . . Professor Foakes' introduction makes clear how often the later additions and 'improvements,' while not material in themselves, change the tone of a passage from (to use the Coleridgean distinction) 'I-thinking' to 'Thoughts on Shakespeare.' M. M. Mahood Encounter 38:55 D '71 300w
Library J 97:60 Ja 1 '72 70w

"Unfortunately, . . . Collier's reputation is not, nor was it even in 1856, a savoury one. . . . As one authority has summed it up: 'No statement of his can be accepted without verification, and no manuscript he has handled without careful examination, but he did much useful work.' It is against a background of this kind that Professor Foakes has prepared this edition. . . . [He has given] parallel versions of some passages in Lecture 9 which do much to illustrate the whole process at work. . . . But not all Professor Foakes's ingenuity can establish a strong case for really wanton interpolations. . . . It is excellent that [he] should have published this alternative version . . . [but] it is greatly to be hoped that Collier's proverbially bad name may not lead to the super-session of his carefully considered version by this rougher product that is also his, in the fond hope that the latter is 'more authoritative.' There is, we believe, not the slightest doubt that Collier did his job in 1856 as well and as honestly as he could and had no thought in his mind but to render as faithfully as possible the great experience in which he had participated so many years before. Professor Foakes's notes and general editing are full, illuminating and accurate."

TLS p1033 Ag 27 '71 950w

Va Q R 48:lvii spring '72 110w

COLERIDGE, SAMUEL TAYLOR. The collected works of Samuel Taylor Coleridge; v 1. Lectures 1795 on politics and religion; ed. by Lewis Patton and Peter Mann. 512p $15 Princeton univ. press

824 Political science. Christianity
LC 68-10201

This latest volume of the Bollingen Series 75, collecting the works of Coleridge under the general editorship of Kathleen Coburn, "recovers the series of lectures on politics and religion which the 23-year-old Coleridge delivered in Bristol during 1795. [For volume 2 of the collected works, The Watchman, and volume 4, The Friend, see BRD 1970]. Index." (Choice)

"[Another] volume of the magisterial collected Coleridge. . . . Only the Conciones ad populum has been easily available before. The [other lectures] are here published for the first time, or could be found only in scarce editions. The editorial apparatus is formidable, including ample chronological tables, textual variants, MS. fragments, contemporary newspaper accounts, and copious notes identifying Coleridge's (often unstated) sources. A truly prodigious index will be of inestimable value to scholars. The 58-page introduction provides a rich fund of historical and biographical background, illuminating much that has been hitherto obscure, especially Coleridge's considerable debts to Hartley, Priestley, and a host of lesser personages. His intellectual development can no longer be studied without close attention to these lectures. Indispensable for graduate school libraries."

Choice 8:674 J1 '71 160w

TLS p929 Ag 6 '71 1300w

COLERIDGE, SAMUEL TAYLOR. The rime of the ancient mariner; il. by C. Walter Hodges. unsp 5.95; lib bdg $4.97 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

821
LC 70-156956

This "picture-book version of Coleridge's . . . poem . . . [reflects] the changing moods of the narrative." (Publisher's note) "Grades three to seven." (Library J)

"Hodges has captured . . . the weird mystical quality of the Ancient Mariner telling his dreadful story to the bridegroom. . . . Although most of the illustrations first appeared as part of Encyclopaedia Britannica filmstrips, they have adapted well to the printed page and do much to enhance the poetry." Sharon Karmazin

Library J 97:772 F 15 '72 60w

"The romantic pictures would help quite a young child through the text. . . . [This book is] well worth having."

TLS p1328 O 22 '71 20w

COLES, ROBERT. Children of crisis, v2. See Coles, R. Migrants, sharecroppers, mountaineers

COLES, ROBERT. Children of crisis, v3. See Coles, R. South goes North

COLES, ROBERT. Farewell to the South. (An Atlantic monthly press bk) 408p $7.95 Little 917.5 Southern States. Southern States—Race relations
ISBN 0-316-15158-0 LC 72-638

A postlude to the author's Children of Crisis (BRD 1967, 1968) this is a collection of articles written over the past nine years for such magazines as The New Republic, Daedalus, The New Yorker and others, "augmented by Coles to show what he 'learned during the sixties about the South and some Southerners, and how it has all changed.' . . . [His] farewell is to the Southern families whom he no longer visits regularly; he speaks, however, of the old South's abandonment of tradition and custom and of its now accomplished assimilation into America—politically, economically, and culturally." (Library J)

Reviewed by T. H. Clancy

America 127:326 O 21 '72 300w

Best Sell 32:227 Ag 15 '72 650w

"Most of the articles in the first two sections . . . were written when Coles was in the midst of researching 'Children of Crisis.' While these pieces are interesting, well-written, and valuable in their own right, it is the essays in the third section, 'Changes,' written in 1971, that give this work its raison d'être because it is here that the author offers a perspective, and new information, on his previous work. . . . The most surprising and interesting essay in this book is the last one, 'The Observer and the Observed.' In it Coles candidly explains not only his own motivations for taking up what was to become a life's work but also the peculiar hazards that he, as a psychiatrist trained to spot instances of psychopathology, faced in dealing with 'normal' people." H. L. Van Brunt

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 16 '72 800w

"As in the past, [Coles] uses quotations effectively in showing the turmoil of school integration, elementary through college. He brings insight into the convictions, uncertainties, and occasional despair of the student activist and the Southern teacher. There are studies of Stokely Carmichael, Lester Maddox, and James Baldwin, as well as reviews of several books about the South. . . . Recommended." H. J. DuBois

Library J 97:2110 Je 1 '72 190w

Reviewed by Jared Lobdell

Nat R 24:1189 O 27 '72 210w

"An effort at summation by a writer who has scrutinized the South in recent years with as much tenacity as any other, and with results that are rivaled—in the breadth of their understanding and compassion—only by the work of C. Vann Woodward [The Burden of Southern History, BRD 1961. Coles's] . . . eagerness to listen has enabled him to go back and forth between the two racial worlds of the South, even to act as a messenger between them. He has gotten inside not merely the heads of Southern blacks and whites, but their hearts as well. . . . [There are] things about the South that only rarely come to the surface, and Coles brings them out." Jonathan Yardley
N Y Times Bk R p3 Ag 6 '72 1900w

New Yorker 48:71 S 2 '72 130w

"[The book] presents a panorama of major social change seen through the eyes of a most informed, open, and compassionate 'Yankee visitor.' Dr. Coles . . . is as alert to the complex cultural background as to the more obvious political chicanery. The essays contain their share of anger and sometimes what seems in retrospect an overly generous hope; but, overall, they are moving human documents, chronicles not only of a time passed and a place still changing but of a sensibility that is reflective, fair, and open always to the human heart."

Sat R 55:80 O 21 '72 250w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks
Time 100:61 Ag 28 '72 430w

COLES, ROBERT. The geography of faith.
See Berrigan, D.

COLES, ROBERT. Migrants, sharecroppers, mountaineers. (An Atlantic monthly press bk) 653p col il $12.50 Little 331.5 Migrant labor. Farm tenancy. Poor—Southern States. Child study

LC 76-162331

This book and the following volume continue the studies begun with the author's Children of Crisis; a study of courage and fear (BRD 1967) which dealt with school desegregation. This volume "begins with an introduction to the landscape and to Coles's clinical method. He then goes on to describe in turn the lives of the children of migrant pickers, sharecroppers and poor whites in Appalachia, using materials from interviews carried on over many years and drawings made by these children. Next he attempts to delineate each representative social and economic community . . . [and some of the] local types: Bossman, Teacher, Sheriff, Preacher. . . . Finally, [he] generalizes about the rural experience." (N Y Times Bk R) Index.

Reviewed by M. J. Sheeran

America 126:541 My 20 '72 150w

"Coles has accumulated a vast social history in these volumes and his plan is to do the same for the southwestern part of the United States. His two decades of personal contact with the poor have produced great social descriptive documents. What seems to be lacking is a good social or sociological framework for viewing the social systems that he has depicted. Despite his rejection of the Freudian or other traditional psychiatric approaches, Dr. Coles is ambivalent about embracing explanations involving social influences. . . . He sees the system as evil and he sees no system. In short, he is full of contradictions or near-contradictions, I think, because the psychiatric mentality is individually oriented." J. J. Conlin

Best Sell 31:551 Mr 15 '72 150w

"[This] volume is well written and should be in every library. . . . Essential for the general reader, college student, and scholar. Useful bibliographical footnotes and index."

Choice 9:1166 N '72 70w

Reviewed by Joseph Epstein

Commentary 54:60 Ag '72 900w

"Coles has consistently demonstrated his skill in describing and characterizing complex segments of society with perception and sensitivity. Basic to the success of his studies has been the liberal use of quotations from taped interviews—quotations which capture better than a straight narrative ever could the convictions, personal tragedies, prejudices, frustrations, hopes, and spirit of dignity and pride of his subjects. . . . Countless children and their families are described and quoted and color plates reproduce the children's drawings, which mirror their fears and aspirations. This book makes a major contribution to the field of social science and suggests many avenues for social actions." H. J. DuBois

Library J 97:57 Ja 1 '72 170w

Reviewed by A. Z. Silver

Nation 215:53 Jl 24 '72 800w

Reviewed by H. M. Caudill

N Y Rev of Books 18:21 Mr 9 '72 1000w

"[Coles] has a basic attitude toward those not like him that is usually missing from such enterprises: respect. . . . [He] writes lucidly, and if he cleans up the language he records perhaps a bit past the point I would like, he has reasons for what he does in 'middle-classing' the speech. His writing is clean and sensitive, with at times a Biblical wash to it. His ear is open to the intent of the speaker. He writes clearly because he would be ashamed to take refuge in jargon. . . . Toward the end of Volume Two there is a token chapter about social change, but it is pallid next to the chapters in which one sees black child, black mother against a backdrop in which even the birds seem frozen in place—static as the children's drawings Coles reproduces with all their power and pathos." Marge Piercy

N Y Times Bk R p1 F 13 '72 1000w

Reviewed by H. L. Van Brunt

Sat R 55:69 Ap 11 '72 700w

COLES, ROBERT. The South goes North. (An Atlantic monthly press bk) 687p il col il $12.50 Little

301.3 Migration, Internal. Poor—Northern States. Child study
LC 70-162332

This volume "delineates the condition in the black ghettos of the northern cities. . . . Here Dr. Coles traces the migrations of millions of whites and blacks from Alabama, Mississippi's Delta Country and the hills and hollows of Eastern Kentucky and West Virginia to the big cities 'Up North.' . . . Coles's focus is on the wrench of readjustment endured by whole families and the despair and tragedy—the loneliness, humiliation, poverty and violence—they find almost invariably." (Publishers' Weekly) Index.

Reviewed by J. J. Conlin

Best Sell 31:551 Mr 15 '72 150w

"[This] volume is well written and should be in every library. . . . Essential for the general reader, college student, and scholar. Useful bibliographical footnotes and index."

Choice 9:1166 N '72 70w

Reviewed by Joseph Epstein

Commentary 54:60 Ag '72 900w

Reviewed by H. J. DuBois

Library J 96:57 Ja 1 '72 170w

Reviewed by A. Z. Silver

Nation 215:53 Jl 24 '72 800w

"Perhaps only a psychiatrist could enable the reader to glimpse so clearly the meaning of the poverty and rootlessness that mark the lives of so many people in our society. In [Coles's] books, poverty, drug addiction, welfarism, urban rioting, lawlessness, and racism cease to be abstractions. They are attached to living people and their emotions and insights become real and are shared. Suddenly one realizes what the 'urban crisis' is about, above all because Coles, especially in his third volume, has followed the rural poor from the ravaged countryside to the cities they flee to; and he understands what it means to make that trip. . . . These books should be read by every mayor and alderman, and city hall will be wise to present them as gifts to congressmen." H. M. Caudill

N Y Rev of Books 18:21 Mr 9 '72 1000w

"[This volume] follows a similar design [to the preceding one] but also contains studies of schools in various cities undergoing busing. Coles's treatment of the social world is thinner, in part because a child's world is more complicated in a Northern slum than in rural Alabama, in part because Coles's informants are themselves more sophisticated and warier. . . . This volume is less satisfying than the others, though valuable. It is more scattershot. . . . [However] Coles has a lot to say about what slow learners have learned so well that it turns them off in school. . . . These books would be useful to people trying to change this country, but few of those I have in mind have $25 to spare." Marge Piercy

N Y Times Bk R p1 F 13 '72 1000w

"America is touted as the land of opportunity, as the place where anyone can become President. In fact, as Robert Coles's three volumes make clear, it is as caste-ridden as any country in the world. . . . In a review of this limited scope I have been able to give no more than an outline of these books. They deserve to be read slowly and carefully, for they are works that can change lives. Children of Crisis might well make Robert Coles famous. But the real test of his work will be whether the conditions of the people he has made us aware of continue to be infamous." H. L. Van Brunt

Sat R 55:69 Ap 11 '72 700w

COLETTE. The other woman; tr. from the French and with an introd. by Margaret Crosland. 140p $6.95 Bobbs

ISBN 0-7206-0370-6 LC [70-856744]

"The 'unknown woman' is the theme of this collection of brief sketches written, mostly, for newspapers and magazines and brought together in English for the first time here." (Library J) This material was originally published in La Femme cachée, 1924, and Paysages et portraits, 1958.

"With the exception of 'My Friend Valentine,' the stories remain merely sketches. Missing and lamented is the rich enveloping texture of place and ambience. Characterization is indicated with a few deft strokes, action condensed to a single revelatory gesture. Still—it's Colette, which always means charm and sensual precision. But it's Colette on a middling day, with an unaccustomed pallor." A. G. Mojtabai

COLETTE.—Continued

Library J 97:84 Ja 1 '72 110w

Reviewed by Lucy Cadogan
New Statesman 82:54 J1 9 '71 90w

Reviewed by Nancy Hale
N Y Times Bk R p6 O 1 '72 260w

"The women [Colette] describes in [these sketches] are . . . imprisoned by the same world that nurtured Colette who after marrying into it, finally fought her way free through divorce, a term as an actress (which could explain the slightly melodramatic, scenic quality of The Landscape and The Murderer), and a career as a writer. . . . Colette's anatomy of marriage as an institution is exhaustive. . . . But the beauty of Colette's work is that she never preaches. She shows. . . . The world she both caressed and devastated depended on conceiving the heart as a muscle resolutely responding to the senses. That these stories still make one wince suggests she found at least a portion of the truth." Nancy Ryan

Sat R 55:74 Ap 1 '72 800w

"It is the earlier stories . . . which come [out] best. . . . Few of them are more than sketches of a situation, a character or a state of mind, but they are told sparsely; and although some of them are clearly makeweights, most show the acute understanding of women's character, and also their predicament, for which [Colette] is famous. The fact that it is always a woman's world, in which such men as do appear are clearly intruders, obviously imposes its limitations, but it is a woman's world from which men can learn. . . . By contrast with the pleasantly astringent taste of most of these earlier stories, My Friend Valentine, written at the end of Colette's life when she was enjoying the liberty of her fame and fortune, has a sickly, self-indulgent flavour."

TLS p986 Ag 20 '71 200w

COLETTE, Places; tr. from the French by David Le Vay; and with a foreword by Margaret Crosland. 157p il pl $6.95 Bobbs

843

LC [70-488953]

Drawn from five of her volumes of non-fiction, Places is a selection of descriptions of some of the places where Colette lived and visited. The first section "On the Move" opens with "Trois . . . Six . . . Neuf" describing Colette's early years in Paris. "The other two essays in this section take us respectively on the maiden voyage of the Normandie and around Scandinavia. These last, as well as the rest of the essays, come variously from En Pays Connu, Prisons et Paradis, Paysages et Portraits and Journal Intermittent. The next division, 'Away,' offers vignettes of Algeria and Morocco. . . . [The concluding section is entitled Home]." (America)

"[This is] a delightful selection. . . . [The] unforgettable word pictures about Colette's adventures in 'moving house' in her early years in Paris have the freshness of immediate occupancy. . . . The third and last part . . . has eleven pieces showing Colette's loved homeland with the fervor of one who sees France (as the last essay is called simply) as 'The Most Beautiful Country in the World.' . . . Perhaps it was the 'still severity' of the cat's watchfulness that made this creature her favorite, almost her symbol. Even in this little anthology the cat appears again and again." M. W. Hess

America 126:73 Ja 22 '72 440w

"The English reads smoothly, if Britishly. Colette is made to say, for instance, 'How bloody boring it is here! Or again, 'So that's what it's like, a proper Provencal garden?' A number of passages in this book have Colette's well known charm, but in general this is minor and inconsequential stuff, by no means indispensable to a college or university library."

Choice 9:220 Ap '72 140w

"Here Colette the novelist abdicates in favor of Colette the essayist. She captures in Vivid Logo-color the sights, the sounds, the flavors of places she has lived in or visited, including a fragile 'Swiss chalet' in Passy, an entresol too low-ceilinged to permit 'jumping for joy,' and an exotic Moroccan setting redolent of orange blossoms and grapefruit in flower. . . . No one writes like Colette any more. Hélas!

To read Colette's 'Places' is as good as being there, perhaps better." V. H.

Christian Science Monitor p9 D 23 '71 290w

Reviewed by A. G. Mojtabai
Library J 96:2487 Ag '71 90w

Reviewed by Nancy Hale
N Y Times Bk R p6 O 1 '72 260w

"There is reason to be grateful when any part of [Colette's] work is brought over into English for the first time. This collection . . . contains all of "Trois . . . Six . . . Neuf," which is about the considerable number of houses and apartments she lived in until she was dispossessed or found a better place—forty-six pages of pure delight. The rest . . . is one more example of the ungifted anthologist producing from several books that are full of variety and richness of every kind one thin, disappointing volume that does the author an injustice."

New Yorker 47:68 D 25 '71 190w

COLFAX, J. DAVID, ed. Radical sociology; ed. by J. David Colfax & Jack L. Roach. 492p $10 Basic bks.

301 Sociology—History
ISBN 0-465-06826-X LC 75-158441

"A collection of primarily previously published works by the people who have been the principal exponents and practitioners of radical sociology. . . . The first section of the book provides a radical critique of 'bourgeois sociology' and the last section presents a critique of radicalism in sociology. The two middle sections deal with the theoretical and conceptual issues in radical sociology and with radical research and practice. . . . Bibliography." (Choice) "Index." (Library J)

"This work is a landmark: (1) it collects in one place the separately published works of sociologists who have been working toward the radical transformation of America; (2) it makes a first attempt at organizing conceptually the materials in the first newly emerging field of sociology since Parsonian Functionalism of the late 1940's; and (3) it is a very uncomfortable book to read for both traditionally oriented sociologists and radical sociologists with an Old Left persuasion whose doctrinaire perspectives on reality are confounded by the presence of so many nonantagonistic contradictions within the writings of these exponents of New Left philosophies. . . . Highly recommended."

Choice 8:1649 F '72 210w

"[The volume] serves as a marker. It most obviously captures some dominant trends of the sixties by reflecting anger with the existent social order and contempt for the practice and vision of the sociology honored by Lipset and Smelser [in Sociology: The Progress of a Decade]. If at the beginning of the decade new left sociologists were critical of the dominant theoretical orientation, at the end many were questioning the perspective that had been seen as an alternative radical sociologists could commit themselves to. Scorn for the empirical studies that were one of the hallmarks of the 'mainstream' was being replaced at the decade's close by agreement with Birnbaum's remark that, after all, 'Marx himself designed a questionnaire.' All this is to be found in Radical Sociology, but little beyond it." Murray Hausknecht

Contempt Sociol 1:102 Mr '72 2500w
(Review essay)

"Radical sociology—the work primarily of young sociologists who are trying to come to grips with sociology and society as they are now and not as they were in the 1950's—contrary to the opinion of many of the by now anachronistic doyens of the discipline, has come not to destroy sociology, but to save it. This collection of readings should serve as a good introduction to the problems that have suddenly confronted sociology and to the efforts of some very thoughtful sociologists to cope with them. Recommended."

L. S. Kaplan
Library J 97:1028 Mr 15 '72 80w

Reviewed by Michael Kennedy
Nation 215:213 S 18 '72 480w

COLLEGE LANGUAGE ASSOCIATION.
Langston Hughes: Black genius. See Langston Hughes: Black genius

COLLIER, CHRISTOPHER. Roger Sherman's Connecticut; Yankee politics and the American Revolution. 409p il $18.50 Wesleyan Univ. press

B or 92 Sherman, Roger. Connecticut—History—Colonial period. U.S.—History—Revolution. U.S.—History—1783-1865
ISBN 0-8195-4035-8 LC 78-153104

In this study, the author "sets forth and assays Sherman's career and personality . . . [and gives a] study of the times as well. There is . . . material about town politics in New Milford and New Haven; the affairs of Connecticut under the Confederation; the welding of the new nation and the early national period. Many of Sherman's contemporaries are [also] studied: . . . Wadsworth, W. S. Johnson, Deane, Jonathan and Pierpont Edwards, and [others]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"From scanty sources . . . [Collier] has constructed an intelligible, convincing explanation of Sherman's motives and political methods. Without repeating an already more than twice-told tale he has also given an accurate account of Sherman's career in, and impact on, national affairs. If there are any other second rank Federalists who need to be rescued from obscurity, their biographers would do well to use this work as a model."

Choice 8:1081 O '71 130w

"Collier has not only fleshed out Sherman's historical skeleton but has also provided new insights into the course of the Revolution in Connecticut and the creation of the American republic. . . . The shortcomings of the book are mainly those inherent in life-and-times biographies—an occasional lack of focus and uneven coverage. In general, however, Collier has handled a most difficult genre of historical writing in expert fashion. When he resorts to conjecture (as every good historian must), his conclusions are always judicious. The portrait of Sherman should stand as the classic life, but the account of his times is unavoidably often more suggestive than definitive. Then, too, this otherwise well-written work is marred by a penchant for the hoary metaphor and extreme repetition." L. R. Gerlach

J Am Hist 58:1003 Mr '72 600w

"[The author's] portrait suffers from no surfeit of hero worship; indeed, Collier finds his subject unforgivably 'dour' and 'dull.' And while he does not probe the inner man much more successfully than previous biographers, he does suggest both a source of Sherman's success and of his influence. . . . If the picture of the 'venerable uncorrupted patriot' that emerges in this latest biography does not change Sherman's place in the gallery of the Founding Fathers, it nevertheless provides fresh perspective with which to view some of the others. . . . The substantive qualities of [the study] are marred by some egregious deficiencies of form. Notes appear at the bottom of each page and at the back of the text. All the notes are short-titled, requiring constant reference to a six-part bibliography for a full citation of the source." M. M. Klein

New Eng Q 44:673 D '71 1150w

COLLIER, RICHARD. Duce! a biography of Benito Mussolini. 447p il $12.50 Viking

B or 92 Mussolini, Benito. Fascism—Italy. Italy—History—1914-1946
ISBN 0-670-28603-6 LC 70-157972

This is an account of the life and political career of Mussolini. "The son of a . . . blacksmith, [he] worked his way to fame as a socialist leader, and then inaugurated a new fascist party which carried out a . . . coup in 1922. After becoming the youngest Prime Minister in Italian history, he made himself into the first of [the] Fascist dictators. . . . After 20 years in power, he was assassinated." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography.

Reviewed by V. J. Collamore

Best Sell 31:456 Ja 15 '72 300w

Reviewed by George Martin

Book World p6 N 21 '71 1000w

Choice 9:267 Ap '72 130w

Reviewed by J. G. Harrison

Christian Science Monitor p6 Ja 20 '72 480w

Reviewed by F. E. Hirsch

Library J 96:4002 D 1 '71 180w

"Collier's style is not for me. The research that he and his 44 colleagues put in over 3½ years, travelling 200,000 miles in the process, is admirable in itself. 'Over 530 people contributed to this book,' he writes. There are 23 pages of bibliography, and 15 of 'The Eye-Witnesses and what they do today.' But the result is indigestible and florid. No doubt it will make a splendid film script." Geoffrey McDermott

New Statesman 82:182 Ag ■ '71 1000w

"Only in the loosest possible sense can this book be described as a work of research. It is a light, breezy sketch of an extremely interesting and important man, a sketch which goes out of its way to avoid incurring any suspicion that it might be too learned or thorough. . . . A more relevant criticism is that it aims at too superficial a level, and that this monumental research effort has discovered no new material of any substance. . . . The lack of references and footnotes is a defect. . . . [It is] a pity that none of the interviews were transcribed, especially as an appendix includes numerous documents which add nothing at all to our knowledge of the Duce. The bibliography, however, is excellent, and so are the illustrations. The translated passages also appear to be well done. . . . [The book] reads easily, and it can be relied on to provide plenty of entertainment." Denis Mack-Smith

N Y Times Bk R p74 N 21 '71 1200w

"The author's approach to the task of biography recalls old-fashioned feature-story journalism: one sleeve-plucking, lapel-grabbing paragraph after another in an attempt to dramatize or make important a series of events that are, in themselves, already dramatic and of immense historical importance. This is too bad, since Mr. Collier presents a lot of research material that illuminates some of the more perplexing aspects of Mussolini's personality, but the author's unfortunate style makes all his serious work read trivially."

New Yorker 47:68 D 25 '71 80w

"Twenty-six years have passed since the death of Il Duce, and it is now possible for us to probe without rancor the paradoxes and complexities in the man. Richard Collier has attempted this task with mixed results. Rich in drama and adventure, Mussolini's career has the ingredients for an exciting narrative, and Mr. Collier captures some of the fateful highlights of the dictator's life. . . . The Mussolini portrayed in these pages is not the man of iron will and infallible judgement so dear to Fascist propagandists, but a clever journalist and orator who, believing only in action, craved to dominate and impress, yet rarely felt sure of himself." Gabriel Gersh

Sat ■ 54:50 N 20 '71 750w

COLLINS, BUD. The education of a tennis player. See Laver, R.

COLLINS, FLETCHER. The production of medieval church music-drama [by Fletcher Collins, Jr.] 356p il $17.50 Univ. press of Va.

792.1 Religious drama

ISBN 0-8133-0373-4 LC 78-168610

"Professor Collins's book is divided into two main parts. In the first he provides a . . . commentary—historical, literary, and musical—on sixteen of the most important dramas; in the second he offers ancillary material of . . . interest to producers. . . . His suggestions regarding production derive partly from the original texts (or modern editions), and partly from visual sources such as medieval book illuminations, frescoes, and carving." (TLS) Index.

"[Collins] considers generally and specifically all aspects of production of the 16 'plays of the repertory.' Visual aspects are presented by 77 excellent illustrations, some in color, reproducing chiefly contemporaneous art works, although influence of plays on art is rarely suggested. Other aspects include music, characterization, staging, original sites for productions (when known), and tone and quality of the works (considered more exciting and theatrical than literary scholars have thought). These plays date from 1100 to 1275. . . . The texts are not reprinted. Appendix concerning manuscripts of the plays. . . . Bibliography only in footnotes. Highly recommended for any collection that includes medieval literature and medieval drama."

Choice 9:796 S '72 250w

"Many scholars and producers have contributed to the revival of liturgical drama and Fletcher Collins (who has directed eight of these medieval music-dramas) follows the best traditions of the practical theorists by exploring and discussing the artistic possibilities available to modern enthusiasts, and the manner in which these possibilities can be put to good use. . . . Throughout the volume, scholarship and practical insight go cheerfully hand in hand. . . . Where different versions of the same drama give rise to conflicting readings in text, music, or stage directions . . . the author sifts the evidence with commendable skill and usually comes up with an acceptable solution."

COLLINS, FLETCHER—Continued

TLS p884 J1 28 '72 700w

COLLINS, JAMES. Interpreting modern philosophy. 463p $14; pa $7.50 Princeton univ. press

190 Philosophy, Modern. Kant, Immanuel
ISBN 0-691-07179-9 LC 70-160259

"Collins probes the meanings and methods of historical interpretations in philosophy by analyzing the creative reciprocity between the modern source thinkers—the great classical philosophers from Descartes and Locke to Mill and Nietzsche—and their mid-twentieth-century interpreters. His working hypothesis specifies three co-factors in the relationship: the sources themselves, the art of historical questioning, and the interpreting present. . . . [He discusses] how these factors work together, gain operational reality through the activity of the historian, and thus contribute to the 'historical turn' in contemporary philosophy." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Where philosophy meets history: here [the author] locates himself for a survey which goes deep."

Christian Century 89:523 My 3 '72 20w

"Of [the author's] latest book it can be said that almost every one of its . . . pages . . . contains something to inform, delight and challenge the reader. It can also be said that the whole thing is rather exasperating. . . . [It] needs a subtitle to explain that it is not what its title would seem to indicate: namely, a guide to 20th century philosophical thought. By 'modern philosophy' . . . Collins means the whole classical Western philosophical tradition since Descartes. By 'interpreting' he means the task of historical interpretation conceived as an attempt to grasp the nature of that tradition, with past and present philosophers regarded as participants in an ongoing dialogue. . . . This big book, for all its richness, is more stodgy in style and less imaginative and supple in argument than it need be. Gertrude asked Polonius for more matter with less art. Here the matter is magnificent; it is art that is lacking." Kenneth Hamilton

Christian Century 89:905 S 13 '72 550w

"Procedures such as historical questioning and responsive interpretation used by contemporary historians of philosophy are carefully examined and compared. Chapters on Descartes and Kant are most enlightening in that they illustrate the historian of philosophy as a man engaged in finding revisionary approaches to classical sources. Books and articles are cited to give the reader source material to consult in order to gain further insights into the works of classical and modern philosophers. This book will certainly become a standard reference for future studies."

Library J 97:2403 J1 '72 150w

COLLINS, LARRY. O Jerusalem! [by] Larry Collins and Dominique Lapierre. 637p il maps $10 Simon & Schuster

956.94 Jerusalem—Siege, 1948
SBN 671-21163-3 LC 77-185063

The authors describe people and events involved in the struggle "of 1948, in which the Arabs and the Jews . . . fought each other for the city of Jerusalem." (Publisher's note) Portions of this book have appeared in The Reader's Digest. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Michael Coogan
America 127:74 Ag 5 '72 440w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 230:93 J1 '72 750w

"To round out the book there is an excellent 'Where are they now?' to bring the reader up to date on Arabs, Israel, and British who figure prominently in the text. . . . Public libraries and academic libraries should consider this for 'first purchase.' Practically anyone who has ever visited the Holy Land, or who wants to, should read this excellent book." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 32:113 Je 1 '72 280w

Christian Century 89:584 My 17 '72 20w

"The pivotal years, 1947-48, are vividly, often violently described by . . . the pair responsible for 'Is Paris Burning?' [BRD 1965]. Five years' research has flushed out impressive detail and eye witness accounts. Balancing this historical petit point with some fine photographs and maps, the authors show the city as pawn in the events which resulted in the founding of the Zionist state of Israel. Rather surprisingly, the book is cluttered with too many fictional flourishes: flashbacks, stream-of-consciousness, premonitions. Also, behind a facade of balanced journalism is a subtle propagandizing. . . . Further, there is only a token acknowledgment of British achievements. However imperfect, the thirty years of British policing enabled thousands of the city's people, 'sealed by race and rite into separate ghettos, to live side by side in growing tolerance and mutuality.'"

D. H. Kelso

Christian Science Monitor p13 My 17 '72 220w

"Literary tricks jump out of [this] book like stuffed rabbits. . . . [There is] the ascription of thoughts and emotions without quotation marks . . . the addition of trivia, particularly of personal appearance, to sharpen an image . . . [and the effort] to achieve balance by juxtaposition rather than judgment. . . . All of these can be legitimate, useful and instructive. . . . But there are limits. . . . Messrs Collins and Lapierre, despite obvious sympathy for the Jews of 1948, are at their best, their most careful, and their most hardworking (and footnote-ridden) on the brutal slaughter of Arab villagers at Deir Yassin. . . . But . . . judgment and analysis are conspicuous by their absence."

Economist 244:51 Ag 1 '72 220w

Reviewed by Gerald Kaufman

New Statesman 84:228 Ag 18 '72 420w

"Collins and Lapierre are so good at juxtaposing parallel acts, have so keen an eye for the tiny detail that magnifies a great event, . . . that one tolerates their regrettable tendency to purple prose and tediously repetitive clichés. . . . No matter! The action jumps off the mark on the very first page and carries the reader skimming like a hurdler over the clichés. The pace is so swift, the drama so heightened by alternating flashes of tragedy and comedy that one has to stop frequently just to catch breath and to marvel at the majesty and absurdity of the bloody fighting over so-called sacred soil." David Schoenbrun

N Y Times BK R p7 My 14 '72 2050w

New Yorker 48:94 Je 24 '72 100w

Reviewed by S. K. Oberbeck

Newsweek 79:103 Je 5 '72 490w

"Cluttered with trivia, [this work] is also littered with scores of minor inaccuracies. Yet the book makes a powerful impact. Moving from Jew to Arab, from noisy bazaars to the United Nations Assembly, from ambassador to nomad, from kitchen to palace, and from general to deserter, Collins and Lapierre create a compelling mosaic of the time they depict. Despite a style that frequently dilutes pathos with bathos, their work evokes compassion for all the inhabitants of a city that is holy to Jew, Arab, and Christian alike. Here there are no victors, only victims. O Jerusalem! is, above all, a powerfully sad book. . . . The authors of [this work] take no sides, attempt no judgments." M. M. Bernet

Sat R 55:60 Je 10 '72 600w

TLS p1222 O 13 '72 260w

COLLINS, ORVIS. The organization makers; a behavioral study of independent entrepreneurs, by Orvis Collins and David G. Mocre. 237p $6 Appleton

658 Entrepreneurs. Industrial management
SBN 390-20312-2 LC 79-96143

This "is the story of almost 100 men who successfully established their own light-manufacturing firms in the midwestern United States between 1945 and 1958." (Am J Soc) Bibliography.

"Faithfulness to the empirical material keeps the authors' ideology from turning the book into an undifferentiated paean to the small businessman. . . . The main strength of the book lies in the interweaving of descriptive material from the many case histories to form a coherent composite portrayal of the contemporary entrepreneur. . . . [The book] is explicitly aimed at a nonacademic audience. Nonetheless, failure of the analytical frame to match the caliber of the descriptive reporting must be considered [its] greatest weakness. . . . While left with the distinct feeling that the entrepreneur is different from other men, the reader is given no good explanation of how or why he is different. The authors rely too much on invoking stereotypical qualities, like 'an inner force', 'motivation bordering on obsession', or 'unusual ruthlessness, courage and ability.' Peter Evans

Am J Soc 77:617 N '71 1260w

"Behavioral studies are 'in' these days, and this dramatization of the authors' The enterprising man clearly falls into the mainstream of current works, so far as the field of management is concerned. . . . [Collins and Moore] have actually [psychoanalyzed] the independent entrepreneur. In addition, they reflect rather well the empirical views toward profit of American society in general. This is an excellent supplementary text for managerial courses at any level of instruction, and would grace the shelf of any college or university library where reference volumes in business subjects are necessarily collected."

Choice 7:1549 Ja '71 130w

COLLINS, PHILIP. A Christmas carol. See Dickens, C.

COLLINS, ROBERT O., ed. Problems in the history of colonial Africa, 1860-1960. 389p $7.95; pa $4.95 Prentice-Hall

960 Africa—History

ISBN 13-1716613-3; 13-716605-2(pa)

LC 70-113845

These readings deal with "seven pan-African problems: the partition, resistance to colonial rule; theory and practice of indirect rule; the French colonial system; white settlers; economic development; and African nationalism." (Choice)

"The selection and presentation are better than [P.] McEwan's Nineteenth century Africa and Twentieth century Africa [both BRD 1969] being shorter, more carefully edited, and representing a greater variety of points of view."

Choice 7:1559 Ja '71 120w

"While the material is familiar enough to scholars of African history . . . [this book provides] teachers with a handy format for making the material available to their students. . . . The suitability of this book . . . depends upon one's own assessment of the colonial period in African history. If it is that the role of the colonizers is of paramount importance, then this book is a valuable teaching aid. On the other hand, if one's principal concern is with the study of the colonized, then the book is somewhat unsatisfactory." R. H. Davis
Social Studies 63:40 Ja '72 290w

COLLINS, WILLIAM J. Out of the depths; the story of a priest-patient in a mental hospital. 287p $5.95 Doubleday

616.8 Mental illness—Personal narratives. Mentally ill—Institutional care—Personal narratives
LC 73-157579

An "account by a Roman Catholic priest of his difficult but finally successful struggle against a very serious emotional illness that required him to spend two years under treatment (including a period of constant observation) in a mental hospital." (Best Sell)

"This is a courageous and touching account . . . which must have taken great courage and humility to write. [It] can, we think, be very helpful to other victims of emotional illness, for it brings out many important truths about human life. . . . Basically [it] is the compelling story of progress, through self-knowledge painfully arrived at, from self-regarding 'perfectionism' to self-accepting and happy realism. It is likely to benefit all who read it with open-minded intelligence." Brother Berchmans Downey

Best Sell 31:289 O 1 '71 430w

"[Father] Collins has written a moving and fascinating book. . . . Dr. Francis J. Braceland, for years psychiatrist-in-chief at Hartford's Institute of Living, provides a foreword which is a gem of reason and intelligence and which makes it easy to understand his reputation as a counselor of priests going back to the dark ages when psychiatry was a dirty word in many church circles." John Deedy
Critic 30:88 Ja '72 90w

COLLOMS, BRENDA. Israel; drawings by Elizabeth Hammond. (The Young historian bks) 112p maps lib bdg $3.96 Day

956.94 Israel—Social conditions. Israel—History
LC 71-140464

This is an attempt "to place the story of Jewish settlement and Jewish-Arab relations . . . within their historical context. . . . [The author deals with such questions as:] What are Israelis like? What is their country like? Why did the Jews need a state of their own, and why did they insist on a return to Israel? How did the Palestinian refugee problem come about, and who were the Jewish refugees?" (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"Emphasizing the history of Israel, this average title includes chapters on present-day life and kibbutz life, the Arab problem. Israeli culture and the wars of independence in 1948 and 1967. The information presented is reliable.

Colloms presents a fair discussion of the plight of the Arabs in Israel and mentions Jewish refugees who must flee Arab countries. Topic headings in the margins are helpful for easy location of specific subjects and a list of important dates and suggestions for further reading (which includes 17 adult books) are appended. . . . [The] photographs are standard government tourist office fare. . . . Grades five to nine." Ruth Sicherman
Library J 97:2946 S 15 '72 190w

"[This is a] cagey and cautious account of Israel." Claire Tomalin

New Statesman 82:666 N 12 '71 20w

"Written from the Israeli point of view, this is primarily a political history, and . . . allowances tend to be made for Israeli extremist points of view, but not for Arab ones. . . . It is, perhaps, unreasonable to complain that a history of Israel is partisan, but the need for presentation conjointly of the Arab point of view is pressing."

TLS p1344 O 22 '71 260w

COLMAN, ARTHUR D. Pregnancy: the psychological experience [by] Arthur D. Colman and Libby Lee Colman. 180p $6.50 Herder & Herder

612 Pregnancy

LC 73-167873

"The psychological effects of pregnancy [on the expectant mother and the expectant father] from conception to the postnatal period are presented . . . by a psychiatrist and his wife." (Library J) Index.

"The Colemans collected reports, dreams, and feelings from pregnant couples (including the three pregnancies of the authors) during 'study groups' of similarly situated people. The data are treated almost exclusively in a descriptive way, without statistics. The feelings of men and women are reported, the responses during the birth process itself are included. . . . While of major interest to women or men who are involved in pregnancy, the book could be suggested to many undergraduate students in psychology courses. It raises enough interesting questions to be of some value to suggest further research among psychologists and some medical people, and it can be used as a counseling tool."

Choice 9:579 Je '72 160w

"This easy-to-read volume . . . offers a departure from the typical handbook for expectant parents by demonstrating that child-bearing is a psychological crisis which affects not only the mother but also the father. This family-centered approach is very much needed in light of current American customs which bar fathers from delivery rooms and generally tend to ignore his contribution and involvement. The book contains references to current studies and first-hand accounts, and provides material on this important subject which hitherto has not been available in compact form. It constitutes important reading for expectant parents." B. J. Kalisch
Library J 97:1816 My 15 '72 130w

COLMAN, LIBBY L., jt. auth. Pregnancy: the psychological experience. See Colman, A. D.

COLORADO ACADEMIC LIBRARIES BOOK PROCESSING CENTER. Centralized processing for academic libraries. See Dougherty, R. M.

COLTER, CYRUS. The rivers of Eros. 219p
$6.95 Swallow press

ISBN 0-8040-0563-X LC 73-189191

"Widowed and aging, Clotilda Pilgrim makes a living for herself and her two grandchildren in Chicago's Black ghetto by running a rooming house and taking in sewing. Her social and economic struggles are typical of great numbers of ghetto women who are left to make something of the pieces of broken families, but the novel concentrates on her inward struggle. She is the central figure in a tragedy that holds her family for three generations; its guise is sexual, its effects violent and, apparently, inevitable. With the same tenacity with which she deals with her household, Clotilda tries to gather up all the terror, guilt, and violence that follow her and all the members of her family and keep it safely inside herself." (Publisher's note)

"While many readers will want to finish [this novel] at one sitting, it is not merely a well-spun yarn. The filament is far lighter than that of Dostoyevsky, but its color is rich and dark with sin and atonement and love. . . . [This book] could easily be a play. Scenes are adroitly set, costuming and props significant to characterization and plot. As such, its one flaw, a slight lack of editorial sophistication, would not exist. For the rest, Swallow Press is to be complimented first on bringing out this fine first novel, and also on style and format." Cornelia Holbert

Best Sell 32:102 Je 1 '72 400w

Reviewed by R. H. Donahugh
Library J 97:1459 Ap 15 '72 120w

"Colter has a passion for the interior lives of ordinary unnoticed people. He doesn't psychoanalyze them, or have them engage in long and self-revealing interior monologues. His characters are too inarticulate for that, or else shy and unsophisticated. They find it hard to admit the truth to themselves, much less to anyone else. So we see their inner turmoil mainly in their outward behavior, and at this Colter seems to be a natural master. There is no straining after glib psychological explanations, no reducing the purity of the individual's agony to theoretical causes. . . . The novel is quiet, sometimes even monotonous. But we're carried along by Colter's own calm certainty that what he is writing about is important." J. H. Bryant

Nation 214:727 Je 5 '72 1200w

Reviewed by Miles Donald
New Statesman 83:378 Je 23 '72 300w

Reviewed by George Davis
N Y Times Bk R p48 S 17 '72 400w

"Clotilda's story is a moving, yet always implicit, commentary on the force that racial stereotypes exert on simple and trusting minds. . . . The portrait of Clotilda herself is clear and honest about what it's like to be black, guilt-ridden, and not especially gifted in today's America." Joseph Catinella

Sat R 55:69 My 27 '72 250w

COLTON, HELEN. Our sexual evolution. 180p
$5.95 Watts, F.

176 Sex. Sexual ethics
ISBN 0-531-01996-9 LC 70-171899

"After defining sex (the physical act) and sexuality (the emotional and social setting for this act), the book proceeds . . . through . . . chapters titled 'How Attitudes About Sex Develop,' 'Your Sexuality and Your Personality,' and 'Your Peer Policy.' . . . [Included also are discussions of] the new female freedom . . . drugs, alcohol . . . venereal disease . . . the future of sex . . . the unwed father, the role of family as a unit of our civilization, homosexuality, birth control, and the childless marriage." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"All sides of the sexual experience are examined, with fair presentation of the pain and pleasure associated with man's mysterious and misunderstood emotion. Terrifying statistics thread through every chapter. . . . When you close the book, you will know you have read some of the fairest, most unbiased coverage of today's sex dilemma. Every responsible parent will insist that her teenagers read it, too. . . . Though exception may be taken by dissenting, disapproving, or embarrassed educators, parents, or clergy, Miss Colton's encompassing summation should be a point of agreement for all. . . . Highly recommended for high school level, and perhaps junior high, with direction and guidance." Mrs J. G. Gray

Best Sell 31:441 Ja 1 '72 650w [YAL]

"A moralistic lecture on sex that endlessly stresses its 'serious responsibilities and consequences.' . . . The rigid distinction drawn in the text between 'real' sex (mature, loving, responsible) and 'raw' sex ('without any redeeming human and spiritual values,') . . . would not be accepted by most young people. . . . Throughout the book, tabloid sensationalism and scare tactics are used to deal with drug abuse. . . . Although the horrors of pregnancy are continuously cited, contraception is slighted." P. D. Pollack

Library J 96:3474 O 15 '71 330w

COLVIN, BRENDA. Land and landscape: evolution, design and control. 412p 11 maps $19.50 Transatlantic

712 Landscape architecture
ISBN 0-7195-1800-8 LC 74-485030

This book "on the history, principles, and practice of landscape architecture . . . [includes an] analysis of landscape types, topography, vegetation, and climate, and the many approaches to modifying and conditioning the environment." (Choice)

"[This is a] revised, updated second edition of a 1947 [book]. . . . [It is] very British in orientation, particularly where it deals with the evolution of landscape architecture from garden design. . . . It is a highly readable, intelligent, and profusely and beautifully illustrated book which takes on added significance considering the rate at which men are transforming the environment. Architects, landscape architects, and planners should find it a useful introduction to the processes of nature and to an understanding and perception of the visual scene." Choice 8:1168 N '71 120w

"[The author's] philosophy is basically a cheerful one. Factories, power stations, housing estates, towns, car parks, motorways are all grist to Miss Colvin, who asks for nothing more than a spade (for tree planting) and an earthmover (to shift the contours around a bit) to produce a vista that makes all the difference between satanic mills and a rather splendid bit of engineering. Green sculpture, living architecture, these are hopeful phrases that apply today as strongly as they did in the eighteenth century (and Miss Colvin hints more than once that Capability Brown was a bit of an old bore). . . . Environmentalists, read and ponder."

Economist 235:xiv Ap 18 '70 100w

"At first a reader may be slightly deterred by the almost authoritarian way in which Miss Colvin lays down the principles of landscape architecture, but as she leads one through the history of its development, continually referring to well-placed illustrations, one's eyes open, and one accepts, almost embraces, her dicta. These principles comprehend both science and art, function and aesthetics, and she shows how vital both are in creating landscapes for posterity as well as for the present. . . . [She] trained originally as a horticulturist, and this gives her approach to the creation of landscape an added strength. One is totally convinced by her arguments for an integrated approach, and if this was the only virtue of her stimulating book, it would still be worth having. But the book is much more valuable."

TLS p852 Jl 23 '71 280w

COMAY, JOAN. Who's who in the Old Testament; together with the Apocrypha; advisory eds. for this volume: Michael Graetz [and] Leonard Cowie. 448p 11 maps $14.95 Holt

221.9 Bible. O.T.—Dictionaries, Bible. O.T.—Biography
SBN 03-086263-9 LC 79-153655

This is a dictionary of characters found in the Old Testament—patriarchs, kings, warriors, prophets and sages, heroes and villains. . . . Entries are set in the context of history . . . geography, and archeological discoveries in the Holy Land.

"[This volume is a] handy addition to the library of popular, easy-to-use, and pictorially inspiring Bible dictionary-encyclopedias. The blunder was the decision to pass up the gleaming gold of the King James Version text of Holy Writ for the dull and lifeless tin of later translations. . . . particularly the Revised Standard Version's. . . . The text is generous without being ponderous and benefits from much recent scholarship." J. G. H. Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 9 '72 40w

"Individual sculptures and artefacts are carefully reproduced but the panoramas and archaeological sites seem muddy and unsatisfactory. Two outstanding exceptions are color aerial photos of the Valley of Jezreel in all its agricultural splendor and a portion of the Sinai range. The text confines itself to identifications and a retelling of the biblical story based on the Revised Standard Version." G. S. Sloyan

Commonweal 95:428 F 4 '72 130w

"[The book offers] considerably more than the usual bare-bone statistics of Who's Who. [This] handsomely printed, profusely illustrated volume [tells] what is known about literally thousands of Biblical individuals, ranging from a few lines for little-known persons to several pages for such major figures as Abraham, Moses, Solomon, John the Baptist, Mary (mother of Jesus) and Paul. The illustrations, many in color, are varied in subject matter, medium and provenance. . . . [The book] can be highly recommended to the general reader for pictorial and textual excellence."

N Y Times Bk R p18 D 19 '71 90w

TLS p225 F 25 '72 80w

COMMONER, BARRY. The closing circle; nature, man, and technology. 326p $6.95 Random house 301.3 Ecology. Technology and civilization. Environmental policy—U.S.

ISBN 0-394-42350-X LC 76-127092

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 9:388 My '72 110w

Reviewed by V. C. Ferkiss

Commonweal 96:292 My 26 '72 450w

Economist 242:68 Mr 11 '72 550w

Reviewed by John Naughton

New Statesman 83:115 Ja 28 '72 1200w

TLS p327 Mr 24 '72 900w

Reviewed by A. M. Weinberg

Va Q R 48:277 spring '72 1150w

COMMUNICATION: general semantics perspectives; comp. and ed. by Lee Thayer. 347p il $16 Spartan bks.

001.5 Semantics
ISBN 0-87671-702-4 LC 73-80437

This volume contains miscellaneous talks given at the conference. These "are supplemented by other papers of indeterminate date. The theme of the conference was . . . the relevance of general semantics to communication theory. . . . [A number of participants discussed the] relevance of discoveries in some disciplines to general semantics." (Library J)

"As with [many] such anthologies the selections vary greatly in both importance and quality. The most stimulating sections of the book are 'attacks' on general semantics. . . . Only libraries which already have extensive offerings in general semantics would be interested in this book. No index. Most selections include a list of references at the end."

Choice 8:1326 D '71 210w

"This overpriced book, replete with blank pages, consists mainly of miscellaneous talks from a 1968 symposium. . . . One of the few high spots in Anatol Rapoport's renegade attack on the relevance of general semantics to the parlous state of affairs today. Hayakawa, by contrast, says 'the cops wouldn't have to organize themselves in this ferocious way against the [Black] Panthers' if they called themselves the Soul Brothers Mutual Assistance Society. The editor, curiously, calls general semantics 'more of a religion than an intellectual discipline,' . . . and accuses its disciples of 'intellectual imperialism.' His reasons for publishing, in the face of this attitude and the contents, are scarcely compelling." Philip Cummings

Library J 95:2917 S 15 '70 170w

COMPARATO, FRANK E. Books for the millions; a history of the men whose methods and machines packaged the printed word. 374p il $12.50 Stackpole bks.

686.3 Bookbinding. Book industries and trade
SBN 8117-0263-4 LC 71-162441

"Comparato's book traces the history of bookmaking through the development of book-making equipment both in Europe and America. This includes the inventions of the machinery used for sewing, casemaking, folding, rounding, and backing. Interspersed throughout this . . . study are biographies of the inventors themselves, such as David Smyth (the Smyth book sewing machine), Charles Juengst (the gathering machine), and Charles Breden-berg (the periodical covering machine). Details of book production are brought up to the present time with the introduction of the computer and the photocopy machine. . . . The last chapter . . . [has a] section about the early development and production of the paperback in America." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Although this book is intended for the specialist, it contains many details of more general interest about publishers, authors, and the book trade. . . . Illustrated with numerous sketches of the machines discussed. Lengthy bibliography."

Choice 9:956 O '72 150w

"[This account is] crammed with detail. . . . A historical section treats bookbinding in France in the period of the Revolution, the Restoration, and the later 19th Century. . . . The book then goes on to a treatment of the industrialization of the American bindery . . . [and] closes with a survey of modern book production, stressing the search for new adhesives, high speed production, new machinery which ingests paper and spews out the finished book, and the effects of the information explosion and computerization. An essential title in the literature of bookbinding and publishing, if somewhat unwieldy in style." L. W. Griffin

Library J 97:1008 Mr 15 '72 300w

COMPUTER-ASSISTED counseling, by Donald E. Super; with the collaboration of Martin J. Bohn, Jr. [and others]. 133p $7.50; pa $4.50 Teachers college press

371.4 Electronic data processing. Personnel service in education. Vocational guidance
LC 71-137460

"This book is a collection of articles, mostly unpublished, . . . which are intended to elucidate the present status and the potential of computers as aids to counseling. It includes descriptions of interactive computerized systems, perspectives undergirding the use of vocational information in career development, and clarifying analyses of pioneering efforts." (Library J)

"Super's book reflects the thoughts and work of eleven researchers . . . in computer-assisted counseling. . . . Inclusiveness is probably the book's most outstanding feature, but the potential reader should be aware that very detailed information about any particular guidance system is not available in Super's book." R. L. Brennan

Harvard Ed R 42:148 F '72 700w

"The first of its kind in the field, the book is welcome during this embryonic stage of development. Counselors, administrators, and educators should find this to be a helpful treatment of the subject. The level of abstraction varies, but most of the articles are appropriate for the informed reader who lacks a high degree of sophistication in computer technology. Two prerequisites are cited for acceptance of computer assistance: familiarity and involvement. The efforts in this book pave the way for both. There are some interesting comparisons drawn between the ways that students relate to computers and to counselors." A. E. Smith

Library J 96:72 Ja 1 '71 170w

CONCISE dictionary of the Christian world mission; ed. by Stephen Neill [and others]. (World Christian bks) 682p $10.50 Abingdon 266 Christianity. Missions
ISBN 0-687-09371-6

"The editors state that 'here for the first time an attempt has been made to provide in dictionary form . . . information as to the entire process through which in the last five centuries Christianity has grown from a western to a universal religion.' This dictionary . . . attempts to cover the period 1492 to the present day. Countries, persons (missionary and indigenous), organizations, and topics are included." (Choice)

"There are shortcomings. Frequently (but not always) asterisks indicate terms used in articles under which an entry may be found. Frequently (but not always) cross references guide the user to terms buried within other entries. Some entries make value judgments and are homilistical in tone. . . . Coverage is . . . limited."

CONCISE dictionary of the Christian world missions—Continued

Choice 8:534 Je '71 210w

"More than 200 authorities—virtual who's who in missiology—have produced this reservoir of information on Christian missions. . . . Brief signed articles give biographical sketches and detail mission agencies, historic events and places, and issues, ideas, and concepts. Bibliographies are appended to numerous articles, and references to a variety of useful sources abound. Readers unfamiliar with the subject may experience difficulty in locating conceptual topics; forms of entry for these seem arbitrary. Nonetheless, this book demands space on the reference shelves of all libraries but the smallest. There is no comparable tool available in the field." Robert Dvorak

Library J 96:2296 J1 '71 190w

"[This book] is significant of a changed climate in that, although coming out under pronouncedly Protestant auspices, [it] also contains a good deal of information about Roman Catholic missions as well. . . . The use of the dictionary method of presentation inevitably means that all information has to be very compressed and that there is little place for analysis and evaluation. Still, the editors do not pretend that this is anything more than an introduction and the very sober and factual nature of the approach serves to throw into relief the remarkable extent and scope of the modern missionary enterprise, the heroic efforts it has involved, and its creative ramifications in the history of many lands."

TLS p454 Ap 16 '71 420w

CONDON, RICHARD. Arigato. 312p $7.95 Dial press

LC 72-3618

Captain Colin Huntington, R.N. (ret.), at "forty seven a uniquely handsome man who has mighty success with women, is a gambler with the will to lose. When he finally suffers a defeat at backgammon that threatens to cost him his gorgeous wife, Bitsy (multimillionaire), his even more gorgeous mistress, Yvonne (the daughter of the world's heroin king), and, worst all, his cook, the genius Francohogar, the Captain decides on a super-gamble. He will steal all the wine in France, sell it for a million pounds or so, and, with the money, buy back his women, his cook, and his position in life. With the aid of a friend who owns a computer, the Captain works out a . . . complicated plot." (New Yorker)

Reviewed by V. J. Colimore

Best Sell 32:343 N 1 '72 200w

"For two hundred pages here the incomparable Richard Condon is not doing it the way he can do it. He seems bored with plot and pace, content to create comically corrupt characters and governments and let them wallow. But when his story lumbers finally into its sprint it is as speedy, insane and gory as his stories can be, maybe even more insane than the earlier Condons, in that the occasion for the gore is unprecedentedly frivolous."

New Repub 167:42 O 21 '72 140w

Reviewed by Miles Donald

New Statesman 84:731 N 17 '72 750w

"Included in 'Arigato' are a Kennedy-style American family, the greatest chef in the world, a British ex-captain who is a compulsive gambler, and some murderous criminal types. Condon strings together a crime book that in addition is a satire on politics, contemporary life and even gourmet food, about which he seems to know a great deal. At times 'Arigato' is labored and loosely written, a far cry from such vintage Condon as 'The Manchurian Candidate' [BRD 1959]. Nevertheless, silly as the book is, it also is great fun." Newgate Calendar

N Y Times BK R p59 O 29 '72 150w

New Yorker 48:167 O 21 '72 150w

"Fastidious distaste for fellow human beings is no hindrance to headwaiters and lighthouse keepers. It can be a positive asset for a man in the comic-novel industry. But Richard Condon . . . has developed this asset to the point of unproductive excess. . . . The figures that populate his books are . . . fantasma embodiments of various sorts of foaming mania. . . . Otherwise the story is a promising crime caper. . . . Condon's throwaway lines have all their old weird wonder. Any one of the enormities he assigns to his characters at the rate of three ■ page would have fueled a complete farce.

Jangling together they achieve only ■ certain frenzy, and give the odd impression of a man shouting desperately to avoid hearing something."

Time 100:106 O 23 '72 300w

CONFERENCE ON INTERLIBRARY COMMUNICATIONS AND INFORMATION NETWORKS, WARRENTON, VIRGINIA, 1970. Proceedings of the Conference; sponsored by the Am. lib. assn. and the U.S. Office of educ. Bur. of libs. and educ. technology held at Airle house, Warrenton, Va. Sept. 28, 1970-Oct. 2, 1970; ed. by Joseph Becker. 347p $15 A.L.A.

021.6 Library science. Library cooperation
ISBN 0-8389-3123-5 LC 70-185963

This book contains papers presented to the participants at the conference who were "organized into five working groups—network needs and development, network services, network technology, network organization, and network planning—which examined in detail the commissioned papers, discussed the issues, and prepared written summary reports of discussions and recommendations. . . . This publication presents the thirty-one commissioned papers, [and] the five working group summary reports." (Col & Res Lib) Bibliography.

"The recommendations, unfortunately, consisted mainly of statements of sentiments that all can endorse but few can enforce. . . . While the papers are uneven, contain much duplication . . . and too often consist of speculation about networks they do, in general, bear out [the editor's] conclusion that this is the most comprehensive source of information on networks available. In particular the papers by Casey, Hacker, Hayes, Kenney, Miller and Weber, and Lynden represent good summaries of the historical development of networks. . . . The papers of most significance are those by Bunge ('Reference Service in the Information Network'), Chapin ('Limits of Local Self Sufficiency'), and Dennis ('The Relation of Social Science Data Archives to Libraries and Wider Information Networks') which represent analyses of and commentaries upon present-day practices and problems." N. D. Stevens

Col & Res Lib 33:418 S '72 800w

"The papers and reports in [this volume] include the descriptive and prescriptive, the technical and general, the specific and synthetic; they range from 'Emerging state and regional library networks', through 'Bibliographic services for a national network' to 'World-wide information networks'; from 'Narrow bandwidth telecommunications' through 'Copyright aspects of CATV as utilized in information networking' to 'Broad bandwidth telecommunications systems'; from the 'Authority and responsibilities of a network director' through 'Financial formulas for library networks' to 'Some social considerations of networking'; from 'The national biomedical communications network as a developing structure' through 'A hypothetical plan for a library-information network' to the 'Network prospects for the legal profession.' . . . The conference uncovered a great deal of ore from which a lot of gold may be extracted." Samuel Goldstein

Library J 97:2703 S 1 '72 350w

CONFERENCE ON PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY. Whistle blowing. See Nader, R.

CONKLIN, GLADYS. Elephants of Africa: II. by Joseph Cellini. unp lib bdg $4.95 Holiday 599 Elephants—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-8234-0201-0 LC 72-179099

This book presents "information about the daily life of a herd of African elephants, including their sense of family, care for the young, the many uses of their trunks, their search for food and water, and their occasional destructiveness. . . . Grades two to four." (Library J)

"The quiet narrative is beautifully illustrated with pictures of the elephants in all phases of their activities."

Horn Bk 48:386 Ag '72 70w

"This [book] presents much easy-to-understand [information]. . . . The lovely pencil-and-wash illustrations reflect both the power and remarkable sensitivity of these huge creatures." L. L. Clark

Library J 97:2931 S 15 '72 100w

CONNELL, ELIZABETH B., ed. Hormones, sex, and happiness. See Hormones, sex and happiness

CONNERY, DONALD S. One American town. 222p il $6.95 Simon & Schuster

917.46 Cities and towns—Connecticut. Kent, Connecticut
SBN 671-21173-0 LC 70-185770

This book "is about a community of 2,000 individuals . . . in a small Connecticut town. The total atmosphere of a community that hasn't changed fundamentally despite the inroads of technology is conveyed in the author's words and in his . . . use of direct quotations from the townspeople themselves. Divided into the four seasons of the year, the book is broken into brief and separate views of life in the town." (Publisher's note)

"[Connery] views an anonymous Connecticut town as citizen-observer-exurbanite-resident, informally, rather sentimentally, loyally, and perceptively. . . . Popular readers will appreciate the comments on schools, churches, library, bank, town meeting, or city dump; on firemen, veterinarians, selectmen, and recluses. Connery is serious, too, i.e. small towns have exported many of their problems to cities; if survival depends on self-sufficiency and self-reliance, they offer the most hope. . . . The book is very personal, a delight to sample, savor and ponder."

Choice 9:1047 O '72 190w

"A claim is made here for the value of everyday life in a relatively isolated Connecticut town. . . . Connery has lived in some of the largest cities of the world, and he is aware enough of the problems in today's larger communities to avoid contributing to the mood of nostalgia for a simpler life. . . . The arrangement of the work is that of a log or diary. Most of the vignettes are current; some are from the past history of the town; a few are by outsiders. Relevant quotes from citizens and the local press are included, and all aspects of life in the town are covered. Not the usual escapist account of small town life, this book is certainly an enjoyable one and should have more than a regional appeal." R. C. Hilton

Library J 97:891 Mr 1 '72 160w

"If the reader knows something about small-town life, he can form a roughly adequate impression of Kent. Otherwise, I'm afraid, the picture Connery paints is a little too bright. . . . [He] rightly makes much of the face-to-face relationships in a small town as an antidote to the impersonality of urban life, but when he comes to politics, when he suggests that the town meeting is, so to speak, the wave of the future, he is on shaky ground." Granville Hicks

New Repub 167:25 J1 8 '72 600w

CONNOR, SEYMOUR V. North America divided: the Mexican War, 1846-1848 [by] Seymour V. Connor and Odie B. Faulk. 300p maps $7.95 Oxford

973.6 U.S. History—War with Mexico, 1845-1848

ISBN 0-19-501448-0 LC 77-161885

The authors trace the story of the Mexican War "from 1810 forward . . . giving attention to political maneuvering in Washington, the Southwest, Mexico, London and Paris; to the anti-slavery and pacifist movements throughout the country [and] to the military campaigns themselves." (N Y Times Bk R) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Choice 9:557 Je '72 120w

"[This work] is free from obvious bias; it is accurate, clear and sensible. It is also, unfortunately, rather dull and clumsy in presentation and a good deal briefer than its apparent bulk suggests. There is, inter alia, very little said about the conduct of the war on the home front or the intellectual debate which accompanied it and which gives it much of its continuing interest or, in the cant phrase, relevance. . . . For a war history, [the publisher] has provided disappointingly inadequate cartography. There are few irritations more galling to a reader than to be constantly encountering place-names in the text of which no mention occurs in the maps."

Economist 243:suppl 17 Ap 8 '72 450w

"It must be questioned whether [the authors] achieve the sense of balance and insight they profess, for in large part they have created a painful defense of the role of the United States in the war against Mexico. They own a heavy debt to Justice Smith's War With Mexico [BRD 1920], and although they say they have not followed him 'slavishly' they add that 'when we have departed from his interpretation we have done so with caution and, we hope, without bias.' . . . The most convincing lesson of this book is that there is little to be gained from further pawing at questions of guilt and blame concerning the Mexican War." D. E. Berge

J Am Hist 59:142 Je '72 400w

"The origins of the Mexican War are still controversial, and many Americans then and now have felt guilty over it. Wrongly so, argue the authors of this fresh reevaluation of the war. From their original research, they conclude that 'the guilt for the outbreak of the conflict lay not with either nation but with men and political factions within both.' However, agreement with their thesis is not needed in order to use the compact narrative and, especially, the annotated bibliography of major books and pamphlets on the war. This listing, arranged in topical order with a main entry index, covers comprehensively both Mexican and American sources." T. M. Bogie

Library J 97:679 F 15 '72 130w

"In judging the results of the war the authors can find no benefit to Mexicans. For Americans the bag was mixed: territory with immensely valuable mineral deposits, security from British intervention on the West Coast, and a giant step toward the Civil War."

N Y Times Bk R p40 F 6 '72 120w

CONNOR, TONY. In the Happy Valley; poems. 45p $4.95 Oxford

821

SBN 19-211806-4 LC 74-590507

"In this volume the poet's concern [is] for the possible relationships between the mind and those things it believes to be outside itself." (Publisher's note) Some of these poems have been published in various periodicals.

"Unfortunately [Connor] has shed much of his native-bred style in order to write the book, and succumbed to a mild form of American disease—the pose of the poet as a sadly humming set of antennae, their tips glistening with cryptic messages." Douglas Dunn

Encounter 37:71 Ag '71 200w

"[The author] still rarely excites or stirs a poet; but working in the US has increased the range of his material and his sympathies. His personal verse has become more explicit, observant, carefully wrought, and his gestures towards public statement seem validated by both its honesty and its mordant self-awareness." Alan Brownjohn

New Statesman 81:640 My 7 '71 160w

"The Happy Valley, which . . . [Connor] tells us was in New England, . . . [has] certain features borrowed from Ezekiel's valley of dry bones. This English poet speaks throughout as a foreigner caught in an awareness that his interior life is as poisoned as the landscape he sees about him. The title poem—sequence lacks consistent energy, as if the right resonances had not been sounded between landscape and interior space. But the lack of such resonances is, of course, part of the poem's concern. At other times the mundane world remains utterly sodden." Charles Molesworth

Poetry 120:107 My '72 200w

"[Connor's] clarity of vision and his strength of line and language are, always, trained on the gradual fusion of inner and outer landscapes; middle-aged fantasies of sex and sickness rise from the highway's glare, from the mirror in the motel: 'The mirrors are ready to let you go forever./Your name is impatient to be forgotten.' These poems greatly extend Connor's already remarkable achievement."

Va Q R 48:xxiii winter '72 110w

CONNOR, W. ROBERT. The new politicians of fifth-century Athens. 218p $8.50 Princeton univ. press

320.938 Athens—Politics and government
ISBN 0-691-03539-3 LC 70-141502

"After the death of Pericles, a new breed of politicians . . . came to power in Athens. Rejecting the traditional source of political support, the bonds of friendship (philia), in favor of direct appeals to the people (demos), they signaled the emergence of a new pattern of politics. W. Robert Connor traces the development of this new pattern . . . by investigating the nature of political and social organization in Athens and the vocabulary of Greek politics." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

CONNOR, W. R.—Continued

"Although the author says this book is addressed to 'the beginner in the field' about the only indications of this in the text are the transliterations of Greek phrases into our alphabet plus rather frequent appeals to modern analogies. The transliteration, while it is helpful for a single word, has no particular value for the non-Greek reader when he is confronted with dysmenesis tei polei . . . and the like. There is perhaps more attention paid to genealogical speculation than can be justified by the results." T. S. Brown

Ann Am Acad 400:182 Mr '72 600w

"A valuable study. . . . Connor builds models of Athenian political groupings before and after 430 B.C. to explain 'the rise of the demagogues.' . . . This study, aimed at the beginning student, gives a good explanation of how the government functioned and is a needed antidote to the idea of 'party' that imprecise terminology has often implanted. The only criticism concerns the inadequate bibliography and overloaded footnotes." Overall ■ sound and interesting contribution."

Choice 8:1370 D '71 150w

"Connor gleans most of his information from fifth-century tragedians and comedians, fourth-century orators, philosophers, and historians, and still later writers such as Plutarch, but he employs them judiciously. . . . The book is nicely written. . . . There is perhaps a tendency to compress too much into the decade of the 420's, but apart from this if the book has a shortcoming, it lies in the narrow limits the author has set for himself. He is content to describe the social and political changes that were taking place, and he does so skillfully and thoroughly, but he purposely refrains from anything more than a superficial examination of their causes." Thomas Kelly

Class World 65:137 D '71 280w

"At the end of [this] study we understand much better why these men, and others, were able to succeed to a measure of the power that had been wielded by that somewhat equivocal hero Pericles (who, according to Mr Connor, was not above a good deal of political posturing). . . . [The author] specializes in an incisive semantic approach, which is particularly valuable when he discusses 'friendship'. Most individuals in Britain and the United States today like to feel that the practical tit-for-tat aspect is not too prominent a feature in their personal friendships, but if they become politicians (and Mr Connor laces his work with comments on American politics) they begin to realize that this can no longer be maintained. . . . This is a valuable book, and written in such a way that its interest should by no means be limited to classical scholars."

TLS p376 Mr 31 '72 420w

CONNOR, WALTER D. Deviance in Soviet society: crime, delinquency, and alcoholism. 227p $12.50 Columbia Univ. press

364 Crime and criminals—Russia. Juvenile delinquency. Liquor problem
ISBN 0-231-03439-3 LC 71-180044

"A sociologist who went to Russia on the U.S.-Soviet exchange program presents a . . . view of the incidence and distribution of alcoholism, juvenile delinquency, and crime in the U.S.S.R. He also examines the theories used by Soviet criminologists in trying to explain the continued strength of these areas in a socialist society, and the preventative and penal strategies devised to deal with them." (Choice) Index.

"Connor uses some sources not available in the West, and he fills in gaps left by the absence of comprehensive statistics by surveying the available Soviet sociological research on these three problems. He presents useful comparisons with the incidence and treatment of these problems in the West, and his prose is very lucid. Will be invaluable to general students of Soviet society as well as to those wanting comparative perspectives for courses on deviance and social problems."

Choice 9:724 J1/Ag '72 170w

Reviewed by William Silverman
Library J 97:894 Mr 1 '72 200w

CONROY, PAT. The water is wide; il. with phot. by William and Paul Keyserling. 306p $6.95 Houghton

372.9757 Yamacraw Elementary school, Negroes—Education, Yamacraw Island, South Carolina
ISBN 0-395-13644-X LC 70-177537

"The author accepted the challenge of attempting to educate 18 fifth-through-eighth graders in a two-room schoolhouse on Yamacraw Island, just off the coast of Beaufort, S.C. How, why and what he taught them are the contents of [this book]. . . . The majority [of his pupils] could not recite the alphabet, all read at the first grade reading level, and all were convinced that the first U.S. President was John F. Kennedy. . . . Conroy jettisoned the curriculum guides and improvised." (America)

"More bold than talented, more talented than prudent, Conroy goaded the school board into a public fight that culminated in his dismissal. And thus the children who needed him had him no more. Although the circumstances of his teaching assignment were atypical, the lessons he taught and the lessons he learned should be known by every novice teacher, for they have universal applicability. Of primary importance is Conroy's evaluation of his entire experience. . . . Conroy expresses the realization that he should have tried to fight the system by working through it, for . . . [this method] allows the children, in whom a reformer professes to believe, to continue to receive his assistance and thus make demonstrable progress. . . . With remarkable perceptiveness, the author describes the process of his maturation and that of his pupils, and thereby shows how a teacher may acquire the wings to fly over educational adversities, when 'the water is wide.'" J. J. Buckley

America 127:181 S 16 '72 500w

"Conroy has woven a pleasant story that reads like a novel. The stock characters are all there: the reformed redneck, the Bible-quoting officials, the black woman ashamed of her race. What saves the book from the ordinary is Conroy's portraits of the children. Almost without exception they catch and hold, and keep the reader going. Worse than not learning, the children have never been taught to learn. Conroy relates their story angrily and a bit self-righteously. By ignoring the textbooks and concentrating on meaningful situations and dialogue (methods certainly no longer new), he begins to make headway. . . . [His dismissal] is anticlimax, for Conroy has shown what he has set out to show: that without a fighting chance children are pretty well up against it. A good choice for the high school or college library." Matthew Hartman

Library J 97:2388 J1 '72 200w

CONTEMPORARY poets of the English language; with a pref. by C. Day Lewis; ed: Rosalie Murphy; deputy ed: James Vinson. 1243p $25 St. James press

821 Poets, English—Dictionaries
LC 79-23734

This work "provides biographical and bibliographical information on more than 1,100 living poets now writing in English. Every part of the world with a tradition of poetry in English is represented. . . . The alphabetically arranged entries take the following form: a short biographical statement which usually includes nationality, date and place of birth, pseudonyms, marital status, education, occupations, honors, and a current address. . . . [Then] in chronological order, is a listing of the biographee's publications by form such as verse, plays, recordings, literary criticism. Third, there may be a comment by the poet about his work. . . . This section sometimes ends with the list of 'valuable studies of his work' or the best critical article available, in the opinion of the poet. Finally, for more than 300 of the poets, there is a signed article by a critic who attempts to explain the poet and his work. . . . There is a list of over 500 books arranged alphabetically by title in a section called Selection of Anthologies Since 1960. That Include Contemporary Poetry in English. . . . Most of the works cited are either British, American, or Canadian publications." (Booklist) Bibliography.

"According to the Editor's Note 'the selection of poets is based upon the advice of critics and editors representing each of the countries involved [who] . . . were asked to recommend those poets who, in their view, are the most important currently writing in English' and also 'those poets whose present achievement seems most promising of future growth and excellence'. According to the publisher, Contemporary Poets was first published in September 1970 and is to be published . . . [and] revised at three-year intervals. . . . Since both the bibliographies and the listing of critical reviews are selective, this volume will be more useful to the general reader than to the scholar. . . . Nothing in the book explains how advisers, consultants and contributors were chosen, or how the information on each poet was obtained. . . . Information on publications is up to date; some 1970 publications are listed. . . . There are fascinating and informative comments which give a picture of the poet as a person. . . . In spite of the lack of citations to biographical/critical sources and of sufficient cross-references . . . [this] is a welcome up-to-date, accurate biographical dictionary. It can be used as a supplement to the better documented literary biographical sources, since the information in each is sufficiently different so that one is not a satisfactory substitute for the other. Recommended."

Booklist 68:537 Mr 1 '72 350w

"[This] is a uniquely valuable compilation."

D. M. Glixon

Sat R 55:70 My 6 '72 120w

CONVERSATIONS at Little Gidding; 'On the retirement of Charles V.' 'On austere life': dialogues by members of the Ferrar family; tr. by Nicholas Ferrar, introd. and notes by A. M. Williams. 322p il pl $15 Cambridge

248 Christian life. Little Gidding community

ISBN 0-521-07680-3 LC [78-85741]

These documents, products of the seventeenth century English religious community, represent "conversations" at the Ferrar family manor at Little Gidding in Huntingdonshire whence members of the family sought to exchange the cares and trials of the real world in which they had been active for [a new experiment in Christian living]. . . . They reflect the opinions of the family members showing their ideals and dislikes." (Choice) Index.

"Two hitherto unpublished manuscripts of the Nicholas Ferrar family, found in Clare College, Cambridge and the British Museum, respectively, are edited with a lengthy introduction by Williams. . . . [Though he] says these dialogues may 'have much to say for our tempestuous times,' the decision to reproduce the transcripts complete with Caroline spelling suggests that they will speak to fewer folk than the editor might have hoped. Of interest primarily to graduate libraries."

Choice 8:1237 N '71 100w

"[This] attractive edition of two long set pieces from the Little Gidding 'story books' adds significantly to the corpus of available printed material. Together with what was published in the nineteenth century and in this century by B. Blackstone, entitled The Ferrar papers, BRD 1938] . . . it is now possible to construct a reasonably comprehensive and coherent picture. In his long introduction Mr. Williams clarifies several aspects of the Ferrars' life at Little Gidding, social, religious and literary. . . . He says disappointingly little . . . about the actual manner of [the story-books]. Were the 'dialogues' written by Nicholas Ferrar, the parts distributed to the performers to be learnt, and the text then reworked by him after their delivery or recitation? . . . Williams is full, valuable and sometimes acute on the literary influences discernible in the dialogues. He says less about their prose style. . . . This is a pleasing book which will appeal to those interested both in the history and in the literature of Caroline England."

TLS p33 Ja 8 '71 850w

COOK, ALBERT. Enactment: Greek tragedy. 175p $7.50 Swallow press

882 Greek drama—History and criticism
ISBN 0-8040-0539-7 LC 78-153076

Making "use of Aristotle, Freud, and Levi-Strauss in order to avoid the error of extracting but a single level of meaning from each play, [the author] first develops a general theory of myth and ritual and explores the . . . concepts of 'dynamic relationships' (among imagined scene, actual scene, stage group, and audience group) within the theatre itself. The second part of the book discusses the individual plays in terms of the many-faceted concepts of ate, telos, nomos, theos, and daimon." (Choice) Index of names. Index of plays.

"In a very difficult, highly theoretical analysis, written more for sophisticated literary critics than the average student (undergraduate or graduate), Cook explains the durable dramatic success of all extant Greek tragedy by stressing the continuous 'transformation of its time-bound and space-rooted significations.' . . . If the reader can work his way through the labyrinth of comparative literature jargon and other esoterica, he may very well compare himself to an exhausted Hercules upon the completion of some massive labors."

Choice 9:520 Je '72 140w

"The reader is led to believe that Professor Cook is about to present a comprehensive critical approach. Instead, we find in the body of the book a view of tragedy that is almost as monistic as Freud's and Levi-Strauss', an insistence that tragedy exists as a ritual which combines mythos, the emotive factor, with logos, the verbalized and conceptualized thought. . . . The real weakness of using such a monist theory as the entire support for a critical system is that it is bound . . . to contribute more to other fields of study than to literary criticism. In this instance, the greater contribution has been made to cultural anthropology." J. S. Margon

Class World 66:108 O '72 650w

"Cook has written a book that consists of an elaborate vocabulary in search of a subject. . . . Incantation replaces thought. Cook is like the ironic sophists of Plato who because of their wallowing in speeches are suspiciously afraid that they do not know what they pretend to know in their posturings to others. He admits that he worried about the lack of balance between the first 'theoretical' part, with which he is more concerned, and the 'formal' analysis of the second. What this difference means in his practice is hard to make out, unless it is that the theory is merely less intelligible. A voguish exercise." Seth Benardete

Library J 96:4095 D 15 '71 130w

COOK, ALBERT SPAULDING. The charges.

154p $6.50 Swallow press

811

LC 70-112872

This is Cook's third book of poems.

"Dramatic, intensely personal, enigmatic [this] is a rich and exciting collection. . . . Meeting some of these poems for the first time is like trying to stare into 'the blazing simplicity of a sun.' . . . Warning: He who looks for 'instant reading' will find himself in a remarkably constructed labyrinth." Eleanor Fitzgibbons

Commonweal 95:477 F 18 '72 150w

"Cook, professor of comparative literature at the State University of New York at Buffalo, impresses me by the leisurely flow of his writing. The persuasiveness of his poems is a factor in their success. There is an elusive quality of strength in the poems, sometimes hidden because of their quiet tone; but the intensity is there. Recommended for public, college, and university libraries." Jerome Cushman

Library J 95:3476 O 15 '70 60w

COOK, BRUCE. The beat generation. 248p $6.95 Scribner

810.9 Bohemianism. American literature—History and criticism
ISBN 684-12371-1 LC 73-143950

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Lewis Leary

Am Lit 44:336 My '72 700w

Choice 8:1451 Ja '72 140w

New Repub 166:28 Ja 22 '72 450w

COOK, FRED J. The Army-McCarthy hearings, April-June 1954; a senator creates a sensation hunting Communists. (A focus bk) 66p il lib bdg $3.95 Watts, F.

353.6 McCarthy, Joseph Raymond—Juvenile literature
ISBN 531-00995-5 LC 79-152737

"To his followers, the controversial Senator Joseph McCarthy was a patriot genuinely concerned with American security; to his critics

COOK, F. J.—Continued

he was a witch-hunter cynically disdainful of civil liberties. Fred Cook examines [the events of 1954 when television covered the clash of McCarthy] . . . with the United States Army over the role of communism in government and other areas of American life." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grade seven and up." (Library J)

"The award-winning author makes good reading of one of America's wildest witch-hunts." Mrs. J. G. Gray
Best Sell 31:387 N 15 '71 90w

"This narrative, which supports the liberal point of view, is well told and includes interesting and helpful photographs. It contains an excellent summary of the . . . hearings and a clear picture of the making and destroying of a demagogue. Cook describes McCarthy as a poor Senator, a heartless destroyer of innocent people, and a mental lightweight. He points out that the Cohn-Schine affair, with McCarthy's complicity, ranks as comic opera material. A more technical discussion can be found in an essay in Dorsen's Frontiers of Civil Liberties [BRD 1968]; for the more conservative point of view, McCarthy and His Enemies by Buckley and Bozell [BRD 1954] should be consulted. Though these are both adult books, they will be comprehensible to Cook's audience." E. J. Bander

Library J 97:2242 Je 15 '72 130w

COOK, FRED J. The nightmare decade; the life and times of Senator Joe McCarthy. 626p pl $10 Random house

973.918 U.S.—Politics and government—1945-1953. McCarthy, Joseph Raymond
ISBN 0-394-46270-X LC 74-102320

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by D. M. Oshinsky
Commentary 52:116 O '71 2750w

Reviewed by T. C. Reeves
J Am Hist 58:1055 Mr '72 550w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 77:106 Je 14 '71 1000w

COOK, JACK. Rags of time; a season in prison. 192p $6.95 Beacon press

365 Prisons—Pennsylvania
ISBN 0-8070-0524-X LC 77-179147

"Cook, sentenced to a three-year prison term for his refusal to be inducted into the armed forces, was first sent to Lewisburg for processing, and then transferred to Allenwood. In this volume, he relates his experiences and views of prisons. He describes how he and four other inmates decided to walk to the gate of Allenwood to greet demonstrators, and his 'time' in 'the hole,' more commonly known as solitary confinement. Through this and other experiences, the author comes to view all prisoners as political prisoners in one sense or another [and believes that] prison life destroys the individual, causes bitterness, and generally results in a return to prison." (Library J)

"[This book] is a mixed grill. The scathing and curious and brutal language of prison, describing the demeaning and ruthless and brutal milieu, is set beside incredible insights on El Greco and Donne and Rouault, and even that glory of Paris, the Cluny's Lady with the Unicorn. . . . The final few paragraphs of the book have shock value for which one is not fully prepared despite the impact of the whole. And yet the whole must be read even partially to prepare for them, as they would mean no more taken out of context than would Dante's 'Give up hope, all ye who enter here.'" Cornelia Holbert

Best Sell 32:76 My 15 '72 600w

"The book's value to the student will be in the understanding of a particular form of social protest. Cook is a dedicated conscientious objector. His writing is primarily a monologue expounding his philosophy and personal experience in civil disobedience. . . . Useful to the advanced undergraduate with a burning interest in civil disobedience."

Choice 9:1166 N '72 160w

"In the process of expressing . . . [his] views, Cook illustrates quite clearly the sad, poor conditions of prisons today, and, in a rather frank manner, the attitudes of the prisoners. Recommended." W. M. Forman

Library J 97:1456 Ap 15 '72 170w

Library J 97:3820 N 15 '72 150w [YA]

COOK, M. A., ed. Studies in the economic history of the Middle East. See Studies in the economic history of the Middle East

COOK, WILLIAM J. Masks, modes, and morals: the art of Evelyn Waugh [by] William J. Cook, Jr. 352p $12 Fairleigh Dickinson univ. press

823 Waugh, Evelyn
ISBN 0-8386-7707-X LC 73-118125

"This study of the major novels of Evelyn Waugh reveals that there is a single fundamental technique central to every aspect of Waugh's fiction. Dr. Cook shows how this technique, as it progressively discovers and develops theme, is based on the uniquely contrived relationship between the narrator-persona and a special character-persona [and how] this technique is modified and adapted within the artistic discipline of the conventional novel to sustain a maturing world vision." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is] an overall survey and critique of Waugh's fiction. . . . While several of Cook's views are well known to Waugh scholars, he furnishes several stimulating insights (his close reading of Waugh's relationship to Pennyfeather in Decline and Fall [BRD 1929], e.g., is exceedingly valuable) and presents the most probing, in-depth study ever attempted of Waugh's use of, and attitude to, the narrator of each novel. Cook's book has weaknesses—it repeats much Waugh scholarship and its bibliography is sadly deficient. . . . Nevertheless, the book furnishes valuable commentary on Waugh's narrative techniques, and as such, is certainly recommended to all college and university libraries."

Choice 8:1174 N '71 210w

"Cook explicitly counters earlier interpretations by such critics as Carens and Greenblatt in contending that Waugh developed rather than changed and that, although method differs sharply, the attitudes of his last works are present in his first. Waugh's detachment and skepticism are congruous even with the religious turn represented by Brideshead Revisited [BRD 1946] and later novels. This seems a sound book carefully argued; there is, however, jargon such as 'narrator-persona' that may put off even the specialist for whom the book is intended. For academic libraries." R. L. Nadelhaft

Library J 96:3137 O 1 '71 100w

COOKE, A. B., ed. Lord Carlingford's journal: reflections of a cabinet minister, 1885. See Carlingford, Lord

COOKE, ALISTAIR, ed. Garbo and the night watchmen; a selection made in 1937 from the writings of British and American film critics. 285p il $7.95 McGraw

791.43 Moving picture plays—History and criticism
SBN 07-012490-6 LC 79-135303

A selection of material originally published in The New Republic, The New Masses, Life, Variety, Esquire, The Spectator, Life and Letters Today, The London Mercury, The Listener, The New Statesman and Nation, and The Manchester Guardian. Index.

"A reissue of a collection first published in 1937. In his 1971 preface, the editor is uncertain if this republication was necessary, and with good reason. Nine film critics, both American and English, are represented and, with one exception, time has not been kind to their work. The exception, Otis Ferguson, displays remarkable perception. . . . Sadly, neither Graham Greene nor Alistair Cooke produced reviews of any but routine interest. . . . This is hardly an essential purchase; the writing is on the level of competent journalism. But it is lots of fun and the stills are lovely."

Choice 9:520 Je '72 160w

"This collection of early movie reviews has the freshness, and may have the appeal, of a new book; much of this writing is more vigorous and intelligent and witty than most of today's criticism. Cooke describes the book as 'a casual chronicle of eight youngish men [Cooke, Graham Greene, Otis Ferguson, Meyer Levin, Robert Herring, Don Herold, John Marks, Robert Forsythe] and one gorgeous woman [Cecelia Ager, who gets into amusing details about stars' wardrobes and coiffures]. . . . The revelations may be the Americans Ager and Herold and the British Herring." J. A. Avant

Library J 97:1344 Ap 1 '72 170w

COOKE, JOHN A. L., Jr. auth. The Oxford book of invertebrates. See Whiteley, D.

COOKE, M. G. ed. Modern Black novelists; a collection of critical essays. (A Spectrum bk) 219p $5.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall 809.3 Negro fiction.

ISBN 0-13-588004-1; 0-13-587998-1 (pa)

LC 70-163856

"Essays by Abiola Irele, Ezekiel Mphahlele, and Wilson Harris make up an introductory section devoted to differing interpretations of Negritude as a literary factory. Essays on Ellison (including . . . one by Robert Bone from Tri-Quarterly), Wright, and Baldwin make up the U.S. section. Africa is represented by essays on Chinua Achebe, Camara Laye, and Mongo Beti, plus group treatment of Ekweni, Nzekwu, La Guma, and Kane. The West Indies section features pieces on Naipaul, Wilson Harris (by John Hearne), and Claude McKay, plus composite treatment of Reid, Selvon, Salkey, Mais, Mittelholzer, and Lamming in a . . . survey article by Gerald Moore." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Will be valuable to teachers and students of black literature. . . . The bibliography, particularly the section of it which lists major works by modern black novelists, is especially helpful. One might wish that the book had an index."

Choice 9:639 JI/Ag '72 100w

"The international scope of these 14 essays guarantees, of course, that they will fall short of satisfactory coverage by virtue of the enormous number of important black novelists who must be left out. And this inevitable limitation is made more severe by greater focus on the West Indies than on either the U.S. or Africa (reflecting one of Yale professor Cooke's specialties). Moreover, V. S. Naipaul, the most widely known West Indian writer, does not consider himself a 'black' novelist (nor do many of his readers consider him one). But along the way toward counterbalancing our overriding concern with the literatures of Western Europe, we must be grateful for even scattershot coverage of other literatures." Arthur Curley

Library J 97:138 Ja 15 '72 250w

"[These essays] have all been published elsewhere, and may indeed be the best on the subject. If so, [the collection] is evidence that not enough able critics have been devoting attention to the fiction of black Americans, Africans and West Indians. The most distinguished essay is by Robert Bone. . . . He is the best critic of American fiction by black authors around. . . . Compared with [his] revelatory but unaffected prose. . . . Cooke's is muddy and jargonish. . . . [The] bibliography contains puzzling omissions. . . . Furthermore, reading the essays in the American section, one gets the impression that the only black writers producing fiction in America for the past twenty years are Ellison, James Baldwin and Richard Wright. . . . There is a greater irony in this section, too, than in the others. All the essayists are white." J. H. Bryant

Nation 214:343 Mr 13 '72 1650w

COOKRIDGE, E. H. Gehlen: spy of the century. 402p 11 maps $10 Random house

B or 92 Gehlen, Reinhard. Secret service. Spies

ISBN 0-394-47313-2 LC 71-159385

At the beginning of World War II, Gehlen was an officer in the Wehrmacht. By its end he had risen to become one of Hitler's chief intelligence officers, in sole charge of espionage and counter-espionage against the Soviet Union. Then, in 1945, he [placed] at the disposal of the United States his . . . experience and unique archives covering every aspect of the Soviet Union and her satellites. In return, the CIA placed him in charge of the 'Gehlen Organization.' His headquarters was . . . at Pullach in Bavaria . . . and it soon grew to be the most powerful and best-equipped espionage establishment in Western Europe. Eventually his organization became the official Secret Service of the West German state."

(Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of names.

Choice 9:1188 N '72 250w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor p7 Mr 30 '72 340w

Reviewed by G. C. Zahn

Commonweal 97:229 D 8 '72 500w

"Cookridge . . . calls his . . . book 'Gehlen: Spy of the Century.' But in fact Reinhard Gehlen himself never crossed a frontier to spy out the nakedness of the land of military apparel. [He] controlled a far-reaching network of agents and shrewdly fitted their bits and pieces of information into a coherent picture. . . . It is in all a fascinating story and Mr. Cookridge tells it well. The text is adequately documented."

Economist 241:63 D 11 '71 370w

Reviewed by B. D. Loynd

Library J 97:2719 S 1 '72 70w

Reviewed by W. D. Jacobs

Nat R 24:650 Je 9 '72 950w

Reviewed by G. A. Harrison

New Repub 166:25 Ap 22 '72 1050w

Reviewed by Hugh Greene

New Statesman 83:530 Ap 21 '72 260w

Reviewed by Neal Ascherson

N Y Rev of Books 13:3 Je 1 '72 800w

"[Cookridge] writes as the 'expert.' Nevertheless, he cannot avoid signs of regret at the apparent decline in later years of Gehlen's organization; the General is, after all, the hero of this book. In fact, at his hands Gehlen takes on the proportions of a superhero. . . . [The author is] given to the kind of inaccuracies, large and small, and to the sweeping generalizations that would spell quick failure for a secret intelligence service. . . . [His] chapter on 'War of the Radio Waves' is laughable." Christopher Felix

N Y Times Bk R p3 Ap 16 '72 750w

Reviewed by R. G. Deindorfer

Sat R 55:61 Je 24 '72 1300w

"The No, No, Nanette of the re-processed cloak and dagger act . . . promises to be Reinhard Gehlen. How can you upstage a man who was Hitler's favorite intelligence officer, then after the war played 'Dear Reinie' to his CIA chief Allen Dulles? . . . Cookridge, an old agent who makes a living out of spy chronicles, . . . tends a bit to trade on man-in-the-shadows glamour."

Time 99:83 Mr 13 '72 210w

"The author has had access to the relevant archives for the period up to 1945—which, . . . he covers more fully and convincingly than the post-war years. . . . The book certainly conveys the sinister atmosphere of the world of espionage: the pressures leading double agents to confess; the coded messages sent by pocket-sized transmitters; the parachute-dropping of spies into Soviet territory. Any information on the world of East-West cloak-and-daggery may be better than none. However, the documentation is unreliable, the style is too anecdotal, and Mr Cookridge's judgments are far too sweeping for this book to count as a serious contribution to contemporary history."

TLS p30 Ja 14 '72 500w

COOKRIDGE, E. H. Spy trade. 288p 11 pl $6.95 Walker & co.

327 Spies, Espionage

ISBN 0-340-12642-6 LC 72-179587

"The author discusses over a score of post-war cases of governments bartering captive foreign agents against their own incarcerated men. . . . [He] devotes seven of his 21 chapters to the . . . circumstances in which Moscow exploited the windfall of Mr Gary Powers and the U-2 shot down over Siberia to effect the release in February, 1962, of Colonel Rudolf Ivanovich Abel, the . . . Soviet spy in the United States. . . . Among other comparable cases considered . . . are those of Messrs Greville Wynne and Gordon Lonsdale, the Krogers and Mr Gerald Brooke, Mr Alfred Frenzel, (a . . . Bundestag deputy who had sold defence secrets to the Warsaw Pact countries) and the . . . west German archaeologist, Frau Martina Kischke." (Economist)

Economist 241:63 D 11 '71 420w

"Cookridge, a prolific writer on espionage matters, draws on his wartime experiences and contacts as a British agent. . . . Some of the case studies Cookridge describes have been written up elsewhere, but additional details are given here. Many little publicized cases are also included." Norman Horrocks

COOKRIDGE, E. H.—Continued

Library J 97:2193 Je 15 '72 180w

"[Cookridge] has discerned a pattern. The Soviets, he says, in order to encourage spy recruitment, guarantee their agents that, if captured, they will be bartered for. Since more Eastern than Western spies are caught, the Soviets are not above arresting innocent travelers or using foreigners who have fallen afoul of the law as bargaining chips. Mr. Cookridge has drawn together numerous examples of this flourishing trade and contributed a small but significant chapter to the story of the espionage game."

N Y Times Bk R p38 O 8 '72 130w

COOKSON, CATHERINE. Our Kate; an autobiography. 238p $5.95 Bobbs

B or 92
LC 74-161241

The Kate of the title "is Catherine Cookson's mother, and the story revolves around her as the center of her daughter's life. Cookson was an illegitimate child, and she had to contend with hardship, poverty, her mother's weakness for the bottle, and her stern, bigoted grandparents. A sensitive child, loved but neglected and overworked, she finally overcame her almost intolerable background to become a happy wife and successful author." (Library J)

"For a vivid picture of the industrial north of England during the early part of the 20th Century, this autobiography is graphic, detailed, and haunting. . . . Its characters are portrayed realistically, and its descriptions are excellent. However, it is such a dreary book that it may be limited in its appeal. Recommended with that reservation." Ruth Dorman

Library J 96:2762 S 15 '71 200w

"[The author] has produced a number of distinguished novels set in the industrial towns along the banks of the Tyne. . . . The book is about being poor and despised, but it is about other things—about a little girl's fight, taking on all comers, to win out over her circumstances, and about the conquest of the fear, the generalized, many-faced fear, that lives with the poor, waking and sleeping."

New Yorker 47:232 N 20 '71 180w

"Every effort to tell the truth is strenuous as Catherine Cookson's earns our respect, and in her case a degree of surprise and embarrassment go with it. This is the result not so much of the frankness of the revelations . . . as of their intensity. . . . [The author] presents a kind of memorial portrait of her mother. . . . a figure of commanding tyranny and love—and stamina. Souped-up revenge-writing is so common nowadays that it is worth being reminded that the real sufferers were seldom quite defeated by life; it is remarkable how often this struggling Northern family could laugh. In spite of some rugged stylistic puzzles like 'it was me granda who was the instigator of me changing schools', the writing is vivid and strives constantly for accuracy through all the passion. Sentimentality is rigorously avoided."

TLS p664 Je 19 '69 320w

COOLIDGE, CLARK. Space. 120p $7.50; pa $2.45 Harper

811
LC 76-123976

The book "consists of assortments of words across a page, not in the shape and not with the sound technique of concrete poetry, but in an arrangement calculated to present words in terms of visual order and abstract sound. This is achieved by omitting syntax." (Library J)

"It would be unfair to quote a poem because without a fair sampling the words seem ludicrous. They do present sound in image, but in a communicative shorthand that makes the strictest poetic condensation seem verbose. I spent too much time trying to put the syntax back to know what was going on. And for the next book, where does one go from Space? Return, maybe. There is vitality in the words. For large collections and collections of experimental poetry." Jerome Cushman

Library J 96:1985 Je 1 '71 120w

"[This is] an appropriate title for an attempt to make le vide papier que la blancheur défend bear as much significance as the few words scattered on it, isolated from content or syntax. The abstract music, the nonsense verse, may delight fans of 'concrete poetry', from whose company I generally exclude myself."

David Lehman

Poetry 119:233 Ja '72 60w

COOLIDGE, OLIVIA. Gandhi. 278p il $5.95 Houghton

B or 92 Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-395-12573-1 LC 71-161645

"Coverage is from birth to death, with attention given to: Gandhi's relationship with his parents and wife; his schooling; his involvement with civil disobedience and his role in shaping his country's policies; the veneration of his people and his relationship with his disciples; his efforts to reconcile Muslims and Hindus; etc. [Glossary. Index.] Grades eight to twelve." (Library J)

"Teens who read [this] excellent biography . . . will probably finish the book with a more balanced picture of the Indian leader than their parents have ever had. . . . The saint is here, of course . . . but so is the less well-known man, stubbornly refusing to compromise, mistakenly advocating home-spinning as the salvation of India, and attempting to dominate his sons by withholding permission for them to marry. Mrs. Coolidge has detailed both the complexity and the humanity of her subject, giving teen-agers an adult-style biography that is as straightforward and informative as it is easily digestible." Marilyn Gardner

Christian Science Monitor pB5 N 11 '71 150w [YA]

"[The author's] gift for sorting out the many influences that shape a great man, and for showing how, in turn, events are shaped by him has never been more apparent than in her life of Mohandas Gandhi. . . . [She] has written a comprehensive biography that is also an introduction to modern Indian political history and an examination of the doctrine of Satyagraha, or 'Truth Force,' the philosophy of passive resistance that Gandhi introduced to the Western world. . . . [This is] a thoughtful, illuminating book." S. D. Long

Horn Bk 47:597 D '71 480w

"Coolidge points up Gandhi's harsh and dictatorial treatment of his children; his . . . contempt for modern medicine or the basic scientific rules of nutrition [which] made a good deal of his personal advice to others absurd; and the fact that . . . the economic future that he planned for India was an impractical one. . . . [She shows that Gandhi's major contribution was a style, an ideal, a sum of increments, rather than a series of lasting successes. The narrative is clear, without coyness; both familiar and unfamiliar photographs are well reproduced." Brooke Anson

Library J 96:4139 D 15 '71 190w

COON, CARLETON S. The hunting peoples; maps and drawings by Aldren A. Watson. (An Atlantic monthly press bk) 413p $10 Little 301.2 Society, Primitive. Hunting
LC 75-154953

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 8:1384 D '71 190w

Economist 243[i.e.234]:62 Je 24 '72 90w
TLS p1094 S 22 '72 300w

COONS, WILLIAM R. Attica diary. 238p $6.95 Stein & Day

B or 92 Prisons—New York (State)—Personal narratives. New York, State Prison, Attica

The author. "a college English instructor, spent fifteen months of a three-year sentence for possession of LSD at Attica State." (Best Sell) The diary covers that period of his life.

"To be a bit cruel, [this] book is on the self-indulgent side. The title may be misleading since it is a diary kept before the infamous tragedy and on the whole it doesn't go very far in dealing with what led up to it. . . . It is an intimate journal, writing out loud, affecting the patois and attitudes of the prison which, coupled with all of the literary allusions and sense for metaphor that Mr. Coons' profession forces upon him, do not always work too well. I doubt if 'Attica Diary' will tell you anything about prisons or Attica itself that you didn't already suspect to be true. The book, for all that, does give you the author's spleen and literary talent—if that be enough." H. T. Anderson

Best Sell 32:228 Ag 15 '72 220w

Choice 9:1362 D '72 170w

"Coons freely admits to little real relationship with either the Establishment or the blacks. His purpose here: 'to build a paper tunnel under these walls, to find temporary respite in the wayward reflections of an addled consciousness.' Only incidentally does he give us an account of the hell of prison. Emphasis is on his 'addled consciousness.' And that is a mistake which adds up to pretty dull going. Coon's book is way down on the prison lit list." Bill Katz

Library J 97:2573 Ag '72 140w

"[From] March, 1970, to June, 1971 [Coons was an inmate] at the penitentiary that erupted the September after his parole. . . . His record of his incarceration clearly, and often obscenely, expresses his rage and self-pity, but it does not show, in any way that outsiders can understand, why what happened at Attica did happen at Attica."

New Yorker 48:79 Ag 26 '72 150w

COOPER, CAROLE L. Managing local government under union pressure. See Stanley, D. T.

COOPER, SUSAN. Dawn of fear; il. by Margery Gill. 157p $4.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-266201-4 LC 71-115755

"Derek Brand, age 11, lives happily outside of London during the blitz. Certainly, there are air-raids, planes and sirens; even old Mrs. Jenkins ('we must be glad [she] didn't know what was happening') dies. . . . Derek and his friends create a 'club' and defend it against a neighboring gang. War touches these children—lightly. Then Derek's best friend is killed in a raid." (N Y Times Bk R) "Grades four to six." (Library J)

"The narrative is vividly detailed and unhurried; for it is an uncommon kind of war story, focusing largely on the emotions of the sharply individual boys and the trauma of Derek's sudden awareness [on the night of the bombing]." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 46:477 O '70 250w

Reviewed by S. M. Thrash

Library J 95:4042 N 15 '70 120w

"I want to warn parents and libraries against [this book]. . . . Had the author limited her horrors to death from bombs or to really vicious gang warfare or to tormenting an animal I might well have felt that this was a praiseworthy study of a serious theme which children ought to recognise. But the combination of all three seems to me phoney, gratuitously nasty and fundamentally pointless. This is not real life, it is Straw Dogs." Gillian Tindall

New Statesman 83:760 Je 2 '72 150w

"There were three surprises for me in this novel. First, that we still get World War II stories with tea and drippings and nature-in-blossom. Second, that without suspense or drama, 'Dawn of Fear' was well-written. Third, that at its conclusion the author didn't shy from realistic facts and emotions. . . . A story in which recent history plays so little havoc with its principals and their ordinary ways of life makes war an adventure, not a tragedy. Miss Cooper needed more drama, more tension and less old-fashioned 'Boys Life' narrative to create a memorable book." John Neufeld

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p28 N 8 '70 200w

"[This] is beautifully done. . . . The hate and cruelty of the White Road boys seems to indicate the passions in all of us which lead to war and man's inhumanity to man. The book might well have ended there but Susan Cooper really makes her young readers face the facts. War is not just a matter of battlefield heroics, of life-sized Action Men. It is a matter of innocent ordinary people dying. . . . It is unusual these days to find death in a children's book. . . . Some parents and teachers will not welcome Dawn of Fear for this reason. . . . But with so much death on our television screens blunting our children's sensitivity it is surely good that they can weep over Peter's death, as other children wept, at other times, over the deaths of Paul Dombey, Beth and Froggy's little brother."

TLS p803 J1 14 '72 350w

COOPER, WENDY. Hair; sex society symbolism. 233p il $12.95 Stein & Day

646.7 Hair

ISBN 0-8128-1429-0 LC 70-167706

The author has covered "the hirsute lore of the ages [quoting] . . . from Hippocrates to Mr. Kenneth Allsop on the sexual, social and symbolic significance of hair." (New Statesman) Index.

"Since there is no end to the superstitions, fashions, and neuroses that the human race, from aborigine to astronaut, lavishes on its hair, it is probably rash to claim that Miss Cooper has reported all of them. But while a stray lunacy may here and there have escaped her net, she has certainly gathered the majority, rattling them into a cheerful tangle of information, reliable and otherwise, with wisps of quotation and anecdote straggling about the edges. The book is a collection of oddities designed primarily to amuse." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:96 Ja '72 110w

"[Cooper] has produced a comprehensive [and] readable . . . study which will be of general appeal. . . . However, some of the color prints are poor, and the binding is weak." Juliet Woodbury

Library J 97:1454 Ap 15 '72 90w

"Pre-masticated information and belly-laughers are packed in enticingly-jacketed hard cover. The appeal is to the non-reader. . . . There is no need to be intimidated by the text. If you do not like the flavour you can look at the pictures. These are invariably lavish, and at times astonishingly informative." Matthew Coady

New Statesman 82:794 D 3 '71 240w

COOPER, WILLIAM. Brothers; the trial of the brothers Hosein for the murder of Mrs. McKay [Eng title: Shall we ever know?]. 220p $6.95 Harper 347.7 Hosein, Arthur. Hosein, Nizamodeen.

McKay, Muriel Florence. Murder. Trials

ISBN 06-01085-X LC 76-181618

This book concerns "the trial of two Trinidadian brothers for the kidnap-murder of the wife of a London newspaper executive. . . . [and] the attempt to prove murder in the absence of a corpus delicti." (Library J)

"The writing is colorless and the book is repetitious; therefore it becomes dull and boring as it goes on. In addition to his pedestrian style the author parenthetically inserts his own thoughts and emotions and is guilty of 'leading the reader.' . . . A reader willing to pursue all or part of the book will gain some perspective of how British Courts operate, but there are many other books in print that accomplish this much better." Edward Bartley

Best Sell 32:61 My 1 '72 270w

"Cooper, who engages in very little theorizing and no snooping or private interviewing of his own, sympathizes with the verdict. But he is not totally convinced. . . . [He] finds something of the Karamazovs in the Hoseins, and he likens the trial to the person suffering from a fatal illness." Paul Theroux

Book World p10 Ap 23 '72 750w

"This is a capably written, intelligent volume, frankly not very exciting, or dramatic for the most part. As is often the case in trial volumes (fiction as well as nonfiction, oddly enough), the reader must make do with an ambiguous conclusion, regardless of the forthrightness of the verdict." J. L. Breen

Library J 97:695 F 15 '72 110w

"This is the tale of a case which Lord Justice Edmund Davies and his colleagues, in dismissing the appeal, said was the most terrible with which they had had to deal. The comment jars somewhat on Mr William Cooper, the distinguished novelist whose story of the trial, originally published in the Observer, is suitably developed here. The contemporary recording helps us to feel that we are actually there. . . . Nearly all the book must have been written before it was known that the Hosein brothers would be found guilty, although the prospect always loomed large. As one reads the text one feels that Mr Cooper, like a good jurymen, was giving them the benefit of the doubt up to the last moment." Frank Longford

New Statesman 81:844 Je 18 '71 480w

COOVER, ROBERT. A theological position; plays. 172p $6.50; pa $2.95 Dutton 812 One-act plays
SBN 0-525-216006; 0-525-045406 (pa)
LC 77-158593

The four plays are: The kid, Love scene, Rip awake, and A theological position.

"[The author's] works of fiction have been highly praised. Like the fiction, these plays go beyond the absurd to the ridiculous. All of them are wildly extravagant satires on theatrical and social standards and norms—'The Kid' is the ultimate, deadly statement on the Western epic; 'Love Scene' should leave no director or actor unshaken; 'Rip Awake' turns the legend of Rip Van Winkle entirely inside out; and the title play says all that need be said about the fatuousness of religious drama. Although there are things in all the plays that may offend someone, there is something in the title play to offend everyone. . . . [Coover's] themes are mainly destructive of all logic. . . . [His] works are so appealing because he truly loves that which he most skillfully destroys; these carefully cliché-filled plays become the love-objects of that feeling. In less loving hands, they might fail completely." R. M. Buck

Library J 97:2426 J1 '72 160w

"[In one] play, the 'theological position' is that virgin birth is no longer possible and therefore the priest had better have sex with the pregnant maiden; toward the end, only the players' genitals are talking. . . . Never mind, Coover takes extraordinary risks and deserves forgiveness for his failures. The remaining two plays are better. Both are monologues. In one, a director, perhaps God, urges two actors to show some feeling in their love scene, but they respond only with impassive motions. . . . Coover's effect here . . . derives in part from the deliberate artificiality of actors. . . . [In] the other monologue . . . [Rip van Winkle] worries about the Revolution: did it really happen, and if so and he slept through it, does he need his own?" P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 79:98 My 15 '72 700w

COPPEL, ALFRED. The landlocked man. 255p $6.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-147680-2 LC 70-182326

This novel focuses on the relationship of 'Robert Martin, age 50, recent dropout from his executive position as art director, etc., of a San Francisco advertising firm, and . . . Christiane Kessler, nee Petersen, age 23. . . . This is the story of their love affair which does bridge the generation gap, albeit briefly. It is also the story of Martin's attempts to build a new life style for himself and Christy and his efforts to overcome the alienation of his ex-wife and his daughter, as well as the influence of his former business associates for whom he had become a valuable tool." (Library J)

Reviewed by Barbara Harte

Best Sell 32:51 My 1 '72 330w

"There is some particularly good description of San Francisco and its environs, and although several characters seem to be stereotyped, the novel is entertaining, if a bit sentimental." Sharon Rinkoff

Library J 97:1033 Mr 15 '72 110w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p42 Ap 9 '72 240w

"Coppel is a sharp, evocative writer, and he elaborates this familiar and highly fashionable middle-aged male daydream (the demanding young body quickening forgotten joys) with an honesty—an awareness of all the many traps and enticements—that it seldom receives. He is robustly alive to foolishness and stupidity and ugliness (in businessman, in policeman, in Stanford hippie), but he also has a warm and understanding heart, and this corrective intermingling of seeing and feeling has produced an intelligently tender love story."

New Yorker 47:159 O 7 '72 120w

CORBET, HUGH, jt. ed. Commonwealth policy in a global context. See Streeten, P.

CORBIN, JOHN B. A technical services manual for small libraries. 206p il $5 Scarecrow

025 Processing (Libraries). Acquisitions (Libraries). Cataloging
ISBN 0-8108-0388-7 LC 70-156885

"The organization of technical services departments and the specific functions involved in ordering and receiving, cataloging and classification, producing a card catalog, and final processing are defined and described." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Corbin seems most comfortable in describing techniques appropriate to public libraries, and is aware of procedures useful to college libraries of modest aims; the book is of little use to special or school libraries. . . . No attempt is made to describe bindery or prebindery procedures. . . . However, the techniques discussed are clearly and carefully described. The book could thus be of some help to neophytes in the profession if the texts in Corbin's bibliography are not at hand. . . . [This] book is not a significant addition to the literature of library management. It is recommended only for those libraries attempting to collect all books on librarianship." D. E. Pownall

Col & Res Lib 33:336 J1 '72 500w

"This is a very basic manual intended for those librarians who are partially trained, who have forgotten their formal training, and/or who find themselves in a sudden sink-or-swim dilemma vis-à-vis technical services. . . . The context is a small to medium-sized library of any type, though the manual is more appropriate for the traditional public library—non-book and, particularly, nonprint materials are barely mentioned. Sample form letters, order forms, catalog cards, etc. are illustrated. Administrative aspects such as personnel management, budgeting, and financial accounting are excluded. The index is specific. The bibliography is annotated and with indication of priorities for purchase. . . . The tone reflects 'this is the way to do it, this is how.' Unfortunately, the advice is unimaginative, even outdated, and simplistic." H. O. Marcy

Library J 97:46 Ja 1 '72 400w

"By no means is . . . [this manual] expected to be a substitute for good formal courses in a library school . . . [but it] must be used in conjunction with the standard texts already available on technical services work. . . . We are not informed what the author means by small- to medium-sized libraries, but I would guess he means those with less than 50,000 volumes. The book is simply written with terms carefully defined and could be of some use. . . . [A general criticism] is that the suggested form letters are all examples of poor form design and therefore would be poor examples to copy. Also, although blanket orders and standing orders are mentioned, no mention is made of on-approval plans. The author is redundant in his descriptions of similar procedures." Henry Voos

LRTS 16:99 winter '72 400w

CORCORAN, BARBARA. This is ■ recording; il. by Richard Cuffari. 168p $5.25 Atheneum pubs.

LC 73-154751

"Boston-bred Marianne, a clever 14-year-old with a lively sense of the ridiculous, is sent to Montana to live with her independent, ex-actress grandmother while her parents decide what to do about their failing marriage. In Montana, Marianne meets Indians Oliver Everybodylooksat and his brother Dougie Three Toes, and gains knowledge from them of wildlife, ecology, and conservation. She also learns about coping with mocking classmates, a bully, and a corrupt assistant sheriff. . . . Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"As a heroine, [Marianne] engages the reader less readily than do those of the author's previous Western stories, although the over-all conception and the style of the story are excellent. The small line drawings provided as chapter headings make the volume attractive." V. H.

Horn Bk 47:619 D '71 140w

"[This is] a superior, fast-moving novel. . . . Told in the first person as a tape-recorded diary, this is not just another city-girl-matures-in-the-country-and-begins-to-love-nature story. The tone is generally whimsical, characterizations are vivid, there's plenty of action, and Marianne's wry, humorous and insightful observations spark interest throughout." Cherie Zarookian

Library J 96:4189 D 15 '71 150w

"For a with-it kid like Marianne, some initial tender-foot-type gaffes are just plain incredible. No one who writes outraged letters-to-the-editor about pollution (signed E. Pluribus Unum) can convincingly make remarks like 'I didn't know Indians went to college.' Caviling aside, this is an exceptionally readable story and possesses one further shining, if negative, virtue. For once in fiction the non-equestrian tenderfoot stays that way to the end, instead of winning the junior trophy in the local rodeo during the last chapter." Georgess McHargue

N Y Times Bk ■ p8 O 3 '71 440w

CORKRAN, HERBERT. Patterns of international cooperation in the Caribbean, 1942-1969 [by] Herbert Corkran, Jr. (A Jno. E. Owens memorial foundation publication) 285p $8.50 Southern Methodist Univ. press

341.18 International cooperation. Caribbean area—Foreign relations
LC 74-128122

The author surveys "the efforts undertaken by the various Caribbean dependent areas to promote modern international technical, cultural, and economic cooperation while at the same time attempting to come to grips with the . . . problems of their changing political status and incipient nationalistic aspirations." (Choice) Index.

"[This] book may be said to suffer from too much inclusion of almost encyclopedic factual detail, lack of balance between the relevant and the irrelevant, too much quotation from official documents in lieu of thoughtful analysis, a predilection for formal, structural description rather than for analysis of concrete results of Caribbean collaboration, and a complete lack of maps or other useful illustrative material. Nevertheless, the volume has merit in that Professor Corkran writes with ■ warm sympathy for his subject, and provides a valuable compendium of information about the successes and failures of these little-known attempts at economic and social collaboration in the Caribbean." J. L. Busey

Ann Am Acad 398:172 N '71 800w

"Corkran's study is the most up to date and comprehensive treatment of recent Caribbean attempts at international cooperation and thus adds greatly to such previous literature on the subject as the pertinent volumes of the University of Florida's Caribbean Conference series and B. Poole's The Caribbean Commission: background of cooperation in the West Indies [BRD 1952]."

Choice 8:135 Mr '71 140w

"[This book is] mistitled; it does not deal with Cuba, Haiti, or the Dominican Republic. What the author does examine are the West Indian attempts to cooperate through four international organizations: the Anglo-American Caribbean Commission (AACC), the Caribbean Commission, the Caribbean Organization, and the Corporación de Desarrollo Económico del Caribe. Corkran attempts to present a picture of the activities of these four organizations and their problems, but he only partially succeeds. . . . He did not examine any manuscript collections, relying instead on the public records of the organizations under analysis. (The book does not have a bibliography which forces the reader to check the footnotes for sources.) . . . The volume provides some useful insights into the problems of the West Indies, but it is only a beginning. The subject needs far more study." I. F. Gellman
J Am Hist 58:1054 Mr '72 310w

CORLISS, WILLIAM R., Jr. auth. Man and atom. See Seaborg G. T.

CORMAN, AVERY. Oh, God! 190p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

SBN 671-21029-7 LC 79-159127

The narrator of this novel is a "free-lance reporter who one day gets a note in the mail which reads, 'God grants you an interview. Go to 600 Madison Avenue, room 3700, Monday, at 11 a.m.' He thinks it's a gimmick, but goes. . . . The note turns out to be authentic." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by J. J. McAleer

Best Sell 31:379 N 15 '71 280w

"Ah, what a noble idea is here o'er-thrown. And a pity it is. This could have been a great book. The idea of God reappearing in our day is apt. . . . Unfortunately, the author does not have the equipment to pull off the formidable task he has set for himself. . . . C. S. Lewis might have been able to handle this; the author, regrettably, writes more like Jerry Lewis. The book, we are told, is to be made into a movie. One helpfully submits the name of Dean Martin for the lead, one of the Ding-a-ling sisters as his wife, and Durward Kirby to play God. This should insure the preservation of the quintessential vacuity of the book itself and a smash hit at the box office." P. J. Laux

Critic 30:89 Mr '72 900w

"In this light novel God returns to earth to pass on a last message of hope and to squelch rumors of his death. . . . The writer's efforts to convince a disbelieving world that God lives and occasionally speaks to him form most of the comic substance of the book. The hero's major battle is with the media, which have little interest in just a small divine revelation. . . . Publicity finally comes, not for God and the message, but for The Man Who Saw God. In an ironic but believable ending, ■ world religious gathering votes that no miracle occurred and the message is ignored. The portrait of God as an ordinary little Jewish guy may be less believable, but it is delightfully well done." R. L. Hough

Library J 96:2789 S 15 '71 150w

"Here is a novel in which God appears looking and sounding something like Mel Brooks's 1,000-year-old man—a God who materializes to a freelance writer in an office on Madison Avenue, and bids him go out and spread the Word. What happens thereafter is highly instructive and very funny. The prophet finds himself rejected, accepted, lionized, arrested, detained in Bellevue—and evaluated by an ecumenical conglomerate on miracles. Meanwhile, God continues to make fleeting appearances that leave His servant wiser and sadder. There is a moral nestling amid the satire, all the more effective because it is so airily presented." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk ■ p57 O 24 '71 120w

CORNELISEN, ANN. Vendetta of silence: ■ novel. (An Atlantic monthly press bk) 242p $6.95 Little

LC 76-161421

As in Torregraca (BRD 1969), the author "turns to a setting of Italian village life, this time in the Lucanian Apennines. Her story is [based on] a true one, concerning the mysterious murder of a rapacious landowner on the cliffs near the author's rented villa, the subsequent imprisonment of her innocent manservant, and the exile to an asylum of the housekeeper who suspected the real killer. Blackmail is involved too—the result of a clandestine love affair between a young priest and a beautiful fellow teacher in the local school." (Library J)

Reviewed by Sr. M. Marguerite

Best Sell 31:352 N 1 '71 500w

"People who are familiar with the work of Danilo Dolci will find the events, as Miss Cornelisen has so skillfully set them down here, an old story; the book's interest is not in the 'facts,' but in its author's way of selecting and presenting them. . . . A festa scene is wonderfully vivid, and it combines exactly the proper proportions of reverence, hilarity, and the vaguely sinister atmosphere that gives the work so much of its tempo and momentum. Except for [some] occasional lapses . . . the author doesn't patronize the peasants whose lives she succeeds in illuminating here, and that is . . . a very refreshing quality in a book of this nature. In fact, Miss Cornelisen unmistakably succeeds here in creating a work of art." Sara Blackburn

Book World p6 D 26 '71 500w

Reviewed by J. G. Harrison

Christian Science Monitor p9 D 23 '71 420w

"San Basilio is ■ small, remote, and ingrown town, but life there is complex, and these events uproot and twist many lives. All of the elements are described with rare insight and masterful grace and humor, through a succession of diary entries, letters, official notices, and random notes. Highly recommended for all fiction collections." R. R. Gambee

Library J 96:2789 S 15 '71 160w

"Wait a minute. Ann Cornelisen says at the start—and in several, too many, stops along the way. Let me tell you about myself before I tell you about what-happens-next. And Miss Cornelisen . . . proceeds to break the spell by laboriously setting up the background. 'Vendetta of Silence' is filled with notations and observations about traditional Italians and the spell they cast. So filled, in fact, that it almost conceals its underlying (and fatal) flaw—the author's insistence on explaining her story instead of simply telling it. . . . The result is a plot disguised (not to say muffled) within diaries, tapes, snips of conversation, telegrams, newspaper clippings, letters. Furthermore, Miss Cornelisen is self-consciously determined to remind us on almost every page, that she is composing a book." Herbert Mitgang

CORNELISEN, ANN—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p64 N 14 '71 650w

Reviewed by Walter Guzzardi
Sat R 55:68 Ja 29 '72 650w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks
Time 98:89 N 15 '71 500w

CORNET, JOSEPH. Art of Africa; treasures from the Congo [tr. by Barbara Thompson]. 365p il col pl $60 Phaidon

709.1 Art, African

ISBN 0-7148-1469-2 LC 77-158096

The art of the Congo is bound up "with magic and religious practices. All of it—masks, ancestor statues, animal statuettes, fetishes, etc. was produced for use in ritual ceremonies and dances. . . . [This book] draws on the archaeological and ethnographical background to place these . . . products of Negro art in their cultural context. . . . The author [discusses] the art [and history] of thirty-three tribes living in and around the Congo basin. . . . Illustrations include statues, statuettes, masks, pipes, whistles, drums and other objects in wood, ivory, stone, metal, pottery and cloth, many of them not previously published." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The illustrations, although technically excellent, represent the arts of Zaire as lifeless specimens rather than art objects to which the viewer should relate. . . . The art of the Congo is also strictly presented as a dead art. . . . This book might make a useful reference work for college students. . . . [It] can be recommended for college libraries in areas far removed from museum collections and with large book budgets so that purchase does not prevent the acquisition of more stimulating and less pretentious works."

Choice 9:633 J1/Ag '72 230w

"[This book] lets us into the great Brussels museums and some extraordinary Belgian private collections. . . . [Cornet] could have learned a lesson from his prefatory material. Instead [he] plunges straight into an account of culture areas, wherein too much ethnographical detail fails to be buttressed by general anthropological context. The text is crippled by non-sequiturs, padding and esthetician's stock-in-trade: some of the trouble may be due to jerky translation—I fear, however, that antediluvian attitudes to stylistics are at the basis of this unsatisfactory text." Nathaniel Tarn

N Y Times Bk R p7 D 12 '71 250w

"[This] is one of the year's more spectacular and useful productions: spectacular because of the 108 colorplates—it is very difficult to photograph sculpture in color as well as it has been done here—and useful because of its small scope. . . . Cornet's text is dry and functional, with a smell of authority about it, but the sculpture, much of which derives its effect from an extremely sophisticated balance of simple volumes, is intriguing, as are the ceremonial masks. Particularly interesting are the African variations on the theme of the Crucifixion, introduced to the Congo by the Portuguese, and the evidence that a single tribe could work successfully with both realistic and abstract forms." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 78:108 D 13 '71 230w

"The book seems to be primarily directed at the collector, as a guide to help with attributions. [It] exemplifies the old-fashioned museum approach. All the illustrations are studio photographs, and not a single object has been photographed in its natural context. . . . A good deal of the material has not been published before, which adds considerably to the value of the book. Unfortunately, many of the objects have been so highly cleaned and polished that the wood texture has been almost obscured, and the anonymous photographer has aggravated matters by melodramatically spotlighting the figures. Worst of all are the colour photographs, many of which are set insensitively against bright red, yellow or blue backgrounds. By presenting the objects as exotic and primitive, the photographer has managed to create an almost total barrier between them and the onlooker."

TLS p368 Mr 31 '72 480w

CORWIN, RONALD G. Militant professionalism; a study of organizational conflict in high schools. 397p $8.95 Appleton

373.1 High schools. Teaching as a profession

SBN 390-21168-0 LC 75-98400

The author's "thesis is that militance among teachers is a 'normal' response to the structured strains generated by the simultaneous existence of anachronistic administrative styles and the recent emergence of self-conscious professionalism." (Am Soc R)

"Corwin's orientation is determinedly sociological; he specifically rejects the view that deviation from the official norms governing the school is idiosyncratic or pathological. . . . [His] anticipation of significant association between militance and high scores on a 16-item scale measuring professionalism is amply supported when either the school or the individual teacher is the unit of analysis. According to his own estimate, 'Probably the most important conclusion from the study is that faculties that seem to be more professionally oriented to their work . . . are more tension ridden,' when 'tension' is measured by the frequency of conflict. . . . [This admirable study] is informed throughout by the literature of organizational theory, and obedient to the requirements of empirical methodology. . . . Corwin's closely reasoned and generously documented inquiry places all sociologists of education in his debt." Marvin Bressler

Am Soc R 36:1156 D '71 650w

"The title essentially fixes the perimeters of its enquiry; and it derives, with little modification, from two reports prepared for and funded by the U.S. Office of Education. . . . The author does not seem able to shake off the mantle of the original reports: ' . . . when a faculty's age is 'partialled out' the correlation between professional orientation and severe disagreements is t-.22, and with total tension it is t-.33.' Footnotes; no index. Important acquisition for specialized collections in education." Choice 7:1554 Ja '71 190w

CORY, DESMOND. Sunburst. 253p $4.95 Walker & Co.

ISBN 0-8027-5227-6 LC 72-142847

This book is about "atomic blackmail by the Spanish military, with the threat of mega-deaths and fallout all over Europe." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[The author] offers crime and espionage in a far-out science-fiction milieu. . . . Difficult to sort out the 'good' and the 'bad' guys. Exciting reading."

Best Sell 31:48 Ap 15 '71 40w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 96:865 Mr 1 '71 20w

"In some respects, this is a thoughtful and even brilliant book with an apocalyptic ending; in others, it is conventional secret-agent deriding-do with a Russian Dr. Moriarty as the force of evil. If Cory can rid himself of his Ian Fleming syndrome, he can develop into quite a writer. As it is, most readers should have a good time with the play and counterplay. 'Sunburst' never stops moving." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p40 My 16 '71 70w

"Praise Cory for sufficient length, but all the same, in other ways he's rather overdoing it. . . . [This is] a good Johnny Fedora toughie, still set in Spain, the Last Round and Final Count with rogue Feramontov, and something or other said for what some people might call civilization."

TLS p571 My 14 '71 60w

COSER, LEWIS A. Masters of sociological thought; ideas in historical and social context; under the general editorship of Robert K. Merton. 485p $8.95 Harcourt

301.092 Sociology—History. Sociologists

ISBN 0-15-555128-0 LC 71-151064

The author wants "to use the tools of the sociologist to investigate the role of sociological theorists within the social structure in which they are variously placed" and "to show how social origin, social position, social network, or audience found a reflection in the problems that a theorist addressed himself to or in the overall orientation of his life's work'. . . . Each of Coser's 'masters of sociological thought' [Comte, Marx, Spencer, Durkheim, Simmel, Weber, Veblen, Cooley, Mead, Park, Pareto and Mannheim] is represented in a separate chapter." (Contemp Sociol) Index.

"How fortunate we are that today exploration of the sociological past is the serious work of some of the very best minds among us. Lewis A. Coser is one of these minds. . . . This book is, however, his first systematic exploration of the history of sociological thought. [It] is more than intellectual history in the ordinary sense. It is a first-rate venture in the sociology of knowledge. As Robert K. Merton points out in his instructive foreword, Coser goes beyond filiation of ideas to the adoption of sociological perspectives to analyze and interpret the development of these ideas. . . . And in every chapter there is to be found the arresting detail, the single clarifying incident, the concrete fusion of background and biography, that can at times give the quality of first-rate literature to Coser's analysis." Robert Nisbet

Am J Soc 78:234 J1 '72 1250w

"The book is clearly written and, indeed, displays the formal virtues ascribed to it by Merton. Yet, it is difficult to appraise. Two major questions pose themselves to the reviewer. One concerns the execution of the project as designed by the author. The other refers to the appropriateness of this design to the overall purpose of the study. As to the first point: spatial limitations constitute a severe handicap. . . . With regard to [the second] we have to confine ourselves to a question: Is the Great-Men-of-History approach adequate to the task of developing a sociology of sociological knowledge, or should sociology be viewed as a kind of intellectual movement against the background of the socio-economic development of Western society, both in its universal features and its national variations since about 1800?" H. R. Wagner

Contemp Sociol 1:40 Ja '72 850w

COSGRAVE, PATRICK. The public poetry of Robert Lowell. 222p $7.95 Taplinger

811 Lowell, Robert

ISBN 0-8008-6559-6 LC 72-183597

Cosgrave "believes that Lowell's work is best appreciated by being seen in the light of both poetic theory and tradition, and in this book he has written a . . . study of a single modern poet where the words on the page are examined, not only for themselves but in relation to a consistent theory of poetics and of literary history. He discusses in chronological order each of the published volumes or collections of Lowell's work, devoting separate chapters to the major works." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of persons and poems.

"It is hard to feel that Cosgrave is interested in much besides 'successful' poems and moral discriminations. Robert Lowell is perhaps too interesting and unruly to be served well by these prim categories. But Cosgrave's judgments should be tested by any serious reader of Lowell's works. The book contains a number of errors, misprints, mistitlings."

Choice 9:1291 D '72 200w

"In a study that is remarkable for its challenge to contemporary criticism as well as for its challenge to popular readings of Lowell's poetry, Cosgrave demonstrates both his conviction that the poetry of Lowell consistently strives for 'public' rather than for 'private' expression and his conviction that responsible criticism must be rigorously moral and judgmental as well as rigorously analytical."

[This study is] a brilliantly ordered argument supporting Robert Lowell as a public poet of major importance." W. W. Waring

Library J 97:1718 My 1 '72 150w

"[Cosgrave offers] a strong, even hostile, statement about modern poetry ('Literature has been in general decline for a very long time.') and a network of minute and interesting, most often sympathetic, discriminations about Lowell's verse. The two dispositions, naturally, do not always support one another; the critic's instincts . . . lead him down more interesting garden paths than his narrower precepts allow him. [He views] Lowell against the heroic tradition of English poetry—Dryden, Pope, Johnson, Yeats—comparisons Lowell himself is willing to invite." David Kalstone

N Y Times Bk R p47 S 17 '72 1150w

"[Mr. Cosgrave] is possessed by grand certainties. It would be strange if he were not, for he is a follower of the late Yvor Winters, and thus an inheritor of the thunderous moral objectivity employed in Defence of Reason [BRD 1947]. Here at least, however, facing Mr. Cosgrave's booming moral strictures, Lowell is seen to have some sort of stature, and the cheering words, 'That equation between ambiguity and success must go', reaffirm that Lowell's enterprise has meaning outside his wrestling match with ambivalence. . . . [He] feels a real interest in Lowell's self, admitting that 'one of the things that makes Lowell especially fascinating as a subject is the way in which he has shown us much of his own process of self-scrutiny'."

TLS p664 Je 11 '71 550w

COSMAS, GRAHAM A. An army for empire; the United States Army in the Spanish-American war. 334p il $11.50 Univ. of Mo. press

973.8 U.S. Army—History. U.S.—History—War of 1898

ISBN 0-8262-0107-5 LC 76-149010

This work "covers the structure and composition of the U.S. Army and the War Department prior to, and after, the outbreak of hostilities; military policy and the men who shaped it; the . . . task the Army encountered when its primary role of coastal defense changed to offensive warfare and the subsequent criticisms as they were related to the invasions of Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands; the participation of the National Guard and the legacies from the conflict for the 20th-century American Army." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"In his carefully researched work, Cosmas refutes the traditional view that the comic opera performed by the Army in the Spanish-American War was due to a group of bumbling, incompetent, and weak administrators. He maintains that the Army and the War Department were commanded by capable individuals and that factors beyond their control such as niggardly Congressional appropriations to the Army caused the grievous blunders in the War. . . . Recommended to all college libraries and military historians."

Choice 9:274 Ap '72 160w

"[This study] includes a first-rate description of the line and the staff and the built-in conflict between the secretary of war and the commanding general. . . . Of the military records in the National Archives, Cosmas has used only those of the adjutant general, the Joint Army-Navy Board, and the quartermaster general. . . . His bibliography, which has some surprising omissions, including an absence of materials on black soldiers, is . . . disappointing. . . . No future student of the Spanish-American War can safely ignore . . . [this book] and doubtless it will stand for many years as the basic study of the war department's role in that war." P. J. Scheips

J Am Hist 59:446 S '72 600w

"[Cosmas] offers a careful and searching analysis of the command function at the highest level. . . . And he deserves much credit for a careful, scholarly, and most readable study of a selected aspect of a nearly forgotten and much misunderstood episode in American military history. Excellent bibliography."

R. T. Redden

Library J 97:872 Mr 1 '72 150w

COSTELLO, DAVID F. The desert world; II. by the author. 264p $7.95 Crowell

551.4 Deserts. Desert animals. Desert plants

ISBN 0-690-23513-5 LC 77-184973

The great North American desert "extends irregularly from Washington into Mexico and from California into Texas. . . . In this book Costello guides the reader through the geological and climatic formation of the desert, and describes . . . specializations and adaptations of desert insects, reptiles, birds, fish, and mammals. . . . The book also looks back to the prehistory of the American desert. . . . The author explains the ways in which the delicate ecology of the desert is now threatened." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] succeeds in describing the desert as a place of beauty and of fascinating adaptations of plants and animals. . . . The book is a very readable mixture of personal reminiscences and engrossing facts, with the author's many photographs aiding the presentation. An appendix offers information on where to go to see North American deserts and what to look for." J. H. Zar,

COSTELLO, D. F.—Continued

Library J 97:2623 Ag '72 90w

"[Costello] writes from personal observation and long experience in the Great Basin Desert (Oregon, Idaho, Nevada, Utah), the Painted Desert (Utah and Arizona), the Mojave Desert (Nevada and California), the Sonoran Desert (California, Arizona, Mexico), and the Chihuahuan Desert (New Mexico, Texas, Mexico), noting and comparing their characteristic plants (thousands of them), animals, birds, insects and reptiles. He also, sad to say, tells the knell of the desert's rapid deterioration . . . as the natural result of man's disturbance of nature. . . . An honest and, despite its glum conclusion, an immensely interesting book."

New Yorker 48:126 S ■ '72 150w

COTTÉ, SABINE, jt. auth. Delacroix. See Roger-Marx, C.

COTTERELL, GEOFFREY. Amsterdam; the life of a city. 363p il $10 Little 914.92 Amsterdam
LC 78-183857

A history of the Dutch city, "emphasizing places, buildings, and works of art that still may be seen." (Library J)

"[Cotterell] permits himself to say that the business of Amsterdam was business. Herein lies the essential conundrum of his book, namely, how does one take a subject with an inherent potential for dullness and make it interesting? Actually Cotterell succeeds rather well, but the success is composed of many sparks, and never comes close to a conflagration. Holland's golden age was the period from approximately 1586 to 1669. Not surprisingly, the longest section in the book covers this same period. . . . One must fault the author's presentation of its history. He presumes too much knowledge on the part of the reader. . . . Perhaps [his] problem is that he cast his net too wide, for in focusing on the life of Amsterdam he is really giving us a picture of Dutch life as a whole. Yet Amsterdam was different, and Cotterell is at pains to point out the differences. . . . The book is full of colorful and interesting details that bring out the flavor of time and place." A. S. Nanes

Best Sell 32:114 Je 1 '72 550w

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 9 '72 380w

"A book for tourists. . . . [Undocumented and] covering 2000 years, it concentrates on the past 400 years. . . . Sometimes this emphasis is exaggerated; the story of Anne Frank—complete with a picture of the hideout, courtesy of KLM—gets as much space as Rembrandt or Spinoza. Cotterell argues persuasively that throughout its long history Amsterdam has shown some enduring and endearing qualities, mainly a warmheartedness and a tolerance of religious and political dissenters. The writing is relaxed and informative in the style of good popular history." R. T. Dillon

Library J 97:1716 My 1 '72 100w

COTTRELL, JOHN. Richard Burton: very close up, by John Cottrell and Fergus Cashin [Eng title: Richard Burton: a biography]. 385p il $7.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 Burton, Richard, 1925-
ISBN 0-13-780908-5 LC 70-38619

A biography of the Welsh actor.

"The authors have interviewed extensively people from Burton's past and present, and these conversations highlight the biography. . . . Critiques of Burton's stage acting are done expertly by such luminaries as Sir John Gielgud and Hugh Griffith; but his film acting is little analyzed, possibly because Burton has small regard for cinema. The authors' comments on films are mostly predictable. Roughly one-half of the book is devoted to Burton and Elizabeth Taylor, and rightly so; there is considerable background material on Taylor. Generally the writing is first rate. Recommended." Jerry Cao
Library J 97:2081 Je 1 '72 80w

"Burton had it in him to eclipse even Olivier in forcefulness and charm, if not in range and depth. But after one season at Stratford and two at the Old Vic, he chose instead to devote his exceptional ability to a string of wretched parts that, in the end, brought Elizabeth Taylor and $30-million. . . . The reason for his choice is the key to his life, but his biographers are oddly tentative about it. . . . [They] seem to have consulted everyone but Richard Burton—or if they did, he clearly wouldn't be drawn. Indeed, despite its title, their book is rather like the Prince of Denmark without Hamlet, for at every crucial point in the story, they have to rely on the speculation of others to round out the newspaper clippings." Donald Goddard

N Y Times Bk R p42 S 10 '72 800w

"We know where we are right away with the first sentence: . . . 'Richard Burton flourished a vodka bottle and cried 'It's St David's Day'.' Halfway down the page we have got to: 'Come on, then, love', said Richard, 'show us your bum.' And Liz flipped her derriere with all the gay naughtiness of a Moulin Rouge can-can dancer. . . . In the circumstances it would be idiotic to object that the book contains no serious assessment of Burton the actor, or comment on the development or decline, as the case may be, of his talent since he virtually abandoned the stage for the screen. But in its own flashy way the book is fun, if you are sufficiently interested."

TLS p635 Je 2 '72 150w

COTTRELL, LEONARD. The mystery of Minoan civilization. 128p il $4.95; lib bdg $5.22 World pub.

913.39 Civilization, Minoan. Crete—Antiquities
LC 77-146787

"Citing recent archaeological discoveries as well as tracing the history of archaeological explorations into pre-Homeric civilization, the author . . . presents . . . a survey of Minoan culture and a summary of scholarly theories about it." (Horn Bk) Index.

Best Sell 32:445 D 15 '72 140w [YA]

"Useful as an overview of the subject, the book . . . opens avenues for further exploration by surveying the contributions of . . . numerous scholars who have worked or are still working to solve the mysteries about Crete. Although an index is included, references to sources are given in footnotes only. A selective annotated bibliography would have been a definite addition for those students who find digging up the past as exciting as the latest 'whodunit.' Special mention should be given, however, to the number of charts and diagrams, which are effective devices for clarifying linguistic, architectural, and time relationships." M. M. B.

Horn Bk 48:61 F '72 170w

"Referring to the works of ancient authors and the findings of modern-day archaeologists, Leonard Cottrell clearly and entertainingly portrays the probable place of Crete in the ancient world. The diverse theories of such men as Sir Arthur Evans, D. G. Hogarth, and Michael Ventris are objectively described to reveal the religious beliefs, industry, trade, language and art of Minoan Crete. Some background in classical Greek history and literature is required for a thorough understanding of the book." Marsha Steinglass

Library J 96:3908 N 15 '71 160w [YA]

COTTRELL, LEONARD. Reading the past; the story of deciphering ancient languages. 182p il $5.95 Crowell-Collier press

411 Hieroglyphics—Juvenile literature. Cuneiform inscriptions—Juvenile literature. Writing—History—Juvenile literature. Civilization, Ancient—Juvenile literature
LC 73-153762

This book concerns "Egyptian hieroglyphics, Babylonian cuneiform, and Linear B script. [The author] . . . describes the civilizations that produced these writing codes. While presenting biographical information about the personages who decoded these three scripts—Jean-François Champollion, Henry Creswicke Rawlinson, and Michael Ventris, among others—the book discusses their methods, triumphs, and disappointments as well as the important tablets—Rosetta Stone, Behistun Rock, and Tripod Tablet—that helped them unravel the mysteries of each language." (Horn Bk) Bibliography. Index. "Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"Although competent and interesting, the book suffers because . . . the chapters about Egyptian, Babylonian, and Cretan civilizations are hurried and brief, and certain key concepts—the difference between a pictograph and ideogram, for example—have not been satisfactorily explained. However, the book combines abundant historical information with the excitement of mystery solving. [It] should be of particular interest to many young people since decipherers often begin investigating languages when they are young." Anita Silvey

Horn Bk 48:61 F '72 160w

"Before describing how each language was finally read, Cottrell fills in necessary archaeological background. . . . [In his clear account] Cottrell uses the example of a philologist in 4000 AD attempting to decipher an inscription in the by then unknown English language to help readers understand the methods used by philologists. A good bibliography and index increase the value of this book." W. S. Moon
Library J 97:1920 My 15 '72 90w

COURLANDER, HAROLD. The fourth world of the Hopis; decorations by Enrico Arno. 239p $6.95 Crown

398.2 Hopi Indians—Legends
LC 70-168320

A collection of twenty stories which present "traditional accounts of epic events and adventures in the life of the Hopi clans and villages, from legendary to historical times. Beginning with the creation myth, the narrations tell of the migrations of the ancient Hopis over many centuries as they built—and then abandoned—village after village, and drifted toward the Black Mesa country, where they now live." (Publisher's note) Glossary and pronunciation guide.

"Courlander has spent years collecting oral material among the Hopis and has arranged it in what he modestly hopes is correct chronological sequence from Creation myths to early wanderings to collision with the Spaniards. The casual reader is likely to find more confusion than enlightenment in the myths, but the later sections of the book, giving the Hopi version of established historical events, are another story and a good one." Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 228:135 D '71 60w

"Useful for students interested in native cultures of the Southwest."
Choice 9:441 My '72 200w

"[These] myths provide a remarkable insight into a people's way of thinking. Properly recorded, as in this collection, mythical aspects of a culture are more than children's tales. Indian stories are an important and little known aspect of our American heritage. This book, and others equally well-executed, deserve to be read and taught as the literature of America." Jack Gregory and Rennard Strickland
Commonweal 96:289 My 26 '72 110w

"The legends, which have a much greater religious meaning to the modern Hopi than many Indian myths, are arranged in a chronological order which resembles the Old Testament—creation, wanderings, mythic history, folktales. Courlander has made two real contributions in this work. He has translated the oral stories with a clean literary style, and has added notes which place many of them in historical context. Recommended." W. H. Farrington
Library J 96:3137 O 1 '71 100w

COUSINS, NORMAN. The improbable triumvirate; John F. Kennedy, Pope John, Nikita Khrushchev. 171p pl $5.95 Norton

327 World politics—1945-1965. U.S.—Foreign relations—Treaties. Kennedy, John Fitzgerald, President U.S. John XXIII (Angelo Giuseppe Roncalli) Pope. Khrushchev, Nikita Sergeevich. U.S.—Foreign relations—Russia.
ISBN 0-398-05396-2 LC 72-4819

In 1963 the former editor of the Saturday Review "acted as an intermediary between President Kennedy, Pope John, and Premier Khrushchev. In this account, he recalls both his mission and his impressions of the three leaders. His efforts to promote a rapprochement between the Vatican and the Kremlin led to the release of Ukrainian Archbishop Slipyi, and his mission to Moscow furthered the negotiations which led to the nuclear test ban treaty. Cousins also recalls his role in mobilizing American public opinion in favor of ratifications of that treaty." (Library J) Portions of this book appeared in the Saturday Review.

"Comparatively few know of [the author's] special work for world peace in 1962. The Cuban missile crisis of October, 1962, resulted in an historic exchange of views among three very different individuals, all important world leaders. . . . This brief account reveals the misunderstandings that often arise between countries when they attempt to negotiate a solution to a complex problem." B. D. Williams

Best Sell 32:349 N 1 '72 300w

"The most interesting aspect of the story, which spans a year's time, is the portrait of Khrushchev. . . . Among the numerous intriguing incidents is one concerning the ill-fated meeting between Khrushchev and Eisenhower in 1960 at the time of the U-2 crisis. Both men later said they had tried to communicate with each other in private, but that the other had failed to respond. Despite a slightly monotonous beginning, Cousins' book is exciting reading; it is stylistically clear and historically significant." Peter Rowley
Christian Century 89:1196 N 22 '72 360w

"In Cousins' view, what was 'most striking about the episode described . . . is not just the rapidity with which international tensions were eased . . . but the fact that Khrushchev and Kennedy went against powerful cross-currents within their own countries to do so.' In one sense, this book is, as Cousins describes it, 'an asterisk to history.' In another sense, however, it provides a valuable insight into the origins of the East-West détente of the 1960's." B. S. Viault
Library J 97:3584 N 1 '72 150w

COUSTEAU, JACQUES-YVES. Diving for sunken treasure [by] Jacques-Yves Cousteau and Philippe Diolé; tr. from the French by J. F. Bernard. (The undersea discoveries of Jacques-Yves Cousteau) 302p il col pl $3.95 Doubleday

910.4 Buried treasure. Skin diving
LC 76-158349

The French pioneer of undersea exploration describes his expedition to the "Silver Bank," coral reef in the Caribbean, where the crew of the Calypso searched a centuries-old shipwreck for the secrets of its past and the fortune in silver and gold it might still contain. . . . Into the account of [their] discoveries, Cousteau weaves the tales of the men whose traces he is following: the pirates, privateers and royal admirals who sailed the Spanish Main." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"The book is replete with excellent photographs; there are three historical appendices. Any reader with an interest in marine adventure and marine history will be extremely pleased with this handsome volume." F. J. MacEntee
Best Sell 31:535 Mr 1 '72 180w

"Very few illustrations have any direct bearing upon the subject at hand. The topic would have made a fine TV program; as a book it might cater to some armchair mariners who like to be entertained. . . . Suitable for high school libraries and scuba fans; college and university libraries need not bother."
Choice 9:700 J1/Ag '72 140w

Reviewed by Judy Farla

Library J 97:1628 Ap 15 '72 90w [YA]

"The story is told in the present tense, and the translation from the French is rather curious, Cousteau having been left at the literary mercy of his fellow-countrymen since the death of his American collaborator, James Dugan. Indeed, the book seems less a book than a television script expanded to book length—which is in fact what it is. The expedition was financed by American television as one of a series of wonderful television films. The book is less wonderful. It is attractive but has little nourishment. . . . It is a pity that the authors could not have taken a little more trouble both with the excavation and with the book. As Cousteau says, he is no archaeologist. . . . Perhaps more methodical excavation was done than is described in the book. If so, it would be interesting to know."
TLS p241 Mr 1 '72 250w

COVERT, PAUL. Cages. 181p $3.95 Liveright
ISBN 0-87140-531-8 LC 72-162428

This first novel seeks to "evoke the pre-occupations and pastimes of the middle teen years. Eric and Ward, who have very different personalities, become best friends during the summer before high school. Eric, the outdoor type, is always hunting, fishing, swimming or thinking about girls. Ward, on the other hand, is shy, quiet, serious and prone to worrying about his sexual equipment. The boys mature, experience their first sexual desires, and plan encounters. Because Ward is different some people call him queer, including the girl he likes; this leads to [tragedy]. (Library J)

COVERT, PAUL—Continued

"[This] is a good first start for the new novelist Paul Covert but it's by no means an excellent one. It's an entertaining novel not unlike a boy's adventure story but it's also not without some of the pathos and depth of [J.] Knowles' 'A Separate Peace' [BRD 1960] or [R.] Bradbury's 'Dandelion Wine' [ERD 1957] in its treatment of adolescence. The 'cages' for which the book is named are the social and puritanical restraints of a rural and parochial community (which lies, incidentally, just outside of Scranton). . . . There are, I think, stylistic problems in a book such as this when it attempts to be a penetrating study of adolescent friendship, not the least of which is entering the minds of boys this young and developing lingering insights. So 'Cages' suffers at times; the story lacks profundity in parts." R. J. Raffalco

Best Sell 31:311 O 15 '71 240w

"[This] is almost a great young adult novel, although not meant to be in the YA category. The narrator, telling the story in retrospect, limits himself to the perspectives of the characters as they then were—about 14 or so. He strains to give hints of his now-mature understanding, but always, unfortunately, in young adult language. Author Covert fails as a great novelist for adults because he works harder at creating verisimilitude than at the artful lie that fiction must be. . . . Much of the action engaging the two friends is low-keyed, innocent, trivial, diversionary—the way life is, but not the most intense fiction." Arthur Plotnik

Library J 96:3637 N 1 '71 250w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 96:3913 N 15 '71 130w [YA]

"A sentimental first novel about a boyhood friendship that blossoms briefly . . . and is brought cruelly to an end by an uncomprehending society. . . . The novel's best moments come when Eric, as narrator, can get a bit detached from his friend; some early fumbblings with girls, a lesson in how to get bluejeans properly scuzzy, and Ward's ever-unsuccessful attempts to write a novel are especially memorable."

New Yorker 47:64 Ja 1 '72 140w

COWAN, IAN B., ed. The enigma of Mary Stuart. 222p $5.95 St Martins

941.05 Mary Stuart, Queen of Scots
LC [76-852295]

Cowan "reviews the changing attitudes towards Mary of historians over the past 400 years, by selecting from their works short passages touching on . . . crucial moments in her reign and captivity." (Book World) Bibliography.

"[Cowan balances] extremes of opinion against each other, giving all sides a fair show, and himself supplying linking background which is as nearly impartial as anyone can be. There are no conclusions, just a scholarly presentation of pro and con. What is most interesting, perhaps, is the unsparing zeal in axe-grinding, the blind and sometimes ludicrous partisanship which characterizes much of the writing—some of it by authors removed by centuries of time and outlook and culture, but still prepared to jump in with both feet and, on doubtful evidence, announce flatly 'This is so.' [This] compilation is to be commended to anyone who wants to start on Marian studies, or having started, wants to be reminded of first principles. It badly lacks an index, but has an excellent introduction." G. M. Fraser

Book World p7 Mr 12 '72 800w

"[The compiler's own] sober conclusion, implied rather than asserted in his introductory review and editorial annotation, is that Mary was neither a heroine nor a villainess, but a professional politician of her time, committed to her dangerous trade, and devoting her main energies to it."

TLS p972 Ag 13 '71 330w

COWEN, IDA. Jews in remote corners of the world. 328p il $7.95 Prentice-Hall

910.03 Jews
ISBN 0-13-509265-5 LC 75-146643

Tahiti, New Zealand, India, Iran and Hong Kong are among the places the author visited in 1966. She provides some history of the places she stopped at with accounts of individual Jews. Bibliography.

"[Cowen] writes interestingly of her visits, although one cannot rely on her background research, which is fairly superficial. But her descriptions of persons and places should be very attractive to those as curious as she about Jews who have found their niche in off-beat settlements."

Choice 9:1331 D '72 140w

"[Cowen's] chatty, journalistic style and lively curiosity make the account of her journey surprisingly enjoyable. . . . She has done her research well and includes apt anecdotal histories. Everywhere she found Jews sorely beset by daily concerns while trying to keep holy traditions alive. The book is an attractive browsing item for popular collections." H. M. Kapenstein

Library J 96:4011 D 1 '71 80w

"A harmless, rather readable item that will appeal to travel-page readers."

N Y Times Bk R p16 F 13 '72 50w

COWLES, VIRGINIA. The Romanovs; with col. phot. specially taken in Russia by Victor Kennett. 288p $15 Harper

947 Romanov, House of. Russia—History
ISBN 06-010908-4 LC 78-156516

This account of the "Romanov dynasty, which ruled Russia from 1613 to 1917, . . . [portrays] such figures as Alexis, son of the founder of the dynasty, . . . Peter the Great, . . . Elizabeth . . . Catherine, . . . Alexander I . . . [and] Nicholas II, the last of the Tsars. . . . [The author also shows] the way people lived at different periods and in different social strata." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The Romanovs] were a splendidly exotic bunch from first to last and Virginia Cowles, an amateur historian of practiced skill, makes the most of them." J. H. Plumb

N Y Times Bk R p5 D 5 '71 80w

"[The author] is less interested in Russia's political, economic and social development and more concerned with the personalities, the daily routine, and the love-lives of the monarchs. . . . [This] is popular history; and from Miss Cowles's first sentence . . . she sets a brisk and at times breathtaking pace. It is the kind of colourful, personal history that reads with the compelling excitement of a novel. It is not the kind of history that will provide the more serious student with a new (or old) approach to an understanding of three centuries of Russia's past. Miss Cowles has evidently read widely and is generally well informed on the court side of her story. Many of her anecdotes are old favourites. [The book] is lavishly illustrated. The black-and-white illustrations are magnificent, and the colour plates, the vast majority of which are specially commissioned colour photographs by Victor Kennett, are of a quality no Soviet publication can begin to rival."

TLS p1452 N 19 '71 750w

COWLING MAURICE. The impact of labour, 1920-1924: the beginning of modern British politics. 570p $17.50 Cambridge

329.942 Labour party (Great Britain). Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century
ISBN 0-521-07969-1 LC 73-127236

This book is "about the circumstances leading up to the formation of the minority Labour government of 1924, the subsequent Conservative election victory and some aspects of the political history of the preceding years. . . . [Included is a] discussion of the actions of leading politicians during the four-year period, with some speculation concerning their characters and motives." (New Statesman) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Barbara Malament

Am Hist R 77:795 Je '72 900w

Reviewed by Frank Bealey

Ann Am Acad 402:152 Je '72 250w

"Not a book for beginners, and even cognoscenti may balk at a basic assumption: that the key to understanding British politics in this period lies in understanding 'a network of plebiscitary demagogues.' Nevertheless, Cowling succeeds in presenting a more detailed account of attitudes of leaders of all parties than can be found anywhere else, and his authority is enhanced by his use of private papers like C. P. Scott's diary and the Lloyd George papers. Reference features include an impressive bibliography, footnotes (unfortunately at the rear), an appendix supplying brief notes on the principal actors, and a good index. All college libraries will want this book."

Choice 8:1237 N '71 110w

"This book is interesting and difficult. It is hard to follow; partly because its style is so compressed, partly because its content is so intricate. . . . Nevertheless, this is an important book, which historians of the recent past, and people interested in current politics, need to master. . . . [It] is an elaborate exercise in the writing of the narrowest kind of political history, the history of how the leading group of British politicians got on with each other to establish 'conditions in which the existing social order could be preserved.' It represents scholarship carried to the point of eccentricity—a quarter of the book is taken up with scholarly apparatus. And it is hard going; but worth the journey."

Economist 239:60 My 8 '71 480w

"[This is] a work of history written for professional historians. Certainly the narrative is difficult to follow unless one is already familiar with the previous history of Labour, the dates of the main elections, economic events. . . . and also with details of incidents such as the 'Coupon Election' and the Zinoviev Letter. . . . To the extent that the Labour movement is sometimes discussed, the style is objective and sympathetic. The point to be made is not that the author ignores his social and economic context but that he treats the context like immobile scenery for a stage in which individual politicians play the main transcendent roles in shaping events." Robin Morris

New Statesman 81:600 Ap 30 '71 1050w

"The more readable chapters come early on in the work, including consideration of the political scene in 1920 with discussion of such eccentric figures (in their different ways) as Horatio Bottomley and Lord Robert Cecil. One of the most interesting sections is the succinct appraisal of right-wing imperial nationalism in chapter four."

TLS p587 My 21 '71 900w

COX, EDWARD FRANKLIN. State and national voting in Federal elections, 1910-1970. 280p $15 Archon bks.

329 Elections—U.S.—Statistics
ISBN 0-208-01261-3 LC 70-183138

"A compilation of tables giving the total and percentage of votes received by major and important minor parties in Presidential, senatorial, and congressional elections since 1910. Figures are provided both for individual states and for the nation as a whole. . . . The book also contains a 19-page introduction in which the author explains his methodology and some of the problems he encountered in finding accurate voting statistics." (Library J)

"Although this work usefully supplements other book collections of American electoral data, these data are also available in machine-readable form from the Inter-University Consortium for Political Research (ICPR), a partnership of more than 125 universities. Indeed, the ICPR has the data for a longer time span (some series go back to the early 1800's), for more offices, and for counties as well as states. Libraries at universities belonging to the ICPR can thus obtain electoral data in printed form through this membership. Other libraries will find Cox's book a useful addition for undergraduate, graduate, and faculty research."

Choice 9:714 J1/Ag '72 120w

"The compilations should be of interest to political scientists and historians who are researching American voter or party behavior. As they are arranged here, the data can be used for comparisons over time and place. . . . While Cox notes that his own interests made him choose a cutoff date of 1910, his book would have been more useful to other researchers had it contained statistics for every election year." Hindy Schachter

Library J 97:1814 My 15 '72 140w

COYNE, JOHN. This way out: a guide to alternatives to traditional college education in the United States, Europe and the Third World [by] John Coyne & Tom Hebert. 468p $10; pa $4.95 Dutton

378 Education, Higher. Colleges and universities. Free universities
SBN 0-525-218009 LC 70-179338

Part One, "Independent Study" deals with "learning on [one's] own. . . . [Part Two describes] about a hundred experimental American colleges or innovative programs and evaluates them. . . . [Part Three provides] information about study in Australia and Western Europe as well as in Latin America, Africa, the Middle and Far East." (America)

"[This very useful book] is the best guide presently available for those young Americans who . . . are looking for some alternatives to the traditional college experience. [It] provides them with a remarkably full and factual overview of three chief possibilities: independent study that may, or may not, be combined with external degree programs; attendance at one of America's experimental colleges, or study in a foreign university. . . . [The authors'] clear, brisk prose with its moderately hip and chummy tone makes [their book] all quite readable. . . . Each studied at several American universities as well as abroad. . . . and each served in the Peace Corps and worked in one or other experimental school. They know what they're talking about. . . . A guide of this sort becomes outdated fairly quickly since the world of higher education changes [rapidly]. . . . But at the moment, This Way Out is the best thing of its kind." J. W. Donohue

America 127:184 S 16 '72 450w

"The examination of opportunities abroad gives such useful information as where to apply for visas, suggested books to read, and cost of education. A useful resource for those planning a nontraditional higher education." R. W. Barber

Library J 97:2726 S 1 '72 100w

COYNE, JOHN R. The impudent snobs; Agnew vs. the intellectual establishment, by John R. Coyne, Jr. 524p il $8.95 Arlington house

973.924 Agnew, Spiro T. U.S.—Politics and government—1961-. Journalism—Political aspects
ISBN 0-87000-154-X LC 72-183676

Coyne attempts to "analyze the role intellectuals (and those who think of themselves as intellectuals) play in America today, especially in the media and the academy. This . . . leads him into the media attack on Agnew. . . . their . . . view of the Pentagon [and of] the South. . . . [The appendix] contains the 94 speeches Vice President Agnew gave between August 4, 1968 (nominating Richard Nixon for the Presidency), and June 25, 1971 (addressing the Young Republican national convention) [including his] . . . Des Moines attack on media bias." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Coyne was a member of [Agnew's] personal staff, and for some years previously had been an Associate Editor for The National Review. His case for the VP is obviously a labor of love, and the need for some word for the 'other side' is obvious in this election year. If for nothing else the book is a must for libraries: 339 pages are devoted to transcripts of Agnew's speeches. . . . And surprisingly interesting reading it is. The man really has something worthwhile to say, and he expresses it with liveliness, skill, and (unfortunately) challenge. Coyne's own assessment of the milieu which produced the speeches, though partisan, is generally fair and pertinent." S. J. Laut

Best Sell 32:28 Ap 15 '72 700w

Choice 9:878 S '72 160w

"If 524 pages of pro-Agnew puffery are your cup of tea, this is your book. If not, snob it out impudently."

Christian Century 89:290 Mr 8 '72 20w

"In less than two years, three compilations of Agnew's speeches have appeared: Frankly Speaking: a Collection of Extraordinary Speeches; Collected Speeches of Spiro Agnew, and this volume. Of the three, this one offers the most extensive set of speeches. It also contains a 144-page commentary by Coyne, who covered Republican political events for the National Review. Coyne is a partisan of the vice president's and his dislike for 'liberal pseudo-intellectuals' is not designed to please everybody. Libraries which already have liberal and/or radical dissections of Agnew's views also ought to consider this volume so that readers may have a wide-ranging sample of the vice president's own words and an analysis of his impact by a man who favors his stand." Hindy Schacter

COYNE, J. R.—Continued

Library J 97:505 F 1 '72 120w

"[The author] has written a book about those media men from the 'intellectual and social cocoon' who dominate the news business: the network anchormen, . . . the Times and the Post, Newsweek, Dynamite, Dan Eilsberg, Charles Reich. . . . Coyne lays the wood to these 'men of words' with infectious abandon. While his facts aren't always in apple-pie order, his rhetoric is. This is first-rate polemic, rarely if ever done as well." N. B. Freeman

Nat R 24:527 My 12 '72 220w

CRAFT, ROBERT. Stravinsky; chronicle of a friendship, 1948-1971. 424p pl $12.50 Knopf

E or J2 Stravinsky, Igor Fedorovich
ISBN 0-394-47612-3 LC 79-173776

"Twenty-three years ago conductor Robert Craft, now 48, became and remained the person closest in proximity and confidence to Igor and Vera Stravinsky. From their first meeting in Washington in 1948 until the composer's funeral in Venice last year, Craft has catalogued the relationship. . . . Over the past 13 years the catalogue has become public in six books, three in the form of conversations, three others partly in the form of diaries. Now those diaries, along with some final entries, have been collected into [this volume]." (New Repub) Index of Stravinsky works mentioned in the text and general index.

Reviewed by Robert Evett
Atlantic 231:91 Ja '73 400w

Reviewed by Louis Snyder
Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 28 '72 300w

Economist 245[book survey p24] N 11 '72 120w

"Most of these diary excerpts have been published previously (worded slightly differently, sometimes in a number of periodicals as well as in the earlier Stravinsky/Craft books—Dialogues and a Diary [BRD 1964], Themes and Episodes [BRD 1966] and Retrospectives and Conclusions [BRD 1970]. . . . The only new material is the chronicle of the composer's last three years (1969-1971), his death, and the the funeral pomp." Dika Newlin

Library J 97:1439 Ap 15 '72 80w

"Craft is full of Craft. His reminiscence, far from being a 'chronicle of friendship,' is a totally undisciplined gusher of purple writing, egotistical reflections, sham erudition. . . . If you're interested in the psychopathology of unreadable writing, read Craft." W. F. Rickenbacker

Nat R 24:751 Jl 7 '72 350w

"Read the book . . . as a guide to international intelligentsia, with snapshots of the great in discussion with Stravinsky (often over alcoholic meals). . . . The chronicle is also a travelogue through a dozen nations whose orchestral forces and audience responses are criticized, along with Stravinsky's reaction—gustatory and intestinal—to local menus. . . . In this warts-and-all portrayal of a famous family no attitude seems too subtle for clarity, no emotion too private for exposure, no musical concept too complex for elucidation. . . . Robert Craft himself remains aloof, all-knowing, while he involves the reader in the very textures of life. . . . He proves again that he is not only compassionate and sometimes quite wickedly funny, but the most readable and intelligent living writer on music." Ned Rorem

New Repub 166:23 Je 3 '72 1050w

Reviewed by David Murray
New Statesman p645 N 3 '72 300w

"Stravinsky is the main subject of Craft's diary, but . . . we are in the presence of Robert Craft's own mind and personality throughout, and what a fascinating mind it is: uncompromising in its insistence on musical excellence, philosophically subtle, attuned to every manifestation of contemporary sensibility, open to complex new ideas and new experiences. There is a deep humanity in Craft's sympathetic accounts of the musings on aging and death by his three older friends, Aldous Huxley, W. H. Auden, and Stravinsky. . . . If we add Craft's awesome erudition on almost every conceivable subject and the enviable stylistic mastery of his writing, it becomes clear that he is the ideal chronicler of Stravinsky's life, times and ideas." Simon Karinsky

N Y Times Bk R p1 Jl 2 '72 1050w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 80:74 Jl 17 '72 700w

CRAIG, JOHN. If you want to see your wife again . . . a novel of suspense. 223p $5.95 Putnam

LC 73-172409

"The action takes place in Toronto, where three raffish participants in an ex-T.V. series work up a script about the abduction of the beautiful wife of a millionaire playboy. Suddenly, the script becomes a . . . plan for an actual body-snatch. Then the husband refuses to pay the ransom." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Craig's second suspense novel . . . is fast and funny."

Best Sell 31:450 Ja 1 '72 130w

Reviewed by H. V. Veit
Library J 97:521 F 1 '72 70w

"The fun is all in the telling. Craig has a highly topical sense of humor and writes in the fluffiest style imaginable. Dialogue rings true; each character is skillfully developed. A happy way to spend two hours." Newgate Calendar

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ja 23 '72 80w

"[The author never] quite managed to convince this reader that a writer, a casting director, and a producer would actually resort to kidnapping. Result: a credibility gap that spoils a lot of the subsequent fun." Haskel Frankel

Sat R 55:73 Ja 29 '72 80w

CRAM modern world atlas. 1971 ed col 11 col maps $12.95 Cram

912 Atlases
LC 75-654653

"The present atlas is basically different from the 1961 Cram Modern World Atlas [BRD 1962] in that [pages 1-352] including the main series of maps . . . are copyrighted by Hammond Incorporated]. . . . [There is] a Condensed World Gazetteer listing some 175 countries with type of government, capital, area, and population. Other materials are 200 Largest Cities of the World listed both alphabetically and by rank, 206 Largest Cities of the United States listed alphabetically and by rank, an annotated list of United States National Parks, a narrative of the Polar Regions revised from the 1961 Cram atlas [and a] World History." (Booklist)

"The main series of maps . . . [and the] Index of the World . . . appear to be, plate for plate, a reprinting of pages 1-352 of Hammond Citation Atlas [BRD 1972]. . . . Other materials are . . . inadequate when compared with standard encyclopedias. . . . World History is exactly the same in both the Cram 1961 and 1971 atlases. . . . The 32 history maps are primarily concerned with Europe and only peripherally reflect American history in four maps displaying explorations and the campaigns of the two world wars of this century. . . . The purchaser [of this volume] will be buying a set of maps copyrighted by Hammond in 1971, and it is this set of maps which is recommended."

Booklist 69:250 N 15 '72 300w

CRANE, STEPHEN. Stephen Crane in the West and Mexico; ed. by Joseph Katz. 109p $6.75 Kent state univ. press

318
SEN 87338-094-0 LC 73-106970

This book contains "seventeen newspaper articles written by Crane during a trip in 1895. . . . He reported on drought-stricken farmers in Nebraska, the New Orleans Mardi Gras, life in Texas, and the people and customs of Mexico City—the last also resulting in three Mexican tales which are included in this volume." (Publisher's note)

"The articles collected here, 'are primarily important,' the editor remarks, 'because they record Crane's progress as a man and ■ ■ ■ artist.' In an introduction and a textual afterword the editor gives the articles firm bearings in Crane's career, and he provides a dependable text for them."

Am Lit 43:502 N '71 80w

"Katz's introduction argues that the Western trip inspired Crane's Western short stories and that the Mexican experience taught the young provincial the impossibility of travelers from one culture truly understanding the ways of another. Always interesting, these pieces confirm but do not add to Crane's reputation as a stunning user of images, as an impressionist, and as a compassionate yet ironic viewer of the human scene. . . . Recommended for all libraries."

Choice 8:550 Je '71 160w

"Katz's impeccable scholarship [provides] full historical and textual background for the . . . travel sketches and . . . tales. . . . The state of numerous Crane manuscripts remains confused, and only the comprehensive treatment given in this edition will be acceptable for future Crane studies. And Crane scholars will welcome the revelations this gathering suggests about Crane's artistic development." E. J. Wilcox

Library J 96:2319 J1 '71 100w

CRANE, STEPHEN. Tales of adventure; ed. by Fredson Bowers; with an introd. by J. C. Levenson. (Univ. of Va. ed. of the works of Stephen Crane, v5) 242p il $15 Univ. press of Va.

818

SBN 8139-0302-5 LC (68-8536)

This volume is the third "to appear in The University of Virginia Edition of Crane's works. [It] is made up of the eight stories that constituted the first American edition of The Open Boat and five other stories taken from the English edition of The Open Boat, from the American and English editions of The Monster, and from Last Words. The tales are arranged chronologically in the order of their original composition so far as this can be determined. . . . [There is] a foreword [and textual introduction] by Fredson Bowers." (Am Lit) For volumes one, seven and six see BRD 1970, 1971, and 1972, respectively.

"Appendixes include textual notes, editorial emendations in the copytext, and a historical collation. The painstaking care that produced . . . [this] handsome volume is evident throughout . . . [but] in comparison with other CEAA [Center for Editions of American Authors] editions, . . . [this volume seems] top heavy. Even the hard-core devotee of ibids and emendations could well become depressed when he finds himself halfway through a volume of Stephen Crane's works before he has reached Crane's words. Mr. Levenson's introduction . . . excellent though it is, is more like a monograph, and surely Mr. Bowers's textual essays could be made briefer and placed at the end so that one could reach Crane first and Bowers second." W. B. Dillingham

Am Lit 43:462 N '71 250w

Reviewed by Jane Mayhall

N Y Rev of Books 19:28 Ag 10 '72 550w

"[We] have here all the stories that Crane wrote about the West and Mexico, which he visited in 1895. . . . [Volume V helps] show Crane as a supreme depicter of those moments in human affairs when the temperature is being raised to flashpoint and of the subsequent explosions. . . . It is greatly to be hoped that later on there will appear a 'popular' edition based on . . . [this] definitive text enabling the common reader to enjoy the art of a great pioneer American writer who, as one of the editors says, long before Hemingway showed people attaining 'grace under pressure.'"

TLS p965 Ag 13 '71 380w

"[This volume contains] a lucid biographical-critical introduction by J. C. Levenson, based clearly on the most exhaustive kinds of sleuthing rendered significant by the exercise of common sense and informed judgment. Not in Robert Stallman's biography [Stephen Crane BRD 1968] or elsewhere do we find so useful an account of Crane's last peripatetic years and their transmutation into fiction. The thirteen stories themselves, including 'The Open Boat,' 'The Bride Comes to Yellow Sky,' and 'The Blue Hotel' are seen afresh as truly remarkable and bracing pieces in tone, diction, and philosophy."

Va Q R 48:xxvii winter '72 150w

CRANE, STEPHEN. Tales of war; ed. by Fredson Bowers; with an introd. by James B. Colvert. (Univ. of Va. ed. of the works of Stephen Crane, v6) 400p $22.50 Univ. press of Va.

818

SBN 8139-0294-0 LC (68-8536)

This volume is the "fourth to appear in The University of Virginia Edition of Crane's works. . . . [It] brings together stories originally collected in The Little Regiment and Wounds in the Rain and also includes 'An Episode of War' as well as four war stories from Last Words. The twenty-two stories are arranged . . . in chronological order of their collected publication. All of Crane's war stories are included except 'Death and the Child,' which appears in Volume V [Tales of Adventure, BRD 1972. There is] . . . a foreword and textual introduction by Fredson Bowers. . . . Appendixes include textual notes, editorial emendations in the copy-text, and a historical collation." (Am Lit) For volumes one, seven and five see BRD 1970, 1971, and 1972, respectively.

"The painstaking care that produced [this] handsome volume is evident throughout . . . [but] in comparison with other CEAA [Center for Editions of American Authors] editions, . . . [this volume seems] top-heavy. Even the hard-core devotee of ibids and emendations could well become depressed when he finds himself halfway through a volume of Stephen Crane's works before he has reached Crane's words. . . . Surely Mr. Bowers's textual essays could be made briefer and placed at the end. . . . [Colvert's introduction] is exceptional both in terms of its brevity (twenty-six pages) and originality. Focusing upon Crane's changes in his understanding of realism and in his style, this essay is a remarkably fresh and insightful work of criticism." W. B. Dillingham

Am Lit 43:462 N '71 250w

Reviewed by Jane Mayhall

N Y Rev of Books 19:28 Ag 10 '72 550w

"Crane wrote about three wars of the nineteenth century: the American Civil War, the Greek-Turkish War and the Spanish-American War. The last two he actually covered as a war correspondent as well as writing about them imaginatively. . . . Crane puts the traditional concepts of honour and courage under a sceptical scrutiny. . . . [He] is equally authentic whether he is writing about a war he merely imagined or one he actually visited, or one he invented. . . . The truth is that a state of exceptional alertness and reliance on one's own resources in the presence of an enemy (which used to be what was meant by war) was something to which he was perfectly attuned as a human being and which pervaded both his life and work."

TLS p965 Ag 13 '71 380w

CRAPANZANO, VINCENT. The fifth world of Forster Bennett; portrait of a Navaho. 245p $7.95 Viking

970.3 Navaho Indians. Bennett, Forster

SBN 670-31220-7 LC 77-184547

This journal of the author's sojourn on a Navaho reservation revolves around the life of an ordinary Indian in his mid-50's, describing 'the flat slow quality of reservation' and examining the cultural conflict of the Navahos.

"A young anthropologist's journal of his stay with a Navaho family reveals, among other things, that while reservation life is basically stagnant, there is much coming and going and planning which gets nowhere. Direct information about Indians is almost certain to be interesting in one way or another, and in this respect, Mr. Crapanzano's book is standard. It is also cold; one has the impression that the author has emotions but was afraid to trust them even in a nonprofessional record." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:96 J1 '72 70w

Reviewed by H. L. Van Brunt

Christian Science Monitor p9 J1 26 '72 320w

Reviewed by L. E. Oliva

Library J 97:3724 N 15 '72 110w

"Sensitive firsthand observations of a 'moderately acculturated' Indian family straddling traditional culture and American soda-pop modernity. . . . Inquisitive and introspective, Crapanzano has not attempted to expunge the personal 'I' from his narrative; rather his own naïve, often baffled attempts to understand the motivations and attitudes of his protagonist are fully incorporated in the psychological and literary quest for the 'ordinary Navaho'. . . . To the end Crapanzano's insider-outsider role in the family remains ill-defined. 'Little Bluffs is boring. Very little ever happens,' he writes. Yet the 'very little' here recorded is stamped with a kind of muted authenticity which more sensationalized and polished accounts of Indian life generally lack."

CRAPANZANO, VINCENT—Continued

N Y Rev of Books 18:35 Je 15 '72 250w

"A plainspoken, engaging account of two months that the author, an anthropologist, spent as the paying guest of a Navaho on a reservation in Arizona. . . . In general, Mr. Crapanzano thinks, Navaho religion is in decay, and many of the Navaho who attended ceremonies with him could not explain their meaning. At the same time, the European civilization to which they have been exposed is scanty or mediocre, and, to complicate further any social-science prescription, many Navaho—Bennett is among them—simply shut their minds to information, events, or stimuli that upset or confuse them. . . . Navaho life looks unrewarding, but Navaho virtues—capacity for work, family loyalty—won the author's respect, as they will the reader's."

New Yorker 48:131 Je 10 '72 280w

"[The author is] a young student from upper-middle class suburbia. . . . Unfortunately [he] quotes his 'subject' throughout in a sort of dim-witted pidgin English, although in his own language 'Forster Bennett' may presumably have been reasonably articulate. . . . The book does have value in giving a picture of the writer, who, it seems, had never before known an Indian or been in the West or possibly met poor people anywhere. Thus, much that struck him as significantly reservation-Indian—the boredom, the cheapness—might have been equally evident in any back-road Southwestern community, Anglo, Spanish, or what have you, had the author dismounted to look." William Brandon

Sat R 55:50 Jl 1 '72 500w

CRASSWELLER, ROBERT D. The Caribbean community; changing societies and U.S. policy; pub. for the Council on for. relations. 470p $13.50 Praeger

320.9729 Caribbean area—Politics. Caribbean area—Economic conditions
LC 78-95667

"The purpose of this study is to advance proposals for U.S. policy in the Caribbean area during the years ahead. . . . Caribbean history, sociology, culture, economics [and] politics . . . are considered primarily from the point of view of their relationship to contemporary changes in Caribbean life and their impact upon American foreign policy. The policy recommendation . . . is the development by the Caribbean states, with the encouragement and assistance (but not the leadership) of the United States, of what is here termed a Caribbean Community." (Introd) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"In the concluding chapter of this copious treatise, author Crassweller tells us that, 'It might be said that diversity and multiplicity have been the real subject of this study.' Further, he reflects on the same page that, 'Amidst so teeming a subject matter, one is likely to sustain an impression of confusion and multiple vision.' These are certainly the impressions the reader is likely to entertain after reading this book. . . . Unfortunately, its mode of expression is often verbose and discursive. . . . The treatment of Cuba (however) is lucid and objective. The analysis of the evolution of fidelismo into Communism, and developing Cuban relations with the United States and the Soviet Union, seems . . . to be sound and unexceptionable, though not strikingly original. . . . The author outlines numerous, quite reasonable projects for potential U.S.-Caribbean cooperation and for U.S. encouragement within a pattern of restraint." J. L. Busev

Ann Am Acad 403:180 S '72 700w

"[This book] provides an education in sophisticated foreign policy analysis and in the affairs of the Caribbean states. . . . [The author's] views are establishmentarian, but not militantly so. . . . The reader is also treated to a series of masterful political vignettes on the separate states of the Caribbean, to an enviable writing style, and to an excellent bibliography."

Choice 9:1202 N '72 190w

"[This is] a learned humanistic study of the entire Caribbean. . . . The book is romantic in style, but quite realistic in content." C. T. Goodsell

Library J 96:4017 D 1 '71 170w

CRAWFORD, STANLEY G. Log of the S.S. The Mrs Unguentine. 109p $3.50 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-48137-2 LC 72-289

"During a 40-year voyage around the world on a garbage barge, Mrs. Unguentine keeps a detailed, somewhat absurd and contradictory log of her eccentric husband's eerie carryings on, including his drunken suicide." (Library J)

"[This] is an entertaining pseudo-intellectual novel posing both as a paradigm and a paraphrase of contemporary civilization. The truth is, you will be disappointed if you take the book seriously. Yet there is an irresistible fascination about the central characters—Mr. and Mrs. Unguentine." W. A. C. Francis

Best Sell 32:294 O 1 '72 400w

"[Crawford] has written a short rather symbolic tale that includes some extremely colorful prose, but very little in the way of a point that one can comprehend. Perhaps with an uncommon degree of application a reader might gain some insight as to what the author is attempting to get across, but it may be that the prize won't justify the effort." J. R. Macklin

Library J 97:2640 Ag '72 110w

"Style is rickety: One gets mal de mer keeping its horizon level. . . . Crawford shuttles from cuteness to happy imagination; from the ponderous to a nice precision. . . . In fact, 'Log' is a reviewer trap. There are no certainties. Symbols bob about. Great human events are so much flotsam: the Flood, God-creator, Adam and Eve, individual recapitulating the species' evolution. . . . But at 112 pages a reader risks very little. The novel is just entertaining enough. Joke or allegory with mythic proportions; both had better be brief." D. K. Mano

N Y Times Bk R p2 Ag 27 '72 430w

TLS p581 My 21 '71 650w

CREASEY, JOHN. See Marric, J. J.

CREEL, HERRLEE G. The origins of statecraft in China; v 1, The western Chou empire. 553p maps $17.50 Univ. of Chicago press

320.9 China—Politics and government. China—History
ISBN 226-12043-0 LC 73-110072

"This is the first volume of a . . . project to study the origin and evolution of traditional China's political institutions. . . . The subject of the present book is the government of the Western Chou (traditionally dated from 1122 to 771 B.C.), the formative period out of which the classical civilization of China emerged in the latter part of the first millennium B.C." (Am Hist R)

"Creel shows an admirable determination to rid himself of preconceptions based on the traditional views of the Confucian school and modern scholarly dogmas and to concentrate directly on what Chou texts themselves tell us. Unfortunately to make a picture at all out of such meager and fragmentary material requires a great deal of imaginative extrapolation, and I must confess that I find many of Professor Creel's extrapolations . . . much less convincing than more conventional extrapolations based on what we know of Chinese society in the immediately following spring and autumn and Warring States periods. . . . I feel that Professor Creel's approach is too personal to provide an authoritative synthesis of the present state of knowledge on this subject. Nevertheless his book offers many challenges to received opinion and will . . . provide much in the way of stimulus to further research." E. G. Pulleyblank

Am Hist R 77:563 Ap '72 750w

"[Creel] has ably presented an exhaustive study of the financial, legal, military, political, and social systems during the Chinese Classical Age." W. S. Wong

Library J 95:2257 Je 15 '70 150w

CRENSON, MATTHEW A. The un-politics of air pollution; a study of non-decisionmaking in the cities. 227p $10 Johns Hopkins press 301.3 Air—Pollution—U.S. Environmental policy—U.S.
ISBN 0-8018-1177-5 LC 70-150664

"This book attempts to discover some of the reasons why the concern [over environmental pollution] was so late in developing, why many cities and towns in the United States failed to make a political issue of their air pollution problems." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is a major attempt to grapple constructively with the problem of studying non-issues. The book also contains many misleading statements about earlier work which show how influential stereotypes have become in the community power literature. Crenson gives his readers to understand that he is writing a critique of 'pluralism.' . . . I do not think we can place very much confidence in Crenson's findings—and still less in Crenson's account of them, as they are, on the whole, euphoric. Let us ask, nevertheless, whether this approach to the non-issue problem offers some promise. I believe in some respects it may, principally because Crenson follows a prescription occasionally propounded in the study of community power but not often taken: he is comparative in his approach." N. W. Polsby
Contemp Sociol 1:99 Mr '72 2050w
(Review essay)

"[This] study of the air pollution issue, based upon the experience of two Midwestern cities, contends that large industrial and political interests may use the processes of indirect democracy to decrease rather than promote public concern. . . . [Crenson's] volume is valuable as a model study." H. R. Weiner
Library J 96:3629 N 1 '71 90w

CREWS, HARRY. Car; a novel. 152p $5.95
Morrow
LC 76-166357

The "saga of the Mack family, owners of a Florida car salvage business. Brother Herman, wanting to 'be somebody,' declares he'll eat (yes, eat) a new Ford Maverick, a half-ounce per day. Local business sponsors him, and the outside world avidly focuses in. Twin brother Mister, sister Junell (whose trooper boyfriend can make love to her only in a parked car), and patriarch Easy observe the goings-on from increasingly uneasy vantage points." (Library J)

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 9 '72
100w

"It's as if Evelyn Waugh were alive, and taking on the auto industry, in [this] agreeably crude, fast-paced [novel]. . . . Ugly transformations have been wrought by the Macks' lust for 'car' ('The car is where we are in America'). The novel cheerfully lambastes varieties of sex, greed, and violence, under the cover of American 'bigness'. ABC's Wide World of Sports comes in for a few licks, and there are funny contributions from a worldly-wise hotel whore and a chorus of retarded children. Car retells the American success story in raucous high gear. It can easily be read in an evening, and it won't pollute the air." Bruce Allen

Library J 97:514 F 1 '72 150w

"[Car's] theme is not especially novel—the automobile in American life and love—but Crews' treatment of it is. The book is exceedingly funny, indeed painfully so, and it contains passages that are Crews at his best. Yet in the end it collapses; it leaves one frustrated and alas, irritated. . . . True love wins all. If Crews were an ordinary writer, one could accept such flabby resolution as yet another trick of the trade. But he is not. Like all his books, 'Car' has flash after flash of genuine brilliance. I think, for example, of an early scene in which Junell rushes Big Mama out the superhighway to salvage the remains of a particularly gruesome multi-car smash-up. . . . The scene is horrible but it is true, a superb grotesque of the ordinariness of death on the open American road. Yet the toughness of that vision is compromised by the triteness of the novel's conclusion." Jonathan Yardley
N Y Times Bk R p5 F 27 '72 1000w
New Yorker 48:104 Ap 1 '72 140w

"Harry Crews isn't facetious. He's a satirist who's not afraid of blood, and there are pages of 'Car' as painful to swallow as metal fragments. This gruesomely funny fifth novel is his best yet." W. C.
Newsweek 79:78 Mr 11 '72 200w
Time 99:96 Ap 17 '72 110w

CRICHTON, MICHAEL. The terminal man. 247p il $6.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-44768-9 LC 73-136320

"Harold Benson, 34, has a two-year history of psychomotor epilepsy, which consists of 'Strange thoughts and frequently violent behavior, preceded by a characteristic aura which is often an odor.' He is psychotic and believes that machines will ultimately take over the world. He is also the first human being to have a computer implanted in his body, a computer that his doctors (with the exception of his psychiatrist) believe will direct and control his violent epileptic seizures. [This] is the story of the last five days in Benson's life." (Library J) Annotated bibliography.

"Benson in his alternations between guile and frenzy is a demonic Frankenstein monster, and it is the search for him and his vengeance which make this story such a chiller. The people are skillfully typed. The nurses supply the essential touch of humor, and the operation is as dramatic as the hunt. In contrast to the vanity and the overconfidence of the surgeons is Janet Ross, the only rounded character, a comely woman whose fatigue and whose fear of the electrically charged guinea pig the reader shares." Edward Weeks
Atlantic 229:108 My '72 550w

"Crichton's latest book is, in this reviewer's estimation, his best to date. . . . It all makes for great reading in a number of ways, the most prominent being a topic not so far fetched that it can be dismissed as something that will never happen. This is a very different piece of science-fiction because the suspense is centered around a hospital, and the battle is a psychological one between humans and machines; there is no battle between our earthly generals and those funny little three-eyed green people who plan to take over the earth. Crichton lets us decide what implications are to be drawn from 'The Terminal Man.' . . . More than a thriller, and very well written, [this] is highly recommended." Tony Slauslys
Best Sell 32:52 My 1 '72 320w
Choice 9:1127 N '72 220w
Christian Science Monitor p11 My 10 '72 140w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri
Library J 97:1180 Mr 15 '72 120w [YA]

Reviewed by Sharon Rinkoff
Library J 97:1459 Ap 15 '72 120w

Reviewed by J. R. Coyne
Nat R 24:700 Je 23 '72 320w

Reviewed by T. R. Edwards
N Y Rev of Books 19:20 Jl 20 '72 1000w

"Crichton operates from the very heart of an area called 'verisimilitude.' Comparisons with James Bond's adventures are inevitable; they remain, however, comparisons and not similarities. Dr. Crichton does not mention as many scientific advances as Ian Fleming does brand-names, and his priapic preoccupations are far, far less. Should Bond dynamite a tree, you just know it's going to fall precisely where he wants it; with a Crichton protagonist one is happily, not quite so sure. . . . [However] Dr. Crichton's verisimilitude locks itself to technology, not especially to living. . . . One regrets that so careful a piece of work should thereby remove itself from art into the area of entertainment." Theodore Sturgeon
N Y Times Bk R p32 Ap 30 '72 600w
New Yorker 48:145 My 13 '72 180w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 79:101 My 22 '72 230w

Reviewed by Arthur Cooper
Sat R 55:39 My 6 '72 300w

Reviewed by R. Z. Sheppard
Time 99:37 My 8 '72 190w

CRICHTON, MICHAEL. For another book by this author, see Lange, J.

CRICHTON, ROBERT. The Camerons; a novel.
503p $7.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-46582-2 LC 72-2249

The "story of Maggie Drum, a woman from a bleak mining town in Scotland who wants to better her lot in life. On her 16th birthday, she leaves Pitmungo to find a man who isn't a coal miner. She finds Gillon Cameron, poverty-stricken but of noble lineage, and brings him back to Pitmungo, her plan being to work and starve for the next 20 years, save every penny from their labors and that of their children, and then buy a business and live like gentry. All goes according to plan until Gillon is hurt in a mining accident and the mine owner, Lord Fyffe, refuses to give him the small gift of money usually given to injured miners. A full-scale rebellion of the miners, who had previously refused to organize, takes place." (Library J)

CRICHTON, ROBERT—Continued

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 231:98 Ja '73 430w

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
Best Sell 32:442 D 15 '72 600w

"The writing is skillful, the characters real, and the events vivid and involving. The dilemma posed is whether to beat the system on its own terms, like Maggie, or to fight it, like Gillon. Recommended." Cynthia Harrison
Library J 97:3332 O 15 '72 270w

Reviewed by Webster Schott
N Y Times Bk R p4 N 19 '72 1150w
New Yorker 48:189 N 11 '72 100w

"A short bad book is as harmless as a hand of solitaire or a fourth glass of Scotch, but around my house, where there are bicycles to fix and football games to watch, a long bad book provokes anathemas. . . . 'But you're paid to read it!' my wife shouts as for the third time I hurl 'The Camerons' against the wall. . . . The injustice is that the big book-selling men have decided that for hundreds of thousands of innocent readers the money—the 'siller,' as the Camerons call it—will be flowing the other way. 'The Camerons' is a selection of the Book-of-the-Month Club and the Reader's Digest book; the paperback rights were sold for $70,001—a new record for fiction. . . . [The book] is glum, derivative and commercial, all the worse because Crichton has done his homework and could have produced an honest story, had he troubled to do so." P. S. P.

Newsweek 80:108 N 13 '72 550w

"Gillon, for most of the novel, is too earnest and submissive to be believed. . . . What with the mother's obsessive miserliness and Gillon's piety in the miners' reading room and the lads' talk of Karl Marx, it is a pretty serious family altogether, grim-faced and tight-arsed. . . . At the very heart of the novel is this talk of struggle and sacrifice, and organized labor against inflexible lairds. . . . So the domestic details, the set piece about poaching (which is marvelous), and Maggie's courtship are included like sops for book-club members who might be put off by Crichton's sophomoric lectures on mining-town sociology, basic economic theory, poverty politics, and his whole melodrama of the class struggle. . . . And that is also why these 510 pages of unrelieved earnestness are a slog indeed, for, while it is mercifully free of Scottish dialect, there is not a single smile and not a solitary episode that is without an implied moral caption." Paul Theroux

Sat R 55:74 N 4 '72 1100w

Time 100:107 D 18 '72 250w

CRICHTON SMITH, IAIN. From Bourgeois land. 61p $5 Dufour 821

A collection of poems by the Scottish writer.

"[Crichton Smith's] broadsides are eloquent but largely conventional, as if none of his targets (though the fact that this is the Scottish bourgeoisie may make a difference) had adapted themselves to mid-century conditions. [However] technically, he is increasingly adept and forceful, and there are some individual poems where his abundant talent goes to the heart of the matter much more effectively than all his sophisticated philippics. Poem No. 2 of the 39 here leads up to its point beautifully. . . . and 'At the Sale' marshals its details inexorably towards a deeply moving comment on mortality. . . . This is Crichton Smith's best poem, and surely one of the best poems of the Sixties." Alan Brownjohn

New Statesman 79:18 Ja 2 '70 320w

"Crichton Smith has a lot of liveliness, even a tendency to be too smartly knowing in knock-'em-dead opening lines. . . . But reading [him] you don't feel you're being held up by a fool; he has a curious and inventive mind, a good ear that works well in traditional measures, and he wants to say something strong about the Bourgeois Land from which he comes. . . . [But he] is too clever for the good his moral satire wants to serve." W. H. Pritchard

Poetry 119:160 D '71 260w

"Crichton Smith has written firm, finely judged poems in the past. . . . but [this] is a disappointing book. The desire to widen his scope of reference and to hack away the local caul is healthy enough. . . . Unfortunately the poems which make their references to golf-clubs, brief-cases, the Supplements &c., do just that. Make a reference. The language has little density, little resonance. . . . In one or two of the love poems there is genuine tenderness. Elsewhere there is a feeling of scrupulousness too impatient with itself."

TLS p898 Ag 14 '69 260w

CROCKETT, JAMES UNDERWOOD. Annuals, by James Underwood Crockett and the eds. of Time-Life bks; watercolor il. by Allianora Rosse. 176p $6.95 Time

635.9 Annuals (Plants). Flower gardening
LC 78-140420

The book discusses practical and decorative aspects of growing annuals. Contents: Living color the summer long; How to grow annuals; Bringing outdoor beauty indoors; A head start for the flower garden; An illustrated encyclopedia of annuals. Index.

"Although designated as an 'encyclopedia,' the Time-Life Encyclopedia of Gardening is actually a series of volumes on gardening, each of which is. . . complete in itself. . . . Information is presented in a clear, concise style easily comprehended by the nonspecialist. . . . The outstanding color photographs, which constitute the principal feature of the 'Picture Essays,' are accompanied by detailed captions and concise textual introductions. . . . Regrettably, the charts [in the appendixes which detail] the salient characteristics of plants included within the scope of the volume are not easy to read owing to the crowded format utilized in order to fit the material to the width of the page. . . . Plants are entered in the indexes under both their botanical and common names, with cross-references. . . . The encyclopedia has been planned with browsing and sustained reading, as well as reference use, in mind."

Booklist 69:251 N 15 '72 1450w

"These attractive [Time-Life] books will be welcomed by tyro and relatively inexperienced gardeners. . . . [They are] quite delightfully illustrated in color by one of America's most competent horticultural artists. Other information of wide interest is given. . . . [This volume includes] suggestions for pressing flowers and selections for special purposes. . . . [These books] will serve well the needs of many amateurs, and their price is moderate for what one gets." E. C. Hall

Library J 96:3148 O 1 '71 100w

CROCKETT, JAMES UNDERWOOD. Bulbs, by James Underwood Crockett and the eds. of Time-Life bks; watercolor il. by Allianora Rosse. 160p $6.95 Time

635.9 Bulbs. Flower gardening
LC 78-30671

"This guide to flowering bulbs covers 'all the how-tos' of each type of bulb: how to buy them; where, when and how to plant them; how to feed and care for growing bulbs; how to propagate, store, and protect them; how and when to dig [and] how to cut flowers for bouquets." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Booklist 69:251 N 15 '72 1450w

CROCKETT, JAMES UNDERWOOD. Evergreens, by James Underwood Crockett and the eds. of Time-Life bks; watercolor il. by Rebecca A. Merrilees and John Murphy. 160p $6.95 Time

635.9 Evergreens
LC 75-31768

This volume covers the various kinds of evergreens and their uses; how to choose and plant them; the care of conifers; growing the broad-leaved species. It includes an illustrated encyclopedia of evergreens. Bibliography. Index.

Booklist 69:251 N 15 '72 1450w

CROCKETT, JAMES UNDERWOOD. Flowering house plants, by James Underwood Crockett and the eds. of Time-Life bks; watercolor il. by Allianora Rosse. 160p $6.95 Time

635.9 House plants
LC 72-29049

This book "describes general rules for watering, type of soil, light and humidity needs for the three families to which most flowering house plants belong—the orchids, the gesneriads and the bromeliads. Specifics for individual plants are found in the encyclopedia section." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Booklist 69:251 N 15 '72 1450w

CROCKETT, JAMES UNDERWOOD. Landscape gardening, by James Underwood Crockett and the eds. of Time-Life bks; watercolor il. by Rebecca A. Merrilees and Barbara Wolff. 160p $6.95 Time

712 Landscape gardening
LC 77-26584

This book offers the home owner advice on designing landscaped areas which can be tailored to individual needs and sites. Contents: What landscaping can do; The outdoor family room; A welcoming front yard; Places for work and play; An encyclopedia of selected plants for landscaping. Index.

Booklist 69:251 N 15 '72 1450w

CROCKETT, JAMES UNDERWOOD. Lawns and ground covers, by James Underwood Crockett and the eds. of Time-Life bks; watercolor il. by Allianora Rosse. 160p $6.95 Time

635.9 Lawns
LC 79-29048

This book covers The lore of lawns; How to take care of your lawn; Repairing old lawns and building new ones; Choosing and growing ground covers; and includes an illustrated encyclopedia of grasses and groundcovers. Bibliography. Index.

Booklist 69:251 N 15 '72 1450w

CROCKETT, JAMES UNDERWOOD. Roses, by James Underwood Crockett and the eds. of Time-Life bks; watercolor il. by Allianora Rosse. 160p $6.95 Time

635.9 Roses
LC 74-23781

This book recounts the history of roses "the queen of flowers"; it discusses plantings, pruning and protection, creating better blooms. It includes an illustrated encyclopedia of roses. Bibliography. Index.

Booklist 69:251 N 15 '72 1450w

Reviewed by E. C. Hall

Library J 96:3148 O 1 '71 100w

CROLL, NEIL A. The behavior of nematodes; their activity, senses and responses. 117p il pl $8.25 St Martins

595 Nematodes
LC 75-124954

In this review of free-living, plant-parasitic and animal-parasitic nematodes, the first three chapters "are concerned with 'Approaches to nematode behaviour,' 'Movement,' and 'Activity, aggregation and swarming,' the following six with responses to light, temperature, chemicals, electricity, gravity, and mechanical stimuli, and the last two with 'The mechanism of orientation' and with 'General considerations.'" (Science) Bibliography. Nematode index. Subject index.

"Croll has been interested in many aspects of the behavior of nematodes for the last 10 years and he has made an attempt to put together available information in this field in the form of a review. In this review he has done justice in giving appropriate attention to old and recent investigations on . . . nematodes. The illustrations from the original publications have been generously included. The habitat of each animal shown in the nematode index should prove very convenient. . . . This is the first source book in this field. . . . Has limited scope for undergraduate students, unless they are deeply involved in parasitology, plant pathology or ethology."

Choice 8:1045 O '71 130w

"[This book is] to be welcomed. It must, however, be borne in mind that the study of nematode behavior is, to use the author's words, still in its infancy. . . . The author presents the many gaps and contradictions (in nematode behavior) and herein lies one of the book's main merits. It is to be hoped that it will indeed help to form a background to more sophisticated and exact experimental work," one of its declared aims." Jakob Klingler

Science 175:876 F 25 '72 400w

CRONIN, CONSTANCE. The sting of change; Sicilians in Sicily and Australia. 307p $13.50 Univ. of Chicago press

301.24 Sicilians in Australia. Social change
ISBN 0-226-12110-0 LC 70-112707

"The setting of the study is an unidentified town of around 26,000 people, called Nicuportu, located some thirty miles south of Palermo. The comparison is made with a group of Sicilians living in Sydney, Australia. . . . A sample of 63 Sicilians, 48 born in Sicily and 15 in Australia, has been selected at convenience. . . . The study, based on in-depth interviews, analyzes the behavioral pattern of immigrants, assesses group culture changes related to the time in Australia, education, age at emigration, and socio-economic mobility, and compares these changes to those in the home area in Sicily." (Ann Am Acad)

"The Sicilian fieldwork in 'Nicuportu' expands our knowledge about the family. . . . Of particular importance is Cronin's exposition of the role of women and their relationship to the dominant husband. . . . The author carefully explores the brutal way of life in the agro-towns of Sicily from which the emigrants came. It should be noted that this is not a study of peasants in situ followed up by a study of immigrants in Australia from one particular village. Rather, the life-ways of 'Nicuportu' families are used as a generalized background against which the Australian sample is compared. . . . The author spent a year living among immigrant families in Sidney, and therein lies the strength of the study. . . . The problems, hopes, fears, frustrations, satisfactions . . . of her informants constitute the life blood of her study." L. W. Moss

Am Anthropol 74:23 F/Ap '72 600w

Reviewed by E. N. Cohen

Am J Soc 77:1265 My '72 750w

"The book is a refreshing report of the author's experience, enriched by numerous side-tracks to the literature of social change. . . . [It] begins with an introductory essay on the culture change and reviews of modern literature on 'acculturation, assimilation, absorption, accommodation, integration and adoption.' . . . By living in the town and by being accepted in the community, the author was able to uncover the insights that remained hidden to other observers. This fascinating narration of life and behavior of Sicilians is a worthy study in itself. . . . The author acknowledges the limitations [of her study]. . . . For social scientists interested in the culture change, the organization of society, group behavior, or socio-economic transformation, the book is a document of scholarship and source of gratification." Joseph Velikonja

Ann Am Acad 397:199 S '71 400w

Reviewed by S. J. Surace

Contemp Sociol 1:425 S '72 2100w

CRONIN, VINCENT. Napoleon Bonaparte: an intimate biography. 480p il $12.50 Morrow

B or 92 Napoleon I, Emperor of the French
LC 72-166356

"Why a new biography at all? For two reasons. First, since 1951 new material has come to light. . . . This material is: the Notebooks of Alexander des Mazis, Napoleon's closest friend in his youth, Napoleon's letters to Désirée Clary, the first woman in his life, the Memoirs of Louis Marchand, Napoleon's valet, and General Bertrand's Boswellian St Helena diary. . . . [Also available] is the long-missing central section of Napoleon's autobiographical story, 'Clisson et Eugénie.' . . . The second reason is more personal. . . . [I wanted] to find ■ Napoleon I could picture ■■ a living, breathing man . . . [one] more concerned with civil than with military matters." (Pref) Index.

CRONIN, VINCENT—Continued

Reviewed by J. S. Brusher
America 126:268 Mr 11 '72 400w

Reviewed by F. J. Gallagher
Best Sell 32:28 Ap 15 '72 600w

"[This] excellent 'intimate biography' . . . has come no closer to getting inside Napoleon than any of the earlier biographers. . . . Where Cronin is at his best is in his pictures of personal life: the love affairs, the recreations, and the tiny details—Napoleon drinking red wine with chicken, making his shoes last two years, detesting garlic, laboring zealously in his garden, shaving himself with downward strokes of the razor, singing to himself off-key, and dreaming of being eaten by a bear."

G. M. Fraser

Book World p1 Mr 5 '72 650w

Choice 9:1029 O '72 170w

Economist 241:62 O 9 '71 390w

"Cronin writes simply; his view is realistic and modern. Many readers will find his book illuminating and satisfying. Bonapartists should cheer it, for Cronin thoroughly exorcises 'the beast' and whitewashes the first modern dictator. So far 'round the circle have we come.'"

R. R. Rea

Library J 97:1314 Ap 1 '72 120w

"Cronin's book is at times marred by jejune and sloppy generalizations . . . [which] are scattered throughout a book otherwise more than a delight to read. . . . The portrait of Napoleon is profound in its understanding and moving in its presentation." J. H. Plumb

N Y Times Bk R p2 Mr 12 '72 420w

"This well-written, eloquent book is a pleasure to read and will probably find many readers. . . . Cronin will have rendered a service if he makes us stand back and reconsider our personal assessments of Napoleon, and he may help to dispel some lingering prejudices. The emphasis on the civil achievements is welcome, and on some matters—the breach of Amiens and d'Enghein, for instance—his account is more valid than many. But, considered as a whole, [his] book is as prejudiced in one direction as a Cruikshank cartoon in the other. He has brought to an historical subject the methods not of history but of propaganda and, like all propaganda, it runs the risk of proving counter-productive. Napoleon himself would have loved it."

TLS p1498 D 3 '71 1050w

CROOK, J. MORDAUNT, ed. A history of the Gothic revival. See Eastlake, C. L.

CROSEY, JOSEPH, ed. A dialogue between a philosopher and a student of the common laws of England. See Hobbes, T.

CROSBY, SUMNER MCK. The apostle bas-relief at Saint-Denis. (Yale publications in the history of art, 21) 116p il $10 Yale univ. press

730.9 Saint-Denis, France. Eglise abbatiale de Saint-Denis
ISBN 0-300-01504-6 LC 71-179471

"The monograph contains a brief history of the abbey, the relief's discovery, and [an] argument for the hypothesis that it was executed for Abbot Suger to replace one side of the sarcophagus of St. Denis when a new high altar incorporating the relics of the patrons was planned for the rebuilt choir dedicated in 1144. . . . [Crosby] concludes that it was designed by an artist whose connections with goldsmiths of Lorraine recommended him for a sumptuary work of this magnitude." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The fruits of a quarter century of reflection on a relief uncovered by Crosby in 1947 at Saint-Denis Abbey are summed up in this model of American medieval scholarship. . . . Presumably discarded in favor of a metal enclosure, the relief was perfectly preserved in a state of near completion that permits Crosby to analyze its style in relation to other Romanesque works. . . . This well edited, documented, and illustrated book by the acknowledged authority on Abbot Suger's St.-Denis is a jewel worthy of the abbot's taste for clarity and brilliance."

Choice 9:634 J1/Ag '72 170w

"Professor Crosby has searched for sources and comparisons far and wide, and his annotations are impressive. Yet no conclusive answer is reached or could be reached. . . . For the non-specialist the most interesting parts will probably be those dealing with the composition of the relief. . . . Professor Crosby has had a distinguished teaching career. This book will be a model to his pupils of how fruitful the analysis of one work of art can be."

TLS p888 J1 28 '72 600w

CROSS, A. G. N. M. Karamzin; a study of his literary career, 1783-1803. 306p pl $12.50 Southern Ill. univ. press

891 Karamzin, Nikolai Mikhailovich
ISBN 0-8093-0452-X LC 78-112385

The author examines the extent and nature of Karamzin's contribution to Russian literature. "The arrangement is basically chronological, moving from Karamzin's first journal (1791-92) to his second and last (1802-3), by way of his other publishing ventures, literary almanacs, and 'pantheons. Separate chapters are devoted to his travel letters, his fiction, and his poetry." (Intro) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is a] very interesting and informative book growing out of a doctoral thesis at Cambridge. . . . Cross combines scholarship and an easy familiarity with the period of Karamzin's literary preeminence to make a book which is appealing to anyone interested in Russian culture, and very valuable to the student. . . . Should be on the shelf of any university or college library."

Choice 8:1458 Ja '72 270w

"[This] is a carefully researched, scholarly study, gracefully written, and distinguished by its sobriety of tone and judgment. A fairly strong aroma of its origins as a doctoral thesis fills its pages. . . . It offers richly documented chapters on Karamzin's journalism, . . . on his innovations as a poet-versifier and on his work as a translator, but his original work, especially his Letters, is not really allowed to demonstrate its enduring appeal and real quality as literature. The discussion of the sentimental fiction shows up Karamzin's virtues and failings and reminds the reader that he wrote much more of interest and consequence than the Poor Liza with which his name is most popularly associated. . . . Dr Cross's final assessment, in laying stress on Karamzin's 'Europeanness' establishes the right priorities."

TLS p1408 N 12 '71 750w

CROSS, ANTHONY, ed. Russia under Western eyes, 1517-1825; ed. with an introd. by Anthony Cross. 400p il $10 St Martins

914.7 Russia—Description and travel. Russia—Social life and customs
LC 71-159500

This "anthology comprises selections from the writings of some fifty-four visitors to Russia over a period of three centuries. . . . Diplomats, soldiers, and adventurers from different parts of Western Europe and the United States are . . . represented. . . . [There are] descriptions of a number of historical events, including the rebellion of Stenka Razin, Napoleon in Moscow, and the Petersburg flood of 1824. . . . [and a] pictorial anthology, selected from engravings and illustrations in these travellers' accounts, but also including the work of native Russian masters." (TLS) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"No attempt has been made to produce a close knit narrative either thematically or historically. . . . The book is valuable for the general reader, though not necessarily for the specialist. Many of the selections have never appeared in print before. Also the anthology brings together selections that would require the reader to consult widely scattered and frequently hard-to-find sources if pursued in their original versions. . . . The inclusion of numerous contemporary woodcuts and prints gives an added graphic interest and attractiveness to the accompanying narratives."

Choice 9:120 Mr '72 200w

"Lavishly produced and beautifully illustrated, this collection . . . invites comparison with Francesca Wilson's Muscovy: Russia Through Foreign Eyes [BRD 1971]. Both volumes cover roughly the same period and include many of the same authors, although Cross has provided more accounts. Where Wilson paraphrases her material, Cross gives the full original wording, and this will be a considerable aid to serious students of the period. The use of complete quotations also seems to render the selections, which concern politics, morals, and sundry other facets of Russian life, more readable. . . . Recommended as ■ first choice for those who need a book on the subject and as a necessary supplement for those who already own Wilson's work." Deborah Halprin

Library J 97:494 F 1 '72 130w

"[Dr Cross] provides an introductory essay which gives the general reader a succinct account of the growth of Russia in the period covered by his anthology and an admirable survey of the complete range of Western travel literature on Russia in these years. This attractively produced volume is evidently aimed at the general reader, but the editor's wide-ranging scholarship and impressive knowledge of Western travel accounts means that there is also much to be gleaned by discerning students of Russian history and culture."

TLS p1452 N 19 '71 300w

CROSS, K. G. W. A bibliography of Yeats criticism, 1887-1965; by K. G. W. Cross and R. T. Dunlop; with ■ foreword by A. Norman Jeffares. 341p $10.95 Macmillan (N Y)

016.821 Yeats, William Butler—Bibliography
LC 75-179961

"The major sections, which follow an eight-page chronology of Yeats's work, cite reviews of Yeats's writings and also books, pamphlets, and articles wholly or partly about him. Also covered are bibliographies, concordances, and descriptions of Yeatsiana; commemorative and special issues of periodicals; dissertations and theses. A list of newspapers and periodicals cited . . . completes the study." (Library J) Chronology of Yeats's works. Index.

"This monument of Yeats scholarship, begun by Cross (who died in 1966) and completed by his colleague Dunlop, is the first indexed account of Yeats criticism as a whole through 1965. . . . Jeffares' foreword is an eloquent eulogy for Cross—one gentleman writing of another." C. R. Andrews
Library J 97:2374 J1 '72 120w

"Almost a hundred pages of this bibliography are given to books and pamphlets that deal directly or indirectly with Yeats. The hasty reader, however, will have to distinguish the books from the pamphlets by the number of pages they contain. Up to 1965, about forty books on Yeats had been published. There is also . . . a list of dissertations and theses, including some that have not until now been published. There are useful cross-references to the Allan Wade bibliography, which was revised by Russell Alsopach."

TLS p311 Mr 17 '72 350w

CROSSLEY-HOLLAND, KEVIN. The pedlar of Swaffham; il. by Margaret Gordon. unpub. $5.95 Seabury

398.2 Folklore—England—Juvenile literature
LC 70-129208

"Based on Norfolk, or East Anglian, legendry, the story . . . about the pedlar who in a dream was advised to journey from Swaffham to London Bridge where 'he would hear joyful news' has been . . . expanded. The pedlar is given a name—John Chapman—as are the members of his family . . . and when he leaves for London, he is accompanied by his mastiff, who 'thumped the ground with his tail.'" (Horn Bk) Glossary. "Ages six to ten." (N Y Times Bk R)

"A historical note at the close of the story indicates how close to the truth the old tale lies. Colorful drawings by Margaret Gordon are as stylized and detailed as an illuminated manuscript, making this one of the most compelling storybooks of the season." Jane Yolen
Book World p4 (children's issue) N 7 '71 60w

"The retelling has the rich earthiness and the wholesome humor of a story by Chaucer; and the pure white pages of the handsome volume form a perfect background for the text as well as for the illustrations, which are found on most of the pages. Although the line drawings are filled with all the colors of the spectrum, rich blue, muted red, mustard yellow, and medium green predominate. Perspective and proportion are sacrificed for medieval picturesqueness while farmyard and marketplace, birds and cattle and men, and Gothic arches and machicolations are joyously depicted to go along with ■ joyous story." P. H.

Horn Bk 47:607 D '71 190w

Reviewed by M. M. Murray

Library J 97:1593 Ap 15 '72 120w

Reviewed by N. K. Burger

N Y Times Bk R p8 D 19 '71 240w

"A handsome re-presentation. . . . [The pictures] are not only apt to the subject but must surely be, from any child's view, a delight. . . . [This is] an assured and plain re-telling: the verbal indulgences are not many. . . . There is plenty of dialogue too; a teacher could easily read it aloud or children act it out."

TLS p1317 O 22 '71 190w

CROSSLEY-HOLLAND, KEVIN, comp. Storm and other Old English riddles; tr. by Kevin Crossley-Holland; il. by Miles Thistlethwaite. 75p $3.95 Farrar, Straus

398.6 Riddles. Anglo-Saxon poetry
LC 74-125147

"Thirty-six of the ninety-six riddles found in the Exeter Book, one of the few extant Anglo-Saxon manuscripts, have been transformed into modern poems. The subjects of the riddles were drawn from nature and from social life, and the riddles themselves often embody either a pagan or a Christian attitude towards life. In many of the poems 'the object itself speaks, describing itself, and then asks the listener, or reader, to guess its name.'" (Horn Bk)

"Crossley-Holland has been very successful with a wide selection of these poems. He uses alliteration imaginatively, varies pace—it would be impossible to follow the Old English slayishly in this, so much has the character of the language changed—and brings out the vitality and variety. His own enjoyment is clear, and echoes the enjoyment of Anglo-Saxon writer and compiler alike." Elizabeth Maslen
Encounter 37:81 S '71 450w

"The introduction contains an excellent discussion of the universality of riddling, and skillfully, but simply, sets the poems in their context of Anglo-Saxon history and culture. Solutions and Comments complete the volume, which is elegant in format. Significant and pleasing black-and-white line drawings accompany most of the poems." P. H.
Horn Bk 46:484 O '70 180w

Reviewed by R. M. McConnell

Library J 95:4051 N 15 '70 130w [YA]

Reviewed by Shirley Foulson

New Statesman 80:616 N ■ '70 50w

"[These riddles] gloomily illustrated by Miles Thistlethwaite, seem to be either for child geniuses or adults with an extraordinary analytical turn of mind." Thomas Meehan
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p32 N 8 '70 110w

"[This is a] book well worth offering to young people . . . but there's still room for some racier, more colloquial versions. Mr. Crossley-Holland insists on too many archaisms and poeticisms which are sometimes linguistically close to Anglo-Saxon but which are not in the mood of the original. Children will find much of the idiom unnecessarily old-fashioned. Words like vestments, joyous, sorely, hateful foe, stalwart, thereafter, dwellers and forsook are not contemporary English. Sometimes archaism is justified (e.g. 'The thievish stranger was not ■ whit the wiser' for 'Staelgiest ne waes white by gleawra') but more often it diminishes the impact."

TLS p718 J1 2 '70 120w

CROW, DUNCAN. The Victorian woman. 351p il $10 Stein & Day

301.41 Woman—Social conditions. Women in Great Britain. Women in the U.S.
ISBN 0-8128-1447-9 LC 74-185885

The author "discusses woman's position throughout Victoria's reign, in England, and to ■ lesser extent, in the United States; and he examines all classes of women, from the queen herself to the sweated laborers in dress-makers' shops. Crow analyzes prudery and prostitution, traces the evolution of laws extending the right to vote and those regulating working conditions, follows the advance of women into higher education and the professions, and reports on the battle for the right to knowledge about contraceptives." (Library J) Index.

"To use 'Victorian' ■ a term of denigration becomes impossible after pondering Mr. Crow's study of the complex forces at work during the nineteenth century in the United States and Great Britain, with the emphasis definitely upon England. . . . Almost the only feature of the Victorian Age absent from this study is the fearless women-travellers (Gertrude Bell, Hester Stanhope, Samuel Baker's consort, among others) whose diaries, letters and memoirs form part of nineteenth-century literature. The only lack on the technical side is the absence of an annotated bibliography. But the study itself is . . . vivid [and] illuminating." W. H. Archer

CROW, DUNCAN—Continued

Best Sell 32:29 Ap 15 '72 450w

Choice 9:684 J1/Ag '72 100w

"Many books which discuss women appear to be dissertations hustled into print. This one is a comprehensive and well-written exception. Crow is successful because he doesn't take the usual scholarly route of rigidly restricting his subject. . . . Though this book concentrates on women, it does its job so well that it is finally a history and a sociology of Victorian England. It would be a valuable addition to any library." S. R. Rounds

Library J 97:1320 Ap 1 '72 130w

Reviewed by Arthur Marshall

New Statesman 82:900 D 24 '71 260w

"An agreeably written survey. . . . In assembling his particulars . . . [Crow] leaves us in no doubt that the women of that time . . . were subject to the most arbitrary and crippling kinds of discrimination. As counterpoint, he interweaves brief biographical sketches of the women who rebelled—Florence Nightingale, Josephine Butler, Beatrice Webb, and those like them."

New Yorker 48:143 Ap 22 '72 180w

"This rich, learned and readable study makes it plain that the present image of the Victorian woman is precisely that with which generations of lively, intelligent Victorian women refused to conform and struggled to destroy. . . . In all but one dimension the Victorian age appears as it was: a period not of prunes and prisms but of rough, vivid, violent development in which rigid codes of behaviour served to control the pressures which might otherwise have exploded. That dimension is the religious one. Although Mr Crow stresses 'the predominance of religion' he does not seem to be aware of its meaning. His statement that 'the Christian religion was a powerful force in proclaiming and enforcing women's inferior position' hardly squares with the facts."

TLS p1114 S 17 '71 500w

CROWCROFT, PETER. Australian marsupials; il. by Colin Threadgall. 32p lib bdg $4.72 McGraw

599 Mammals—Juvenile literature. Animals—Australia—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-07-014700-0 LC 77-132368

"This book describes the habits and habitat of each species, includes a section on American marsupials, and discusses extinct types as well as conservation of living species. . . . Ages nine to twelve." (Sat R)

"The writing is static, but the fascination of the subject compensates amply, and the information given by both text and pictures is accurate." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:81 My 20 '72 70w

"The vocabulary may be beyond that of the seven or eight-year-old attracted by the illustrations and appearance of the book. . . . It includes a map showing the distribution of marsupials. . . . Text and illustrations are beautifully married and features referred to in the text are clearly illustrated in the coloured and black-and-white drawings on the same page. The book ends with a brief chapter on conservation—a truly up-to-date, thoughtful, beautiful and scientific picture-book."

TLS p392 Ap 2 '71 80w

CROWELL'S handbook of contemporary drama, by Michael Anderson, and others. 505p $10 Crowell

809.2 Drama—History and criticism—Dictionaries. Dramatists—Bio-bibliography
ISBN 0-690-22643-8 LC 79-158714

"This is a dictionary-arranged series of entries re dramatists, outstanding dramatic works, theater companies, and the drama of Europe and North and South America." (Library J)

Am Lit 44:180 Mr '72 30w

"This is a valuable but uneven book. Contributors range in expertise from a little-published lady (selected from hordes of possible authorities on American drama) to Jacques Guicharnaud, one of the best-known authorities on French drama. Writing is opinionated . . . selection a matter of preferences . . . No Asian or African drama."

Choice 9:663 J1/Ag '72 170w

"The volume is outstanding for its material on avant-garde dramatists and their works. On the other hand, it seems to give too scant attention to the 'hit' plays and the dramatists who write them. There is more than a full page on Helmut Baierl but only a ten-line entry on Neil Simon. Without considering literary merit, the activity of each playwright, it would seem, must be considered. The book will prove, however, an aid to students in modern drama courses and a valuable addition to the ready reference shelves of all libraries concerned with dramatic literature. The 14 specialists who have compiled the entries make up an impressive editorial roster." Paul Myers

Library J 96:2480 Ag '71 140w

"An indispensable guide to European and American drama since World War II."

N Y Times Bk R p18 D 19 '71 60w

"This is far from being a superficial survey. To a great extent the analyses of writers, trends, and works are exploratory, penetrating, critical, and frequently pungent. But if you're interested in reading up on a particular play, you'd better know who wrote it, since only a handful have their own entries and there is no index." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 54:47 D 4 '71 100w

CROWLEY, F. K. Forrest, 1947-1918; v 1. 1847-91: Apprenticeship to premiership. 323p 11 $16.25 Int. scholarly bk. services

B or 92 Forrest, Sir John, Bart. Australia—Politics and government
ISBN 0-7022-0698-9

This is the first volume of a projected three volume 'biography of Sir John Forrest, the first Australian to be raised to the British peerage . . . [an] explorer, surveyor-general, and the first premier of Western Australia. This volume covers Forrest's life from birth through such highlights of his early years as his . . . explorations of frontier Central Australia, his . . . stay in England, and his early participation in politics (which led ultimately to his gaining the premiership in 1890)." (Library J) Index.

"[This] volume is excellent scholarship: the narrative, generously sprinkled with excerpts from Forrest's own correspondence, presents an in-depth portrait of the man and his colonial society. Although orthodox in its 'birth-to-death' structure—an opening chapter on his subject's place in Australian history and the problems inherent in writing the first biography of a man closely involved in the careers of others would have benefited any reader—Crowley's effort will quickly become one of the standard biographies in collections on Australian history."

Choice 9:1184 N '72 170w

"The author's great interest and expertise in governmental theory and practical politics is strongly reflected in the second half of the volume; and his observations, presented cogently, constitute an excellent essay which is skillfully blended into the account of Forrest's activities." Clarence Gorchels

Library J 97:2179 Je 15 '72 100w

"It is hard to believe there are another two volumes in what is left of Forrest's career. . . . Forrest was a burly, vigorous conscientious administrator and politician, and has on the whole been well served by his biographer, with whom he shares the successful explorer's virtues of self-discipline, patient plodding and a strong sense of direction, as well as one or two less desirable qualities. In attempting to bring Forrest to life Professor Crowley was severely handicapped by the paucity of extant personal correspondence (though he might have looked harder for it among Forrest's English correspondents) and, to be just, he can hardly be said to have idealized his subject. All the same, though his is a highly worthwhile study . . . one feels that he has not quite got Forrest's full measure."

TLS p617 Je ■ '72 1300w

CROWLEY, TERENCE. Information service in public libraries: two studies, by Terence Crowley and Thomas Childers; with a pref. by Ralph Blasingame, Jr. 210p $6 Scarecrow

025.5 Libraries—Reference service
ISBN 0-8108-0406-9 LC 77-154298

These two studies "represent efforts to measure the performance of library staffs . . . [by applying] certain tests generally similar to portions of the normal workload without drawing attention to the fact that a test is being carried out. . . . [Crowley's study dealt with the question] 'Is there substantial difference between the claims made by librarians for reference work and the actual result as observed in a number of different situations by individuals posing as clients?' . . . Childers posed a related but different and more specific question: 'Are there correlations between and among the statistics about library operations collected by the New Jersey State Library and the apparent "quality" of replies to reference questions?' . . . [These two studies] indicate that the reference service actually given (here limited to replies to questions of fact) often does not support the claims made for it." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"What professors Crowley and Childers have done in exploring devices and methods applicable to the measurement of information services has serious and important consequences for college and research libraries. . . . [The authors'] objective formulation, problem solving methodologies, and controlled data gathering and testing devices should be carefully considered by any academic librarian interested in reference service. . . . While the results of the two studies are depressing, a very positive approach to the study of qualitative measurement makes this book highly worthwhile. All academic librarians interested in the effectiveness and performance of their information service units would do well to study these research methods." R. P. Haro
Col & Res Lib 33:411 S '72 650w

"[These] studies, which are individually done and presented, are intellectually rigorous and even somewhat elegantly framed. . . . While this book is presented chiefly as a study in measurements, its principal value is likely to be the spotlighting of a problem that is all too often ignored: how accurate is the information libraries supply, how badly are we falling down in this principal library task, how can we compete with other information sources. The fact that this library failure emerges almost as a casual by-product of studies in research methods makes for a particularly cool, dispassionate, and convincing presentation." Dorothy Nyren
Library J 96:3990 D 1 '71 260w

CRUICKSHANK, C. G. The English occupation of Tournai, 1513-1519. 301p $10.50 Oxford

942.05 Tournai—History. Great Britain—History—Tudors, 1485-1603
ISBN 0-19-822343-9 LC 79-25160

"In his Army Royal: Henry VIII's Invasion of France 1513 [BRD 1969], Dr. Cruickshank described Henry VIII's . . . expedition that resulted in the capture of the city of Tournai. Now he has provided us with a sequel in which he narrates Henry's five and a half year attempt to integrate this city of twenty thousand Frenchmen into the empire of England." (Am Hist R)

"Although Cruickshank presents little that is new concerning Tournai's place in Europe's politico-diplomatic machinations, he does detail the events of the occupation. He is at his best when he discusses the occupation's military aspects. Because of the loss of much of the Tournai archives in 1940, Cruickshank has been forced to rely on previously published documents, a number of which he has checked against manuscripts in England." K. G. Madison
Am Hist R 77:504 Ap '72 350w

"The city was an enclave of France completely surrounded by territories which in 1513 owed political allegiance to the young Prince of Castile. The English siege and military occupation of Tournai created administrative problems of unusual difficulty for the English government. . . . [The author] writes in detail about the organization and activities of the English garrison, the construction of the great citadel within the city, problems connected with trade and commerce, efforts of Thomas Wolsey to gain complete control over the rich bishopric of Tournai, and the political relationships with London. Cruickshank considers Henry VIII's retention of Tournai a serious error in judgment. . . . The book is solidly based upon printed documents, contemporary chronicles, and upon manuscript collections in the British Museum and in the State Papers, Exchequer, and Chancery records in the Public Record Office." B. C. Weber

Social Studies 63:296 N '72 350w

"[This is] a penetrating study of all aspects of the [occupation]. Topics range from the setting-up of a system of government . . . to an investigation of the outrageous expenditure incurred by Henry's decision to build an elaborate system of fortifications. . . . In a final chapter a profit and loss account of the expedition is carefully assessed. . . . [Henry] gets short shrift in this balance sheet. He is written off as a youth who valued his own foolish whims more than the manifest needs of his subjects. . . . In making so microscopic an examination of this single episode Mr Cruickshank has given us a range of facts which will provoke questions and discussion on many topics. He has presented his narrative and marshalled his arguments on specific problems with skill, scientific expertise and literary style."

TLS p759 J1 2 '71 550w

CRUISE O'BRIEN, DONAL B. The Mourides of Senegal; the political and economic organization of an Islamic brotherhood. 321p il pl maps $11.25 Oxford

966 Muslims in Senegal. Senegal—Religion
ISBN 0-19-821662-9 LC 79-583611

The author examines "the raison d'être, history, organization and influence of a Muslim brotherhood in black Africa. The Mourides, one of three brotherhoods in Senegal, developed among the Wolof, the largest ethnic group in that country, after the destruction of their kingdom by the French during the colonial period." (Choice)

Reviewed by T. J. Spencer

Am Anthropol 74:1405 D '72 330w

"Avoiding the errors in fact and interpretation of . . . earlier writers, O'Brien provides a comprehensive, detailed description of the origins and organization of the group. . . . There is certainly some duplication here of information already generally known . . . but O'Brien provides additional detail, often clearing up obscure incidents or relationships. . . . But the strength of the book—its wealth of accurate detail—is also its weakness. . . . [O'Brien] proceeds in a lengthy description generally devoid of analysis or interpretation. While he certainly evaluates the meaning of specific facts or events for the organization of the brotherhood itself, [he] does not evaluate the meaning of the group for the society in which it is placed. . . . Nonetheless, in terms of what O'Brien set out to do, he has done an excellent job." L. C. Behrman
Am Pol Sci R 65:1202 D '71 600w

"An excellent in-depth study. . . . O'Brien, who is very meticulous about his sources and the limits of analysis. . . . analyzes the historical growth of the Mourides and modestly but clearly deals with intricate relationships of followers to leaders, and Muslim terms often difficult for the outsider to understand. O'Brien then deals with the Mourides' role in the production of peanuts, Senegal's major export, and with their importance in politics. . . . In this area the book is more sensitive than [Lucy C.] Behrman's Muslim brotherhoods and politics in Senegal [BRD 1970]. A note on orthography . . . maps, tables, pictures, . . . complete what must be considered the definitive study of the Mourides of Senegal." Choice 8:1234 N '71 170w

"[This] account, which is clearly written and well-documented, is based on ten months' fieldwork in Senegal in 1966-67, supplemented by an extensive examination of the voluminous literature. . . . Dr O'Brien's comparisons with Israeli kibbutzim and with the Mafia are relevant and valid, at least up to a point. His analysis is less successful, however, when it tries to trace connexions between the social structure of traditional Wolof society and the organization of the Mourides. . . . This lack of finesse in the handling of the social infrastructure mars an otherwise sound account of an attractive topic."

TLS p757 J1 2 '71 1000w

CRUNDEN, ROBERT M. From self to society. 1919-1941. (Transitions in Am. thought ser) 212p $6.95; pa $2.95 Prentice-Hall

917.3 U.S.—Intellectual life
ISBN 0-13-331421-9; 0-13-331413-8 (pa)
LC 78-168740

"Crunden presents portraits of representative figures from the arts, literature, and the social sciences to demonstrate how the intellectual optimism of the Progressive Era was assaulted by the violence of World War I and finally gave way to the pessimism of the twenties and the collectivism of the thirties. Analyzing the work of John Marin, Frank Lloyd Wright, Ruth Benedict, George Antheil, Robert Park, and Conrad Aiken, among others, Crunden documents how the basic relationship of the individual to society at large changed during this period 'from the self in society, to the self apart from society, to the self submerged in society.'" (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"In so concise a study, Dr. Crunden . . . must be highly selective. Thus he ignores the influence of Ezra Pound, which, as he points out, became confined largely to literary matters after 1919; similarly ignored are the fiction of Joyce and the poetry of Eliot, though he does examine Eliot's ideas and gives us glimpses of Hemingway, Cummings, O'Neill, Farrell, Faulkner, and Fitzgerald as they were involved in American cultural history. Freud, of course, figures importantly in a number of contexts. . . . This study belongs . . . in college and university libraries." J. S. Phillipson
Best Sell 32:10 Ap 1 '72 320w

"Written for intelligent undergraduate and graduate students, [this book] is intended to supplement textbook accounts of these years. . . . The author has used discrimination in choosing the men whose ideas are discussed, and he has managed to write about architecture, music, and painting in a way to make these disciplines comprehensible as cultural entities. Crunden is especially good on the conservatives. Excellent bibliography of secondary sources. . . . Recommended for undergraduate and graduate libraries."

Choice 9:1034 O '72 160w

"[The work] falls into a casual conceptual flaccidity common to many intellectual histories, stating that 'men,' 'the decade,' 'a whole generation,' or 'the country' held a certain view, when the evidence cited refers only to individual authors or artists. . . . There are sections of considerable merit in Crunden's work. . . . Ultimately, [his] conceptual framework disguises rather than elucidates much of the valuable material he has gathered. What his evidence abundantly shows is the capacity of American intellectuals to transform rationalist systems of thought into a personal, emotional idiom and the persistence of individualism in American thought against the pull of either traditionalist or collectivist social values." Robert Sklar

J Am Hist 59:761 D '72 600w

"[This] is a readable intellectual history of the period that escapes being pedantic. It shows an impressive familiarity with a wide span of literature and includes a good final section on additional readings. As one reads about Abraham Flexner's disillusionment with formal education in the 1920's, Rexford Tugwell's concern about business assuming the role of government in the 1930's or the peace and feminist movements of the period, there comes to mind the phrase plus . . . change, plus . . . le même. Recommended." J. M. Carroll
Library J 97:1011 Mr 15 '72 180w

CUÉLLAR, ALFREDO. Mexican Americans. See Moore, J. W.

CULBERTSON, MANIE. May I speak? diary of a crossover teacher; ed. and introd. by Sue Eakin. 156p $4.95 Pelican

371.1 Teachers. Negroes—Education. Education—Southern States
ISBN 0-911116-59-1 LC 70-186542

In January, 1970, the author, a white teacher who had taught school in Louisiana for eighteen years, was transferred to an all-black school in response to a court order. Mrs. Culbertson's diary "reflects a gradual change in its author's perceptions of the problems of American Negroes and the character of 'separate but equal' schools. She began to see how poorly typical tests of intelligence and achievement apply to culturally deprived children." (Best Sell)

"If there are still some people who do not understand the Supreme Court's dictum that segregated schools are inherently unequal, they would do well to read 'May I Speak?'" R. B. Nordberg

Best Sell 32:165 J1 1 '72 250w

"This diary records [the author's] trepidations, her reluctant decision not to resign but not to work too hard, and her amazement at discovering how responsive and eager her new pupils were. She was shocked by their unpreparedness, their manners and customs, and the scarcity of supplies and books. Nevertheless, by the end of the school year, she had made progress with most of the 7th-graders. Readers from an urban background may find the book naïve and may question the author's imposition of middle-class standards. However, the work may be helpful in newly integrated schools and the libraries serving them, especially in the South." C. E. Wadsworth
Library J 97:2583 Ag '72 156w

The CULTURAL context of learning and thinking; an exploration in experimental anthropology, by Michael Cole (and others) in assn. with Thomas Ciborowski (and others). 304p il $10 Basic bks.

155.8 Race psychology. Learning, Psychology of. Thought and thinking. National characteristics, Liberian. Kpelle
ISBN 465-01498-4 LC 73-158446

This book "is based on the integrated field and experimental research of a group of anthropologists and psychologists who studied the acquisition of cognitive skills among the tribal Kpelle people of Liberia. The research concentrated on the classification of natural-world objects in the Kpelle noun system as reflected in both verbal and classification tasks such as sorting. Other processes investigated were verbal concept clarification, free-recall, and the classification and learning of physical attributes. The selection of these tasks was guided by the conviction that cognitive skills are closely related to the activities that engage those skills." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"An important tentative general conclusion emerges: it is inappropriate to judge psychological processes from cultural patterns; there is no clear evidence provided by culturally adjusted experiments for differences in thought patterns and innate capacities among different kinds of people. Though important and highly recommended, the work suffers from a turgid writing style which may reward only the better student. Recommended for undergraduate and graduate libraries for anthropologists, educators, linguists, and psychologists. Photographs, several valuable technical appendices (and) fair bibliography."

Choice 9:584 Je '72 190w

"There is a great wealth of data here, but one is given the impression that the authors have not completely digested it. The reviewer certainly hasn't. Some results are clear, however, and, perhaps even more importantly, the experiments are sound and should provide the data for further analysis." K. T. Kernan

Harvard Ed R 42:287 My '72 1050w

"This excellent book provides new and original evidence against the continuing racist mythology which has permeated so much of the thought of the Western world since, ironically, the Enlightenment. . . . It was found that when compared with American subjects, the Kpelle did less well in some tasks, better in others. Aligning themselves against those who interpret cultural differences in cognitive functioning as signs of social pathology (the 'culturally disadvantaged') or genetic or racial inferiority, the authors conclude that 'cultural differences in cognition reside more in the situation in which particular cognitive processes are applied than in the existence of a process in one cultural group and its absence in another.' They also suggest that 'the poor performance of minority groups on psychological tests is the result of various situational factors.' Highly recommended." Thom Verhave

Library J 97:693 F 15 '72 230w

Reviewed by Peter Grumpert and Charles Harrington

Teach Col Rec 74:261 D '72 8700w

CULVERWELL, NATHANIEL. An elegant and learned discourse of the light of nature; ed. by Robert A. Greene and Hugh MacCallum. 216p il Can$10 Univ. of Toronto press

211 Religion—Philosophy
ISBN 0-8020-5231-2 LC 74-151369

This book "composed in a period of religious and political upheaval, and delivered as lectures to Cambridge students in 1646, is an imaginative statement of the teachings of Christian humanism concerning the nature and limits of human reason and the related concepts of natural and divine law." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This is a] carefully prepared and well printed edition. . . . of a 17th-century text which was complex in both erudition and literary style. . . . This series of flowery sermons . . . is based on the Biblical text that 'the understanding of a man is the candle of the Lord.' . . . The editors establish a reliable text, indicating all variants from the first edition of 1652. Their notes are an immense treasure of Culverwell's sources—Classical, Judaeo-Christian, and Renaissance. The detailed introduction is valuable as biography and as clarifier of mid-17th-century theological issues, sometimes to the point of redundancy. The weighty Hebrew, Greek, and Latin blankets, within which Culverwell often smothered his style, are all lightened with clear translations. The last full edition (1857) forms the editorial foundation for this one."

Choice 9:381 My '72 230w

"[This work] espouses a moderate Calvinist position on the major theological and philosophical issues of the day (e.g., faith vs. reason), and maintains it against the Socinians, antinomians, Jews, Skeptics, and everyone else. The treatise is worth republication not only as a document of the times, but also for its style and frequently highly figured language, exuberantly prolix and often delightful." M. M. Reik

Library J 97:1328 Ap '72 160w

CUMMING, W. P. The discovery of North America [by] W. P. Cumming, R. A. Skelton [and] D. B. Quinn. 304p il pl col pl $25 Am. heritage press

972.1 America—Discovery and exploration
SBN 07-014905-4 LC 73-165335

"This volume presents the discovery and exploration of the North American continent, from the earliest references down to the first permanent settlements, as described by the explorers themselves and delineated by contemporary Europeans. The . . . [narratives are] supplemented by the drawings of the explorers and by the conceptions of the land which they brought back to European mapmakers and artists. . . . Each section of the volume has an introductory historical essay which binds together the original narratives and the accompanying illustrations." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by F. J. Gallagher
Best Sell 32:165 J1 1 '72 340w

Choice 9:1034 O '72 160w

"Sometimes a book can be judged by its cover. The handsome jacket of this splendid volume, a sixteenth-century map of the North Atlantic coast of the new world from an anonymous atlas, suggests a richness within which is no false promise. This is no mere picture book; it is an important reference work."

Economist 241:70 N 13 '71 100w

"Most of the . . . excerpts [from contemporary accounts] are brief and serve to bring out the flavor of the period or to present an interesting anecdote, rather than to provide a continuous narrative. The introductory essays, written by specialists in cartography and the history of exploration, are sensible and accurate." J. F. Husband

Library J 97:1435 Ap 15 '72 110w

"[This book is] in tune with contemporary requirements. It does not demand from the buyer the capacity to read numerous consecutive pages, and is in fact cunningly constructed so as to make such an old-fashioned project quite impossible. Shy double columns make way at short intervals for bragging illustrations, often irrelevant to their context, and captioned in tiny-tiny print. . . . The maps are very pretty, but it is rarely possible to read much on them. Only one feature makes the whole thing forgivable; the reproduction of many of John White's drawings." Angus Calder

New Statesman 82:896 D 24 '71 430w

Reviewed by L. B. Wright
N Y Times Bk R p23 J1 16 '72 700w

"The book's illustrations require a separate mention. There are 370, of which seventy-five are in colour. Many are full-page, and at least fifteen of them are double-page. At first sight, and even second, they dominate the book, and there are places where they come close to overwhelming the text. But their excellence and interest allows no debate. Most worthy of mention, as might be expected of the contributors, are the contemporary maps and charts perhaps a hundred in number. Frequently they are arrestingly beautiful, almost always they present an interested party's deeply considered view of the subject, and taken together they demonstrate in impressive fashion the dissipation of ignorance and amendment of error in the slow revelation of the hidden contours of the Atlantic Ocean's far-off western verges."

TLS p1547 D 10 '71 900w

CUMMINGS, E. E. Complete poems, 1913-1962. 866p $12.50 Harcourt

811
ISBN 0-15-121060-8 LC 72-78457

"This is the first complete edition of the poetry of E. E. Cummings to be published in the United States. It includes the contents of twelve individual volumes and, for the first time in a popular edition, the holograph poem 'the boys I mean are not refined,' which was published just once in this country, in a limited edition of nine copies of No Thanks, in 1935, by the Golden Eagle Press." (Publisher's note)

"Cummings' weaknesses, as well as his strengths, are made evident in this retrospective collection of his complete poems. He is frequently sentimental, often romantic, rarely self-critical. His typographical acrobatics, offering at first doorways to fresh perception, harden in the end to mannerism. He offers little food for thought. Though the reader must regularly tussle with anagrams and scrambled syntax, the puzzle solved provides hardly more satisfaction than a crossword. . . . A poet who improves with judicious selecting, Cummings remains a powerful magician, a celebrant of love, a lyric renewer of language and looking, at his best when, in his own lines, he is 'a foolishwise/proudhumble citizen of ecstasies.'" Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p9 N 1 '72 450w

"Cummings was down on editors and editing processes; he wanted poems printed precisely as he wrote them . . . and he wanted them printed without comment in the order in which he had written them. So we find no revising and rearranging here even 10 years after the death; in fact we are allowed to witness no editorial hand at all. . . . The best edition of Cummings remains. I think Harcourt's own paperback (Harvest No. 92), which came out in 1965 and has at least a worthy short introduction by Horace Gregory. . . . We could use more comment now, and fewer poems. . . . I certainly don't think Cummings' reputation is helped by the persistent preservation, inviolate, of the 739 poems in the new edition; for his was a narrow art: he repeated himself shamelessly and went through practically no development of theme or method once he had settled into his niche." Reed Whittemore

New Repub 167:31 O 21 '72 500w

CUMMINGS, PAUL. A dictionary of contemporary American artists. 2d ed 368p il $25 St Martins

709.73 Artists, American—Dictionaries
LC (65-20815)

"The first edition of A Dictionary of Contemporary American Artists [BRD 1966] was published in 1966. . . . Now revised and updated to March 1971, it has added 93 new entries to total 787 biographies of American artists. . . . According to the author's foreword, the bases for inclusion in the dictionary are 'representation in museum, public, and private collections; representation in major American and international exhibitions; influence as teachers; recognition they have received from fellow-artists, dealers, critics, and others with a professional interest in the fine arts.' . . . Artists chosen for inclusion in the dictionary fall into these categories: painter, water-colorist, sculptor, printmaker, assemblagist, teacher, creator of happenings, mosaicist, and draftsman. Architects and craftsman except mosaicists are excluded." (Booklist) Index of artists. Bibliography.

CUMMINGS, PAUL—Continued

"The 98 new artists include some of our most advanced contemporaries. . . . The entries are in strict who's who style, concentrating entirely except for vital statistics, on professional activities without critical approach or commentary. . . . Most useful is the bibliography at the end of each entry. References are given by author's last name only, as full information on each work cited is included in the bibliography at the back of the book. . . . Bibliographies are well chosen, and most of the books are readily available in the average library with imprint dates including 1969. . . . Scattered through the book are some 100 illustrations which are more fully described in a list by artist at the front of the book. They are all black and white and of various sizes (most about three or four inches), and they vary in effectiveness. However, they are very well chosen to represent the most recent style of the artist. Most of them are clear, but the lack of color in the nonobjectives and the darkness of some are handicaps. . . . [This] second edition is not as easy to read as its predecessor. The type is smaller and more crowded. The concise arrangement of material within the entries, the good coverage of collections owning works, and the important bibliographies make A Dictionary of Contemporary American Artists worthy of consideration by larger libraries with active art sections, by the general reference section of large libraries, and by art libraries. Recommended." Booklist 68:947 J1 15 '72 1650w

J Aesthetics 30:568 summer '72 70w

CUNLIFFE, MARCUS, ed. The London Times history of our times. 416p il $20 Norton

909.82 History, Modern—20th century
ISBN 0-393-05444-6 LC 70-161520

This "volume represents a collection of essays . . . covering various aspects of world history since 1945. The book is divided into two parts. . . . In the first section are essays devoted to such broad topics as 'War and Peace in the Nuclear Age,' the problems posed by both poverty and prosperity, the concept of a world economy, racism, science and the arts. Part II considers the following geographical units individually: the United States, Western Europe, the British Commonwealth, Eastern Europe, the Soviet Union, Latin America, Africa, the Middle East, India, Southeast Asia, China and Japan." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"The authors of these essays are from British backgrounds, with only a few exceptions such as Arthur Schlesinger; and, although all are recognized specialists in their respective fields, most will be relatively unknown to American readers. As editor, Marcus Cunliffe, a British professor of American history, has succeeded in maintaining a common format; moreover, his own introduction and epilogue are models of brevity. . . . Inevitably in a work of this sort, the quality of the individual essays varies considerably. . . . On the whole, the book is less a reference work than an attempt at interpretation. Over a thousand extremely well-chosen illustrations, including several maps and charts, provide an excellent supplement to the text. Libraries should find it a valuable addition to their collections." F. X. J. Homer Best Sell 31:368 N 15 '71 450w

"In appearance this massive and handsome book . . . seems a perfect example of those eye-catching popular volumes, offering browsing for the bored and idle, that no gentleman's coffee table should be without. But it is an air that is entirely misleading. It is more than that, for this is a treatise for the student, and the conscientious citizen who is bewildered by his times. . . . These essays are far more than a compilation of facts, or a narrative of events, but embody the critical assessments and argued opinions of the authors. . . . The ordinary reader should not be put off by the size of the book. . . . [It] is a very worthwhile aid to understanding of our day. Its gallant attempt to achieve everywhere some kind of synthesis; . . . does succeed in discovering patterns that are enlightening, and in getting the chaotic scene into some kind of perspective." Eric Forbes-Boyd

Christian Science Monitor p11 N 4 '71 750w

"There are admirable chapters in this book, . . . (but some) I found incomplete; others were boring, but not so deadly boring as the illustrations, which are frightful, at times little better than smudged black surfaces. With 25 years of wonderful photography to choose from, these selections border on the incredible."

N Y Times Bk R p73 D ■ '71 100w

Reviewed by D. C. Gordon
Social Studies 63:334 D '72 120w

"If we now really live in one world, it is to be expected that its history should have a unifying theme. Professor Cunliffe finds it in a counterpoint between factors that unite us and factors that divide us. . . . The changing nature of world history is indicated by the balance of the chapters even more than by their contents. Of the twelve, only three are concerned with Europe, and four with Asia (which also appears prominently in a fifth, on the Middle East). . . . The seeds of the future no doubt lie in the chapters on the arts, the sciences, the mass media, the creeds and religions; and no doubt, too, every significant trend of the times is to be found here on record. But the authors wisely refrain from forecasting which grain will grow and which will not."

TLS p1435 N 19 '71 600w

CUNNINGHAM, JAMES V. Urban leadership in the sixties. 93p $4.50 Schenkman pub; pa $2 Brandeis univ, Lemberg center for the study of violence

352 Mayors—U.S.
LC 76-20813; 75-116020 (pa)

This is an appraisal "of the ways in which the mayors of four big cities handled Office of Economic Opportunity funds for antipoverty programs: Locher in Cleveland, Daley in Chicago, Lawrence and Barr in Pittsburgh, and Lee in New Haven." (Ann Am Acad)

"[The author] teaches community organization and planning in the Graduate School of Social Work at the University of Pittsburgh. He has had field experience in urban community work in Chicago and Pittsburgh. . . . He seems to think that organization is the province of sociologists and that the analysis of leadership is the province of business administration. . . . [He relies] on the study made a decade ago by H. Gans, on the disruption of an Italian neighborhood in Boston [The Urban Villagers, BRD 1963], as an authoritative judgement on urban renewal; but he applauds Mayor Lee's use of urban renewal to break up ethnic enclaves in New Haven. This seems a confused book." C. S. Ascher

Ann Am Acad 398:206 N '71 220w

"Cunningham's book belongs to the urban crisis mainstream. It's a quick, preliminary look at how the politics of the last 10 years encouraged some City Hall skills and discredited others. [Cunningham] judges four mayors on their ability to think ahead and take risks. Daley comes up a poor third—behind New Haven's Richard Lee and Pittsburgh's Joseph Barr, and ahead of Cleveland's Ralph Locher—yet he's the only one of them to hang on. . . . [Cunningham] sized up Chicago's poverty war during a quick 1966 trip. He visited black neighborhood centers on the West Side and South Side. He interviewed the executive director of the citywide program. And the mayor talked to him, too. . . . Well, everything Cunningham writes about Chicago's poverty war is true—it's strictly a patronage hustle." Ralph Whithead

Commonweal 94:169 Ap 23 '71 900w

CUNNINGTON, PHILLIS. Costumes of the nineteenth century [Eng title: Your book of nineteenth century costume]. 80p il $3.95 Plays. Inc.

391 Costume
ISBN 0-8238-0093-8 LC 79-125605

This book aims to show "how fashions changed . . . between 1800 and 1900. Men's clothing, including footwear and accessories, is covered in the opening chapter. Women's dress is treated in the following six chapters, each of which represent a major period: e.g., 'The Classical Period,' 'The Bustle Period,' etc. In addition to everyday clothing, each chapter treats evening dress, outdoor wear, footwear, headwear, hair styles, accessories and make-up." (Library J) Index.

"A final chapter is devoted to the frequently ignored area of children's clothes. . . . Unfortunately, this book does not cover American frontier fashion, [and] fails to put fashions into historical perspective. . . . Nevertheless, it's a concise, well-organized introduction overall and, with its exclusive 19th-Century focus will be especially useful for the many students required to do research on the dress of that century." A. M. Skivington

Library J 96:3908 N 15 '71 160w

"Delightful bold illustrations from contemporary material. Besides letters and novels, in this period [Dr. Cunningham] can also draw on fashion papers and Punch with great effect. She reveals the incongruity of a century in which trousers were unmentionable, legs unviewable, make-up shocking and bare heads out of doors unthinkable, yet the female form could be daringly exposed above the waist."

TLS p392 Ap 2 '71 160w

CURRAN, CHARLES A. Psychological dynamics in religious living. 228p $6.95 Herder & Herder

201 Psychology, Religious
LC 72-170968

"Taking as his premise the fact that too often religious institutions are getting in the way of religion itself, Father Curran suggests the only solution is the re-personalizing of institutional structures themselves so that they serve the individual rather than some abstraction." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This book] provides material which has been pretested in the laboratory of counseling institutes for laity, religious, and clergy in the United States and Canada. The author . . . deals with issues which have immediate repercussions in the theological and pastoral orders. . . . The book as a whole is not an editorial delight. The material is chopped up. The reader is bombarded on almost every page with a new, completely capitalized subheading. One has the experience of moving quickly from peak to peak without ever settling down long enough to work through an issue with some care. Furthermore, one occasionally has the impression of having been already on this or that particular peak." R. P. McBrien

Commonweal 97:115 N 3 '72 450w

"[This is] a notable effort setting forth the basic conditions by which man might redeem himself in some measure from his alienated state." John Deedy

Critic 30:93 Mr '72 40w

CURRELL, MELVILLE, jt. auth. The gentle anarchists. See Ostergaard, G.

CURRY, JANE LOUISE. Over the sea's edge; ill. by Charles Robinson. 182p $4.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-259010-2 LC 70-152693

"Contemporary David Reese, who longs for a life of adventure, and Davyt Rhys, a scholarly lad in medieval Wales, somehow manage to communicate and to change places and centuries. David's new life is a hard one but thrilling, and it takes him across the seas in the service of a dispossessed prince searching for the legendary seven cities of Antilla, and up the Ohio River near his past-future home." (Commonweal) "Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"The story has great power and is most compelling." E. M. Granes

Commonweal 95:181 N 19 '71 80w

"The introduction of characters from the [author's] earlier book [The Daybreakers BRD 1970] Prince Lincoas, Queen Erilla, the wise Ayacas—as well as references to previous events not fully explained within the context of the story, suggest that the two books should be read sequentially. More complex than The Daybreakers, possibly because the theme is more convoluted and the action more past than present, the narrative at times seems amorphous. The style, lacking the practical observations of the very contemporary children in the earlier book, is more philosophical in tone. Yet the whole is a fascinating and daring exploration of the meaning of identity and the quest for personal realization within the limiting circle of time." M. M. B.

Horn Bk 47:610 D '71 290w

"The fast-paced story is supported with excellent characterizations; philosophical ideas are present but not imposed on those readers who want to enjoy action alone. Though a guide to Welsh pronunciation is an unfortunate omission, the rhythmic prose is splendid." Nancy Berkowitz

Library J 96:3474 O 15 '71 300w [YA]

TLS p1510 D 3 '71 550w

CURTIS, EDWARD S. Portraits from North American Indian life; introd. by A. D. Coleman and T. C. McLuhan; pub. in assn. with the American museum of natural history. 176p pl $30 Outerbridge & Lazard; for sale by Dutton

970.1 Indians of North America—Pictorial works

SBN 0-87690-079-1 LC 72-83825

"Curtis was a . . . photographer who began making pictures of Indians in the 1890's and ultimately published a . . . record of what was already a vanishing culture. This selection of pictures from the . . . original set . . . includes essays by A. D. Coleman on the work of Curtis and T. C. McLuhan on his life." (Atlantic)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:130 N '72 80w

"[This] enormous book . . . is a superb piece of Americana. The prints are full page in sepia, many of them, if not all, worthy of framing separately—particularly the one numbered 4, 'The Rush Gatherer,' and No. 156, 'Homeward,' with several portraits of chiefs of various tribes. . . . It is worth the investment for any library that can find place for it on its shelves."

Best Sell 32:364 N 1 '72 130w

"[This] is a magnificent 14½ x 18" set of 88 plates, randomly arranged. It contains an annotated list of the plates, taken from Curtis' own field notes or his annotations of specific pictures. . . . [This handsome volume is] highly recommended." J. W. Hall

Library J 97:3141 O '72 120w

CURTIS, GERALD L. Election campaigning Japanese style. 275p $10 Columbia univ. press

329.952 Japan—Politics and government. Elections—Japan. Politics, Practical
ISBN 0-231-03512-8 LC 70-154343

Curtis seeks to present a "study of Japan's political system in process, seen through a daily, detailed observation in 1966-67 of a conservative candidate's party endorsement, campaign strategy, local organization, and election to the lower house of the Diet." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The particular campaign under scrutiny is that of Satō Bunsei, a Liberal Democratic candidate who accepted the author into his campaign—and home—with truly generous hospitality. . . . His effort to secure party nomination is instructive about pathways to success within the Liberal Democratic party. As the newest of three LDP candidates in a semirural constituency electing three representatives—a Socialist and a Communist were also in the race—Satō's campaign offered several interesting features." W. H. Elsbree

Ann Am Acad 400:156 Mr '72 440w

"The result [of Curtis's study] is original material presented in terms of political sociology on the level of microanalysis. . . . Brilliantly illuminated and documented are the major themes of Japanese practical politics . . . intro-party splits between bureaucratic and local politicians, the overwhelming role of factions in election strategy, the historic and continuing antipathy between Liberal and Democratic wings of the ruling Liberal Democratic party, and the relative weights of prefectural and national party machines."

Choice 8:1246 N '71 170w

"Japan has held elections for nearly 100 years and has developed a style of political campaigning which is peculiar to itself. In the past 25 years, because of the tremendous social and economic changes, politicians have had to develop new strategies to win elections. Curtis . . . describes and analyzes the differences between the rural and urban campaigns and explains the restrictions which placed on the candidates by the current election laws. The restrictions on the use of radio, television, and other forms of mass communication are severe. . . . This is a detailed and scholarly study which should be of interest to all students of political affairs. Recommended particularly for academic and larger public libraries." C. W. Stucki

CURTIS, G. L.—Continued

Library J 96:2090 Je 15 '71 200w

CURTIS, JAMES L. Blacks, medical schools, and society; foreword by John Z. Bowers. 169p $6.95 Univ. of Mich. press

610.7 Negroes as physicians. Medicine—Study and teaching
ISBN 0-472-26900-3 LC 76-148249

An introductory chapter touches "on the history of Negroes in medicine [in the United States]. . . . [The bulk of the book examines] the current upsurge in black medical enrollments (they tripled between 1968 and 1970) and ways of producing more qualified black applicants and successful black medical students. The author draws on his work with black high school students in New York City and with the Cornell medical center's program to admit additional blacks." (Science)

"This is a valuable short survey recommended for libraries serving the needs of minority students, faculties involved in advising pre-medical students, and administrators charged with recruiting and placing minority students." Choice 8:1357 D '71 130w

"Dr. Curtis, a black psychiatrist, has had considerable experience in both medical practice and medical education. . . . [He] draws attention to several unpleasant but vital considerations: the problem of lowered admission requirements for black students, the problem of whether black medical students will return to practice in the 'ghetto,' and the exploitation of black patients by some black physicians. He has also included a brief historical account of blacks in medicine and a good broad view of the current situation. This thought-provoking and realistic account of methods and problems should be in urban public and medical society libraries and in all university and medical school libraries." W. K. Beatty

Library J 96:2069 Je 15 '71 230w

"[Curtis] is hard on compensatory education and on concern for 'high risk' students. He can also be stuffy. . . . [He] will attract most attention, and I suspect sharp disagreement from many blacks, with his views about the role in medical education of what he still regards as the 'segregated' black colleges and black medical schools at Meharry and Howard. . . . Certainly substantially more integration in higher education is imperative and will serve, for one thing, to increase the numbers of blacks in many important fields. But Curtis under-estimates the role the historically black institution can play. One is also disappointed that he shows no more insight into the crucial importance at this time of the black college in a society that must be increasingly viewed as multicultural." W. L. Godwin

Science 174:1116 D 10 '71 650w

CURTIS, JARED R. Wordsworth's experiments with tradition; the lyric poems of 1802; with texts of the poems based on early manuscripts. 227p $8.75 Cornell univ. press

821 Wordsworth, William
ISBN 0-8014-0662-5 LC 78-162546

"The author argues that this group of some thirty 'crisis poems' represented a turning point in Wordsworth's poetic development. Professor Curtis explores the human context of the poems, the poet's emerging sense of purpose in composing them, and his experiments with poetic form and diction. Then follow detailed examinations of the two poems generally regarded as among Wordsworth's highest achievements—'Resolution and Independence' and the 'Immortality Ode.' The poems themselves make up the second half of the book. They appear in the order in which they were written and have been edited so as to achieve as closely as possible the form they took in 1802, when they were first finished." (Publisher's note)

"Curtis sees Wordsworth turning his back on public, philosophical utterances in 1802 and writing instead 'a series of intensely personal lyric songs' that played a therapeutic part in his life. . . . Wordsworthian scholars may find this book helpful in that manuscript versions of these poems that can be dated closest to the time of composition are gathered together for the first time, but generally all readers of Wordsworth will find the criticism of Bateson, Ferry, Hartman, or Heath more helpful."

Choice 9:504 Je '72 150w

"Professor Curtis's concern is with the whimsical, personal, often feeble, sometimes inspired, lyric poetry of Spring 1802. His title, Wordsworth's Experiments with Tradition, hardly seems relevant, and his attempt to show the period as one of great stress for Wordsworth carries little conviction; but he has much of interest to say about the poetic voice and peculiar use of symbol that distinguish this poetry from the work of Alfoxden and Goslar (1798-99). The second half of the book offers versions of the 1802 poems from two principal early manuscripts, and it is one of the strengths of Professor Curtis's criticism that it rests on a knowledge of chronology and textual development."

TLS p1186 O ■ '72 370w

CURTIS, L. PERRY. Apes and angels; the Irishman in Victorian caricature [by] L. Perry Curtis, Jr. 126p il $6.95 Smithsonian inst. press

301.451 Irish in Great Britain. Discrimination. Irish—Cartoons and caricatures
ISBN 0-87474-107-6 LC 75-607991

An associate professor at the University of California at Berkeley "explores further the theme of anti-Irish prejudice in Victorian England he first developed in . . . Anglo-Saxons and Celts [BRD 1969]. What he shows here, with illustrations from Victorian comic artists like Tenniel and Leech, is 'the gradual but unmistakable transformation of Paddy . . . from a drunken and relatively harmless peasant into a dangerous ape man.'" (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

"Perhaps the chief implication of this study is that underlying all the familiar rationalizations for English rule in Ireland was a deeply-held, irrational conviction that the Irish, being an inferior species, were by nature incapable of self-government and unfit for Home Rule. Since today, also, nations hold grossly distorted images of one another, a psychological investigation like this, marked by such knowledge and insight, has significance far beyond the field of Anglo-Irish relations. The value of this revealing study is greatly enhanced by the numerous well-reproduced illustrations from Punch and other magazines. There are also some extremely interesting photographs of Fenian prisoners from the Dublin Castle archives." Giovanni Costigan

Am Hist R 77:519 Ap '72 400w

"Mr Curtis presents his argument cogently and with voluminous documentation. Those who take the view that cartoons are meant to be seen, not discussed, will find in this book a wonderful collection of the outstanding caricatures of the age . . . beautifully produced. From these they can draw their own conclusions; or merely amusement."

Economist 239:58 Ap 24 '71 400w

"[This book] is an expanded version of a paper read at the Conference of the American Committee for Irish Studies held at Cortland, New York, in May, 1968. It would have been better left without inflation. . . . Mr Curtis explores the connexion between Victorian images of the Irish, the lore of physiognomy, the Darwinian debate over evolution, and the art of caricature. He shows amusingly how wide were the differences between British, nationalist Irish and American treatments. Unfortunately he involves himself too often in ponderous verbiage."

TLS p759 J1 2 '71 240w

CURTIS, MICHAEL, ed. Marxism. 336p $6.95 Atherton

335.4 Marx, Karl. Socialism. Communism. Dialectical materialism
LC 71-97741

"This collection of writings is divided into four parts, 'Political Theory, Social Science or Ideology,' 'Marx: Moral and Humanist,' 'Classic Marxist Themes: Philosophy, History, and Economics,' and 'Class Conflict, and Revolution and Political Power.' Each part and subchapter too is provided with a short introduction. Among the . . . contributors are . . . G. Lichtheim, R. Lowenthal, Chas. F. Elliott, . . . [and] R. Tucker." (Social Studies) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book is] designed as an introduction to a study of Marxist political thought. Few of the selections chosen are expository and . . . the remaining selections will make little sense to readers who do not already have familiarity with the concepts being subjected to criticism. . . . The effort at inclusiveness (philosophy, history, economics, and sociology) produces random effect with glaring omissions. . . . For the scholar, aside from a possibly useful bibliography and an adequate index, the only interest would be in the thoughtful and well written introduction by Curtis. All of the selections are readily available elsewhere and no particular gains are produced either through their juxtaposition in this book or in the editor's prefatory comments."

Choice 8:78 Mr '71 280w

"There may be few compilations on as broad a topic as Marxism that will receive general acclaim. . . . Questions may be raised as to the value and usefulness of one selection or the other. On the whole, however, this is an up-to-date compilation which, taking special account of more recent interpretations, enables the student to come to grips with some of the most crucial problems in Marxism today, and is likely to stimulate further study." A. D. Low

Social Studies 63:42 Ja '72 150w

CURTIS, THOMAS B. The Kennedy round and the future of American trade [by] Thomas B. Curtis [and] John Robert Vastine, Jr. 239p $17.50 Praeger

382 Tariff. U.S.—Commerce
LC 71-139875

This book presents "the decisions that shaped American trade policy after the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 and the way in which it was implemented. [It covers] . . . agricultural trade, particularly with reference to the Common Agricultural Program of the E.E.C., the chemicals and iron and steel sectors; textiles, aluminum, and pulp and paper industries and their inputs into the formation of U.S. trade-policy in the Kennedy Round. Nontariff barriers are discussed, as are the trade problems of the developing countries, and there is an attempt to project the course of commercial policy into the future." (Choice)

"A retrospective work coauthored by one of the most influential lawmakers on the shaping of U.S. international commercial diplomacy in the 1960's. It . . . [is written] in a clear and concise manner. . . . Some of the key acts and documents are reproduced in general, however, there is some weakness in reference to sources and documentation. Most highly recommended for college and university library collections as a historical work giving the background of many current and future issues in the trade-policy sphere."

Choice 8:1488 Ja '72 210w

"Essential reading for serious students of what the developing battle over free trade in a time of affluence and attempted full employment is all about."

Economist 245:71 O 7 '72 40w

CURTISS, THOMAS QUINN. Von Stroheim [pref. by Rene Clair]. 357p il $10 Farrar, Straus

B or 92 Von Stroheim, Erich. Moving picture plays—History and criticism
SBN 374-2-8520-9 LC 78-143300

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 228:152 N 1 '71 60w

Choice 9:227 Ap '72 140w

Reviewed by Guernsey Le Pelley

Christian Science Monitor p10 Ja 13 '72 390w

CUTHBERTSON, TOM. Anybody's bike book; an original manual of bicycle repairs; il. by Rick Morrall. 175p $6.95; pa $3 Ten Speed press

629.28 Bicycles and bicycling—Repairing
LC 76-29188

This book gives a list of tools to buy, then provides " . . . step-by-step procedures for the maintenance and repair jobs." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Anybody who owns a bicycle can benefit from [this book]. A simple text and clear line drawings detail routine maintenance procedures, as well as more difficult repairs, for most types of bicycles. The book also tells you when it would be unwise to do it yourself. A helpful aid for enthusiasts." D. M. Hoffman

Library J 96:4101 D 15 '71 50w

"[Here] is the book if you want a straight fixit manual, low-price and low-key. The author's [directions are] . . . understanding and understandable." H. C. Gardner

N Y Times Bk R p8 Je 4 '72 70w

CUTILEIRO, JOSÉ. A Portuguese rural society. 314p il pl $17.75 Oxford

301.29 Portugal—Social conditions. Sociology, Rural. Villages

This book covers "aspects of village society [such as] land tenure and social stratification; family and kinship; political structure, patronage; religion." (Choice)

"[This is] an excellent book, made particularly valuable by the fact that it deals with perhaps the least studied nation in Europe. . . . Throughout, the study displays a high degree of common sense, intimacy with the subject, and political sophistication. Indeed, it is one of the best examples of how awareness of political developments can illuminate anthropological studies and vice versa. Gracefully written and handsomely printed, Cutileiro's book is essential for every important library. It will be especially welcome to anthropologists specializing in the Mediterranean, for whom Portugal has often been the missing link in their comparative studies of Southern Europe."

Choice 9:140 Mr '72 100w

"With skill and simplicity the author manages to maintain his analysis on two levels: that of the local society and that of the general Portuguese framework of which it is a part. He shows in every possible way how they explain one another. . . . Dr Cutileiro's portrayal of this world is not properly speaking a mosaic but a whole, and a whole full of tensions and continuities. The picture is far from static."

TLS p580 My 19 '72 430w

The CZECHOSLOVAK political trials, 1950-1954; the suppressed report of the Dubček government's commission of inquiry, 1968; ed. with a pref. and a postscript by Jiri Pelikán. 360p $10.95 Stanford univ. press

343 Trials. Communism—Czechoslovak Republic
ISBN 0-8047-0769-3 LC 70-150328

This "account of the Czechoslovak political trials . . . is the report of a Commission of Inquiry, the chairman of which was Jan Piller, set up by the Central Committee of the Czechoslovak Communist Party in April 1968. The 'Piller Report' was never published in Czechoslovakia." (New Statesman)

"This is a valuable primary source of contemporary Czechoslovak history. . . . Partisan politics apart, both scholars and general readers, interested in the historic events of the 'Prague Spring,' will appreciate the very readable English translation of this important document as a source of information."

Choice 8:1633 F '72 170w

Reviewed by Barry Seldes

Library J 96:4093 D 15 '71 190w

"There is no doubt that the report is genuine. . . . Many people involved in the trials have confirmed its accuracy; and the authorities in Prague, while denouncing the report vehemently in accordance with the wishes of their Soviet protectors, have virtually conceded its authenticity. . . . Although exceedingly restrained in its references to Soviet pressures, the report makes clear the role which 'external factors' played in the launching of the show trials. Even more serious, the report stresses that it is not enough merely to denounce such travesties of justice; there must be structural guarantees against a repetition."

This report of course has its faults. There are many repetitions, and the statistics in particular are incomplete. There are many signs of scissor-and-paste committee work. Nevertheless, it is by far the most important book so far on the trials." Adam Roberts

New Statesman 81:599 Ap 30 '71 600w

"[Since this report] . . . appeared in the West, the Czechoslovak press has argued desperately that it is a falsification, in the sense that this text is only a draft version drawn up by the reforming wing of the Commission. There may be something in this. Although it makes no sense to call this version 'false,' it seems likely that such a text would have undergone a good deal of revision before publication. . . . The report would be remarkable if only for the fact that it contains the text of internal messages from the Soviet Communist Party to the Czechoslovak leaders of the Fifties." Neil Ascherson

The CZECHOSLOVAK political trials, 1950-1954—Continued

N Y Rev of Books 17:11 S 2 '71 450w
 "[This report] presents, so to speak, the backstage view . . . [and] overwhelmingly reaffirms the grotesquely theatrical nature of the whole business: the preparation of a scenario, the casting of performers, the learning of parts, the careful rehearsals, the briefing of judges and prosecutors, and all the other concomitants of direction and production, including the timing of the presentation and well-planned advance publicity. The report pulls no punches. . . . [It] incorporates a great amount of detail about individual personalities."

TLS p579 My 24 '71 600w

CZERWINSKI, E. J., ed. The Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia: its effects on Eastern Europe; ed. by E. J. Czerwinski [and] Jaroslav Piekalkiewicz. 210p $14 Praeger

943.7 Czechoslovak Republic—History—Intervention. 1968- . Europe—Politics—1945-LC 77-182987

"Eleven essays, nine of which are authorized by established and younger American scholars specializing in the politics, economics, and culture of Eastern Europe and two of which are authored by the . . . Czech economist, Ivan Svitak, who was a prime initiator of the 1968 reform movement in Czechoslovakia." (Choice)

"The coverage is uneven; after Czechoslovakia, Hungary receives the greatest share of attention while East Germany and Bulgaria are not dealt with at all even though both countries participated in the invasion of Czechoslovakia. The reaction of Soviet peoples is also not discussed. Except for the essay on Romania, which has the character of travel notes, all the contributions are serious analytical studies oriented primarily toward specialists in comparative Communist studies. Most of the contributions have bibliographical notes."

Choice 9:714 JI/Ag '72 130w

"A jumbled but interesting assortment of essays. . . . The contributions have no very consistent theme. The most impressive items are two chapters by Ivan Svitak, the Czech philosopher who repeats his arguments that the year of 1968 brought revolutions in Paris and in Prague which were related and should not be contrasted as adolescent horridness (Paris) and liberal heroism (Prague). Another good essay publishes the results of opinion polls conducted in Czechoslovakia during 1968 and uses the results to claim that no public wish for counterrevolution existed. This is true enough, but the polls also reveal the powerful residue of pro-Soviet conservatism among party members. Several essays discuss the lack of public reaction to the invasion in certain other socialist states, especially Hungary." Neal Ascherson

N Y Rev of Books 19:18 Ag 10 '72 300w

CZWIKLITZER, CHRISTOPHER, comp. Picasso's posters. See Picasso, P.

D

DABNEY, VIRGINIUS. Virginia, the new dominion. 629p il $12.50 Doubleday

975.5 Virginia—History
 LC 78-157580

This history of Virginia deals with politics, the "blacks and other minorities and . . . the general economic, social, and cultural scene. Attention [is also] paid to the era since Reconstruction and to the area west of the Blue Ridge." (Library J) Bibliography.

Reviewed by N. E. Cunningham
 Am Hist R 77:1174 O '72 950w

"[This] elegantly written book should appeal to the general reading public. The specialist will find little that is new in a work based almost entirely on secondary sources and that offers no new synthesis. In what is clearly a labor of love Dabney does not hesitate, however gently, to criticize Virginians past and present. . . . Perhaps the greatest value of this work is the insight it offers into the mind of a Southern liberal, for the author is at his best when he deals with such contemporary problems as the Byrd machine and civil rights."

Choice 9:571 Je '72 190w

"This work attempts to fill the need for a modern popular history of Virginia, although [it is] sketchy in spots. . . . Footnotes are few, but an extensive bibliography made up almost entirely of secondary sources is appended. Very readable and acceptably accurate, this is recommended for public and academic libraries." E. D. Johnson

Library J 96:3606 N 1 '71 110w

"In the long, long catalogue of its histories, 'Virginia: The New Dominion' must surely stand for many years to come as one of the most thorough and conscientious in modern times. In detail, it appears that the author . . . missed nothing of importance that occurred between the 1607 landing of Captain John Smith's half-starved band of adventurers at Jamestown to the final collapse, circa 1970, of the Byrd political dynasty. In tone, it is remarkably free of the romanticism other native-son historians have lavished upon the Old Dominion. . . . [Dabney] has succeeded well in digging out the role of the black man in Virginia's history and weaving it in relevant context throughout his narrative." Cabell Phillips

N Y Times Bk R p40 F 27 '72 600w

"[This publication] is a notable event in Virginia history. . . . It is scholarly [and] objective. . . . [Dabney] demonstrates that his personal skill and long experience as a journalist have made him the master of writing, and he has a distinctive appreciation for the facts and trends of history. . . . The account of Virginia's majestic accomplishments and contributions during the period of the Revolution and the few years that followed is one of the best in the book. . . . This book is a successful attempt to include all sections and classes, as far as space permits." A. W. Moger

Va Q R 48:308 spring '72 1000w

DAHM, BERNHARD. History of Indonesia in the twentieth century; tr. by P. S. Falla. 321p maps $10 Praeger

959.8 Indonesia—History
 LC [71-95668]

Following an "overview of the major themes of Indonesian history up to the beginning of the 20th Century . . . [the author discusses the] history of Indonesia up to 1969." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The treatment of events in the last few years is balanced, but does not manifest the meticulous research which characterizes most of the book, as it does [Dahm's] earlier work Sukarno and the Struggle for Indonesian Independence [BRD 1970] which treats the same period but with a narrower focus. The general reader may find this book heavy going, but the serious student will appreciate the relative clarity of Dahm's treatment of the intricacies of Indonesian nationalism during the last decades of Dutch rule and the first decade of independence. The book is recommended for academic and large public libraries." C. R. Bryant

Library J 96:1361 Ap 15 '71 200w

TLS p946 Ag '71 100w

DAI, BINGHAM. Opium addiction in Chicago. 212p il maps $9 Patterson Smith

613.8 Opium. Narcotic habit
 ISBN 0-87585-126-6 LC 72-124503

This is a reprint of a survey made in the early 1930's. The author "found that most Chicago addicts were males, in their early thirties, that relatively few were married and even fewer had children, and that most used morphine although the number of heroin users was growing." (Choice)

"Originally published in China, although the copies destined for the U.S. never did arrive because of the Japanese invasion. Dai approached the problem of opium addiction from the perspective of the Chicago school of sociology and its key concept of social disorganization. . . . For this reprint Lois B. De Fleur provides a useful introduction contrasting Dai's methodology and findings with more recent research. Dai relied heavily on case studies while current investigators employ statistical methods. . . . Footnotes to De Fleur's introduction give citations to the recent literature. Recommended for academic libraries."

Choice 8:869 S '71 170w

"[This] was one of the first studies of its kind . . . [and] was the author's doctoral thesis at the University of Chicago. . . . The survey has been regularly cited in the literature and has served as a milestone in several fields. This reprint contains . . . a new five-page preface by Dai, and a three-page index. Workers in several fields will appreciate having this book available again." W. K. Beatty
Library J 96:4102 D 15 '71 170w

DAICHES, DAVID, ed. The Penguin companion to English literature. See The Penguin companion to English literature

DAICHES, DAVID. Robert Burns and his world. 128p il $8.95 (A Studio bk) Viking

R or 92 Burns, Robert
SBN 670-60093-8 LC 74-163873

"Drawing on the correspondence of the . . . Scottish poet, of his brother Gilbert and his close friends, and aided by . . . contemporary illustrations, David Daiches builds up a picture of a man [and his career. He] discusses the poems of the Kilmarnock and Edinburgh volumes and traces both the influences Burns received from earlier Scottish literature and those he exercised on later writers through his poetry and also through his work in collecting and revising Scottish folk songs." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by M. S. Cosgrave
Horn Bk 48:292 Je '72 100w

"A worthwhile addition to the admirable Studio Book series. . . . The monograph on Burns, which takes a couple of hours to read, is partly biographical and partly critical. The writing is smooth, knowledgeable, and easy to digest, but it is the illustrations that will make you return to the book. There are a hundred and twenty of them—photographs, maps, drawings, woodcuts, silhouettes, paintings, manuscripts, and contemporary advertisements—beautifully arranged and presented."

New Yorker 47:100 Ja 22 '72 100w

DAICHES, DAVID. Sir Walter Scott and his world. (A Studio bk) 143p il maps $8.95 Viking

R or 92 Scott, Sir Walter, Bart.
SBN 670-64725-X LC 75-150356

This biography sets Scott's literary activities in the context of "the Scottish renaissance. Illustrations covering almost every phase of his career show the people he knew and the places he visited and include views of Abbotsford and of Edinburgh and London, as well as photographs of the original manuscripts of his novels." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"A . . . pate of illustrations submerges the text. . . . Limitation of space, moreover, constricts Daiches to superficiality. . . . Hastily executed for the bicentenary of Sir Walter's birth, this gift book is more souvenir than tribute."

Choice 9:211 Ap '72 110w

Reviewed by M. S. Cosgrave
Horn Bk 48:292 Je '72 110w

"Scott is still an unloved author; perhaps David Daiches's [book] will inspire a few children to turn to Redgauntlet or Old Mortality; it is a model work, impeccably compiled and warmly written." Claire Tomalin
New Statesman 82:666 N 12 '71 30w

"A delightful picture-book with short text full of sense."
TLS p864 Jl 23 '71 130w

DAIN, NORMAN. Disordered minds; the first century of Eastern state hospital in Williamsburg, Virginia, 1766-1866. (Williamsburg in Am. ser. 8) 207p il $5.95 Colonial Williamsburg Foundation; for sale by Univ. press of Va.

362.2 Virginia. Eastern State Hospital, Williamsburg—History SBN 910412-88-X (CW); 8139-0317-3 (UPV)
LC 76-135916

This study, which traces the hospital's history from its origin in the mid-1760s to the close of the Civil war, includes a "discussion of early and mid-19th-century humane and social-psychological management and therapy." (Choice) Index.

Reviewed by Rowland Berthoff
Am Hist R 77:585 Ap '72 240w

"This volume is one of a popular series . . . Colonial Williamsburg, yet the treatment is scholarly and serious, although sometimes limited by sources, especially for the earlier years. Dain frequently and with profit compares Eastern State with other American and European hospitals. . . . For general matters this book does not supplement in any major way A. Deutsch's The mentally ill in America [BRD 1949], or Dain's Concepts of insanity in the United States, 1789-1865 [BRD 1965]. Essential for Virginiana collections and nice for psychiatric libraries; otherwise not recommended. Good note on sources."

Choice 8:913 S '71 160w

"Dain spends a substantial part of the book describing the interesting and innovative ideas about therapy that were developed by John Minson Galt II, the scholarly superintendent during the reform period. . . . Dain's account . . . limited and shaped by the sources that he found, most significantly private papers of the Galt family, members of which had charge of the hospital for almost the entire hundred years." John Burnham

J Am Hist 58:718 D '71 550w

DAKIN, DOUGLAS. The unification of Greece. 1770-1923. 344p $11.50 St Martins

949.5 Greece. Modern—History
LC 76-187329

This "study treats the shaping of the modern Greek state as a Greek Risorgimento and as a process of unification. Greek national development is handled in its ideological, political, religious, and especially social and economic aspects against its Balkan background, European diplomacy, and the Eastern Question. Apart from the abortive risings of 1770-1814, four wars of independence are discussed: that of 1821-33; the struggle for Crete (1833-97); the Macedonian struggle (at its peak in 1902-08); and the Asia Minor war. These strivings are related to Greek resources and the intertwined social and political systems." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The author deals firmly with the major elements in the national evolution. The results of his research are impressive. He sees both the woods and the trees. In scope and depth this book must be classed as a major contribution to the knowledge and understanding of modern Near East history." H. F. Alderfer

Ann Am Acad 404:265 N '72 400w

"[Dakin has] written an excellent survey of the arduous struggles for unification of . . . [the] long-suffering [Greek] nation. His work [is based] largely on Greek sources, both primary and secondary. . . . In the course of his analysis . . . [he] draws brief but lively portraits of key figures, including the tragic kings Otho, George I, and Constantine I. Dakin also treats the important role of the Orthodox Church and the history of education since the early days of the University of Athens. The concluding chapters point out interesting parallels between Italian and Greek unification. The appendixes have unusual reference value because they include a dynastic table, a list of all Greek cabinets from 1833 to 1924, statistics of population, education, public finance, trade, etc. The book is essential for academic libraries and also should be valuable for public libraries serving Americans of Greek descent." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 97:8150 O 1 '72 200w

"[This] is a masterly account of the process whereby the Greeks secured their independence and, during the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, increased the geographical area of Greece from the small rump of the 1830s to its present extent. Eschewing the easy generalizations that too often camouflage ignorance [Dakin] . . . is a sure guide to the intricate politics of the new state in the first century or so of its independent existence. . . . Perhaps the most impressive part of an impressive book is Professor Dakin's treatment of what the Greeks call the 'external factor'—the role of the self-proclaimed 'protecting' powers in influencing both the domestic and the foreign policies of Greece."

DAKIN, DOUGLAS—Continued

TLS p1232 O 13 '72 700w

DALE, CELIA. A dark corner. 155p $4.95
Walker & co.

ISBN 0-8027-0351-8

LC 73-161100

This novel set in London concerns Errol, a homeless "West Indian boy, taken in when ill by the arthritic Nelly Didcot, and her shabby, prejudiced, secretive husband. [Errol's] . . . relationship with Arthur is [not] easy to understand, most of all for Errol. Arthur takes him out a bit, shows him the sights and occasionally makes furtive attempts to converse about sex. . . . When the truth dawns, the boy recoils and wants to leave. Nelly cannot bear that, Arthur cannot allow it." (New Statesman)

Best Sell 31:472 Ja 15 '72 90w

"Dale is past mistress of the bizarre truth behind normal facades; she knows how to build an edifice of looming terror out of tiny pieces of ordinary detail; and they are always far more than mere exercises in the macabre. [This story is] chilling, riveting—and very moving." Susan Hill

New Statesman 82:595 O 29 '71 200w

"Miss Dale, working quietly and economically, shows us these three mild-mannered people from every perspective, and then opens the door on a nightmare." New Yorker 48:131 Mr 25 '72 100w

Reviewed by J. W. Hughes

Sat R 55:87 Ap 22 '72 390w

"[The author's] particular gift is for gentle irony directed at people whose low vitality involves them in absurdity and misfortune. . . . [She] carefully leads the reader to believe that the young man . . . may turn on the kindly old couple or that racial tension will assert itself. . . . Those suspicions the author tricked us into feeling about this mysterious and lonely boy are exactly what will serve [Arthur] Didcot as protection. Who would believe the tales of a young black boy of no fixed address . . . if they concerned the bodies of young girls found mouldering at the foot of decent Mr Didcot's garden? This is a macabre little allegory . . . which makes a small point about prejudice with chilling effect."

TLS p1355 O 29 '71 350w

DALE, R. R. Mixed or single-sex school? v 2. Some social aspects. 360p il $17 Humanities press

371.8 Coeducation. Schools—Great Britain
SBN 7100-7024-1 LC (70-413765)

The first volume of this work was published in 1969 with the subtitle A research study about pupil-teacher relationships. Studies polling teachers and pupils who worked and studied in both single-sex and coeducational settings were the basis for both these books. This second volume offers "evidence in favour of coeducation as it affects pupils' social relationships within the school and afterwards in the adult world." (TLS)

"The product of Dale's research is impressive. His extensive and systematic samplings are notable. One appreciates the inherent difficulties in studying a problem in which so many unconscious motivations and intangibles complicate the isolation of specific factors. . . . One might take exception to the fact [the] open-ended responses were chosen for inclusion on the basis of interest. For scientific purposes they might have been randomly chosen. In light of the move toward coeducation in America one is particularly intrigued with Dale's study. . . . [His] research findings indicate that British education is pointing in the same direction but must cope with more complicated schooling traditions than are present in the American system as it revolts against the segregation of the sexes and initiates coeducation."

Choice 9:1017 O '72 200w

"If anything, the answer to the question of the title is even clearer than in the first volume. . . . Mr Dale falls over backwards to be fair. He hates to hurt the feelings of teachers in single-sex schools, and the book is full of delicate reminders that it is not them he is talking about, only the average. He mines his heap of pupils' comments for opinions hostile to mixed schools and constantly draws the reader's attention to alternative interpretations of the evidence. But with all this academic caution, his conclusion is quite inescapable: coeducational schools are better. . . . [It is a pity] that the size, and thus the price, of the work put it out of reach of the average parent and teacher."

TLS p1577 D 17 '71 850w

DALI, SALVADOR. Dali by Dali; tr. from the French by Eleanor R. Morse. 156p il col il $7.95 Abrams

759.06

ISBN 0-8109-0071-8 LC 74-161619

This book "contains about seventy illustrations of Dali paintings grouped in five categories by concept, and about ten pages of Dali statements that provide the concept for each grouping." (Choice)

"[This is] both an economy model of Dali's luxurious Dali [BRD 1969] and a condensed version of Dali's loquacious Diary of a genius [BRD 1965]. . . . The illustrations are mostly details and so give a fragmented picture of Dali's work, and the statements are especially elliptical and so present a disjointed view of Dali's ideas. This book is not a very valuable addition to the material on Dali, and it could be recommended only because it is less expensive than Dali and more handsomely illustrated than Diary of a genius."

Choice 9:358 My '72 110w

"[Many of] the lurid reproductions (mostly details of larger paintings), . . . feature [Dali's] wife in various guises and disguises. Dali repeats his typical motifs by rote, yet his function as enfant terrible of art is necessary and salutary. The translator has caught the Surrealist puns of the original French edition. Mildly interesting for libraries that have little or nothing on Dali." Peter Pingesten

Library J 97:1800 My 15 '72 80w

DALRYMPLE, JEAN. Jean Dalrymple's Pinafore Farm cookbook. 238p $10 Bobbs

641.5 Cookery

LC 78-142492

This "cookbook by one long associated with the New York City Center of Music and Drama includes discussions on the theater as well as Dalrymple's favorite recipes and the recipes favored by Richard Burton, Franchot Tone, and others." (Library J)

"[The author's] gossipy showbiz ramble . . . may drive the reader to distraction. Miss D. drops names and places, refers to her late husband as 'the general,' and again, as in 'mix the fraises and raspberries together,' likes to mix her languages together as well. She calls many things—beans, mushrooms, oysters, potatoes—after Pinafore, her farm, enjoys English muffin pizzas, and has peculiar notions of portions and of menus. . . . Yet she is full of good will and has some good recipes. For example, she double roasts a duck, bakes bass in yogurt with ginger, and since the general was stationed in postwar Berlin, she has a fine small chapter on German cooking." Nora Magid

Book World p8 F 20 '72 130w

"The omelet and soufflé variations should be popular, and there are a number of foreign dishes to try—Louise's hamburger curry is delicious. Recommended." Barbara Marconi

Library J 96:1978 Je 1 '71 60w

DALTON, DAVID. Janis. 212p il $8.95; pa $3.95 Simon & Schuster

R or 92 Joplin, Janis

ISBN 0-671-21088-2; 0-671-21089-0 (pa)

LC 72-159128

The author who traveled with Janis Joplin during the last months of her life describes the singer's life from her high-school days in Port Arthur, Texas, to the L.A. motel where she died.

"When Dalton is not busily describing Janis in his tortured paragraphs, he is giving us an edited, transcribed interview complete with false starts and fading stops. But there are gems of Janis among the layers of evasive hip argot. . . . There's a lot missing from this book. [The] narrative and the attached Rolling Stone excerpts, display the persona, avoiding the person, though some of the quotes do give us a glimpse of her. The photographs and, of course, the sound of her voice are evocative." Norman Schreiber

Book World p11 F 27 '72 600w

"This formless, fascinating account seems like a weird odyssey, written in that wordy Rolling Stone style justly disliked by some readers, but which the Janis presented here would probably have loved. The book, which has an unusually large photograph album and the music and lyrics to 17 Joplin songs, is a series of prose vignettes and interviews through which biography is casually filtered and which manages to avoid most of the cant about self-destruction and fate that articles about Joplin usually reiterate. . . . A book about Janis Joplin that doesn't use her for cheap pathos and contains enough fresh material to satisfy Joplin fans for some time is welcome." J. A. Avant
Library J 96:4096 D 15 '71 160w

Reviewed by Collin Clark

Library J 97:1629 Ap 15 '72 120w [YA]

"Dalton is a modest biographer who knows that he cannot get past the myth of Janis precisely because she spent her whole life erasing historical reality and replacing it with myth. Nevertheless the book is laced with Janis's boozy asides, her raunchy 'hi-ya boys' style . . . and the gaudy and sad reminiscences of the musicians who knew her best. The 'lesion of identity' between protean goddess and the scraggly, vulnerable waif is there, sure enough."

N Y Rev of Books 18:38 Ja 27 '72 260w

"Dalton's book . . . is written with the reverence and rhetoric ordinarily reserved for the Buddha's life. It is absurd and overblown: a blowsy romantic myth in which Janis herself only intermittently appears. . . . What gets lost in the midst of it, of course, is precisely the sharp and pungent edge of reality that Janis tried in her self-damning way to hold to." Peter Marin

N Y Times Bk R p4 F 20 '72 500w

DANA, DORIS, ed. Selected poems of Gabriela Mistral. See Mistral, G.

DANCE, STANLEY. The world of Duke Ellington. 311p il $8.95 Scribner

B or 92 Ellington, Duke
LC 79-123844

This collection reprints "periodical articles from the 1960's. Following several sections about Duke himself, his life and music, are . . . interviews with associates and musicians including Strayhorn, Greer, Carney. . . . Webster, and Gonsalves. . . . [The book] concludes with articles on the genesis of Suite Thursday, the sacred concerts, the 1968 Latin American tour, and the White House dinner." (Library J)

"The phenomenal Duke gathers honors and awards at an exponential rate, but there is still too little in print about him. British jazz critic Dance improves the situation considerably with this fine collection. . . . The book can be recommended both as pleasure reading and for jazz research." Collin Clark

Library J 95:3781 N 1 '70 140w

"It should be said that there is more here about the Ellingtonian ambience and the lives and the impressions of eminent Ellingtonians than about the music itself. . . . [The interviews] amount to as good a portrait as we can ever expect of the social milieu in which the orchestra matured in the late 1920s and 1930s. At times those interviewed seem to contradict each other, especially on three contentious issues—pay, discipline, and the frequency of full rehearsals—but on other, artistically more significant, matters, there is frequent consensus. . . . [The author] is good on the fantasy side of the Ellington phenomenon and on detail. He is also a clear writer with just the right degree of technical expertise for a book like this. His study is not definitive but is easily the best so far."

TLS p65 Ja 21 '72 700w

DANIEL, HOWARD. Encyclopedia of themes and subjects in painting: mythological, Biblical, historical, literary, allegorical and topical; introd. by John Berger. 252p il col il $7.50 Abrams

759.9 Painting—Dictionaries
ISBN 0-8109-0099-8 LC 74-153493

"The arrangement of this . . . volume is alphabetical, and the coverage includes a . . . variety of themes and subjects in European painting from the early Renaissance to the mid-19th Century." (Library J)

"'Encyclopedia' is far too lavish a word for an iconographic work which gives neither literary sources nor literature citation. It is really a handbook for gallery goers. . . . The writing is spritely, the layout is nice. . . . In the college library, it must be regarded as a most general tool for finding a visual definition."

Choice 9:624 JI/Ag '72 90w

"Here is something quite new. It may be unfashionable to say every picture tells a story, but for all except the purists it does help to know who, for instance, was raping Europa, when looking at the Titian masterpiece of that subject. . . . Nearly 400 subjects, most mythological or religious, . . . are explained here; about three-quarters of the entries are illustrated."

Economist 240:52 Ag 7 '71 290w

"The book's major limitation is its lack of an overall index. (There is an index of illustrations, but it is arranged by page number rather than alphabetically.) Recommended." Bernard Vavrek

Library J 96:4082 D 15 '71 80w

"'Themes' and 'subjects' are words of wide scope, and there may well have been some difficulty in deciding where to stop. It was reasonable that portraiture, still-life and genre should be excluded as not requiring the same kind of exegesis as incidents taken from biblical history and classical legend, though a few subjects other than biblical or classical are listed when an artist has given them an extra significance. . . . The entries with nineteenth-century illustration are few and the twentieth-century instances are nil—which brings into consideration the disquiet expressed by John Berger in his introduction. Is it justifiable to say, as he does, that the need for such a work of reference as this 'indicates that the pictorial tradition to which the paintings belong is no longer vital?'"

TLS p962 Ag 13 '71 450w

DANIEL, PETE. The shadow of slavery: peonage in the South, 1901-1969. 209p il $7.95 Univ. of Ill. press

331.1 Peonage. Labor and laboring classes—Southern States
ISBN 0-252-00206-7 LC 70-174779

The author describes how "peonage grew out of labor settlements following emancipation, when employers forbade croppers to leave plantations because of debt. . . . At the turn of the century the federal government acknowledged that the 'labyrinth of local customs and laws' binding men in debt was peonage. They outlawed debt servitude and slowly moved against it, but with no large success. . . . Each year, about fifty complaints still come to the Justice Department, few of which are investigated. Daniel holds that peonage persists for many reasons: the corruption and apathy of law-enforcement officers, racist traditions in the South, and the impotence of the Justice Department in prosecuting this violation of federal law." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"A description and analysis of peonage in the U.S. from 1901-69. Department of Justice records were a primary source of information though closed for the period after 1945. . . . The book is well written and the descriptions of the violence involved and the indifference of government as especially revealed in the chapter on the 1927 Mississippi flood are excellent. . . . Though not a definitive study, the book is recommended for high schools, colleges, and general reader collections."

Choice 9:1034 O '72 160w

Reviewed by W. E. Parrish

Library J 97:2586 Ag '72 200w

"As Daniel relates the story of debt peonage in Florida, in Georgia, in . . . Arkansas, . . . in Alabama, . . . one has the first impression that this book is little more than academic muckraking. Underlying the exposé, however, is an important, if tragic, commentary on the twentieth-century South. Debt peonage exists because too few know about it. . . . It is tragedy enough that peonage should exist but it is yet more tragic that those who would can do little about it. The book is well written and, in spite of limited access to some records of the FBI, well documented. It should be recommended reading for anyone interested in the mind and life of modern America."

DANIEL, PETE—Continued

Va Q R 48:cliii autumn '72 170w

DANIELS, JONATHAN. The Randolphs of Virginia. 362p il $10 Doubleday

920 Randolph family
LC 72-76146

"Daniels traces the careers of the major Randolphs and their many (Cary, Carter, Jefferson, Lee, and Marshall) relatives [from the 17th to the 20th century]." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The work is reasonably authentic and quite readable, even if involved; and there is always another scandal just a few pages away. This is not one of the author's better books, and one wonders if another book on the Randolphs is really needed. Recommended for genealogy buffs and popular reading shelves." E. D. Johnson

Library J 97:2720 S 1 '72 100w

"What [the author] presents is not a family history but a history of Virginia and the early United States wrapped around the Randolph family tree like a windblown skein of yarn. Pages and pages are devoted to cousins Thomas, John Marshall and Harry. The true Randolph stories are so mixed up and fragmented that they get lost and confused in the welter. Meanwhile Mr. Daniels takes advantage of the accident of cousinship to do his best to blacken Thomas Jefferson's reputation. This seems a strange way to treat this greatest and closest of Randolph connections. However, it does not make for dull reading. . . . [But Mr. Daniels's] overcrowded canvass sacrifices true family to 'kin' and comprehensibility to inclusiveness." Nathaniel Burt

N Y Times BK ■ p4 N 12 '72 1350w

DANIELS, ROGER. The Bonus March; an episode of the great depression. 370p $14 Greenwood press

973.916 Bonus Expeditionary Force, 1932
ISBN 0-8371-5174-0 LC 75-133497

This is an "historical account of the 1932 bonus march, in which thousands of unemployed World War I veterans descended upon Washington to demand immediate payment of their bonuses. Their march and subsequent dispersal by the army, Daniels suggests, casts light on the relationship of veterans to society and to the political process, on the government's response to social protest, and on the ways in which history becomes myth." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] succeeds admirably in getting to the reality of the Bonus March—its beginnings in several parts of the country, its obscure and generally inept leadership, and its essentially peaceful spirit. He is careful to establish the ways in which the sit-ins came to get on the nerves of the administration. . . . Daniels [also] seeks to dispel a number of cherished stories about the Bonus March. . . . This lively book is the work of an industrious, imaginative, outspoken but essentially fair-minded historian. . . . Daniels has a sharp wit and a clear and somewhat colloquial style. He is occasionally discursive but it is pleasant to explore bypaths of our political and social history with such a well-informed companion." R. E. Burke

Ann Am Acad 403:196 S '72 650w

"The book is based on wide-ranging research in published as well as unpublished sources, including the papers of Herbert Hoover, Congressman Wright Patman, and Police Commissioner Pelham D. Glassford. Daniels follows the interpretation put forward by Donald Lizio in 'A blunder becomes catastrophe,' in the Autumn 1967 Wisconsin magazine of history. Lizio showed that Douglas MacArthur's decision to drive the veterans out of their encampments violated President Hoover's instructions. Daniels' book, which contains a good bibliography, should be of interest primarily to advanced students of American history, and belongs therefore in college and university libraries."

Choice 9:571 Je '72 190w

"[Daniels] treats this familiar subject with verve and originality, producing not only a well-written and deftly researched study but also a significant one as well. . . . [If he] is occasionally too strident, too 'preachy,' too condemnatory about slips of memory, and too inclined to see insidious motivation behind the perpetration of errors in fact, he should be excused. In the case of the Bonus March he usually has reason for his pique, and the tendency to judge does not detract from the overall effect. In short, this is a critical, analytical, soundly organized, and thoroughly professional piece of work on a topic which has obviously been improperly handled—until now." R. K. Murray

J Am Hist 59:763 D '72 500w

DANIELS, STEVEN. How 2 gerbils, 20 goldfish, 200 games, 2000 books, and I taught them how to read. 168p il $4.95; pa $2.45 Westminister press

371.9 Socially handicapped children—Education
ISBN 0-664-20904-1; 0-664-249132-2 (pa)
LC 78-141992

"The author recounts his three years' experience teaching in a predominantly black inner-city school. Believing that classroom control results from a meaningful, relevant curriculum, he developed a program based on the informal open-classroom concept. He provides . . . hints for utilizing games, psychodrama, individualized reading instruction, and parent involvement." (Library J)

"[Daniels'] recommendations are supported by statistics he collected in the classroom. The listing of games and books which he found most effective will be useful to school libraries. Libraries having the works of Holt, Kohl, and Herndon will want to add this to their collections." R. W. Barber

Library J 96:2494 Ag '71 110w

"Integral to the narrative is a series of entirely feasible, clearly designed, inexpensive, easily adaptable suggestions on how to create and keep creating, 'a curriculum that is individualized, that encourages each child to work at his own level and pace, and that accounts for this child's need for physical action.' And it is a curriculum that works academically, for Daniels' students . . . did learn to read, among other achievements." Nat Hentoff

New Yorker 47:100 F 5 '72 390w

DÄNIKEN, ERICH VON. Gods from outer space; return to the stars, or evidence for the impossible; tr. by Michael Heron. 190p il pl $5.95 Putnam

001.9 Man—Origin and antiquity. Life on other planets. Interplanetary voyages
LC 76-147059

The author's "thesis is that the earth has been visited at least twice by a space-traveling people so advanced that they appeared to the early men as gods. He believes that their first visit coincided with the rather sudden appearance of intelligent apes on this planet, and that the human race began as a planned biological mutation, engineered by the visitors using knowledge of genetics we are just beginning to acquire. Though evidence of this occurrence is lost, memories of the second and subsequent visits survive today in the many historical and religious legends of gods from the sky and their chariots of fire. The author supplements his reading of these legends with interpretations of unsolved archaeological riddles." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Continues the treatise set forth in von Däniken's Chariots of the gods? [BRD 1970] . . . and largely duplicates material therein, that extraterrestrial beings have visited Earth in times past. Fans of Velikovsky, Cayce, Fort and the like will find it interesting reading, but it is not suitable for a scholarly library, unless that library maintains a collection of escape literature for its user's leisure moments."

Choice 8:1342 D '71 70w

"The book reads like a transcript of dictation: the author leaps suddenly from one topic to another. This fault is somewhat redeemed by the content—much of his archaeological evidence is unknown outside professional circles. Von Däniken gives us his answers to questions for which there will probably never be enough evidence to find the truth. His book may be interesting reading for some, but one must have faith to believe. Not recommended." R. L. Hough

Library J 96:2503 Ag '71 230w

DANNENBAUM, JULIE. Julie Dannenbaum's creative cooking school; il. by Tom Funk. 266p $8.95 McCall pub. co.

641.5 Cookery
ISBN 0-8415-0099-1 LC 77-154247

A collection of recipes arranged in the "appetizer-to-dessert format with cooking tips and suggested menus. . . . Index." (Library J)

"An authoritative, imaginative cookbook that is a welcome change from the homogenized, fast-gourmet books that strive to be all things to all cooks. The emphasis here is on classic haute cuisine with some interesting variations. The directions are clear and the recipes are well tested, as one might expect from Dannenbaum, a Cordon Bleu cook and dean of a thriving cooking school in Philadelphia. Many of the recipes are time-consuming and some call for unusual ingredients not always obtainable. However, there are some great simple recipes that are most rewarding. . . . For large cookbook collections." M. L. Blackwell
Library J 96:3135 O 1 '71 150w

"Here you will find the nice, inventive but not too inventive food served in conservative households by hostesses who care. The book is crisply written, with lots of kitchen tips. One of Mrs. Dannenbaum's techniques goes contrary to that of other food authorities: She advises her readers to start cooking shellfish in a cold liquid rather than in a simmering one. (I did it, and did not like the results.) A good book for parties, since most of the recipes have quantities for 6-to-8-and-more servings." Nika Hazelton
N Y Times Bk ■ p31 D 12 '71 120w

DANTE ALIGHIERI. Dante's Inferno; tr. with notes and commentary by Mark Musa [il. by Richard M. Powers]. 286p $10 ind. univ. press
851 Dante Alighieri—The divine comedy: Inferno
ISBN 253-14184-2 LC 70-126214

In this rendering of the Inferno in English blank verse, for each canto the translator has provided commentary.

"This curiously illustrated book opens with an apologia pro forma sua but, as the points made are well taken, one soon realizes that Musa is a guide who . . . is well versed in both English and Italian. Freed from the restraints of rhyme with its myriad archaisms, the text . . . has a vitality which recommends this translation to the first-time reader of Dante. Unfortunately, Musa does not indicate which text he follows nor who his mentors were for his commentary. . . . [His notes] seem intended to encourage the neophyte to know Dante and his times. A noble purpose indeed, but once past this threshold, the student may want to seek further enlightenment." Choice 8:1456 Ja '72 180w

"Musa tries to . . . [employ] diction which most nearly mirrors the tone of the original. What results is a solid translation that is admirable for its accuracy. However, the response it will elicit from general readers is somewhat more difficult to gauge. Musa operates on the principle that a translator's first duty is to render the original text as exactly as possible without compromising the literary quality of the work; and for this exactness he is prepared to sacrifice some of the grandeur and drama of the poem. . . . My own feeling is that Musa has captured the total feeling of the poem precisely because of his exactness. . . . Taken together, translation and commentary provide the best English-language version of the Inferno currently available." W. J. Roscilli
Library J 96:483 F 1 '71 290w

"Many of the familiar cantos assume a new meaning in Musa's version. Francesca's tale is no longer a tragic monologue, but a rationalization of her adultery with Paolo. . . . No other translator has suggested Brunetto Latini's homosexuality in Canto 15 as subtly as Musa. . . . In his commentary Musa is admirably sound and often original. . . . Of all the translations of the Inferno, Musa's is the most exact." B. F. Dick
Sat R 54:37 My 22 '71 600w

DANZIG, ALLISON, ed. The fireside book of tennis; ed. by Allison Danzig and Peter Schwed. 1043p il $14.95 Simon & Schuster

796.34 Tennis
SBN 671-21128-5 LC 70-165538

This is a "history of the game—its great players and dramatic matches through the years as written on the spot by . . . tennis writers of each era. From the days of . . . Big Bill Tilden and Norman Brookes, Suzanne Lenglen and Helen Wills, it moves through the first half of the century and [portrays the] careers of Donald Budge, Jack Kramer, Pancho Gonzales, Althea Gibson, and then comes up to the present-day [players] . . . such as Rod Laver . . . Billie Jean King, and Chris Evert. . . . There is a How to Play Tennis section . . . culled from . . . instruction material . . . written chiefly by expert players." (Publisher's note) Index.

"This vast compilation is a good job that should have been better. . . . Well-known tennis authors are represented, plus some surprises—James Thurber, Peter Ustinov. The editors did a poor job of editing; material that should be here isn't and vice versa. . . . What is included is not set forth in the best manner; 'shamateurism' needs discussion by itself and shouldn't have been buried in the Roy Emerson article, and descriptions of semifinals sometimes follow rather than precede descriptions of finals." David Peele
Library J 97:2857 S 15 '72 150w

"The 'Fireside Book' is a must for all tennis buffs. . . . [In it] all the wonderful matches come alive again—Al Laney in particular on Tilden-Cochet in the 1927 Wimbledon and again on that classic between Crawford and Vines in the 1933 Wimbledon; Don Budge on his own 1937 Davis Cup match with Von Cramm ('The Best One I Ever Played') and Julius Heldman on 'The Style of Vines'—who, for me, a contemporary and possibly prejudiced hero-worshipper was 'the best one I ever saw.' " Fred Tupper
N Y Times Bk ■ p26 O 22 '72 360w

DARLING, AMANDA. Lola Montez. 240p $7.95 Stein & Day

B or 92 Montez, Lola
ISBN 0-8128-1436-3 LC 74-185956

A biography of the 19th-century femme fatale who "had an international reputation as a dancer and an actress, but whose really great acting was performed offstage as she reshaped her own story to suit each individual lover." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by J. J. McAleer
Best Sell 32:252 S 1 '72 650w

"Darling notes correctly the unreliability of Lola's autobiography and lectures, the chief sources for studying her; but the author's allusions to more credible records, or any kind of records, are infrequent and incomplete. The book is interesting enough, but it seems to offer little not found in . . . earlier works. . . . Libraries holding an older work on Lola probably won't need Darling's book." Jerry Cao
Library J 97:2383 J1 '72 100w

"To explain what she did and why, Darling traces the life of Lola Montez (néé Betty Gilbert) from elopement (to avoid marriage at 16 to a 60-year-old widower) through a series of affairs to the end of her career as a prim, boring lecturer. . . . The author has read many diaries, letters, and contemporary newspaper accounts and often makes educated guesses as to what might have happened. Though the change from rejected daughter to celebrated beauty seems fantastic, the book shows how it could happen and the story of this beautiful, intelligent woman who, though misled at times, led an independent life at a time when most women were completely dependent upon their husbands will be of great interest to YA's." Janet Strothman
Library J 97:2496 J1 '72 120w [YA]

"A readable account of the beautiful adventures (her dates are 1818-61) who cost a king (Ludwig I of Bavaria) his throne, and who committed adultery and bigamy, as well as some very bad theatrical performances, on four continents. . . . She died in Brooklyn a religious nut. For most of her career, she was able to get somebody to take her seriously as a thinker, a rebel, or a gravely misunderstood good woman, although—a credit to the judgment of critics—never as a performer. The biography suggests that the nineteenth century had great difficulty discriminating between a liberated woman and a mentally disturbed one." New Yorker 48:78 Ag 12 '72 100w

DARLING, LOIS. Worms [by] Lois and Louis Darling. 64p il $3.75; lib bdg $3.56 Morrow 595 Worms
LC 77-102408

The authors "present the facts about [earthworms] and relate them to the chain of life. . . . First [they] explain the structure of the earthworm. Then they describe its behavior, emphasizing the way it digs tunnels by swallowing the earth. . . . [Included also are] instructions on how to keep [earthworms] alive in a container." (Publisher's note)

"The drawings are both imaginative and informative, and beautifully integrated with the . . . text."

Horn Bk 48:384 Ag '72 180w
"[This book] is written in a simple, direct, unpatronizing style." E. F. Porter
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p8 My 7 '72 40w

DARLING, LOUIS, jt. auth. Worms. See Darling, Lois

DARLINGTON, BETH, jt. ed. Bicentenary Wordsworth studies in memory of John Alban Finch. See Wordsworth, J.

DASHTI, ALI. In search of Omar Khayyam; tr. from the Persian by L. P. Elwell-Sutton. (Persian studies monograph, no. 1) 276p $11 Columbia univ. press

891 Omar Khayyam
ISBN 0-231-03188-2 LC 77-168669

"In an attempt to identify the genuine quatrains of Omar Khayyam, the author . . . reconstructs the life of Omar and uses the information thus derived for a critical evaluation of the hundreds of verses attributed to him." (Library J) Glossary of technical terms. Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] made a cautious examination of available biographical data, which, in turn, pointed to what appeared to be the most reliable collections of poetry containing Omar's key quatrains. Although the study is on the whole carefully done, some disagreement is anticipated from the experts concerning method and procedure. However, regardless of whether or not the argumentation can always be followed, the work . . . provides enjoyable and thought-provoking reading." Miroslav Krek

Library J 97:1810 My 15 '72 150w

"[The author] is an essayist, a novelist, a pamphleteer, and, perhaps more important in the present connexion, a brilliant critic of the classical Persian poets. He . . . has isolated some seventy-odd quatrains as almost undeniably authentic, along with a further number of 'possibles'. The process by which he has arrived at his conclusions is explained at every step and is accompanied by lucid expositions of the various phases of Western investigations. At last the world has what promises to be perhaps the final word on Omar Khayyam. . . . Elwell-Sutton's translation both of Ali Dashti's text and of the quatrains is worthy of the original; and his introduction is a masterpiece of clarity."

TLS p46 Ja 14 '72 410w

DASMANN, RAYMOND F. Planet in peril; man and the biosphere today. (A UNESCO bk) 242p il $8.95 World pub.

574.5 Ecology. Man—Influence on nature. Nature conservation
ISBN 0-529-04454-4 LC 71-179289

Dasmann describes "the working of the biosphere—the life-supporting regions of the Earth's atmosphere, oceans and lakes, and landmasses. He explains . . . how these components interact with one another: how energy flows within the system; the operation of the chemical cycles that help sustain life; the ecosystems into which the biosphere is divided; and how and why populations increase or decrease. The evolution of man's technologies is considered with respect to their effect on the functioning of the biosphere. . . . The author [also] presents possible solutions that could be undertaken on a worldwide basis." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[By using] Dasmann's book, it is very easy to show what has happened in a highly industrialized society where the emphasis has been solely on the domination of one kind of nature while allowing another kind of nature (human) a free hand. . . . [His] book demonstrates . . . eloquently [that] man has frequently acted with all the rationality of an earthquake. This is not just industrial man. . . . There was and still is agricultural man who has destroyed millions of square miles of land all over the world by a totally irrational use of it, whether in deforestation, overgrazing or bad crop usage. . . . Only totally irrational and dehumanized creatures could look at many of the photographs in the Dasmann book and not be revolted at the manner in which man has fouled his own nest." J. B. Kelley

America 127:185 S 16 '72 230w

"Here is a dispassionate look at environmental phenomena of current interest: persistent pesticides (a threat), killing of seals (well regulated, not a threat), recycling of resources, control of the technology, urbanization, land use, population growth, etc. The book suffers somewhat from a didactic, textbook style, but the generalities it examines are of such great relevance that readers should not fail to be absorbed." H. T. Armistead

Library J 97:2633 Ag '72 140w

DAUGHEN, JOSEPH R. The wreck of the Penn Central; by Joseph R. Daughen and Peter Binzen. 366p il $7.95 Little 335 Penn Central Company

LC 79-161864

The 'Pennsylvania Railroad and the New York Central were combined in February 1968. . . . Two years later . . . the Penn Central was being reorganized in bankruptcy. . . . [This is a] recounting of events bearing on the Penn Central's collapse." (Christian Science Monitor)

"[This] is a near-incredible story of mismanagement, miscalculations, inefficiency, gross personality conflict, and plain bad luck." A. J. Giunta

Best Sell 31:442 Ja 1 '72 430w

Choice 9:850 S '72 180w

"The authors show impressive organizational skill. They use the phrase 'corporate spaghetti' to describe the complex intertwining of Penn Central subsidiaries. It is a useful phrase to describe the limitations of the book itself. . . . It would be a mistake to pick up 'The Wreck of the Penn Central' and hope for a novel-like unfolding and heightening of corporate tragedy. . . . The authors have a sense of significance and a zest for drama. They have the professional reporter's disdain for exaggeration and eagerness to expose wrongdoing wherever found. But a sweeping, deeply involving novel this is not; a conscientious example of large-scale interpretive reporting it is. And while the authors may tell us more about the Penn Central disaster than we really care to know, they at least never lose sight of the reasons for learning its lessons." F. H. Guidry

Christian Science Monitor p11 D 16 '71 700w

Reviewed by W. C. Robinson
Library J 97:869 Mr '72 180w

Reviewed by M. J. Ulmer
New Repub 166:25 Ja 29 '72 1650w

"If it's read widely enough, [this book] may lead to a rethinking of the whole concept of the board of directors and its relationship with the chief executive officer. . . . [It] really blows the board of directors myth out of the water. It proves that boards are worse than nothing, because they give the illusion that someone's there who knows what's going on and is keeping the management honest—when, of course, the directors are in bed with the management. . . . You owe it to yourself to read this book. It's time you knew that the villains are not nameless and faceless. They are the directors and top managements of our largest organizations." Robert Townsend

N Y Times Bk R p3 D 12 '71 1650w

"[The authors] have explained precisely how a huge corporation that could distribute a forty-three-million-dollar dividend one year (and without paying any federal income taxes) could go broke a year later."

New Yorker 47:68 D 25 '71 200w

DAVID, JOSEPH BEN-. See Ben-David, J.

DAVID, LESTER. Ted Kennedy; triumphs and tragedies. 274p il $7.95 Grosset
B or 92 Kennedy, Edward Moore
ISBN 0-448-01767-9 LC 70-183019
A biography of the current senator from Massachusetts.

"To say the story is familiar is gross understatement. All the staple scenes which make the legend are here repeated, all reminding the reader of those hundreds of Sunday supplement, women's magazine articles of the last ten years. Senator Kennedy may well play an important role in shaping the future of this country. Readers are advised to look elsewhere for a thoughtful analysis of his character and his policies." Joan Sweeney
Best Sell 32:114 Je 1 '72 100w

Reviewed by Jack Forman
Library J 97:2574 Ag '72 120w

Reviewed by R. R. Lingeman
N Y Times Bk R p1 Je 4 '72 220w

"In a straightforward narrative account . . . David's work is a complete biography, fitting Teddy into the Kennedy family, describing in details his ups and downs and the qualities that have brought him within striking distance of the highest office in the land. It is a highly readable report." Carroll Kilpatrick
Sat R 55:79 My 13 '72 240w

DAVID, PAUL T. Party strength in the United States, 1872-1970. 310p $9.75 Univ. press of Va.
329 Political parties. Elections—U.S.
ISBN 0-8139-0396-3 LC 77-183897

"This work deals with the elections for president, governor, senator, and representative in the various states for the period 1872-1970. After first determining the percentage divisions of vote between Republicans, Democrats, and the major third parties in these elections, Professor David proceeds in the final 200 pages of the book to analyze by means of graphic materials the particular voting trends in individual states during this 98-year span of time. Through a . . . system of index numbers and composite alternatives, [he] records the election data for the above-mentioned offices in such a way as to provide measurements for ascertaining party strength within a state at a given moment as well as supplying indicators for predicting future voting developments." (Ann Am Acad) Bibliography. Index.

"As the author correctly observes in the first sentence of his introduction, 'This is a book of numbers, helped along by diagrams.' As such, it will certainly not be a runaway best seller nor will it provide even the most academically-oriented mind with entertaining reading. It is precisely what the author claims it to be—a reference work which distills elaborate computations into understandable figures showing trends in recent American voting habits. . . . [David's] painstaking explanation of his methodology will appeal to political scientists and statisticians, but will be ignored by most historical researchers. . . . [His] methodology seems to this historian, at least, to produce results which are close enough for all practical purposes . . . [and he] has produced a work of considerable merit and of long-term value." R. K. Murray
Ann Am Acad 403:197 S '72 700w

"[This work] is for the statistical scholar. Most of it is given over to the records, almost impossible to find elsewhere in usable form. . . . Like most statistics, they need a bit of explaining—and faith. Professor David's own faith in the future of the party system, which many feel is breaking up, remains unimpaired." Economist 243:63 Je 3 '72 160w

"[This book] contains highly interesting findings and hypotheses about the past, present, and future of the American political system. For the student of American politics and elections, there is much that is valuable. . . . The book begins with an introductory essay in which Professor David draws attention to some of the salient findings that emerge from the data. Some of the trends confirm the conventional wisdom about important features of American political history and voting." M. C. Cummings
Va Q R 48:590 autumn '72 1300w

DAVID, SIR PERCIVAL, ed. Chinese connoisseurship: the Ko Ku Yao Lun. See Ts'ao Chao

DAVIDS, RICHARD C. How to talk to birds and other uncommon ways of enjoying nature the year round. 242p il $6.95 Knopf 574 Nature study
ISBN 0-394-47279-9 LC 73-171148

A collection of essays describing the author's observations in northern Minnesota.

"Davids is an enthusiast, a man who has over a long time acquired some naturalists' skills and insights and is eager to communicate them. . . . He has collected birds' nests in winter, done lots of hunting with cameras, maintained an indoor green-house, taken children on walks, fed lots of birds. . . . [He] is a good recruiter." A. C. Ames
Book World p15 My 28 '72 140w

"[The book] is written in a warm, chatty, informal style and makes good reading. The author's great enthusiasm for nature comes through in every chapter. However, while much information is given, the book will not take the place of field guides. The author's purpose seems to be to show how much nature has enriched his life and in this way to encourage others to enjoy it. A delightful volume." C. W. Stuckl
Library J 97:1027 Mr 15 '72 80w

"A charming beginner's nature book for adults, with one chapter entitled 'How to Lure Kids.' Mr. Davids's . . . aim is to seduce like-minded but less knowledgeable amateurs into an appreciation of nature's variety. He succeeds." N Y Times Bk R p38 O 8 '72 60w

DAVIDSON, BILL. Cut off; behind enemy lines in the Battle of the Bulge with two small children, Ernest Hemingway, and other assorted misanthropes. 202p $6.95 Stein & Day
940.53 World War, 1939-1945—Personal narratives
ISBN 0-8128-1452-5 LC 70-186495

"Yank correspondent Davidson can't refuse to help two Jewish refugee children from Germany. Although he speaks no German and the children no English, they manage to communicate in pidgin English-French-German. From behind German lines, the three attempt to reach the Allied lines and a refugee center in an American jeep. Their experiences range from a night spent with Ernest Hemingway through an encounter with the maquis and finally with two American soldiers who speak German suspiciously well. David finally delivers Freddy and Lisa to a refugee center and never sees them again—though after the war he tried to trace them." (Library J)

"[The book encompasses] so many unexpected and even fantastic happenings that one finds it hard to believe that Mr. Davidson did not make some of them up out of whole cloth. . . . There is a small account of battlefield language but it is not overly offensive. The reader gets a little bit of the fluidity of modern warfare as an added bonus. All that needs be said further is that those who miss this ride will be most unfortunate." Edward Bartley
Best Sell 32:166 Jl 1 '72 300w

"Based on notes Davidson took at the time and written in easily understood prose, this is a fresh, inspiring reading experience for YA's and adults." Alberta Hankenson
Library J 97:2496 Jl '72 130w [YA]

DAVIDSON, CHANDLER. Biracial politics; conflict and coalition in the Metropolitan South. 301p $11.95 La. state univ. press 320.9764 Houston, Texas—Politics and government. Negroes—Houston, Texas. Negroes—Political activity
ISBN 0-8071-0246-6 LC 76-185951

"Focusing on Houston, Texas, this book explores the black community's use of social organizations and the vote to gain political rewards in the modern South. . . . [The author] believes that a better political scenario can eventually be written only if Southern blacks form a coalition with poor whites, stressing the economic issues where they share common problems." (Library J)

"Since Davidson defines political rewards in broad terms that include better economic and social opportunities, his estimate of present-day gains is pessimistic. . . . [His] conclusion will be debated both by conservatives, who will not agree with Davidson's broad definition of political rewards, and by black separatists, who will not wish to abandon a 'go it alone' strategy. The author states his case in such an unusually lucid and well-researched manner that the work should be bought for all large collections." Hindy Schacter

DAVIDSON, CHANDLER—Continued

Library J 97:3301 O 15 '72 150w

Reviewed by Jared Lobdell
Nat R 24:1189 O 27 '72 210w

"Davidson contends that 'working-class racism has been exaggerated, and that there are many whites who can be persuaded to support political programs which are racially and economically just.' He finds no hope for the Negro in black separatism or in either of the old parties as now constituted. The Populist strategy of 'unashamed class politics' he believes to be the best course for both races, and he finds reason to hope for its success. . . . Before writing this off as wishful scholarship buried hopelessly under the Nixon landslide, before concluding that the Southern Strategy has finally fused the South into a monolithic bloc of McKinley economics and white-supremacy racism, and before dismissing Southern Populism as a liberal delusion, one should hear out the testimony of a curiously qualified witness." C. V. Woodward

N Y Rev of Books 19:39 D 14 '72 230w

DAVIDSON, J. W., ed. Pacific Islands portraits; J. W. Davidson & Deryck Scarr, editors. 346p pl maps $6.50 Int. scholarly bk. services

920 Islands of the Pacific—Biography. Islands of the Pacific—History
ISBN 0-7081-0166-6 LC 72-110412

"The changing way of life of the Pacific is shown through this series of portraits of men and women who lived in the islands between the early years of the nineteenth century and the outbreak of the First World War. Five of the portraits are studies of islanders. . . . Two are of missionaries. . . . and one of a missionary family. . . . One is a trader and adventurer, Peter Dillon. And three are portraits of groups of people: settlers in the 'beach communities'; planters in Fiji, and labour recruiters and the islands they recruited." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The editors suggest that this book, although lacking a thematic unity, would 'show the diversity of situations existing in the Pacific and the diverse responses to them of men of varying backgrounds and interests.' For certain of the 19th-century figures it does do this in an interesting fashion, even though the writing of certain of the portraits is uneven. But it is the lack of any context which would enable a reader to compare and contrast aspects of the portraits which makes it all but useless to the historian, the cultural anthropologist, or the serious student. The book is well illustrated with full footnotes and an index, but strangely it lacks a bibliography. Recommended for purchase for libraries having specialized Pacific collections."

Choice 8:1499 Ja '72 120w

"Painstaking research is reflected in these portraits. . . . The human element is prominent throughout, as the pieces range from a description of the problems encountered by Victorian women seeking a private bathing place to a discussion of the machinations of labor recruiters for sugar plantations. Recommended for medium-sized and large libraries." Clarence Gorchels

Library J 96:4091 D 15 '71 120w

"[This reviewer] was impressed by the high standard of writing throughout, which appears to indicate a thorough command of relevant source material, plus a willingness to embellish the raw bones of fact with some literary flesh. . . . Two particularly impressive articles are those of Caroline Ralston, on the beach communities, and John Young, on the planter community in Fiji. Both accounts are very well structured, and their authors make some significant generalizations as they interpret their material. . . . I must mention also the extremely interesting chapter by Maude on Baiteke and Binoka of Abamama, who were remarkably successful in their formation of a new kind of social system within their domain. . . . This book has something for everyone with an interest in the Pacific islands." Robert Tonkinson

Pacific Affairs 45:317 summer '72 650w

DAVIDSON, MARSHALL B. The American heritage history of notable American houses. See American heritage

DAVIES, IOAN. Social mobility and political change. 133p $5 Praeger

320.01 Social change
LC 75-95669

"The major focus of this book is not on political change, but on the somewhat narrower consideration of how shifts in the composition, orientation, and distribution of social groups have a bearing on what is sometimes described as the 'political system.'" Davies begins by summarizing the classical theories in which social mobility and political change were central—De Tocqueville, Marx, Weber, Pareto, Mosca, and Durkheim. (He) argues that structural-functional analysis incorporating the values of a society, function process, and system—best illustrated by Weber—is the best method to understand the relationship of social mobility and political change." (Am Soc R)

"This slim volume seems strangely incomplete, perhaps because it tries mainly to advance the author's own perspective rather than to treat the concept systematically with clear definitions and well-stated propositions. . . . A book like this has its place on student reading lists, but it does not seem to be of critical value to one interested in incorporating social mobility into an analytical theory of society." J. E. Kelly

Am Soc R 36:932 O '71 420w

"There can be no doubt about Mr. Davies' scholarly powers—they are manifest; but he writes rather—and sometimes very—carelessly, and is often short on comprehensibility. Those without previous knowledge of the subject will find it almost impossible to follow his argument; even the knowledgeable will experience difficulties from time to time. As the blurb says, he 'attempts' to 'summarize the perspectives of such writers as de Tocqueville, Marx, . . . and Robert Michels'. The trouble is that he does not really succeed in doing so. . . . But although [this monograph] can hardly serve as a text, the already well-informed student gifted with patience and persistence will not find his book unrewarding."

TLS p843 Jl 31 '70 250w

DAVIES, J. K. Athenian propertied families, 600-300 B.C. 655p pl $24 Oxford

929.7 Athens—History. Genealogy
ISBN 0-19-814273-0 LC 76-857878

"Selected biographical dictionary of upper-class Athenian families with entries listed under their principal members, [and with] cross-references. The thesis argued in the introduction is that it is possible to identify the Athenian upper class on the basis of property ownership. The emphasis of the dictionary is on genealogy and financial position of the families listed. . . . a check list of 779 wealthy Athenians, and genealogical tables of several of the most prominent families [are provided]. Indices of subject and sources cited." (Choice)

"The dictionary is based on the earlier Athenian prosopographies of J. Kirchner (1901-3) and J. Sundwall (1906, 1910), but makes good use of more recent material. . . . Extensive bibliographical references . . . make it possible to pursue the history of an individual or family into areas not dealt with directly by Davies. The book is a boon to scholars of classical Greece but too specialized for the undergraduate."

Choice 9:624 Jl/Ag '72 180w

"This book will be indispensable for all Greek historians. . . . That [779 individuals] is not the whole body of wealthy Athenians, much less a complete Prosopographia Attica, Mr. Davies knows. The list is very sparse in the sixth century, still sparse in the first half of the fifth century, and only thereafter increases to sizeable proportions. The unevenness and inadequacy are facts of the limited evidence available. . . . Nevertheless this complete presentation of the extant evidence will be of enormous value for the study of the political, social, and economic history of Athens. The arrangement of the evidence, moreover, is designed to enhance its usefulness." M. E. White

Class World 65:237 Mr '72 430w

DAVIES, JOHN PATON. Dragon by the tail: American, British, Japanese, and Russian encounters with China and one another [by] John Paton Davies, Jr. 448p pl $10 Norton 327 China—Politics and government—Republic, 1912-1949. China—Foreign relations—U.S. U.S.—Foreign relations—China
ISBN 0-393-05455-1 LC 68-20817

Davies, "a U.S. diplomat in China in the 1930's and 1940's [stresses his] . . . service as Stilwell's diplomatic aide. This is interwoven with an . . . account of China's 100-year encounter with imperialism and its revolutionary response." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by W. J. Richardson
America 127:500 D 9 '72 200w
Best Sell 32:303 O 1 '72 800w

"This is a book of many excellences. It is first of all the useful memoir of a fascinating career (the private side of life is only sketched). . . . Davies is particularly good in underlining misperceptions of China that have bedevilled foreign attempts to deal with the country and still do. All this is delivered in a style that is urbane and ironic, precise and brief. No one interested in China will fail to profit from this book, and no one who reads it will fail to enjoy it." A. J. Nathan

Library J 97:2586 Ag '72 120w

"[This is] a many-splendored volume, long in perspective, rich in detail and superlative in its prose. . . . Davies takes the reader through almost 200 pages of historical review before beginning his personal involvement. . . . As a result, the book is somewhat flawed in structure. The general reader will gain from the lengthy background but may find the detailed exposition of personal and bureaucratic infighting over our China policy in 1943-45 ■ bewildering labyrinth. On the other hand historians and specialists will welcome Davies' inside view of the Stilwell-Soong-Chiang-Hurley-Wedemeyer-Chennault imbroglio, while skipping over the general account which comprises half the volume. No one will find it tedious or boring." A. S. Whiting

New Repub 167:26 O 21 '72 900w

Reviewed by John Gittings

N Y Rev of Books 19:7 N 16 '72 5600w

"The message of [this] book is not new. . . . [What Davies has] added is the freshness of the reporter who was there and . . . wrote extensive and brilliantly literate letters back home to his family. . . . There are few heroes in those war-time years of 1941-45, by Davies' urbane and caustic account. Certainly not Franklin Roosevelt, who had no China policy at all except to keep Chiang in the war and, mistily, to make China a great power thereafter." J. C. Thomson

N Y Times Bk R p3 O 29 '72 460w

New Yorker 48:131 S 23 '72 230w

DAVIES, L. P. Give me back myself. 210p $5.95 Doubleday

LC 70-165385

Stephen Dusack "is a recent emigrant from South Africa and knows few people in England. In no time at all he has reason to suspect that he doesn't know anybody in that country. Awakening in a hospital after a train wreck, he is assured that he is the rich and mysterious David Orme. All his attempts to assert his true identity seem doomed to failure—what is going on?" (Best Sell)

"A fiendishly clever plot."

Best Sell 31:494 F 1 '72 80w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 96:4033 D 1 '71 80w

"Some of the characters are stereotyped, but the fast-moving plot with its several unusual twists make up for this, and Steve's efforts to prove his identity make absorbing reading." Joni Bodart

Library J 97:790 F 15 '72 110w [YA]

"[This book, concerning] the dilemma of a person who tries to find his identity after an accident . . . is no better or no worse than the majority of its kind. . . . [It] offers no new techniques or insights. The writing is no more than passable. Yet one has to plow through to the end, to see how the author can manage to unwind the plot and make it plausible. Davies unwinds it. Plausibility? That's another thing." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ja 23 '72 160w

DAVIES, LAURENCE. Paths to modern music: aspects of music from Wagner to the present day. 330p $10 Scribner

780 Music—History and criticism

SBN 684-12440-8

LC 79-155057

"While delineating social attitudes toward music and musicians, [the author] traces the influence of nationalism upon musicians, and of musicians upon one another." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Music criticism after the method of G. B. Shaw, . . . this cultural history takes the middle ground between profundities like Barzun's, Peckham's, or Nietzsche's, and straightforward surveys like Lang's, Salzman's, or the Penguin series. . . . Davies also gives us a history of modern music criticism. . . . Music listeners will appreciate the sort of down-to-earth background that should be given in program notes. Students will value this British university tutor's graceful attempt to lift them above the technical side of music."

Choice 8:1459 Ja '72 110w

"In these essays, a number of which appeared in British periodicals as early as 1968, Davies takes an attitude 'more sociological than musicological.' . . . He thinks of computer music as dehumanized: ' . . . it is difficult to see how such a method can embody a human purpose or give rise to a genuine human impulse.' . . . While Davies has moments of insight, on the whole the book seems dated and provincial." Dika Newlin

Library J 96:3615 N 1 '71 160w

"These essays, which are learned, critical, racy written, well-researched and wide-visioned, make up a very good book. Just occasionally one feels—and the title suggests as much—that the author's philosophy of history is too teleological. . . . He shows a wide acquaintance with French operatic, symphonic and chamber music, the name of Reynaldo Hahn being the only conspicuous omission from his study of French song. . . . What gives Mr. Davies' study its freshness is that his view has a longer focus by ten or fifteen years than immediately postwar surveys. He has the courage not to be modish, and is prepared to say flatly that John Cage is talking nihilism. . . . He is anxious where possible to link musical with sociological or literary phenomena. Having looked all round him in a final chapter, Mr Davies asks, 'What now?'"

TLS p645 Je 4 '71 500w

DAVIES, MERTON E. The view from space: photographic exploration of the planets [by] Merton E. Davies [and] Bruce C. Murray. 163p $14.95 Columbia univ. press

523.4 Space photography. Earth—Photographs from space. Moon—Photographs from space

ISBN 0-231-03557-8 LC 76-168867

This book is "not only about space photography, but about its various ramifications: use for political and military purposes, weather reporting and recording, mapping and geologic exploration. . . . as well as the astronomical applications." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[This is an] informative, exciting, and literate book. . . . Considerable technical detail about space photography and camera equipment is given in the appendices, but the text itself is easily understandable by the average reader. Copiously illustrated with photographs, line drawings, tables, and graphs, with references at the end of each chapter, and an excellent index. Highly recommended for all readers, from the intelligent layman to the serious researcher."

Choice 9:233 Ap '72 160w

"The presentation is clear and essentially nontechnical." J. K. Lucker

Library J 97:888 Mr 1 '72 110w

"The style of the book is refreshingly unusual; the authors do not hesitate to criticize scientific policy and planning in their broadly technical account. . . . The book contains a good deal—even the verbatim text of a proposal tabled by the U.S. at Geneva in 1958—about the prospective uses of orbital reconnaissance in terrestrial arms control. It is therefore fitting to point out that the authors are intolerably coy about the present state of earth reconnaissance." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 226:118 Ap '72 800w

DAVIES, MORTON R. Models of political systems [by] Morton R. Davies [and] Vaughan A. Lewis. 182p $7 Praeger
320.3 Political science
LC 69-12704

"In Part One, an introduction to the contemporary approaches to political science is offered, as well as a brief summary of the historical antecedents of these approaches. This is followed by an account of a number of attempts at identifying politics and the 'political system' and providing classificatory schemes for analyzing particular systems. Parts Three and Four outline a number of schemes that classify actual political systems in terms of their over-all characteristics." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"An attempt to review the new political science concepts developed by behavioralists in recent years. It is thus a synthesis of writings of others rather than an original essay. There has been nothing else like it to date, and it accomplishes its purpose very well. . . . There are excellent footnotes and a carefully chosen bibliography, and the book is a model of clear expository writing. It should be . . . of interest to anyone concerned about modern political science."

Choice 9:130 Mr '72 160w

"[This book] is extremely timely. . . . The authors have accomplished their stated purpose of providing a basis from which students and lecturers can go on to the original works. Unfortunately, given the nature of the book, their exposition is often spoilt by an over-technical and obscure language and a refusal to take sides when discussing the chosen writers. A more important criticism is that they do not, except by allusion, enter into the important controversy of just what is the 'study of politics.' Instead they tend to assume that the future of political studies is with the data-gatherers and the systems-builders."

TLS p312 Mr 17 '72 340w

DAVIS, FRANK G. The economics of black the Polish-Soviet war, 1919-20; foreword by A. J. P. Taylor. 318p 11 maps $10 St Martins
943.8 Polish-Soviet War, 1919-1920, Poland—History
LC 70-185518

This is "a history of the Polish-Soviet War of 1919-20 . . . which embraced the first advance of the Red Army into Europe and the first attempt to export Red Revolution by force [and] revealed a . . . political miscalculation by Lenin and the rumblings of Stalin's feud with Trotsky. . . . [The personalities] involved, apart from the Bolshevik pantheon, include Pit-sudski and Budyonny, Tukhachevsky and Voroshilov, Sikorski and Winston Churchill, Weygand and de Gaulle, Lloyd George, Pius XI, and Feliks Dzierzynski. . . . It is the aim of this volume to combine a summary of the military, political, and diplomatic events of the Polish-Soviet war with a short review of the implications." (Introd.) Bibliography. Index.

"The entire Polish-Soviet conflict is captured expertly in [this work]. . . . The book is meticulously researched and it is virtually the only contemporary work devoted to this obscure but vitally important conflict. It no doubt will become mandatory reading for anyone engaged in serious study of the establishment of Communism in Russia. . . . [The] concluding chapter . . . is superb. In a polished, crisp style, Mr. Davies wraps up the significance of the Polish-Soviet War." D. W. Given

Best Sell 32:428 D 15 '72 700w

"[This is] a scholarly narrative . . . and a largely impartial treatment of a generally neglected subject. The author is as objective as possible in his discussion of . . . controversial personalities. . . . He describes the political, economic, and military aspects of the war as well as the civilian negotiations, discusses Allied (mainly British and French) attitudes and policies, and closes by analyzing the immediate and long-term results. Recommended for college and university libraries." Karen Harvey

Library J 97:3584 N 1 '72 90w

"Davies says that the war contributed to the replacing of Trotsky's 'International' Communism by Stalin's brand of Russia-first. The Poles, for their part, developed an overweening confidence in their invulnerability, a delusion that was shattered in 1939. This is an interesting job of historical writing, both in its superior excavation of events from obscure archives and in connecting these events to the mainstream of history."

N Y Times Bk R p38 O 8 '72 150w

"[Davies] has traversed familiar ground, adding a number of Polish sources less well known to English writers and readers and taking here and there a lucky dip into the British archives in the Public Record Office and into the Lloyd George papers in the Beaverbrook Library. He is interested in strategy and tactics as well as in diplomacy, and seeks quite rightly to place the whole episode into the perspective of world events. . . . It is notoriously difficult to write the history of a war from both sides impartially, wherever one stands, and with the best will in the world one cannot put oneself in the shoes of the man on the other side of the hill. Mr Davies has consciously set out, by way of redressing an adverse balance, to give a Polish account of the war. This is fair enough, and salutary up to a point, though he pauses too often to belabour the other side—sometimes in a rather pedantic way."

TLS p1021 S 1 '72 800w

DAVIES, RHYS. Nobody answered the bell. 157p $5.95 Dodd

ISBN 0-396-06373-X LC 74-158816

This novel is set "in an English seaport town. Behind the closed doors of a suburban house, two women sharing a macabre secret are locked in a violent, claustrophobic, love-hate relationship. Its true nature is revealed not even to the young milkman on his frequent clandestine visits, who arrives finally to discover that nobody answers the bell." (Publisher's note)

"[This] is an intensely morbid and penetrating study of two lesbians attempting to live with undetected murder. The gnawing effects of evil and horror ultimately undermine the relationship. Not for the squeamish."

Best Sell 31:362 N 1 '71 30w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 96:2551 Ag '71 20w

"We get all the grotesques we need in [this story], a dead dog, the decaying corpse of an old harlot, an obscenely tattooed lesbian, her girlfriend with the deformed back who fornicates with a dimwitted milkman with a speech impediment on the kitchen floor, all adding up to one of those depressingly perverse English mysteries that stay with you for days. . . . Designed to appeal to badly adjusted lesbians and perverts with deformed backs." J. R. Coyne

Nat R 24:169 F 18 '72 80w

"The thin line that separates the mystery from the psychological novel can be admired in [this story]. There are killings, it is true. But these are subservient to the grim story of two mad Lesbians and the life these terrible women try to make. This is a strong and deadly book; and, incidentally, not in the least prurient. Davies . . . writes with a sure hand. And each fingernail on that hand is tipped with poison." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p50 N 14 '71 70w

DAVIES, WALFORD, ed. Early prose writings. See Thomas, D.

DAVIS, ANGELA Y. If they come in the morning. See If they come in the morning

DAVIS, CHRISTOPHER. The producer. 321p pl $8.95 Harper

B or 92 Elkins, Hillard. Theater—U.S.

SBN 06-010994-7 LC 75-156518

This is an "account of a year and a half in the life of Hillard Elkins, producer of 'Oh! Calcutta,' 'Alice's Restaurant,' 'A New Leaf,' 'The $100 Misunderstanding,' and the musical, 'The Rothschilds.' The book gives an idea of the scope of this producer's life—the trials, the worries, the failures, the successes, the movies, the hangers-on, the entourage, the wife-to-be (now is), Claire Bloom." (Publishers' Weekly)

"It is true that some of the prurience which draws crowds to 'Oh! Calcutta!' may flow over into interest in its producer. An effort to make sure that it does is manifest in the use of illustrations from that nudy and in the dust jacket which carries a picture of a naked female contorted in deference to modesty.... The book is professedly about the production of "The Rothschilds" and the whole second half is devoted to this show. It is as dull as the first half." W. B. Hill

Best Sell 31:552 Mr 15 '72 220w

"The book will not instruct you on how to be a successful Broadway producer, but it will tell you what is involved. . . . One gets a very clear idea of the joys and the sorrows of stage production. . . . The book is replete with other fascinating show people—Jerome Robbins, Elaine May, and others. Show biz buffs will have a glorious time." Paul Myers

Library J 96:3774 N 15 '71 130w

"Unlike many show business biographies, 'The Producer' is more than just warts. Christopher Davis succeeds for what may well be the first time in capturing the special combination of art, energy and greed that goes to create a producer. . . . Davis has brought to this account . . . the same skills of observation and distillation that made his last novel, 'A Peep into the Twentieth Century' [BRD 1971], so successful. Like that book, 'The Producer' doesn't admit instant access; it takes several pages before Davis's elaborate prose becomes natural to the inner ear. But the resulting textures of language are worth the effort." Dick Adler

N Y Times Bk R p4 Mr 5 '72 1300w

DAVIS, FRANK G. The economics of black community development; an analysis and program for autonomous growth and development. 213p $8.95; pa $3.95 Markham pub.

330.973 Negroes—Economic conditions
SBN 8410-0911-2; 8410-0914-7 (pa)
LC 77-174987

Davis's "basic analytical objective is to examine, within the prevailing economic and social structure of the American economy, the optimum economic relationship between the black ghetto economy and the general economy. . . . In Part I we will analyze the present state of affairs of the black community. . . . In Part II we will consider the effects of present and proposed governmental policies upon ghetto development. In Part III we will show the economic implications of our hypotheses." (Introd)

"Despite occasional insights, Mr. Davis' diagnosis of and prescription for the ghetto economy are at best dubious. . . . In addition, [he] fails to show why his essentially mercantilist proposal can overcome the ghetto's inability to manipulate an exchange rate or to protect infant industries with trade barriers, the presence of enormously powerful, technologically-advanced firms outside the ghetto, and the dearth of skilled black workers and managers." M. R. Killingsworth

Ann Am Acad 403:225 S '72 280w

"One of the more important books on the economy of the black ghetto. However, it is written in a turgid style and needlessly uses the economist's mandarin dialect in places; consequently it is not likely to be widely read and parts of it may even be misunderstood. The first four chapters are the most valuable. They analyze the ghetto economy as an exploited subsystem of the larger economy. . . . The last four chapters sketch a proposal for ghetto economic development based on social ownership of ghetto resources [and] acquisition of capital through employment of ghetto residents outside the ghetto. . . . The plan will not work, but it does make more explicit the problems of capital accumulation, markets, and underdevelopment. . . . In spite of its faults, a valuable contribution."

Choice 9:544 Je '72 280w

DAVIS, JAMES W. The national executive branch; an introduction [by] James W. Davis, Jr. 228p il $7; pa $2.95 Free press

353.03 U.S.—Executive departments
LC 72-96834

This book describes "the departments and agencies that in aggregate constitute the executive branch. Readers are offered chapters on such . . . topics as personnel and the budgeting process, as well as discussions of organizational authority and the limits and costs of reorganizations. . . . [Davis] stresses the distinction between the presidency and the executive departments, and . . . points out the obstacles that inhibit swift or sweeping public policy change. The book also tries . . . to relate notions from general organization theory to an appreciation of federal bureaucracies and their patterns of doing business." (Am Pol Sci R)

"At times the reader feels he is being led through an annotated U.S. Government Organizational Manual for 1969. Overall, however, this is a sympathetic (especially toward the presidency), understanding, and relatively accurate portrait of the complex, sprawling executive branch. . . . To the author's credit it can be said that he brings together an informative collection of fact, description, and commonsense observations in a readable and compact slim essay-text. And, on balance, he captures much of the ambiguity, complexity, and diversity that are so characteristic of the practices of the executive branch. . . . [However] the book lacks an analytical theme that might guide the student toward a more systematic appreciation of the realities of the executive labyrinth." T. E. Cronin

Am Pol Sci R 65:799 S '71 1150w

"Intended as supplementary reading for undergraduate courses in political science. The volume makes the following points: first, the executive branch of government is important; second, politics and administration are blended; third, our ignorance of the executive branch is extensive. These conclusions are hardly new and discussion is on an elementary level."

Choice 8:471 My '71 90w

DAVIS, JEFFERSON. The papers of Jefferson Davis; ed. by Haskell M. Monroe, Jr. and James T. McIntosh; v 1. 1808-1840. $15 La. state univ. press

973 U.S.—History—1815-1861
ISBN 0-8071-0943-6 LC 76-152704

"The first of a projected set of some 25 volumes, [this] takes the Confederate leader through his early army career and the tragedy of his first marriage to the settled life of a Mississippi planter." (Library J)

Reviewed by D. H. Donald

Am Hist R 77:1506 D '72 1100w

Choice 9:711 J1/Ag '72 230w

"The reader discovers in these documents a very human Davis, scarcely recognizable beside the austere figure that is traditionally associated with the Confederacy and the Civil War. . . . [This volume includes] 535 documents. . . . These items vary in length from abstracts of a single line to letters and narratives of several pages. Each is supported by painstaking notes of identification and explanation. . . . Altogether this book is a major contribution to our knowledge and understanding of Jefferson Davis and his associates and their times." C. P. Roland

J Am Hist 59:422 S '72 1150w

"This is a worthy addition to the growing list of papers of key figures from the American past. . . . The chief advisory editor, Frank E. Vandiver, notes, 'so much of Davis' early career remains clouded in mystery, controversy, or misinterpretation.' Hence, the editors have done well to fill the spaces between Davis' letters with military reports pertaining to his record and other pertinent contemporary matter. Also included are autobiographical materials and useful appendices."

W. E. Parrish

Library J 97:1820 Ad 1 '72 100w

"The meticulous scholarship follows the tradition of the Franklin and Jefferson projects. . . . But Davis is still a statue. Perhaps he will come to life in the 21 to 26 volumes to follow."

N Y Times EE p16 Mr 19 '72 130w

"Students of the Civil War are still looking for that elusive 'definitive' biography which will place Davis, his personal strengths and weaknesses, his political achievements and failures, in balanced and proper historical perspective. If and when such a biography appears, it will undoubtedly rest heavily on the work of the gifted editors who are responsible for the publication of 'The Papers of Jefferson Davis.' The appearance of the first volume . . . launches this project in impressive fashion. . . . This volume brings together more information than we have ever had before on Davis' first thirty-two years."

C. B. Dew

Va Q R 48:462 summer '72 1500w

DAVIS, JOHN GORDON. Cape of storms. 519p
$7.95 Doubleday
LC 79-157583

"James McQuade is a college-educated, white South African. Familiar with modern whaling from past experience, he is drawn again to ship out with a whaling fleet from his country to the Antarctic. En route he falls in love with a ship's nurse, and they plan marriage. But, back in South Africa, it is discovered that she has a trace of Malaysian blood, and since she is registered by the government as a Coloured, she is forbidden to marry or associate with a white." (Library J)

"This is a novel about whaling. Now, if you have an insatiable desire to learn how to find a whale, how to kill a whale, and how to process a whale in gory, bloody, nauseating detail, the 'Cape of Storms' might be your kettle of blubber. . . . I suppose this is a readable enough volume. It does point out the cruelty of South African apartheid in a most vivid way. But I found the dialogue, plot and descriptions rather ordinary and the vocabulary crude." P. J. Earl

Best Sell 31:353 N 1 '71 210w

Reviewed by Ed Murphy

Library J 96:2669 ■ 1 '71 130w

"[Davis is] a first-class practitioner of the blood-and-guts school. . . . His whaling interludes are magnificently described—and his love story invites a feeling of moral outrage." Martin Levin

■ Y Times Bk ■ p50 S 12 '71 140w

"This flawed but highly kinetic second novel by South African author John Gordon Davis is written in a style that, alas, sometimes suggests Hemingway in A Farewell to Arms [BRD 1929]. . . . The cruelty and comradeship of [this] gory, race-haunted, frozen shipboard world is conveyed by Davis with extraordinary energy, clarity and even humor. His empathetic descriptions of harpooned whales struggling to escape would turn Ahab himself into a protector of endangered species. Unhappily, the action eventually moves ashore."

Time 99:92 Ap 17 '72 130w

DAVIS, LANCE E. Institutional change and American economic growth, by Lance E. Davis and Douglass C. North; with the assistance of Calla Smorodin. 282p $10.95 Cambridge

301.5 U.S.—Economic conditions. Economics. Mathematical
ISBN 0-521-08111-4 LC 70-155584

"The objective of this book is to . . . develop a theory of institutional change. . . . In Part One, the theory is developed; Part Two applies the theory to American economic history; Part Three explores some further implications and limitations of the analytical framework." (Pref) Index.

"This is probably the most important book about American economic history to appear in the last five years. . . . The book is certain to inspire future research. The distinction between institutional arrangements which create new income and those which merely redistribute existing income, for example, is relevant to such major organizational forms as feudalism, the factory system, and the international corporation. Above all, [the book] stands as evidence of the intellectual curiosity and flexibility of Professors Davis and North. After more than a decade as leaders in the effort to apply more sophisticated economic theory and quantitative techniques to the study of economic history, they have now broadened the scope of analysis to include the social and political context within which economic change occurred." W. G. Whitney

Ann Am Acad 401:216 My '72 420w

"[The authors] present a model to analyze the relationship between economic growth and institutional change. They hope to contribute to the 'development of a body of theory that can incorporate the innovation, mutation, and demise of institutions.' . . . Whereas this is a dull book to the uninitiated, it is a fascinating one to the social scientist who is interested and well grounded in research. The project is ongoing; the authors have merely stopped to write up their preliminary findings. If the reader is not deeply dedicated to the rules of research, the excessive coverage of limitations of the model may make him wish that publication had been delayed a few years."

Choice 9:102 Mr '72 170w

DAVIS, MELTON S. Who defends Rome? the forty-five days, July 25-September 8, 1943. 560p il $12.50 Dial press

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—Italy. World War, 1939-1945—Campaigns and battles—Italy. Italy—History—German occupation, 1940-1945
LC 77-163591

Davis provides an "account of the forty-five days from Mussolini's dismissal from office on July 25, 1943, until the following September 8th when the Badoglio Government concluded an armistice with the Allies, and the Germans occupied Rome and other key parts of Italy." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"[This fascinating account gives] . . . a sad picture of 'treachery, double-dealings, lies, and betrayals, compounded by blunders, indecision and misjudgment; influenced by fear of the unknown, the known, the future and in some cases the past' . . . [The work] was based on the author's interviews with numerous witnesses and an extensive bibliography of English, Italian, French and German primary and secondary sources. [It] is a welcome addition to the ever-growing literature on the role that Italy played in the Second World War." B. D. Williams

Best Sell 32:29 Ap 15 '72 700w

"It is unfortunate . . . that this book is far too long, at least too long and too finely spun out to hold the attention of the general reader. On the other hand, the devotion to detail, the re-created dialogue intended to promote verisimilitude, the lengthy list of eyewitnesses interviewed, and the extensive bibliography do not provide enough support to make this the definitive book in English on the subject. In the absence of documentation of the text itself, some of what Davis says will be subject to dispute by scholars in the field." E. G. Hamann

Library J 97:1710 My 1 '72 550w

"There is available a vast library on the period, and Mr. Davis has used it all. . . . The result is a vivid, human, often exciting story that makes clear the lasting damage done to the Italian people by the hollow and sabre-rattling dictatorship of Benito Mussolini."

N Y Times Bk R p16 Jl 23 '72 130w

DAVIS, MICHAEL. The image of Lincoln in the South. 205p $7.95 Univ. of Tenn. press

301.15 Lincoln, Abraham, President U.S. Public opinion. Southern States
ISBN 0-87049-133-4 LC 73-158115

The author contends that "the Southern mind significantly modified its previous stance in the years following Lincoln's death. . . . Professor Davis, utilizing such diverse sources as Southern newspapers, letters, poetry, music, and fiction, examines these commonly held attitudes toward Lincoln and charts their course . . . [from] the period immediately preceding the outbreak of the Civil War [to 1909]." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This is a well written, thoroughly documented study of the image of Lincoln held by Southern white conservatives. Treatment of attitudes of Negroes, Southern unionists, and white Southern Republicans is inadequate. . . . A knowledgeable reader will find little that is new in this study but it is an important synthesis, which adds perspective and unity to one dimension of Southern history. There is no comparable work on this subject. . . . College, university, and larger public libraries will want to add this to their collections."

Choice 9:126 Mr '72 190w

"The book is well documented and critically analyzes the background and writings of many Southern opinion makers from Alexander H. Stephens, vice president of the Confederacy and personal friend of Lincoln, to Woodrow Wilson, who believed Lincoln was 'the Supreme American of our history.' The book also has an excellent bibliography. Highly recommended." R. J. Havlik

Library J 97:872 Mr 1 '72 150w

"[The author] has done an interesting job, scholarly and well written. His great shortcoming is that he devotes most of his attention to the wartime period . . . and not enough to the postwar period. . . . The reasons impelling Southern Conservatives to hate the Northern President in wartime are clear enough without explanation; yet they are thoroughly explained in this account. The reasons impelling Southern Conservatives to decide, in the postwar period, that Lincoln really was a good man after all, are unclear unless explained in great detail—and the detail is insufficient here." Christopher Dell

Nation 214:348 Mr 13 '72 1150w

"In 1860 the South viewed Lincoln as a 'prairie buffoon' or 'pliant tool of ambitious demagogues.' During the war . . . his image changed from that of fool to monster. With Lincoln's assassination and the 'evils' of Congressional Reconstruction, the image of Lincoln underwent another transformation in the South. This last view of Lincoln reached its culmination with the New South spokesmen who used the 'spirit of Lincoln to seal the bond of new-found brotherhood between North and South.' Davis ably documents the shift in the South's attitude toward Lincoln, and in doing so, adds a dimension to our understanding of the Lincoln legend."

Va Q R 48:xciii summer '72 170w

DAVIS, MILDRED. Three minutes to midnight. 213p $5.95 Random house

ISBN 0-394-47316-7

LC 76-162390

"At a carnival shooting gallery, Blair's father wins a teddy bear. The bear contains a note that wasn't meant for his eyes. Minutes later Blair sees her parents plunge from the top of a Ferris wheel. Her mother is killed, her father turned into a near-vegetable, leaving twenty-one-year-old Blair in charge of her three younger sisters as danger moves in on the household." (Sat R)

Best Sell 31:494 F 1 '72 120w

"There is plenty of incident to keep the plot on the hop, and the denouement is suitably amazing."

Library J 97:88 Ja 1 '72 120w

"[This novell will have you chewing your fingernails." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p38 F 6 '72 90w

"While I question some of the author's plotting and find most of the impossibly bright dialogue hard to take (real girls don't talk like that), I must confess that I read every word of this 'suspense novel,' which is gripping right up to its thoroughly satisfactory denouement." Haskel Frankel

Sat R 55:73 Ja 29 '72 90w

DAVIS, NOLAN. Six black horses. 320p $6.95 Putnam

LC 79-163408

"Apprenticed to a mortician, young Lawrence Xavier Jordan discovers that he has a natural talent for the profession, and he learns so much from his employer, Southwall Lovingood, that he gives up his dream of becoming an artist and goes to the Gresham College of Mortuary Science. Afterwards he rises to the top of a cutthroat field with the establishment of the House of Jordan, the most distinguished mortuary palace in Kansas City's black society." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Paul Kiniery

Best Sell 31:380 N 15 '71 800w

"An amusing, fast-paced mixture of genres: the realistic chronicle of black life, the Dreiser-like saga of flawed ambition's rise and fall, the folk tale of demonic possession. As boisterous melodrama, the novel is a breezy success; as a deadly serious exposition of the theme of the artist's development, it's a repetitious mess. There is more point to Davis' concept of the mortician as an illusionist, and a monstrous creator of life. Best to enjoy the vivacious set pieces, especially a wildly exuberant funeral service." A spirited first novel, lots of fun to read." Bruce Allen

Library J 96:4029 D 1 '72 160w

"Some might consider this too raunchy for all except older YA's, but they will certainly enjoy the honest portrayals of characters and life styles, and the book affords a window on a world not easily envisioned by the uninitiated." Jeanne Cavallini

Library J 97:1933 My 15 '72 120w

"Davis has written a splendidly mordant funny first novel. . . . Evelyn Waugh and Ralph Ellison had collaborated on a novel, the result might well have been something like 'Six Black Horses.' [The] master mortician Southwall Lovingood, [is] the book's most brilliantly rendered character, a quivering 300 pounds of appetite for bourbon, ham hocks and greens and compliant women. . . . [The] fiery denouement, so fashionable in current fiction, is not altogether satisfying, and [the author's] material occasionally gets out of hand. All the same, this novel heralds the emergence of a gifted writer." Arthur Cooper

Newsweek 78:11415 D 6 '71 550w

"Not since The Loved One [by M. Waugh, BRD 1948] has there been such a funny, funny book about the business of death. . . . The writing has wit, humor, and vitality." Zena Sutherland

Sat ■ 55:47 Ja 15 '72 100w [YA]

DAVIS, STUART. Stuart Davis; ed. by Diane Kelder. 212p il col il $13.50 Praeger

759.13 Davis, Stuart

LC 70-122089

In addition to the illustrations, this book contains "a collection of extracts from the artist's journals, and of his published articles." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography.

"In general, Davis' writing is impersonal; it is only in the articles on the work of others, notably Mondrian and Gorky, that his approach is autobiographical and informal. There are also comments on individual works, on his mural paintings, and some reference to the artist's role in society. The editor, Diane Kelder, has contributed a brief and perceptive introduction. . . . [The book contains] about 60 reproductions of modest quality. An exemplary job, strongly recommended."

Choice 9:359 My '72 200w

"Kelder has culled a fascinating selection from the artist's copious writings. . . . [They] reflect a no-nonsense approach to major issues and [Davis] writes with verve [and] humor. . . . [This volume is] a notable record of lasting value." W. J. Dane

Library J 97:673 F 15 '72 190w

"[This book] is logically ordered and contains unfamiliar material, though omitting one item I would have thought relevant concerning Stuart Davis at the Supermarket on a Fortune commission." Lawrence Alloway

Nation 213:667 D 20 '71 60w

"The journal shows [Davis] early in his career fumbling to define the esthetic to which he always remained determinedly loyal in his writing and in his painting. In the articles, written in a brilliant bulldog vernacular that erupts like a newscast, Davis answers with angry conviction and a sense of public responsibility the attacks on abstract painting as obscure and elitist, and with fierce scorn the chauvinistic slurs of the Regionalist school. . . . With its sufficiency of plates this fine book honors the artist and documents the labor pains of modern art in America." Rackstraw Downes

N Y Times Bk R p7 D 5 '71 290w

DAY, A. GROVE. Pacific islands literature; one hundred basic books. 176p il $6 Univ. press of Hawaii

016.96 Islands of the Pacific—Bibliography

ISBN 0-87022-180-9

LC 70-151452

The author attempts "to survey the fundamental documents in the English language which have shaped the Western world's image of the Pacific Islands. He treats . . . early voyagers, later travelers, ethnologists, fictionists, scholars, and editors—who have reported upon or interpreted Polynesia . . . Micronesia, and Melanesia." (Choice) Index of Pacific names and places.

"Though most entries treating these figures are rather brief, they illustrate clearly their subjects' Pacific-related activities and provide for each a bibliography which is at the least basic (though for some writers quite lavish and valuable bibliographies are included). Day's work will be a desirable acquisition for most libraries, for it serves either as a palatable introduction to the Pacific's literature or as a convenient and authoritative reference guide."

Choice 9:624 JI/Ag '72 160w

"Day, professor of English emeritus at the University of Hawaii . . . has selected and reviewed [these] titles which he considers basic, as well as especially readable and powerful. [He] limits himself to works from Oceania, leaving the vast materials from Hawaii and New Zealand to be treated in two later volumes. For each entry he provides a short, inadequate bibliographical statement followed by an essay. Arrangement is by historical chronology. . . . Many citations to related works are incorporated into his commentary, and an appendix with additional references is included. . . . [The] essays vary greatly in interest and quality. . . . The book is, however, a useful brief introduction to the literature." R. D. Olson

Library J 97:2374 JI '72 200w

DAY, BETH. Life on a lost continent; a natural history of New Zealand. 128p il $3.95; lib bdg $4.70 Doubleday

574 Natural history—New Zealand—Juvenile literature
LC 79-142897

This book deals with the exotic animals and plants that can be found on the islands of New Zealand. These include flightless birds, such as the weka and takahe, the three-eyed tuatara, a "lizard-like living fossil" and the pohutukawa tree. Index. "Grades six to eight." (Library J)

"This well written and illustrated (over three dozen black-and-white photographs) account of New Zealand wildlife and plants discusses gannets, keas, sika deer, wrybills, chamois, kiwis, etc. There are a few anthropomorphic lapses in the discussions of animal behavior, but these are minor and do not significantly detract from the otherwise accurate treatment." A. C. Haman

Library J 97:783 F 15 '72 90w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 55:47 Ja 15 '72 80w

DAY, GEORGE S., jt. ed. Consumerism: search for the consumer interest. See Aaker, D. A.

DEACON, MARGARET. Scientists and the sea, 1650-1900; a study of marine science. 445p il $16 Academic press

551.4 Oceanography—History. Marine biology
ISBN 0-12-207850-0 LC [79-149697]

This study of the origins and development of oceanography shows "how the medieval Arabs and Giraldus Cambriensis understood the tides and how in the Renaissance man turned to attempts to measure the phenomena of nature and thus began the flowering of science in the sea in the 17th century. . . . It also discusses the early-19th-century preoccupation with tidal problems and . . . the beginnings of professional oceanography in the [HMS] Challenger era." (Science)

"While many names are mentioned there is almost nothing about the personalities of the individuals. One can occasionally infer personal attributes from the context, especially in the last chapters, but on the whole the book concerns work done, things seen, and theories developed. Nevertheless this is a very valuable work, a solid treatment which at first glance seems to have cited every significant paper in physical oceanography from Pliny to 1900, with a brief statement of the major points of each. Every substantial statement is carefully documented in the notes at the end of each chapter. From this careful survey of the literature the author has reconstructed the scientific or rational viewpoint of the past with respect to the oceans." J. W. Hedgpeth
Science 174:1118 D 10 '71 1000w

"For the period that it covers, [this] is an excellent study. . . . [The author] originally planned this work as an outline of the development of physical oceanography in Britain; the scope was later enlarged to include marine biology and the work of non-British scientists. . . . The references are well balanced, the squabbles over opposing theories fairly presented, and the excitement of even small discoveries recounted with infectious enthusiasm. One of the most important points made in the book is the very uneven growth of marine science from the seventeenth century to the present day. . . . [This] book will prove useful to both historians of science and to those involved with the sea."

TLS p1611 D 24 '71 650w

DEACON, RICHARD. A history of the Russian secret service. 568p il $12.95 Taplinger

363.2 Police—Russia. Secret service
ISBN 0-8008-3868-8 LC 72-184413

"The account ranges from Ivan the Terrible's dreaded Oprichniki to the establishment of the Third Section by Nicholas I. from the formation of the Ochrana in the latter days of Czarism to the era of the . . . Cheka of Felix Dzerzhinsky, and on to the KGB of today. Also discussed are the various tactics used by the Russian Secret Service over the years." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Mr Deacon] omits one of the most remarkable [Russian spies]: Malinovsky, the Ochrana police spy who was a member of Lenin's Central Committee and leader of the Bolsheviks in the Duma. This is surprising, since the author is not backward in discovering Russian agents everywhere—Jack the Ripper, Peter the Painter, Sir Basil Zaharoff and Stalin himself, whom he believes to have been an Ochrana spy. There has been much argument on this last point and the evidence against Stalin is not convincing. But Mr Deacon does not argue the point; he just assumes that it is so. . . . He tells many colourful stories about Russian agents abroad (whom he estimates at between 600,000 and 1m). . . . But few sources are given and no distinction is made between the 'five star' (certain) and the 'one star' (highly dubious) stories."

Economist 243:59 Je 3 '72 600w

"Almost three-quarters of the book is concerned with the Soviet period, which will probably accord with the interests of most readers. Deacon writes in a lively style, and some of his descriptions of Western attempts to counter Soviet spying make one stare in disbelief at Anglo-American (chiefly Anglo) folly. All the same, the book will not supersede Ronald Hingley's The Russian Secret Police [BRD 1971], a more balanced study of the same subject." R. H. Johnston

Library J 97:2586 Ag '72 150w

DEAK, FRANCIS, ed. American international law cases, 1783-1968; v 1. International law in general. 484p $40 Oceana

341 International law
ISBN 0-379-20075-9 LC 78-140621

This is the "first volume of a projected eight to ten volumes of selected international law cases being drawn from the Federal and State Reports (1783-1968). . . . The some 65 cases reproduced in the first volume are divided into three parts: 'Nature, Sources and Application'; 'Subjects of International Law—States as International Persons,' and therefore including sovereignty, independence and equality, recognition, succession, and the effect of change of sovereignty; and 'The Relation of International and Domestic Law.'" (Library J)

"The first volume . . . [also includes] seldom cited cases, previously buried in voluminous court reports. The editor . . . has made a useful selection of cases, and his notes give exact citations to treaties. . . . University and law libraries should have this work alongside their International law reports and British international law cases. For a college library, the series, while a major contribution to scholarship, is expensive, and would rarely, if ever be used by upperclassmen, unless the curriculum has quite specialized seminars in constitutional and international law. Tables of abbreviations and of cases. No Index. A cumulative index to all volumes will appear."

Choice 8:1641 F '72 150w

"Many of the cases in this first volume involve more than one of the general topics and Deak has solved this difficult problem by printing each of the well-chosen decisions in the place of its principal or primary focus, but at the same time providing a cross reference by citation only in the related chapters and sections of the succeeding volumes of the series." A. H. Garretson

Library J 96:3339 O 15 '71 200w

DEANS, MICKEY. Weep no more, my lady, by Mickey Deans and Ann Pinchot. 247p il $6.95 Hawthorn. bks.

B or 92 Garland, Judy
LC 70-158038

A biography of Judy Garland the late American singer and actress.

"Some critics have dealt harshly with [Judy Garland] for forgetting lines, for starting performances late, for falling on stage, and have attributed these and other apparent failings to intoxication and drug addiction. If this work does nothing else but sweep aside either the lies or the innuendoes in these charges, it will have served a valuable purpose. . . . Mickey Deans draws her portrait with much more understanding than her public or her critics ever had. The over-all planning of the work is well conceived. . . . At times the organization of details repeats needlessly the chorus, but a sympathetic reader will also understand the driving motive of the recurrence. For anyone who was a fan of Judy Garland, or who thinks he knows all about her, this biography should make well worthwhile reading." J. M. Hamernick

Best Sell 32:10 Ap 1 '72 310w

"Something of a mixed bag. Presumably Dean's knowledge as Judy Garland's last husband and Pinchot's research on her earlier life were woven by Pinchot into this book. Despite its general unevenness, the work has moments of insight and power to move. Not really well done but recommended, with cautions, as an addition to the Garland data base." Jerry Cao

Library J 97:1006 Mr 15 '72 60w

DEBRAY, RÉGIS. The Chilean revolution: conversations with Allende (Eng title: Conversations with Allende). (Vintage bk) 201p $6.95; pa $1.95 Random house

983 Chile—Politics and government. Socialism—Chile. Allende Gossens, Salvador
ISBN 0-394-47339-6; 0-394-71726-0 (pa)
LC 71-162563

This book consists of three "sections: an introductory essay on Chile's history and politics by Régis Debray, his 'conversations with Allende' in January 1971, and a postscript by President Allende that includes his first message to Congress delivered in May 1971." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by J. F. Thorning
America 126:438 Ap 22 '72 550w

Reviewed by J. J. Conlin
Best Sell 31:535 Mr 1 '72 550w

Choice 9:576 Je '72 240w

Reviewed by J. N. Goodsell
Christian Science Monitor p8 F 24 '72 470w

"All Chile-watchers will seize on this little book as a periscope into the mind of Dr Salvador Allende. . . . The dialogue with Dr Allende provides some lasting clues to his political tactics and final goals, and the introduction by M. Debray is probably the most brilliant piece of writing that has yet come from the hand of that erratic French guevarist."

Economist 240:57 Jl 24 '71 650w

"[In this] dialogue . . . Debray asks the kinds of questions which the revolutionary Left everywhere would put to a Marxist committed to a 'legal' path to socialism. President Allende is disarmingly frank, charming, comprehensive, and intelligent in his answers; Debray is not less intelligent, but seems to think that he is scarcely of less historical interest than his subject. . . . The book offers more to students of political theory than to those of recent Latin American events. It is doubtful that beginners will profit from Debray's lengthy introduction, which is couched in the inviolate and musical style he has now made famous. . . . The notes are a good idea, but are sadly honeycombed with misspellings and historical inaccuracies." Mark Falcoff

Library J 96:3618 N 1 '71 170w

Reviewed by Peter Moscoso-Gongora
Nation 214:475 Ap 10 '72 700w

Reviewed by D. F. Ross
New Repub 166:26 F 26 '72 1000w

"The two conversations . . . make fascinating reading. . . . Debray clearly admires Allende, yet never allows this to compromise his own sharpness. He requires Allende to be quite specific about his aims and methods, not so much because he mistrusts him but because Allende is more or less a non-dialectician in a highly polemical scene. This is partly what makes the book so serious and valuable: one is conscious of its containing explanations for what will become history instead of wisdom after the event." James Hamilton-Paterson

New Statesman 82:115 Jl 23 '71 800w

Reviewed by Dudley Seers
N Y Times Bk R p6 F 20 '72 550w

"[Debray] has produced a major document on Latin American revolution. . . . [In this book] the questions asked are, in one respect, as significant as the replies gives. For they are the questions of a man who does not appear at all convinced that his presidential comrade can achieve a socialist society democratically—or that such an achievement would necessarily benefit the world revolutionary movement." Dan Kurzman

Sat R 55:61 Ja 22 '72 750w

Va Q R 48:clii autumn '72 160w

DEBRECZENY, PAUL, ed. Literature and national identity; nineteenth-century Russian critical essays; tr. and ed. by Paul Debreczeny and Jesse Zeldin; introd. by Paul Debreczeny. 188p $8.50 Univ. of Neb. press

891.7 Russian literature—History and criticism

ISBN 0-8032-0748-4 LC 77-109598

"These 'five articles of Russian literary criticism . . . trace the relationship of the national identity question to Russian literature and literary criticism from 1828 to 1881. Each article is on a major writer—Pushkin, Gogol, Turgenev, Tolstoj, and Dostoevskij." (Mod Lang J) index.

"The intellectual struggle to give form and substance to a developing self-image is reflected in essays arranged chronologically from Kireevsky's eloquent piece on Pushkin (1828) to Solovev's memorial (1881) on Dostoevsky as a 'social agent.' . . . Aside from Debreczeny's study on Gogol (1966), which contains some reference to Shevryev, there is very little in English on any of these critics, whose writings occupied a large place in 19th-century Russian intellectual thought. The essays here originally appeared in eminent, albeit shortlived, journals, such as Moskovsky vestnik, Russkoe Slovo, and Zaria. The translations are excellent, and the footnotes few but useful."

Choice 8:840 S '71 230w

"Shevryev's article on Dead Souls and Stravov's on War and Peace are among the major works of 19th century literary criticism. The third of the three longer articles is by Apollon Grigor'ev, whom many consider to be Russia's greatest critic. Thus, this book, although it is rather brief, is a welcome addition not only to the material on the issue of Russian national identity, but to Russian literary criticism. . . . If it is recognized that this book is a supplement to material already available, one need have no qualms about recommending it." B. L. Weston

Mod Lang J 56:178 Mr '72 700w

DEBS, EUGENE V. Eugene V. Debs speaks; ed. by Jean Y. Tussey; with an introd. by James P. Cannon. (A Merit bk) 320p il $6.95; pa $2.75 Pathfinder press

335 Socialism—U.S. Socialist party (United States). Industrial Workers of the World
LC 72-108720

This "collection of 30 speeches (arranged chronologically) of one of America's pioneer socialists . . . [ranges] in subject matter from race prejudice to antiwar sentiment." (Choice)

"These 'exhortations' demonstrate the dynamic appeal of Debs as a platform speaker. . . . This volume belongs in the company of Howard Quint, Ira Kipnis, David Shannon, and Ray Ginger, all of whom have written authoritatively of the rise of socialism in the U.S. Neither footnotes, bibliography, nor index."

Choice 8:1506 Ja '72 100w

"Cannon provides a good sketch of Debs' life in his introduction to this collection. . . . in which this leader's attitudes and efforts are presented. . . . [The book] is quite objective [and is] suitable for those interested in the history of socialism." H. H. Bernt

Library J 95:4171 D 1 '70 100w

DEBUS, ALLEN G. Science and education in the seventeenth century: the Webster-Ward debate. 335p $15 Am. Elsevier pub. co.

507 Education, Higher
ISBN 0-444-19659-5 LC 76-114270

The larger part of this book consists of "Academiarium examen by John Webster . . . Vindiciae academiarium by John Wilkins and Seth Ward . . . [and] Histrio-mastix by Thomas Hall. . . . three English tracts first published in 1653-4, and reprinted in facsimile." (Choice)

"The so-called Webster-Ward debate is well known to historians of seventeenth-century England, but in the absence of the texts students, as the editor here says, have had no easy time in deciding what the issues really were. Here are the sources: a short polemic by John Webster, Nonconformist minister and alchemist; a witty and trenchant reply by the Savilian professor of astronomy, Seth Ward; and a defense of universities as trainers of ministers by a Presbyterian minister, Thomas Hall. The novelty in these works lies in the contrast between Webster's understanding of Bacon's plea for a 'new learning' and that of Ward."

M. B. Hall
Am Hist R 77:511 Ap '72 350w

DEBUS, A. G.—Continued

"During the last few decades historians have been patiently re-examining the scientific revolution of the 16th and 17th centuries. While a great deal of research remains to be done, a new general interpretation of this pivotal period in European culture is now taking shape. Instead of seeing the emergence of modern science as the victory of reason over religion or of mechanism over Aristotelianism, the new view emphasizes the contribution of Renaissance magic, and the various philosophical and theological systems which made it rational, to the natural philosophy of the 17th century. This new interpretation is presented with admirable clarity in the scholarly introduction which Debus has written here."

Choice 8:664 J1 '71 180w

DE CHARDIN, PIERRE TEILHARD. See Teilhard de Chardin, P.

DE CHIRICO, GIORGIO. The memoirs of Giorgio de Chirico; tr. from the Italian and with an introd. by Margaret Crosland. 262p il $12.50 Univ. of Miami press

759.5 Art, Modern—20th century
ISBN 0-87024-125-7 LC 74-102694

In this "three-part collection of writings... the first two parts are memoirs of the artist and the last is about the techniques of painting." (Choice)

"[This] is an interesting book on several levels—there is much gossip about art and artists in this century, a beautiful description of de Chirico's childhood in Greece, many comments on the painting of present and the past. Throughout the artist is bitter and vitriolic about the state of the world and how he has been treated by it. Belongs in any library which has an extensive fine arts section. Photographs of the artist and his family and reproductions of his work are included."

Choice 9:798 S '72 100w

"Disturbing and disarming, this autobiography is a complex psychological insight into the personality mechanism of a painter whose canvases of inner metaphysical reality harbor images that haunt 20th-century art... [These memoirs] are crucial for understanding [de Chirico's] metaphysical inclinations, and subsequent imagery." Dorian Hyshka-Stross
J Aesthetics 31:134 fall '72 140w

"The first part of the artist's Memorie della mia vita was published in 1945; the second part appeared in 1962 and included his 'Techniques of Painting,' which consists solely of techniques for priming canvasses and for mixing of paints. ... [The artist's] gigantic ego appears on almost every page as he proclaims the genius of himself and his wife, Isabella Far, his hatred of most contemporary artists plus all of 'modern' art, and his scorn for the hoi polloi in general. Beyond this, his lack of humor, his hypersensitivity and his preoccupation with his bad health make for dull reading, particularly as he sheds little light on the social or, what is more important, the artistic era of his time. ... There will probably be some demand for this, but even ardent devotees will find it hard to take." R. L. Enequist

Library J 97:2378 J1 '72 160w

DECK, JOHN. Rancho paradise. 310p $8.50 Harcourt

301.43 Aged—U.S. Retirement. Mobile home living
ISBN 0-15-175900-6 LC 72-174506

This is a tape-recorded "series of conversations held with retired senior citizens living in a mobile-home park in Southern California." (Best Sell)

"Deck centers the conversations about specific subjects: work, women, the state of the world, romance, and scandal. The conversations turn out to be intelligent, sometimes penetrating, sometimes witty talks with some very interesting people. ... Readers of this volume who have worked with older people will not discover a great deal of new information or theories about such people. They will, however, read it carefully and with much pleasure, for the author writes and interviews extremely well. In doing so, he makes his characters come alive and we see them to have passions and desires, frustrations and fulfilled dreams." Fred Rotondaro

Best Sell 32:228 Ag 15 '72 300w

"[These interviews provide] insight into what it means to be elderly, retired, and a mobile-home dweller. Rancho Paradiso is one of more than 35 mobile-home parks in Yucaipa, a town located 65 miles east of Los Angeles. The author estimates that five to seven million people are living in homes on wheels, with at least a half-million of these in California. Residents reflect a broad range of social and economic backgrounds: surprisingly, perhaps less than a quarter of the park residents are in the over-60 age bracket. ... An interesting look at an innovative mode of living for America's elderly that has not, I believe, been documented before." Marie Ponzio

Library J 97:2197 Je 15 '72 180w

Reviewed by Edward Hoagland
N Y Times Bk R p36 S 17 '72 850w

"Deck has sensitively edited the narratives to highlight the strong sense of community and emotional satisfaction... [of this form of living]. ... The dignity one senses in the words derives not from sunset resignation or even wisdom but from the subjects' zestful capacity to remain still sly, still hungry for affection and companionship in spite of sickness or anxiety. ... [Deck's] modest study of how a park's tenants get on is doubtless a real service to those older Americans who still have the spirit to get out and get under." S. K. Oberbeck

Newsweek 80:78 Ag 21 '72 500w

DECONDE, ALEXANDER. Half bitter, half sweet; an excursion into Italian-American history. 466p $12.50 Scribner 301.453 Italians in the U.S.

SBN 684-12366-5 LC 75-123851

The author "attempts to trace American-Italian political, social, and cultural relations from the 17th Century to the present. ... He discusses the Italian contribution to American life and, on the other side, deals with the controversy surrounding the Mafia." (Library J) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Primarily a synthesis, the book contains little new information. Nevertheless, scholars should find the enormous bibliography of almost 60 pages to be an invaluable tool for future research. Quite properly most of the book is devoted to the 20th century. Historians will find the chapters on World War II especially rewarding. General readers will undoubtedly enjoy the discussion of the new Italian-American militancy in the last three chapters. DeConde skillfully separates dream from reality in describing the myths that Italian peasant immigrants had about the U.S. More important, with directness and candor he demolishes many of the more pernicious stereotypes that Americans have had about Italy and its immigrants to this nation. Belongs in every college library."

Choice 9:274 Ap '72 180w

"A professor of history at the University of California at Santa Barbara who has written several books on U.S. history here offers his most ambitious undertaking. ... [He] writes with a remarkable command of Italian and American literature; this is evident from his brilliant long bibliographic essay. ... The elegance and forcefulness of his presentation are noteworthy; they should help him in accomplishing his aim of reaching not only scholars, but also a broader public." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 97:68 Ja 1 '72 140w

Reviewed by P. J. Ognibene
New Repub 167:26 N 25 '72 1200w

"[The author] has performed a truly noble service for our culture, one that may help banish some of the stereotyped concepts that have been promoted throughout the land by the all-American obsession with Mafia folklore. ... More than half the book is devoted to a description of major and minor events that have affected American relations with Italy, beginning with the struggle of the Italian states for unification and ending with the emergence of Italy as an equal member of the European family of nations and as this country's close friend and collaborator. By relating much of this material to his story of the Italian Americans, the author demonstrates that this ethnic group, though apparently lacking in political power, has played a key role in bringing the United States and Italy together as partners." Jerry Mangione

N Y Times Bk R p41 F '72 900w

DE CONDE, ALEXANDER, ed. Student activism; town and gown in historical perspective. 342p $10; pa $3.65 Scribner

378.198 Students—Political activity. Colleges and universities
SBN 684-12546-3; 684-12545-5 (pa)
LC 74-162754

The author "has collected the essays in this book to show that the worldwide youth rebellion of the 1960s had its roots in the past and also to prove historically that the conflict between the generations need not be bloody. The selections begin with medieval student life and then go on to the later student movements in Western Europe, Eastern Europe, Asia, Africa, Latin America, and finally the United States. In his own introduction the author traces the evolution of the student culture throughout the world, showing the common and unique characteristics of activism as it existed from country to country and over time." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"Our chief inheritance from the earliest universities may be the tradition of masters and scholars pursuing a common life of learning, but another, more basic concept pre-dates that tradition: it is the union of students banded together for self-protection. Alexander DeConde's collection of essays . . . establishes this very elemental concept . . . one of the universal unwritten precepts of the university." G. M. Knoll

America 126:382 Ap 1 '72 340w

"DeConde's introductory essay hardly establishes any clear casual connections over broad historical context for the student disaffections of the 1960's; and the assembly of historical texts (whether casually related or not) is ample justification in itself. However, whether DeConde has assembled an historical corpus judiciously remains open to question. The broad coverage which the volume attempts makes it inadequate to the very task proposed."

Choice 9:258 Ap '72 190w

Christian Century 89:49 Ja 12 '72 40w

DE CRESPIGNY, ANTHONY, ed. Contemporary political theory, ed. by Anthony de Crespigny and Alan Wertheimer. 320p $6.95 Atherton

320.01 Political science
LC 72-80907

This is a "collection of 14 essays organized around seven basic concepts of politics: power, authority, liberty, equality, justice, rights and political obligation. . . . [The book] includes among others writings of de Crespigny, P. H. Partridge, K. J. Scott, Michael Walzer, and Margaret Macdonald." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"One weakness of this volume is the nature of the editors' otherwise commendable introductory essay. The problem is its failure to perform some functions of a good introduction. There is no explanation of the purpose and significance of the book or of the choice of articles and concepts. The account of the philosophical developments which conditioned most of the essays is inadequate. . . . Still, the articles reprinted are generally of high quality and about concepts of obvious significance. They are also models of clarity. Then, too, the trend illustrated by most of the essays reflects the dominant philosophical movement of our time. . . . For these reasons the publication of this book constitutes a service to students of political theory." W. E. Rumble

Am Pol Sci R 65:1162 D '71 1000w

"[This is] a stimulating collection. . . . The editors' position is that the purpose of political philosophy is not only clarification but to help men 'decide what ends political activity should pursue and how it should go about pursuing them.' The choice of essays is first-rate. . . . There is a brief but excellent general introduction. A helpful analytical introduction and a selected bibliography are provided for each of the seven sections of the volume. . . . Recommended for senior college libraries."

Choice 8:731 Jl '71 100w

DECTER, MIDGE. The new chastity and other arguments against women's liberation. 188p $5.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

301.41 Women's Liberation Movement. Woman—Social conditions
SBN 698-10450-1 LC 72-26668

In this discussion of the Women's Liberation Movement, the author of The Liberated Wo- man and Other Americans (BRD 1971) "contends that in all the major areas of their lives—work, sex, marriage and motherhood—women's real difficulties are not with their oppression—with denial of freedom—but with an unprecedented amount of freedom that has given them a . . . wide range of choices, choices from which the Movement is subtly advocating retreat." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Barbara Harte

Best Sell 32:372 N 15 '72 550w

Reviewed by Vernard Eller

Christian Century 89:1330 D 27 '72 210w

"[Miss Decter's] aim seems off target when she pummels away at women's supposed opposition to the sexual revolution. She fights best when she is analyzing contemporary marriage and motherhood. Whether one looks down on the movement as merely a new verse in the old life-is-too-hard refrain or looks up to it as a positive attempt to improve human life—and surely it includes elements of both—the Decter put-down is hard to ignore. Her documentation is extensive . . . her logic is formidable; and her conclusions are sobering. The biggest hurdle in the book may be her often ponderous prose, but slog on. The exercise is invigorating and worth the effort." Marilyn Gardner

Christian Science Monitor p12 O 18 '72 160w

Reviewed by P. G. Schuman

Library J 97:3695 N 15 '72 260w

Reviewed by Pat Kennedy

Nat R 24:1416 D 22 '72 1000w

Reviewed by Robert Boyers

New Repub 167:30 N 25 '72 2450w

Reviewed by Adrienne Rich

N Y Rev of Books 19:34 N 30 '72 7000w

Reviewed by George Stade

N Y Times Bk R p5 O 15 '72 1050w

"The author suggests, plausibly, that middle-class women may suffer less from a scarcity of opportunities than they do from a contradictory variety of choices: marriage, children, professional studies, a career. This unprecedented freedom, Miss Decter maintains, has caused some women to doubt themselves, to fear failure, to regret decisions they have made, and then to blame fathers, husbands, or employers. She discusses the arguments presented by women's lib, and it is not hard to detect a lot of updated bovarysme."

New Yorker 47:159 O 7 '72 150w

Reviewed by Arthur Cooper

Newsweek 80:104 O 9 '72 450w

"[Decter] supports her argument on the flimsiest evidence, on bits and pieces of quotations gathered helter-skelter; she is happiest with fringe and freakish elements of the movement. . . . When [she] isn't damning the entire movement but using her unique abilities to dig at the underside of specific noble pronouncements, she unearths some chilling tendencies in some members of some liberation phalanxes. But in the end, like most of history's counterrevolutionaries, Decter finds the movement she attacks too broad, too grand; it eludes her. She has written a sonorous, investigative, but ultimately fallacious book because she has kept mistaking her own trees for the whole branching forest."

Linda Wolfe

Sat R 55:72 O 21 '72 1050w

"Miss Decter has drawn up a severe indictment. It generalizes too wildly about Women's Liberation and is too personal to be documented. . . . Still [the book] serves as a provocative act of overcompensation on a topic that, for the moment, lacks spokeswomen (to say nothing of spokesmen) in the center. . . . Midge Decter is at her weakest when—especially on sex—she seems to be passing off private views as nature's laws. . . . [However, it is her] anti-romantic posture that finally counts. The author has insisted that while people are unfair, life is unfair too, and that one primary human responsibility is to discriminate between the two. . . . Every revolution requires its Midge Decter, the citizen not easily buffaloed, who keeps asking embarrassing questions." Melvin Maddocks

Time 100:188 O 16 '72 1100w

DEFOURNEAUX, MARCELIN. Daily life in Spain in the golden age; tr. by Newton Branch. 256p pl $9 Praeger

914.6 Spain—Civilization. Spain—Social life and customs
LC 79-134523

The author of this account relies primarily upon "literary works and travel accounts written during this 'golden age.' In addition to . . . descriptions and anecdotes, Defourneaux has [included] political and economic developments. He provides a general view of Spain, stressing the importance of the Catholic faith and the emphasis upon personal honor, before surveying life and society in urban and rural areas. He then examines in some detail life in the church, university, military, and home; public entertainment; and the picaresque life." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Distinguished French historian Defourneaux has written a fascinating book about life in Spain from the succession of Philip II (1556) to the death of Philip IV (1665). . . . [It] should appeal to the reader interested in foreign society or popular history. . . . The very brief bibliography contains few English titles; the index is adequate."

Choice 9:268 Ap '72 170w

"This delightful and evocative work, originally published in 1966 by Librairie Hachette, Paris, is the first in the 'Daily Life' series. . . . Defourneaux, professor of humanities at the University of Toulouse, possesses the highest qualifications; and his book is a source of pleasure in every way (no small tribute to the translator). . . . [He] blends historic and literary materials harmoniously and proves himself a tender critic. Highly recommended for all subject collections and university libraries." R. R. Rea

Library J 96:4091 D 15 '71 120w

DE GAULLE, CHARLES. See Gaulle, C. de

DEGLER, CARL N. Neither black nor white; slavery and race relations in Brazil and the United States. 302p $6.95; pa $2.95 Macmillan (N Y)

301.45 Brazil—Race relations. U.S.—Race relations. Slavery in Brazil. Slavery in the United States. Negroes in Brazil. Negroes
LC 73-130946

Probing the similarities and differences in race relations, "Professor Degler first calls attention to the obvious differences in race relations in the two countries. After slavery is analyzed as the source of these differences, they are defined at length. In his last chapter, the author draws some significant conclusions about the future of race relations in the two societies. . . . Some of the specific topics covered are the influence of slave revolts, the role of the church, the patterns of settlement, the cultural forms inherited from the Old World, and the role of ideology." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This book] contains a good deal of data on Brazilian slavery never before published in English. . . . [In addition] Degler offers new data on the position of the free Negro in Brazil, a position which contrasted dramatically with that of his North American counterpart. Two of [his] conclusions concerning the nature of Brazilian slavery [are startling]. . . . For one, he presents data that proves there was little or no difference in the legal definition of the slave in Brazil and the United States. . . . In addition, Degler convincingly demonstrates that Brazilian slavery was harsher physically than North American slavery. . . . [He] is less successful, however, in his attempts to explain the contrasting features of contemporary race relations in Brazil and the United States." Maxine Margolis

Am Anthropol 74:986 Ag '72 1050w

"Brazil has long been popularly viewed as a paradise with respect to race relations. That view, unhappily, is far from the truth. . . . Degler's volume, which has as a central theme the existence of racial discrimination in Brazil and in the U.S., attempts to set the record straight. It gives greater stress . . . to the Brazilian scene, but the comparative approach is used constantly, whether in treating the larger proportion of slaves taken to Brazil, the breakup of slave families, the more liberal manumission policies of the Portuguese, or the destructive effect of slavery still manifest in lower-class black families. . . . This work deserves to be read by all those concerned with race relations in the Western Hemisphere." Joseph Boromé

Library J 96:2081 Je 15 '71 330w

DE HARTOG, JAN. See Hartog, J. de

DEHN, ADOLF. Adolf Dehn drawings; sel. by Virginia Dehn; introd. by Carl Zigrosser. 208p $17.50 Univ. of Mo. press

741.092

ISBN 0-8262-0100-8

LC 71-134016

These drawings may be grouped in two sections. "In the main, Dehn's pen drawings of the 1920's caricature European bourgeois life in cafés, jazz houses, and public parks. . . . The second and much smaller group of drawings spans the 1920's to the 1960's, and consists of either washed or colored landscapes and cityscapes." (Library J) Chronology.

"A handsome book with photographic portraits of Dehn, leading graphic social commentator of the 1930's . . . with 91 black-and-white reproductions of ink and wash drawings selected by his wife. . . . Dehn's irony, somewhat similar to that of George Grosz, was perhaps less politically oriented, and more concerned with an overall view of sham, whether it be in Vienna, New York, or in Waterville, Minnesota, the place of his birth."

Choice 9:202 Ap '72 190w

"After the four-page introduction . . . this is a straight collection of reproductions of Dehn's drawings. . . . The social satire [in the early drawings] is amusing but rather mild. . . . Most of [the later ones] are in an 'impressionistic' style, the finest relying strongly on wash effects and giving the summary and spontaneous feeling of 'Chinese' landscapes. The reproductions and six photographs of the artist are well printed, and the book as a whole is a very attractive presentation of this somewhat lesser known American figure. Recommended for larger art libraries." Andrew Robison

Library J 96:2486 Ag '71 160w

DEHN, VIRGINIA, comp. Adolf Dehn drawings. See Dehn, A.

DEIGHTON, LEN. Close-up. 381p $7.95 Athenaeum pubs.

LC 77-190404

This novel portrays the life and associates of movie star Marshall Stone. "The plot turns on Stone's biography, as it is being written by Peter Anson, . . . married to Stone's ex-wife." (Newsweek)

Reviewed by S. A. Smith

Library J 97:2641 Ag '72 70w

"[This] cleverly assembled story of . . . a British superstar minted in Hollywood is scathing and bitter. [It] is an earnest demolition job rather than a send-up, an old-fashioned exposé . . . [which] leaves no stones unturned; and Deighton brings his foot down on what he finds, grinding down every falsity of an industry obsessed with itself." Douglas Dunn

New Statesman 83:756 Je 2 '72 150w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p28 Je 25 '72 170w

New Yorker 48:94 Je 24 '72 70w

"Neither Stone nor any of the supporting characters emerges [from this novel] with the ring of truth—or even the crinkle of tinsel. . . . Anson's revelations wouldn't make a Photoplay addict blush. Stone, of course, is vain and insecure. Anson, of course, is cynical. Leo Koolman, the businessman-producer, is venal and Jewish. Deighton's penchant for circuitous plots that strain the reader's credulity and patience is as pronounced as ever. . . . [He] believes the film industry is run by cretins who pander to youth and who would be content to turn out nothing but trash as long as it turned a profit. . . . We can share Deighton's concern without accepting his art." Arthur Cooper

Newsweek 79:86 Je 26 '72 150w

"[The author] shows that beneath the movie-man's glitter, beneath all his hypocrisy, narcissism and greed, beneath the gaudy and hysterical exterior, beats a heart of ice. . . . Stone's mumbo-jumbo world of conceit and anxiety is brilliantly realized. . . . The film industry is in many ways the ideal subject for Mr Deighton's talents. In a business so obsessed with surface he can exploit his eye for what one might (reluctantly) call the 'furniture' of the world. And only occasionally does the writing become as slack as the world it describes. . . . On the whole, though, Mr Deighton seems to have got over his tiring revolts against style . . . and to have settled down to what he does best: reporting, lucidly and readably, on what his imagination sees."

TLS p677 Je 16 '72 550w

DEINHARD, HANNA. Meaning and expression; toward a sociology of art. 120p il $8.50 Beacon press

701 Art criticism. Art—Psychology. Art and society

ISBN 0-8070-6664-8 LC 75-119676

This book is an "analysis of the connection between two conceptions of art: (1) every great work is timeless; (2) every work is an expression of its time." (Choice)

"A precisely reasoned and thoroughly researched book, recommended for students and advanced scholars in the sociology of arts and related disciplines. . . . The concepts of 'meaning' and 'expression' are vital to [the author's] analysis. 'Expression' is found in the visual nature, and it is in this that a painting does or does not transcend its era. 'Meaning' exists in the associated ideas—political, religious, etc. Four paintings (Quarton, Giotto, Bruegel, and Rubens) are analyzed with a precision and insight that make exciting reading independent of any theoretical purposes. The final chapter is a discussion of the changing relationship of the artist and his public as society has redefined the function of art. It is a beginning effort to get at the fundamental sociological question of the mutual interaction and influence of art and society."

Choice 8:212 Ap '71 170w

"[Her] theory of the sociology of art . . . [the author] contends, can resolve problems which have plagued the houses of art history and aesthetics for years. Her arguments are complex, compact, often elliptical; and the book covers other aspects of the general theory of art neglected here in order to present the central force of the argument. Although I am impressed with the ingenuity, the logic, and the use of the dialectic, I am still not convinced." D. A. Mariner

Contemp Sociol 1:114 Mr '72 2800w

"[This] book, first published in Germany in 1967, makes an erudite contribution toward the sociology of art. . . . This is very solid, competent art history with a dash of sociology, which may be no more than another name for historical context out of which art grows. A small but densely reasoned book with a large intellectual scope. No index." Peter Flinesten

Library J 96:185 Ja 15 '71 70w

DEJONG, MEINDERT. The almost all-white rabbit cat; il. by H. B. Vestal. 113p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

Cats—Stories

LC 72-178599

"The city is strange and new to Barney, who has just moved there from a small town in the mountains. What Barney misses most are his white rabbits. So when an almost-white cat appears in the apartment, it seems a sort of miracle. The cat gets out and Barney runs after her, locking himself out. Barney's parents become involved in a wild chase, and their first-hand experience with the urban crush convinces the reunited family to return to the wider spaces and freedom of the country. . . . Ages nine to eleven." (Sat R)

"[This book] seems to say we're all children at heart and wouldn't it be great if you could get your parents to give up their cheerless, demanding adult life and regress ever backwards with you? Typically, rural life is defined as nurturing and good. Urban life is punishing and bad. One stands for childhood and the other, we assume, for age. . . . The language is forced—a kind of borderline baby talk—but the fantasy is suitably wicked and keeps you going. It is a giant no-no intended for children and not literal-minded reviewers and parents." Julia Whedon

Book World p11 (children's issue) My 7 '72 180w

"Overlong, uneven, verging too-often on TV situation comedy, [this] attempts to show a small boy tilting the windmills of loneliness in a big city apartment. Alas, his adventures are taken over by the grownups." D. K.

Christian Science Monitor pB6 My 4 '72 30w

Horn Bk 48:369 Ag '72 140w

"Though the plot—jerked along by the frequent escape of an animal from someone's grasp—may amuse some young readers or listeners, the story as a whole presents a questionable picture of unliberated motherhood (and childhood) and the nature of urban living." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 97:2236 Je 15 '72 150w

Reviewed by Jean Fritz

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ap 23 '72 20w

"A new book by an author who has won almost every award is greeted with interest; this story is competently written, but the slender plot is a bit labored, and many of the minor characters (a hippie, various tenants who keep a wallaby, a lion cub, and a huge snake) seem contrived." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:81 My 20 '72 120w

DE JONG, MEINDERT. The Easter cat; il. by Lillian Hoban. 110p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

Cats—Stories

LC 78-141933

"Living with . . . her mother and an adult brother, Millicent was lonely. She understood that she couldn't have a cat in the house because her mother was allergic to them, but a cat was the one thing in the world she wanted. So it seemed a miracle when she went downstairs at dawn on Easter Sunday and found a kitten. . . . Ages eight to ten." (Sat R)

Horn Bk 47:382 Ag '71 150w

"Confirmed young cat lovers may enjoy this story of a little girl who yearns for a cat . . . but many will find it unpleasant. . . . For each reader whose dreams are vicariously fulfilled by this tale, another may be put off by the author's preoccupation with crawly settings: save for a brief interlude in an alley, the story places Millie in the dark of an uneasy night, in the dark of a spooky cellar . . . and in a deserted rat-infested warehouse. The gloom is lightened only a little by the tenderness and joy of the child with her pet; the author's usual felicity of style is absent, as is the sustained poignancy of his The Last Little Cat [BRD 1962]. . . . Mrs. Hoban's drawings are also below expectation: her people are gnomish." Janet French

Library J 96:2363 Jl '71 200w

Reviewed by Gillian Tindall

New Statesman 83:760 Je 2 '72 20w

"Although [Millicent's] subsequent retreat to a secret room under the porch is told at rather protracted length, the happy ending is both believable and satisfying, and the story has an engaging warmth and gentle humor." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 54:46 My 15 '71 100w

"Not for those prone to nightmares, the story is packed with emotional and physical suspense. . . . 'Petrifying scary' it all is indeed. But Millicent's love for stray kittens makes her use [her] hide-out to escape with her newly found Blue Angel from a detective and her searching family. She is discovered, as is a solution to her problems. The story moves dramatically from one critical moment to the next without sentiment, but with total understanding of a lonely child's needs."

TLS p475 Ap 28 '72 230w

DE KADT, EMANUEL. Catholic radicals in Brazil. 304p $9.75 Oxford

322 Movement for Basic Education. Brazil

—Politics and government. Catholics in Brazil

ISBN 0-19-214984-9 LC [72-20402]

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by G. B. Siegel

Am Pol Sci R 66:635 Je '72 950w

Reviewed by G. M. Quesada

Contemp Sociol 1:458 S '72 750w

Reviewed by Peter Flynn

Pol Sci Q 87:702 D '72 150w

DEKMEJIAN, R. HRAIR. Egypt under Nasir; a study in political dynamics. 368p il $10 State univ. of N.Y. press

962 Egypt—Politics and government. Nasser, Gamal Abdel, President United Arab Republic
ISBN 0-87395-080-1 LC 70-152520

This book "deals with the advent of the 1952 revolution; the nature, propagation, and institutionalization of Nasser's charisma; the construction of Egyptian ideology, including the rewriting of history, Pan-Arabism, Egyptian-Arab nationalism, and 'Arab' socialism; and the attempt to create a new government and new political institutions." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"A lucid and readable analysis of interest to many besides the professional social scientist. Drawing both on Arabic materials and on studies by Western scholars, [the author] exposes the shallowness of supposing that Gamal Abdel Nasser was a second-rate fascist dictator or the dupe of the Kremlin. He argues persuasively that Nasser was the greatest Arab hero since Saladin and Muhammad and that his popularity among Egyptians survived almost unscathed a long list of failures." J. B. Christopher

Am Hist R 77:811 Je '72 850w

"Professor Dekmejian's sound and ambitious analysis of the Nasir era as it related to the attempted internal transformation is both timely and welcome. . . . [However] the attempt to fit actual development into an a priori framework results in a somewhat static, artificial analysis, which often overlooks the tactical, manipulative, reactive genius that was Nasir's political forte. . . . The author also exaggerates Nasir's readiness to adopt drastic measures after the June 1967 war." A. Z. Rubinstein

Ann Am Acad 400:157 Mr '72 550w
Choice 9:710 JI/Ag '72 170w

Reviewed by R. M. Burrell
Encounter 39:69 JI '72 200w

"This painstakingly researched study of aspects of Egypt's politics, based on field work and Western and Arabic sources, is one of the best books available on the subject. . . . It describes and analyzes the power elite in great detail and provides an extensive discussion of the 1965-1969 period which helps explain much about the Sadat regime. Though it gives only the facts needed to illustrate and support its conclusions and is unnecessarily technical and academic in its presentation, it is essential for special collections." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 96:3618 N 1 '71 110w

"The trouble with [this] book by [the] associate professor of political science at the State University of New York, is that reading it is hard going, anyway for the British public. . . . Its techniques are those of the think-tank. . . . Most of [the author's] charts, figures and tables seem fascinating to me, but patience is needed in evaluating them. . . . This is a book for specialists not only in Arab affairs but in the 'dynamics analysis' approach to them as well." Geoffrey McDermott

New Statesman 83:830 Je 16 '72 250w

Reviewed by Miles Copeland
N Y Times Bk R p2 My 21 '72 390w

DELACROIX, EUGENE. Selected letters, 1813-1863; sel. and tr. by Jean Stewart; with an introd. by John Russell. 414p il pl $15 St Martins

759.4
LC 70-150246

This book contains material from volumes of Delacroix's correspondence previously published in French. "From these letters, we can follow the various aspects of Delacroix's life, including the details of his constant money problems and his developing relationships with the famous and not-so-famous personalities of his time, particularly his intimacy with George Sand and his lifelong friendship with Soulier and Pierret." (Library J) Bibliography. Index of correspondents. General index.

"[Delacroix's Journal] is known to the English-speaking world through selections. . . . His letters however, have only now been made accessible to us through the admirable efforts of Miss Stewart, who turned [his] highly polished and often poetical language . . . into fluid and lucid English. Although we are given here only an extract from the five-volume Correspondance générale and the one-volume supplement, Lettres intimes, correspondence inédite, it is enough to convince us that the author was not only a profound thinker but also a kindhearted, charming, excitable person, with a sense of humor and a capacity for love. . . . This richly annotated, well-illustrated volume will offer much pleasure to the reader who seeks more than factual information, and who will return to Delacroix's pictures with a fuller understanding of the man who created them." Alfred Werner

Am Scholar 41:158 winter '71-'72 1700w
Choice 9:202 Ap '72 180w

"While the letters do not disclose as much about Delacroix himself as we might wish, we learn a good deal from them about his philosophy of art and his quarrels with the French art establishment. In addition, Delacroix is revealed as a profound student of human psychology. His intense reaction to a hunting experience, his thoughts at the time of his mother's death, and his growing awareness of what it means to grow old and become bored, all read like the compelling parts of a Proustian novel." Henry Halpern

Library J 96:4084 D 15 '71 200w

"Russell's long introduction to the Letters is a valuable and careful account of Delacroix's career and position as a painter. . . . The reader must be grateful for his instruction." V. S. Pritchett

New Statesman 81:562 Ap 23 '71 2350w

DE LAS CASAS, BARTOLOMÉ. See Casas, B. de las

DELAUNAY, SONIA. Sonia Delaunay alphabet. unp il $4.95 Crowell

411 Alphabet books. Nursery rhymes
ISBN 0-690-75228-X LC 72-172414

"Taking the letters of the alphabet as basic forms, . . . [Delaunay] has created a series of paintings. . . . Accompanying every painting is a brief rhyme beginning with the letter featured in the art. All the rhymes have been chosen from the . . . literature of childhood." (Publisher's note)

"[This book is] an oversized ABC which the blurb promises will not only teach the child the alphabet but will also 'suggest the infinite possibilities that can be expressed in just these twenty-six letters—beauty, humor, truth. . . . The truth is that while the book is an attractive and sometimes successful attempt to illustrate the symbolism of letters, the nursery rhymes that accompany the pictures are for the most part superfluous and the designs for the letters themselves often confusing. The child who tried to use Miss Delaunay's F would find out what a real F looked like when he got his paper back." Sidney Long

Book World p6 (children's issue) My 7 '72 130w

"For one reason or the other very few of the acknowledged masters of contemporary French painting have produced works expressly for children. So Sonia Delaunay's 'Alphabet' . . . is a rare and fortuitous exception. . . . The book is large, squarish, handsomely designed and beautifully produced from a technical point of view. The quality of paper and printing are both unusually high for a book in this price range. . . . In most cases the illustrations are variations of each letter form, but there are a few departures from this principle that seem perverse and somewhat confusing." Milton Glaser

N Y Times Bk R p8 Mr 26 '72 360w

DELAVERNAY, ÉMILE. D. H. Lawrence, the man and his work: the formative years; 1885-1919; tr. from the French by Katharine M. Delavenay. 592p il $25 Southern Ill. univ. press

B or 92 Lawrence, David Herbert
ISBN 0-8093-0603-4 LC 70-190586

In this, the first of a projected two-volume study of Lawrence, the author covers Lawrence's life from his birth to the composition of Aaron's Rod (BRD 1922). He "traces every work of Lawrence to its genesis in his life, every character in his novels to somebody he actually met, and every one of his ideas to something he may be supposed to have read." (New Statesman)

"The strength of this book is its vast amount of original research, even though the author has an extremely mechanical notion of the relation between intellectual sources and works of the imagination. . . . Scholars will have to reckon with this book, but it is hard to think of another literary study so nasty. . . . If you care about Lawrence, this volume will make you very angry." Keith Cushman

Library J 97:3590 N 1 '72 160w

"Delavenay's study of Lawrence belongs to a special genre, the majestic French doctoral dissertation which is ritually obliged to go over all the ground, however often it has been gone over before. . . . There is nothing of importance here that is not to be found in the work of Harry T. Moore or Edward Nehls's [D. H. Lawrence: A Composite Biography, 3 vols., BRD 1957-1959]. . . . As for the theoretical writings, Delavenay expatiates at length on their confusions and leaves them as confused as ever, with only the slightest attempt to trace the hidden and continuous stream of life that runs through them. He obviously doesn't like Lawrence much; and though no thorough and detailed treatment of the Lawrentian pilgrimage could be dull, 500 pages of controlled distaste get as near to it as is decently possible. . . . But the large-scale French academic treatise has the merits of its defects. If the ground has been well travelled Delavenay has gone over it himself rather than relying on the reports of other travellers." Graham Hough

New Statesman 84:164 Ag 4 '72 1300w

"One of [the author's] announced intentions is to offer a quasi-scientific environmental study that will 'describe and circumscribe' Lawrence 'with reference to . . . the specific features of the time and place of his psychological and intellectual formation.' But his book goes beyond simple description to become a remarkably hostile and tendentious representation both of Lawrence's intrinsic qualities and of the milieu in which they found expression. . . . The pages that Delavenay devotes to literary analysis are without special impact or novelty except for some valuable work on Lawrence's successive revisions of his stories." Paul Delany

N Y Times Bk R p4 D 10 '72 2150w

"The French edition of . . . Delavenay's large book . . . was discussed at length in the TLS on December 18, 1970, in a review which was strongly critical of the effects of the author's 'genetic' approach on the appreciation of Lawrence's art (the original sub-title was 'L'homme et la genèse de son œuvre'). The English version now published is, as Professor Delavenay tells us, 'in the greater part direct translation, but a few chapters have been remodelled, newly available material has been incorporated and certain factual or interpretative sections have been as far as possible brought up to date'. The spirit of the book has on the whole changed little: . . . [but] it should be noted that the appendixes of documents are not included in the English version; we thus lose the extremely interesting collection of letters written to Professor Delavenay by Jessie Chambers, included virtually complete in the French edition of his work."

TLS p680 Je 16 '72 500w

DELBANCO, NICHOLAS. In the middle distance; a novel. 251p $6.95 Morrow

LC 72-151915

This novel is "really two books about two main figures, both named Nicholas Delbanco. The youthful Nicholas keeps a diary and may or may not be a lay figure for the 29-year-old author. . . . The middle-aged Nicholas . . . is the main character in a series of prose sketches." (Christian Science Monitor) He "is an architect in flight from an unsatisfying marriage, his young son's death, the numbing gap between past desiring and present reality. He spends a summer at a secluded farmhouse, where . . . [he keeps a] journal detailing his household repairs, and noting reflections on the disorders in his life." (Library J)

"At 48, an age beyond the exact mezzo del cammin' of Dante's middle distance, Nicholas Delbanco, the protagonist whose name is the same as the 29 year-old author's, takes stock of his confused, troubled life. . . . Like Grasse 3/23/66 [BRD 1968], the present book is a summary of losses, a threnody to disappointment. By now, with the publication of his fifth novel, Delbanco sustains his goat-song nearly perfectly. The sad music flows, but without real tears. The writer's domestic tragedies lack variety and surprise, without which even the strongest passions lose force and simply become a record of numbing private grief. Yet we must still be patient with Delbanco, for in real life as in his art he has plenty of time before he reaches the 'middle distance.' Recommended for the big libraries."

Choice 9:211 Ap '72 170w

"I once ate a bowl of sauce bearnaise straight, and I liked it. In the same way I enjoy the special flavors of special writers: Jorge Luis Borges, John Barth . . . L. Woiwode, Richard Brautigan. Different as they are, important though they may be, I think of them all as bizarre nosh. It can be argued that in literature these days the condiments have become the menu. Nicholas Delbanco is a condimental writer whose flavor is still indistinct. . . . The point is not that [he] lacks ability, even first-rate ability. He has phrase and cadence; he has a shutter in his eye that clicks whenever an epiphany falls into frame. What he lacks is what so many young writers of the avant-garde seem to lack: a passion for people at least as intense as their affair with words, an inkling in the heart that can tell what is valuable from what is merely precious." Brad Darrach

Christian Science Monitor p28 D 2 '71 550w

Reviewed by B. D. Allen

Library J 96:3157 O 1 '71 140w

"Few of the impurities and all of the riches of [Delbanco's] earlier books find their way into his new novel. His previous tendency to remain aloof from life's passions has emerged as a gift for objective portrayal of the heat of life. His predilection for the arcane and the precious has led him to the presentation of meaningful mystery. And his lust for the manipulation of language, formerly his greatest sin, has enabled him to create an enlivening, sensuous and distinctive narrative style. In the Middle Distance' announces the ripening of a formidable and clearly, an indispensable novelist." Alan Cheuse

N Y Times Bk R p6 S 19 '71 1750w

DELDERFIELD, R. F. For my own amusement. 381p $8.95 Simon & Schuster

B or 92

SBN 671-21125-0 LC 77-165474

Most of these essays were first published in book form in England with the titles: For my own amusement, and Overture for beginners. The author of God is an Englishman (BRD 1970) describes his childhood, adolescence, experiences as a provincial newspaper editor, sources and methods as a writer, his RAF service in World War II, and reactions to a visit to the U.S.A. in 1970.

"Readers of R. F. Delderfield's novels will enjoy this collection of sketches and essays, freehand drawings of the world in which the author grew up, nostalgic reminiscence and non-judgmental afterthoughts of a tireless raconteur. . . . There are insightful observations . . . and there are topics broached that one would wish explored: the suburb as 'frontier'; the fifty percent of Britain that remained uninvolved in World War II. The style is deliberately light but not always felicitous." M. A. Weinig

Best Sell 32:253 S 1 '72 270w

"Over the last decade, Delderfield's long novels have given pleasure to thousands in England and the U.S. This collection of autobiographical pieces describes his life against the background of events in England. . . . As he demonstrates, all his experiences provided characters for his novels. Delderfield is, like the best of his characters, a decent, commonsensical Englishman; and he is one of the best storytellers of our time. Recommended." R. W. Ryan

Library J 97:489 F 1 '72 120w

DELDERFIELD, R. F. To serve them all my days. 638p $8.95 Simon & Schuster

SBN 671-21371-7 LC 72-81349

This "novel traces the career of David Powlett-Jones, a young Welshman, from the day he comes to Bamfylde, a boy's public school in Devon, fresh from a traumatic period of service on the western front in World War I, to the closing chapters which find him headmaster, as World War II ends." (Library J)

Reviewed by Cornelia Holbert

Best Sell 32:295 O 1 '72 200w

"Rich in characterization, a vivid panorama of English life and English history, this is an old-fashioned novel in the best sense of the term. Despite its length, Delderfield's narrative skill carries the book along. One lives with P. J., as he is affectionately known, through an early first marriage that ends in tragedy, a second marriage, and the birth of a son. Along the way, we get to know the boys, the other masters, indeed, a whole gallery of characters who are drawn with consummate skill. The 'square' values (patience, tolerance, comradeship), which seem either to have been lost or held up to ridicule in our time, inform this novel. . . . With [it] one feels certain that [Delderfield] is assured of a secure place in English literature." A. C. Ringer

DELDERFIELD, R. F.—Continued

Library J 97:3615 N 1 '72 160w

"Is another 'Goodbye, Mr Chips' [by J. Hill-ton, BKD 1934] what the world is waiting for? The late R. F. Delderfield evidently thought so, and his judgment has thus far been impeccable. So here is a schoolmaster's cavalcade of England between World Wars, told in the author's best stand-up style, and rife with episodes designed to pluck at the heartstrings. . . . Mr. Delderfield's vast public will find here the author's John Bullish faith in middle-class values, and his undimmed facility as a story teller." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p42 O 8 '72 200w

New Yorker 48:195 N 4 '72 140w

"Delderfield, an Englishman who died at 60 last January, . . . was a Victorian three-decker novelist born out of his time. . . . [He] writes as if such innovators as James, Proust and Joyce had never existed. The result is that he ignores not only the changing forms of the modern novel but also the changing sensibilities that those forms reflect. . . . In Delderfield's fictional tourism, the reader is given duty-free passage through a world that may resemble the all too real world back home. But the scenery is slightly too synthetic and the humanity too much at arm's length to do more than entertain him in passing. Thus a book like Days is only partly faithful to its models: it is Hardy without vision, Galsworthy without bite. But for the undemanding reader—or for any reader in an undemanding mood—it is as comfortable as an old couch. The Aunt Sally in all of us is going to love it." Christopher Porterfield

Time 100:92 S 18 '72 700w

DELDERFIELD, R. F. Too few for drums.

253p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

SBN 671-65195-1 LC 78-162712

The hero of this novel "is Ensign Graham, who at nineteen suddenly finds himself in charge of a motley crew of eight that includes one veteran soldier, one ex-chimney sweep, a pair of condemned felons, and a drummer boy, still a child. The men, who have become separated from the British army, are trapped inside the French lines, and it is the untried Graham who must lead them across wild and unknown terrain to join their forces in Lisbon. . . . [He and his men are] upheld by desperation, courage—and the calm wisdom of a camp follower, Gwyneth." (Book World) Originally published in England in 1964.

"Recommended for junior and senior high and for adults interested in reading a fast-paced, quick-reading 'war story.'" J. C. Gray

Best Sell 31:386 N 15 '71 150w [YA]

"Delderfield, the English novelist whose family sagas are enormously popular in this country, proves himself an equally good storyteller for young people in [this] . . . novel set in Portugal during the Napoleonic wars. . . . [Gwyneth is] remarkable both as woman and strategist. Her relations with Graham, whom she transforms from a fearful, uncertain boy into a mature, confident man provide the book's most moving and memorable moments." Polly Goodwin

Book World p6 children's issue) N 7 '71 190w [YA]

Christian Science Monitor pB5 N 11 '71 60w

Reviewed by Lyle Wignes

Library J 97:783 F 15 '72 250w [YA]

"[The author] tells a very tough and convincing story—up to a point. He marches his tattered troopers through hardship and hell-fire, across a wild and ravaged landscape, sparing us any fairytales about the joys of battle en route. . . . All well and good . . . until I realized we were headed for fairyland after all. You see, one of the major characters is a camp follower, Gwyneth [but she] is no ordinary camp follower, it turns out. She knows as much about the enemy's ways as any British general, she can fashion a meal from little more than husks and bones, and—Corinne Calvet, where are you?—she can turn boys into men practically overnight. . . . [Finally, Gwyneth] comes to dominate Delderfield's story, and it's downhill to soggy ground from there on." Robert Berkvist

N Y Times Bk R p8 D 19 '71 440w

DELEUZE, GILLES. Proust and signs; tr. from the French by Richard Howard. 167p $6.50; pa $2.95 Braziller

843 Proust, Marcel

SBN 0-8076-0645-6; 0-8076-0641-3 (pa)

LC 70-184876

This "essay is an inquiry into the meaning of the novel which its author called in Search of Lost Time; it is a discovery of how that meaning is offered, articulated, and achieved. . . . [The author shows] how for Proust experience is to be apprehended only by its sign or hieroglyph, whose double symbol is the chance encounter and the necessary thought: 'accidental and inevitable.'" (Publisher's note)

"[This book] is a concise review or explication of Proust's thought in [Remembrance of Things Past]. . . . Throughout, many references are made directly to Proust's work, so that he who is familiar with the philosopher can easily view the work in retrospect. Because of its facile readability, however, 'Proust and Signs' is an excellent introduction to Proust. The entire book is an investigation of the signs to truth which are found in living a human existence. . . . Of particular interest is Mr. Deleuze's manner of linking Proust with the thought of his time, in particular with that of Henri Bergson. It is in the nature of memory that they share opinion." Gerard Dougher

Best Sell 32:304 O 1 '72 350w

"[This is a] brief but significant and original contribution to Proustian criticism, faithfully translated. . . . Deleuze assumes a thorough familiarity with A la recherche and finds the source of its meaning in four categories of 'signs it emits' (in ascending order of importance: worldliness, love, sensory impressions, and art), and in Proust's 'search' for truth through them. . . . Deleuze notes the intellectual basis of the first two categories of signs . . . insists that Proust's truth is non-philosophical."

Choice 9:1137 N '72 160w

"Deleuze is convinced that Proust's writings are the product of an inner 'experience of signs which mobilize the involuntary and the unconscious.' According to Deleuze, all creative works produce signs which affect the reader and are interpreted by him. . . . Proust's magnum opus has been reduced by Deleuze to a series of meaningful signs, a new if not always a broad manner of viewing Remembrance of Things Past." B. L. Knapp

Library J 97:876 Mr 1 '72 160w

DELGADO, ALAN. Victorian entertainment.

112p il $6.95 Am. Heritage

309.142 Great Britain—Social conditions.

Great Britain—Social life and customs

ISBN 0-07-016245-X LC 74-155881

An account of "popular entertainment from the seaside holiday to the public execution, taking in on its way such delights as the theatre, music-hall, circus and pleasure garden." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"While this is essentially a pleasant bit of fluff on the decorous and innocent merriments of an uncommonly stiff period of British history, it does have some mild reference value, chiefly for its many illustrations which are helpful for the study of costume in particular. The 'entertainments' are those of gentry and common folk, and the book as a whole makes one wonder how any of them survived the boredom. For larger browsing collections." W. C. Allen

Library J 96:4091 D 15 '71 70w

"A sketchily-organized, fully-illustrated scamper round the field of Victorian [past-times]. . . . The general tone is patronizing: the Victorians are quaint old fuddie-duddies from whom Modern Man recoils, giggling; and such information as is provided is not always correct. . . . Though the pictures are amusing and some of the photographs remarkable, they seem to have been selected arbitrarily, and too many of them are without provenance."

TLS p790 J1 2 '71 140w

DELILLO, DON. End zone. 242p $5.95 Houghton
ISBN 0-395-13645-8 LC 77-177544

The college players in this novel about football "study subjects like Mexican geography and airport commissary management. . . . Gary, running back and hero-narrator, is the perennial exile who takes his talents from college to college—along with a guilty fascination for the hypothesis of nuclear disaster. [Among the other characters are] a Jewish lineman named Bloomberg [and] . . . a stout girl named Myna . . . who counsels balancing history with science fiction." (Time) Parts of this book, greatly rearranged, appeared as a short story in The New Yorker.

"In centering his novel on . . . isolated dropouts philosophizing on the religious dimensions of impending doom, Don DeLillo implies a surrounding chaos that is global. His subject is the sanity of the refugees in their own land pursuing simplicity in ancient warrior games. But by implication the universal insanity of a world always on the verge of holocaust is the real subject of the book. . . . Through the religious, psychological and absurdly humorous themes of the narrative, language itself emerges as a major concern. It is as if the book were an attempt to compile a last repository of a lost language and simplicity of life. DeLillo's success in dealing with such a vast thematic scope makes this a visionary novel and a major triumph of the imagination." G. M. Knoll

America 127:47 J1 22 '72 340w

Reviewed by P. T. Majkut
Best Sell 32:90 My 15 '72 250w

Reviewed by S. K. Oberbeck
Book World p15 Ap 16 '72 600w

"In football, patterns are finite and thus predictable, limitations determine method, and position is crucial. . . . DeLillo draws upon these significations in writing a sports novel curiously about and not about sport. Having early discovered that 'jock' is an easy identity to assume, behind which one has real freedom for introspection, the whole sick crew of this Texas college team seeks identity as much as victory. In the system of the novel, playing football is end zone, a free, timeless yet temporary moment when struggle ceases. Most of the players finally opt to remain there, in football, which DeLillo sees to be indeed an end zone, as a means of escaping the real problems of life. And if DeLillo understands this, he also chooses to remain clear of any larger world in this novel." Robert Buckeye

Library J 97:1825 My 15 '72 120w

Reviewed by Roger Sale
N Y Rev of Books 18:29 Je 29 '72 1300w

Reviewed by T. R. Edwards
N Y Times Bk R p1 Ap 9 '72 1150w

"A humorous pastiche of jargon, clichés, slang, wisecracks, and strange flights of lyricism. . . . Much of the book is parody . . . but other parts seem to find poetry in jargon. . . . The book is an attempt to get into football, sometimes critically and sometimes with pleasure. It also explores the similarities between football and warfare, and Gary's dialogues with his Air Force R.O.T.C. instructor are just as jargon-filled as . . . his practice sessions with his coaches. Mr. DeLillo is fascinated by the violence in both football and warfare, but he seems undecided what to do about it."

New Yorker 48:145 My 6 '72 270w

"The gear, mechanics and incantations of American football would challenge a Claude Lévi-Strauss. Confronting them as a novelist, Don DeLillo shows a touch of the structuralist anthropologist too. End Zone is a cool, plotless, witty novel of football as technology and necessary ritual. . . . It isn't so much that the characters are bigger than life. DeLillo's overly schematic vision of life is too small for them."

Time 99:94 Ap 17 '72 130w

DELLA BELLA, STEFANO. See Bella, S. della

DELMER, SEFTON. The counterfeit spy. 256p $6.95 Harper

940.54 Spies. World War, 1939-1945—Secret service
ISBN 0-06-011019-8 LC 71-95948

The author describes the work of the "Spaniard who took the role of double agent in Great Britain. The Nazis came to regard him as their master spy. . . . All the while he was completely under the command of the British Double-Cross operation, which directed his activities as he built up a network of a score of fictitious German spies. Unaware that the quantities of information this Spaniard was providing them had been . . . doctored by the British, the Nazis awarded [him] an Iron Cross." (Sat R) Index.

"The book is packed with details of places and things some of the information being unessential to the largely personal narrative. But it all tends to lend reality, and it is all . . . interesting. . . . The facts we may accept as being as trustworthy as most wartime history which is based partly on word of mouth. And, serious student or simply interested reader . . . will be absolutely fascinated, particularly with the details of the deception which held whole divisions of the German army in Calais, far from Normandy."

Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 31:411 D 15 '71 330w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p11 My 24 '72 160w

Reviewed by A. S. Birkos
Library J 97:194 Ja 15 '72 110w

"Some YA's may get mired in the many details, but the book offers a fascinating history of the World War II period with considerable insight into British and German intelligence operations." Virginia Borland
Library J 97:294 Ja 15 '72 130w [YA]

"Delmer—an Englishman who has worked as a journalist and served in the Foreign Office—has presented a well-constructed story, which contains many hitherto unrevealed details. Yet the hero, who here is given the pseudonym 'Cato,' emerges rather larger than life. Furthermore, the account has the flavor of a government-sanitized version. . . . [The book does not] reveal the Spaniard's true identity." H. H. Ransom

Sat R 55:75 F 26 '72 220w

DELORIA, VINE, comp. Of utmost good faith, comp. by Vine Deloria, Jr. 262p $10 Straight arrow bks.

970.5 Indians of North America—Government relations. Indians of North America—History
LC 76-141473

This "anthology of documents dealing with the relations between the U.S. government and the American Indians . . . includes judicial rulings, treaties, speeches, acts and agreements from 1830 to the present, with a running commentary throughout." (Library J)

"Although a work of this kind may appear dry and dull, the underlying tragedy and the apparent cruelty and neglect of the government cannot be overlooked. Any school with a program of American Indian studies will need this; public libraries will also recognize its value both as a circulating item and a reference tool. It is not indexed but the table of contents is complete." Regina Minudri
Library J 96:1832 My 15 '71 130w [YA]

"The title comes from a 1789 ordinance for the Northwest Territory, which begins: 'The utmost good faith should always be observed towards the Indians. . . . That this direction was not followed is shown in this indispensable collection. . . . What lawyer Deloria (author of 'Custer Died for Your Sins' [BRD 1969]) has done is to build a 'case'—a legal brief for future Indian action—if the Indian movement continues to flex its muscles."

N Y Times Bk R p44 My 23 '71 80w

DELIVING, MICHAEL. A shadow of himself. 192p $4.95 Scribner

ISBN 684-12585-4 LC 76-162768

This story is "about Bob Eddison, an American art dealer, who returns to England to marry a girl he had met earlier. When he purchases a painting at a local auction, he becomes involved in a previously unsolved murder and nearly achieves the same fate (death by murder) himself before he is able to solve the mystery." (Best Sell)

"[This interesting] story is well-written and well-plotted and provides some interesting character sketches and description of an English village."

Best Sell 31:520 F 15 '72 60w

DELVING, MICHAEL—Continued

Reviewed by H. C. Veit

Library J 97:520 F 1 '72 130w

"Delving has a feeling for locale and people, and introduces us to some interesting characters along the way. He has an easy, relaxed writing style, and a quiet sense of humor." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p40 Mr 12 '72 160w

TLS p783 J1 7 '72 20w

DE MAN, PAUL. Blindness & insight; essays in the rhetoric of contemporary criticism. 189p $6.95 Oxford

809 Literature—History and criticism
LC 77-83011

"Literary studies in America and Europe today are often held to be shaped by tensions between thematic, structural, and phenomenological criticism. Not so long ago critical approaches were said to be historical, formalist, or existential. In these nine . . . essays Professor de Man holds that such labels . . . are often misleading when applied to the study of literature: the best critical insights are frequently the least systematic, and an emphasis on schools or movements 'tends to blot out the individuality of the finest contributions.' . . . [He] concentrates upon patterns that recur among all critics, whatever their nationality or method, and . . . seeks for these in certain discrepancies between critical theory and practice. . . . [He] also explores the significance of such trends as structuralism in France and the New Criticism in America. In two final essays he investigates broad questions of literary history and literary modernity." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This] is the most subtly argued book of its kind I have read: the product of a continuously alive intelligence. . . . [It is the] question of a privileged mode of language or point of view—under attack in Continental thought from the side of structuralism, anthropology, linguistics and Marxism—that de Man's book scrupulously examines. . . . [The study] does not develop de Man's theories in any systematic way. This is unfortunate because too many questions remain unsettled, or lost in the sinuous prose. . . . But it analyzes with precision writers who have provided European thought with new conceptual models and who are gradually becoming known in America." G. H. Hartman

Am Scholar 41:146 winter '71-'72 1300w

"Not only has . . . [the author] developed a theory that the best insights of critics are due to their blindness, but he has resolutely put this theory to the test by misinterpreting critics in an attempt to produce insights. If, as he argues, the language of literature and criticism 'causes blindness in those who come into close contact with it,' he must bear witness to the blindness of other critics by blinding himself. . . . The result is a book that prefigures the ambivalent attitude one is forced to take toward it: real insights into critical rhetoric are undermined by the interpretive process out of which they emerge. . . . De Man's book fails as a study of the complexities of reading because of the deliberate blindness of misinterpretation and a less deliberate willingness to be blinded by the splendors of ontology. The discussion of ontological themes is brilliant despite blindness, not because of it." Jonathan Culler

Yale R 61:259 D '71 5450w

DE MENIL, ADELAIDE. Out of the silence. See Reid, W.

DEMOS, JOHN, ed. Remarkable providences, 1600-1760; ed. with introd. and notes by John Demos. 382p $7.50; pa $3.95 Braziller

917.3 U.S.—Civilization. U.S.—Social conditions. U.S.—History—Colonial period—Sources

SBN 0-8076-0617-0; 0-8076-0616-2 (pa)
LC 74-160130

"In the present volume, each 'circle' of relationship [among the immigrants to the New World]—the family, the community, the Indians, the natural setting, the supernatural—and the interchange among the different circles—is represented by one distinct group of readings. . . . A separate section has been placed at the beginning [of each group] to demonstrate the problems attendant on the earliest phase of settlement. . . . [The readings are intended to] reveal the impact of the culture at the level of individual experience." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Larry Howard

Best Sell 31:536 Mr 1 '72 390w

"One of the first anthologies of colonial documents reflecting the interests of the new social historians. Here we find a greater concentration upon the average settler than on the colonial elite and more emphasis upon familial and community institutions than on governmental and provincial ones. Instead of relying primarily upon . . . public and institutional documents, Demos often turns to genealogical collections that supply greater insight into the personal and private lives of the colonists. But . . . New Englanders and the more literate and fluent upper middle classes overshadow the less accessible Southerners and semi-illiterate to illiterate poor. There is an interesting section on Indians as they were seen by Europeans. . . . Ably edited and thoughtfully introduced." . . .

Choice 9:571 Je '72 160w

"'But most of all, God was watching.' Thus does John Demos sum up the concept of history which dominated early American colonial life. Although Demos has previously demonstrated that he is able to deal with the nitty-gritty of daily existence in Plymouth colony and though the readings he has gathered for this source book accent the same concern, he recognizes the role that concepts of Providence and grand-scale theology played in shaping colonial life. An excellent collection."

Christian Century 89:228 F 23 '72 100w

Reviewed by S. J. Stein

New Eng Q 45:593 D '72 800w

DEN BOER, JAMES. Trying to come apart; poems. 56p $4.95; pa $2.50 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

811

ISBN 0-8229-3216-4; 0-8229-5221-1 (pa)
LC 78-134492

This is the second book of poems by the author of Learning the way, BRD 1969. Some of these twenty-five poems have appeared in such periodicals as Northwest Review and Poetry Northwest. The title is taken from the final poem.

"I am pleased that Alan Dugan, X.J. Kennedy, Richard Howard chose these poems for a National Council on the Arts Selection Award. Highly recommended for all poetry collections." H. C. Burke

Library J 96:964 Mr 15 '71 160w

"Den Boer's second book contains much that is humanly moving, and much strength of mind. The best poems—Hoping for a New Life and the long Muttering—deal with a failing marriage, and they show an unblinking psychological accuracy about some of its most painful processes. . . . And yet I do not know how often I will return to these poems; they are duller somehow, than their material or the author's intelligence ought to allow. Den Boer seems too committed to quietness, to the kind of modestly halting generality his book titles [exemplify]. . . . I hope that [he] will find some more compelling form, for he has many of the most important human gifts of a writer." Alan Williamson

Poetry 119:296 F '72 400w

DENISOFF, R. SERGE. Great day coming; folk music and the American left. (Music in Am. life) 219p il $12.50 Univ. of Ill. press

784.6 Folk songs—U.S. Right and left (Political science)
SBN 252-00179-6 LC 74-155498

"The purpose of this book is to examine the use of folk music by the American Left, especially the Communist party, during the thirties and forties. . . . It is also an analysis of the use of folk material as a weapon to achieve particular sociopolitical ends. . . . [as well as] an attempt to trace a political-intellectual fad of the sectarian Left into the mass media, where it emerged as a commodity to be sold in the market place of popular music." (Foreword) Bibliography. Index. Selected discography of American protest songs.

Reviewed by Staughton Lynd

Am Hist R 77:1180 O '72 700w

"In his eagerness to argue the cultural significance of music, Denisoff forgot that socially perceived relationships are often wrong or self-serving. He also ignored the fact that any public performance involves three groups—performers, fans, entrepreneurs—each working for private reasons. His failure to recognize the validity of differing motives and his acceptance of the truth of public confusions of the three forced him to discuss unrelated topics because they were associated in the public mind without benefit of a critical viewpoint to direct and limit his discussions. . . . [This book] is not an analysis of music in its political context, but it is informative on party attitudes towards foreign and native folk music and identifies many personalities of the early urban folk revival." Patricia Averill
Ann Am Acad 401:189 My '72 400w

"Denisoff shows at length [that] the American left has never had much success in trying to use the music 'of the people' for its own purposes. From the beginnings of unionizations in the U.S. the Communist and other leftist groups made the mistake of trying to mobilize urbanized workers with rural folk music. The development of a 'folk consciousness,' which is so much a theme of this book, has been a slow, difficult process at best. . . . A good social and historical analysis is provided." Choice 9:655 J1/Ag '72 250w

"Denisoff's treatment of folk song and the left is less a chronological account of development than a series of information bursts revealing the growth of a radical frame of mind receptive to folk song material. . . . The work as a whole seems to equal something less than the sum of its parts. Key terms such as 'Left' and 'Folk Music' remain undefined, and the period selected lacks unifying characteristics. . . . Denisoff's closing chapters, filled with often irrelevant photographs of popular folk singers, appear as unnecessary filler added in an attempt to give the work a sense of immediacy." William Ivey
J Am Hist 59:471 S '72 950w

"[The author discusses] such seminal figures of American folk music as Pete Seeger, Earl Robinson, Bess Lomax, Lee Hays, Woody Guthrie, Cisco Houston, Brownie McGhee, Sonny Terry, Burl Ives, and Leadbelly. . . . What Denisoff fails to realize, or point out, is that, despite its limited usefulness in the realm of practical politics, the movement's music lives as a great and beautiful expression of aspiration and protest." Allen Cohen
Library J 97:2100 Je 1 '72 150w

DENKER, JOEL, Jr. auth. No particular place to go: the making of a free high school. See Bhaerman, S.

DENNIS, PETER. Decision by default: peace-time conscription and British defence, 1919-39. 243p $9.75 Duke univ. press

355.2 Military service, Compulsory. Great Britain—Military policy. Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century
ISBN 0-8223-0272-1 LC 72-190372

The author "traces the evolution of British defense policy in the period between the two wars. Following two introductory chapters on the Locarno era, Dennis focuses on the fundamental issue confronting British officials in the late 1930's: whether or not Britain should include a major continental commitment in its overall military planning." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"In reality, [this] is a study of the consequences of the facts that, first, the 'imperialists' were indeed correct in their argument that unless the British could mobilise the human and economic resources of their empire they would cease to be a great power in the twentieth century; and second, that the 'progressive' forces . . . were, in terms of prerogatives and credentials, justified in rejecting the 'imperialist' argument on the grounds that, whether in the form of the old, strictly imperial, form of 1899, or the new 'balance of power' form of 1914, it was irrelevant to the real needs of the British people. . . . Because he deals with consequences rather than causes, . . . [there is] no grinding of axes heard between the lines." Economist 244:51 J1 15 '72 260w

"This scholarly monograph [is] . . . meticulously researched, specialized study. [It] belongs in graduate collections and in libraries specializing in military history." J. A. Casada
Library J 97:2727 S 1 '72 150w

"Mr Dennis's debt to the opening of the archives is obvious from the dates spanned by his scholarly and unpretentious book. The reduction of the period of restriction from 50 years to 30 automatically revealed 20 years' papers at a stroke, and they happened to be those of the inter-war years, which formed the background to Mr Dennis's study. . . . [He] accurately and painstakingly [charts] the progress of British governments between the wars from complacency via appeasement to panic desperation." TLS p789 J1 14 '72 600w

DENZIN, NORMAN K., ed. The values of social science. 194p $5.95; pa $2.45 Aldine-Atherton

300 Social sciences—Research
LC 77-115944

This is one of a series of books consisting of material presented in the periodical Trans-action since its inception in 1963. "Contributors included Irving Louis Horowitz on Project Camelot, which explores the Federal government's misapplication of social science capabilities; Herbert Gans on the need for a policy-oriented sociology; and Raymond W. Mack on methodological questions." (Choice)

"[This volume] helps humanize the research process by use of reports of how research is 'really' done. . . . [However,] judging [the Trans-action] series in the spirit in which it was compiled, I shall react to the claim made by the editors of Trans-action in [the] Preface . . . that the series is 'dedicated not to highlighting social problems alone, but to establishing guidelines for social solutions based on the social sciences.' The articles make little use of hard data and none of statistical tests. 'Each essay,' the editors note, 'bears the imprint of the author's attempt to communicate his own experience of the crisis [facing America].' Such experiences and the description and anecdotal material in the essays serve well to move people to concern and action. However, firmer bases for establishing policy guidelines could be hoped for than 'experiences' and soft data." J. A. Winter
Am Soc R 36:1141 D '71 100w

"[This will] prove useful to both students and teachers of contemporary American social science. For the most part, the essays are brief, polemical comments on some specific aspects of social science research, but together they form an impressive overview of the nature, concerns, and most pressing problems of social science today. . . . Editor Denzin has contributed a valuable summarizing introduction. With the exception of Senator Fred Harris' proposal to create a national social science foundation all of the essays in the collection were published in Trans-action . . . prior to the periodical's inclusion in the Readers' guide to periodical literature—thus even libraries which have complete back files of Trans-action will find this collection a necessary acquisition." Choice 8:434 My '71 190w

DERBER, MILTON. The American idea of industrial democracy, 1865-1965. 553p $9.50 Univ. of Ill. press

331.15 Employees' representation in management. Industrial relations
SBN 252-0085-4 LC 70-100376

This "volume links labor-management history to the growth of industrial democracy, and explores the history of American industrial democracy from psychological, political, institutional, and social perspectives." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The author] equates the rise of industrial democracy with the increasing legitimization and widening scope of bargaining, obscuring the question of the power of workers relative to employers and the question of accountability. Political scientists will be disappointed in the neglect of process-related aspects like power and accountability in favor of institutional aspects having to do with organizational legitimization under conditions of civil liberties. . . . Derber concludes that in its eventual mature state, as in the garment industry, the bargaining system involves no challenge to major employer functions, much less the sharing of these powers." G. D. Garson

DERBER, MILTON—Continued

Am Pol Sci R 35:1175 D '71 550w

"Derber's thorough research and sophisticated analysis make this work a major contribution to the history of labor-management relations in the U.S. that should be on the shelves of all college libraries."

Choice 8:263 Ap '71 240w

DE REGNIERS, BEATRICE SCHENK. Red Riding Hood; retold in verse for boys and girls to read themselves; drawings by Edward Gorey. 42p $5.25 Atheneum pubs.

398.2 Folklore—Juvenile literature. Wolves—Stories. Stories in rhyme
LC 79-175561

This retelling of the old folktale in verse is "based on the Brothers Grimm version, in which a hunter slices open the sleeping wolf to rescue the already-swallowed Grandma and Red, fills the animal's belly with stones, and sews him up without waking him." (N Y Times Bk R) "Grades one to three." (Library J)

"Dryly amusing, low-keyed pictures—showing a prim and innocent heroine and a sly leering wolf—set the tone for a fresh version of a famous tale. . . . A satisfying unity is achieved by the combination of several elements: the comfortable size and shape of the book, the directness and simplicity of the verses, and the clay-colored drawings." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 48:259 Je '72 100w

"[This] is stronger fare than the standard version told to nursery age children. . . . Fittingly accompanied by Edward Gorey's illustrations (pen-and-ink sketches in gray with red accents) of the wonderfully sly, wicked wolf and the plain little girl, this brisk retelling in simple words will brighten the 'easy reading' shelves." M. B. Mason

Library J 97:1594 Ap 15 '72 110w

"The verse is easy, lilting, with unexpected twists; Gorey's solemn-sly drawings are properly ungory. The gobbling-up and slicing-open are done off-camera, so to speak, and more deftly than usual; Gorey arms his hunter with a dagger!" Shirley Williams

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p38 My 7 '72 170w

DERRY, JOHN W. Charles James Fox. 454p il $12.50 St Martins

B or 92 Fox, Charles James. Great Britain—History.—1714-1837
LC 73-176065

"In writing this study of Charles James Fox, I have sought to direct attention as much as possible to what Fox himself said, wrote and did. In this way I have tried to keep him at the centre of the picture. . . . I have presented an interpretation which sets him in the context of eighteenth-century politics [and have concentrated] on the principal themes of Fox's career as a parliamentarian." (Pref) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Choice 9:1029 O '72 190w

"Dr Derry has hit on the novel idea of producing Fox, as it were, in a role designed for Pittite classic drama adhering strictly to all the rules of the Chathamite political unities. The results, as might be expected, are curious and quite revealing. The temptation to enjoy Fox Dr Derry most rigorously resists. This is a stern book. Its author is stiffly determined not to be charmed, cajoled, or cozened by so absolute a rogue. . . . [The author] has 'deliberately limited' the amount of personal, domestic, and circumstantial detail in a biography of perhaps the most personable, domesticated, and circumstantially directed and influenced statesman who ever lived. There are thus the elements of possible confusion here."

Economist 242:65 Mr 11 '72 600w

"Derry's full critical analysis of Fox's career adds a new element to the literature on the great English politician. Eschewing the blind adoration of Whig partisans who worshipped at Fox's shrine, Derry presents his subject as a gifted man who grasped at power, but fell short because of his personal flaws. . . . This is no impressionistic portrait, but an important scholarly contribution which surpasses all other biographies of Fox." R. R. Rea

Library J 97:2383 Jl '72 90w

"[This] is not really a life of Fox at all. Of 438 pages only nine deal with the period before he entered the House at the age of 20. There is nothing about his youthful love affair with his cousin, Lady Susan Strangways, little about his time at Oxford, nothing about the way he himself took charge of his early education. . . . It is hard to see why Dr Derry has gone to the trouble, as he clearly has, to write about Fox at all. For Fox, according to him, was lazy, incompetent, prone to retire to Chertsey when in trouble. He was an opportunist. His gambling was 'reprehensible', his relations with women 'discreditable'. He was no political philosopher and no democrat either. He did not understand the French revolution. . . . No doubt. . . . [Dr Derry] has written the book he set out to write. In doing so he has performed the impossible. He has turned Charles Fox into a dull man." Alan Watkins

New Statesman 83:245 F 25 '72 1000w

"Fox has been regarded by some historians as the upholder of Whig ideals in the face of Tory reaction in the area of the French Revolution, and by others as a rank opportunist. Professor Derry, in this able political study, concludes that Fox was more the opportunist than the idealist."

Va Q R 48:cxl autumn '72 70w

DE ST. JORRE, JOHN. The brothers' war; Biafra and Nigeria. 437p il $10 Houghton

966.9 Nigeria—Politics and government. Nigeria—History—Civil War, 1967-1970
ISBN 0-395-13934-1 LC 72-407

This is an account of the Nigerian civil war, 1967-1970. "On January 15, 1966, a group of young officers in Nigeria assassinated some leaders of the army bureaucracy and the civil government. Most of these rebels belonged to the Ibo tribe. This coup soon led to riots through the country in which the Ibos were the principal victims. Moreover, about a million and a half members of this tribe were expelled from their homes and forced to live in Eastern Nigeria. . . . [They] formed the so-called 'Republic of Biafra.' This act of secession . . . led to a civil war. . . . The Republic of Biafra came to an end in January, 1970." (Best Sell)

"This book, by a correspondent who covered the conflict for the London Observer, is the first serious attempt to put the whole controversial issue of Biafra into some kind of comprehensive perspective. . . . In the matter of Nigeria, St. Jorre has put it all in focus. In the process, he has provided a salutary lesson, it seems apt to remark here, for church and relief organizations that are likely to be caught up again somewhere in similar political struggles: one's humanitarian instincts are not always the best judge of political realities." V. S. Kearney

America 127:294 O 14 '72 1050w

"[The author] had the rare privilege of crossing the lines and saw with his own eyes how people on both sides lived and died during the war. He supplemented his personal observations by interviews with prominent civil and military figures, and by reading most of the literature on this troubled episode in Nigerian history. He explains very clearly why Great Britain helped to preserve the unity of its former colony and why the majority of African nations refused to recognize the Republic of Biafra. . . . There are some excellent pictures of the Biafrans and Nigerians during the war and also of the propaganda posters that were used to arouse hatred of the enemy. We recommend this book most highly." Stephen McKenna

Best Sell 32:320 O 15 '72 400w

"[This] is a popular history or a lengthy journalistic account, depending on how one looks at it. It is written in the prose of the British dailies: the story is kept moving, lots of information is packed into the racy prose, and there is no adequate documentation on just those questions where it is most needed. The interpretation favors the Nigerian side and the cause of 'One Nigeria,' though the author assumes the stance of an 'objective' reporter." M. M. Reik

Library J 97:3707 N 15 '72 240w

"St. Jorre is painstakingly evenhanded in his treatment of the two sides. . . . The strongest character in the narrative is the Jefferson Davis of his civil war, Emeka Odunegwu Ojukwu, the sophisticated and somewhat theatrical Ibo colonel who led the Biafran revolt. But the real hero is Yakubu Gowon, who eventually succeeded in holding the country together. . . . The book is at its best when presenting the author's personal impressions of the war. . . . Like most journalists who visited Biafra, De St. Jorre pays tribute to the courage and resourcefulness of the Ibos. . . . But he was equally impressed with [their] uncanny grasp of propaganda." W. B. Smith

Time 100:18071 O 2 '72 850w

DESAN, WILFRID. The planetary man; v 1, A noetic prelude to a united world; v2, An ethical prelude to a united world. 2v in 1 380p $9.95 Macmillan (N Y) 128 Man. Ethics. Philosophy
LC 71-169233

In Volume 1 Desan "performs a phenomenological analysis of man by describing his fragmentary structure within the totum. The totum in Desan's view is 'the plural where all men as individuals complete its humanness.' Within the totum there is the planetary man (a man of the future), an individual that reveals himself as an ambiguous entity in that he wants to be totum humanum and himself as well. . . . Volume 2 examines an ethical view of the planetary man as actor. Desan looks at man in relation to the totum, and at how man functions within the human community. Analyses are done on natural law in modern semantics, freedom, sin, rebels and reformers, and saintliness in relation to the planetary man." (Library J)

"For all the talk about the totum and its primacy, what comes through in the book is the individual effort of a unique person. The forms of expression, the high level philosophical speculation, the examples and the metaphors obviously belong to Wilfrid Desan. There is a homespun quality to this work. Desan is a man with a vision and in this work he relates his thoughts, experiences and values to it. Some will have problems with the philosophical support he generates for that vision, but few will disagree with the sketch he draws of an ethic for man today and tomorrow." J. F. Drane

America 127:295 O 14 '72 750w

"For those who welcome dazzling cosmic vision, Desan's book will be a pleaser. His audacity and his grasp of concepts will be of interest to those who want to talk about wholeness for humankind and action for the world. Some of the consciousness-raising, sensibility-changing books have been wearying, and Desan may be making some huge wrong guesses—who knows now? But he never fails to impress on readers their own need to engage in basic thinking about the human future."

Christian Century 89:377 S 6 '72 80w

"Desan adequately defends his main thesis, which is 'the one is made up of the multiplicity of the diverse.' A third volume is in preparation; its topic will be a united world. Recommended for those who accept the role of the philosopher as prophet." George Dalin
Library J 97:3317 O 15 '72 200w

DESAUTELS, PAUL E. The gem kingdom; special photography by Lee Boltin. (A Ridge press bk) 252p $17.50 Random house 736 Gems. Precious stones
LC 70-158812

The curator of gems and minerals at the Smithsonian "deals with historical aspects of the study of gems; with the discovery, cutting and synthesizing of gems; and with their fashioning into jewelry." (Library J) Index.

"[This] book contains an informative and entertaining text aimed squarely at the layman. . . . [Boltin's plates] are artful compositions." Ward Chesworth
Library J 96:3769 N 15 '71 80w

Reviewed by B. B. Chamberlain
Natur Hist 81:95 My '72 550w

"Boltin, whose photographs deserve the title-page epithet 'special,' has made the finest gem specimens glow in rich color from the pages of this stunningly illustrated volume without losing that sharpness of surface and hard mirror glint so characteristic of crystals. . . . Turning the pages is a bit like wandering through the treasure room of the Smithsonian with an excellent dissecting microscope of eight or 10 power. . . . The pages are filled out by photographs of instruments, objets d'art, old prints and diagrams, and miners and lapidaries at work in many lands. . . . The text is concise but authoritative. . . . It is written for the least trained of readers, not disdaining, for example, to present a clear paragraph distinguishing between weight and density. It opens almost every portion of the 'gem world' carefully and intelligently, but it seeks to exhaust none." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 226:125 Mr '72 340w

DESBOROUGH, V. R. D'A. The Greek dark ages. 388p il $14.95 St Martins 913.38 Civilization, Aegean
LC 79-180736

"This book describes Greece and the Aegean (excluding Macedonia) during the period c. 1125-900 B.C. . . . Desborough gives Early and Late Dark Age evidence on a regional pattern. He also discusses the various types of evidence—settlements, burial customs, dress ornaments; outside influences; and the oral tradition. He concludes that after a period of stress and insecurity there came a gradual return to relatively peaceful conditions. Significant progress was, however, on the whole limited to the Aegean area with Athens playing the leading part; though challenged towards the end of the period by a district centered in and around Euboea." (Publisher's note) Bibliography and site index. Glossary. General Index.

"[This] work brightens our picture of that formative period in Greek history between 1125 and 900 B.C. . . . Desborough's evidence is new and is based mostly on his own excavations. It is clearly presented, with a constant eye toward the interpretative remark and the demonstrable hypothesis. This is a recommended acquisition for all libraries." A. R. Samuels

Library J 97:3150 O 1 '72 200w

"[The author's] two previous books, The Last Mycenaeans and their Successors [BRD 1965] and Protoegeometric Pottery (1952) dealt in detail with the first and second halves of this obscure period, using such archaeological evidence as was available at the time of writing. The present volume, produced in a more convenient format, summarizes the matter of the earlier works, and brings them up to date. Many new discoveries are considered, some of which have caused the author to revise his own previous views. . . . [This is] an admirably comprehensive work where theory is always separated from fact, where on any vexed issue the existence of alternative views is always stated, and where the limitations of the evidence are continually stressed."

TLS p1110 S 22 '72 600w

DESHEN, SHLOMO A. Immigrant voters in Israel: parties and congregations in a local election campaign; foreword by Max Gluckman. 239p il pl $9 Humanities press

324 Elections—Israel. Israel—Emigration and immigration
LC [70-555883]

An analysis of an election campaign in a new Israeli development town of about 15,000, with Moroccan and Tunisian Jews forming about 50 percent of the population. Bibliography. Index.

"While [Deshen] applies certain social and anthropological concepts in his analysis of the campaign as a separate 'social system,' the book is valuable to a reader interested in Israel in general, as well as to the political anthropologist. . . . Deshen tells us much about the ethnic and religious tensions of Israel as a whole, particularly in describing how Tunisian, Moroccan, and European Jews interact and how they are becoming integrated in one society. In this way, we get beyond the journalist and propagandist clichés, used by both critics and admirers of Israel, which obscure the complexities of that new society in the Middle East."

Choice 8:899 S '71 160w

"Deshen's serious and careful book seems intended mainly for the professional social anthropologist. . . . [It] does not concern itself with the problems of Israel vis-à-vis her neighbors or indeed the Arabs in Israel. The index contains no entry for Arabs, Islam, or even Davan."

TLS p1507 D 25 '70 300w

DESROCHE, HENRI. The American Shakers; from Neo-Christianity to presocialism; tr. from the French and ed. by John K. Sava-cool. 357p il $9.50 Univ. of Mass. press

289.8 Shakers
LC 78-123537

The author "analyzes the Shaker movement from the 18th Century to its demise in the 20th in terms of religious, political, and social phenomena . . . [and] intimates that the Shakers were a . . . link between the early Christians and secular socialists. . . . [He] dissects the Shakers' motives, and places them in the context of their times." (Library J) Index.

"[Desroche's] stated purpose is not to add any new information to Shaker history. His reading was restricted to the extensive printed sources and other materials available in French and British libraries, including heavy reliance on Daryl Chase's unpublished University of Chicago dissertation of 1938; nor is there evidence that he has visited the Shaker sites or has much feeling for the American historical scene. Nevertheless, his skillful use of analytical tools and especially his close reading of the Shaker texts has resulted in the best available account of the mind and institutional life of the Shakers. . . . The strength of the book lies in its account of Shaker doctrines and organization, and in its comparisons of Shakerism with other sectarian movements. Its weakness is its failure to show how Shakerism was a product of the American scene." Stow Persons
Am Hist R 77:586 Ap '72 460w

"Many of [the author's] conclusions are derived by using such phrases as 'most likely' or by drawing parallels to suit his theory. . . . Desroche does not seem to have used [E.] Andrews' The People Called Shakers [BRD 1953], though it is alluded to in the text. His collaborators bear some responsibility for issuing a book which makes assumptions about millennialism, socialism, revivalism, and utopianism, but fails to incorporate the findings of Tuveson, Thrupp, Cross, Sanford, or Thompson—all of whom wrote after 1955." R. S. Fogarty
J Am Hist 59:420 S '72 400w

"This scholarly and readable work [was] first published in France in 1955. . . . In its own way, this is a topical book that should appeal to serious readers interested in Americana, religious history, theology, socialism, Utopian thought, feminism, communal living, and the new religious sects. Statistical tables, graphs, and significant footnotes are included. Highly recommended." R. W. Fromm
Library J 96:4091 D 15 '71 180w

DESSAUER, JOHN H. My years with Xerox; the billions nobody wanted. 239p $6.95 Doubleday

658 Xerox Corporation
LC 70-150884

In this "history of Xerox, Dessauer describes how he and the company with which he was associated, Haloid, took a . . . chance on a . . . new process to produce . . . photocopies. . . . This process, xerography, spurred the growth of the . . . Haloid Company into today's. . . Xerox corporation." (Library J) Index.

"The faith that Dessauer and his superiors had in the originators of this process becomes clearer in the reading of this book, which describes how virtually every large company in the U.S. turned down the chance to make its billion. If one must find fault with the book, it would have to be in the author's modesty; he seems to have played a larger role than he gives himself credit for." P. T. Kaufman
Library J 97:192 Ja 15 '72 130w

"Composed with the 'help' of the journalist Oscar Schisgall, [the book] is too often footling and slick. John Dessauer in the flesh is a slangy, tangy man with a swift and incisive conversational style; but when that style is passed through the filter of conventional journalism, the story of Dessauer and Xerox often comes out as bathetic as if, say, Howard Cosell were trying to give an eyewitness account of the siege of Troy." John Brooks
N Y Times Bk ■ p52 O 17 '71 800w

DESSOIR, MAX. Aesthetics and theory of art. (Ästhetik und allgemeine kunstwissenschaft); tr. by Stephen A. Emery; with a foreword by Thomas Munro. 453p il $13.95 Wayne state univ. press

111.8 Esthetics. Art—Philosophy
SBN 8143-1383-3 LC 68-22630

This is a "critical examination of aesthetic theory and creative activity . . . [The] discussion of the trends of aesthetics in the early decades of the 20th-century provides a summary of the major areas of philosophical interest in the arts: the psychology of the artist, the measurable properties of the art object, the clinical history of the aesthetic experience, and the origins and functions of art." (Choice) Index of persons. Index of subjects.

"[In this] recent translation of the German edition of 1923 (originally published in 1906), Dessoir reduces the pedantry of aesthetic jargon to a comfortable level. . . . [He] would like to find a synthesis to the dichotomy of aesthetics and art, but he gets no further than thesis-antithesis. Thus, his assumptions, which are stated as fact, are based on a 19th-century romantic viewpoint: man has a moral destination and art helps man in 'his mission to ascend into the ideal world.' This work has a place in the history of aesthetics; its relevance to contemporary thought lies in its very limitations which reflect the disruptions and tensions of the Germany of the first two decades." Choice 7:1500 Ja '71 170w

"It is perhaps inevitable that the revival of such a book nearly 70 years after its first publication will strike many readers with something of the force of a period piece. . . . There is much to irritate the pompous. The solemn enunciation of what now seem commonplaces can only appear portentous. . . . It is difficult to review in detail a work which has such different appeal for different readers. Its most serious value will undoubtedly lie in the balanced picture which it presents of German ideas at the turn of the century. . . . Its patient reading, however . . . can at least serve to show that . . . many of the themes which still hotly debated in aesthetics are less novel than the parties to contemporary discussion sometimes suspect." Harold Osborne
J Aesthetics 30:262 winter '71 1200w

"Rather than project a 'theory' of art . . . [Dessoir] attempted to make a 'science' of it. Whether or not such thinking has relevance for present or future, the insights of one man who looked long and hard at past achievement holds its athletic exercise for those whose curiosity attempts to frame categories. . . . Not the easiest book to read: nevertheless constant instances of apposite examples break up its abstract density. Aesthetics increasingly seems some demiscence, like sociology, but individual writers focus fascinating particulars, and this book can be digested with profit." Lincoln Kirstein
Nation 211:695 D 28 '70 120w

DESTLER, I. M. Presidents, bureaucrats, and foreign policy; the politics of organizational reform. 329p $10 Princeton univ. press 353.1 United States—Foreign relations.

United States. Department of State
ISBN 0-691-07543-3 LC 77-166368

This "analysis of the foreign policy decision-making process . . . discusses the bureaucratic strategies of the Kennedy, Johnson, and Nixon Administrations; assesses recent State Department efforts at 'reform from within'; and puts forward a strategy aimed at avoiding some of the pitfalls of past efforts at organizational change." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The politics of organizational reform . . . is discussed implicitly. Those interested in this subject might well prefer a more explicit treatment." D. D. Dunn
Ann Am Acad 404:292 N '72 430w

"[Destler] reviews some 13 or so major proposals or studies dealing with reform for foreign policy reorganization. His goal appears rightfully to assert for the State Department its correct role. But he shows a disturbing admiration for the Pentagon-based International Security Affairs (ISA) bureaucrats. In any event, his aim appears to be centralization. Alas, he appears to be out of touch with reality in the modern world and makes a poor case for his thesis—that several organizational shifts will solve all the problems. This work should find favor in the 'old boy' network and in State department seminars. The writing is turgid and dull. . . . Not recommended.

Choice 9:380 S '72 270w

"Well organized and clearly presented, Destler's ideas are moderate and mild, perhaps even timid. But they could not help but improve the effectiveness of American foreign policy." Charles DeBenedetti

Library J 97:2406 J1 '72 190w

DESTOUCHES, LOUIS FERDINAND. See Céline, L. F.

DEUTSCH, STEVEN E., jt. auth. Academics in retreat. See Fashing, J.

DEUTSCHER, ISAAC. Marxism in our time; ed. by Tamara Deutscher. 312p $5.95 Ramparts press

335.4 Communism

ISBN 0-87867-006-8 LC 79-158915

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by R. V. Daniels

Am Hist R 77:1399 D '72 240w

Economist 243:75 Ap 22 '72 140w

Reviewed by Anthony Arblaster

New Statesman 83:565 Ap 28 '72 1350w

TLS p676 Je 16 '72 900w

DEVELOPMENT administration in Asia [papers by] José Veloso Abueva [and others]; ed. by Edward W. Wiedner; pub. in cooperation with the Comparative adm. group of the Am. soc. for public administration. 431p $12 Duke univ. press

351 Asia—Politics. Public administration

ISBN 0-8223-0221-7 LC 74-96864

A collection of thirteen essays originally delivered at a summer seminar held at the East-West Center, University of Hawaii, in 1966. The book includes "case-studies or analyses of development in particular countries"—Korea, the Philippines, Japan, India, Pakistan (two), and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. There is a section, entitled 'Technical Assistance and Development Administration,' which deals with technical co-operation in development administration in South and Southeast Asia and with technical assistance to a public administration institute (South Vietnam)." (Pacific Affairs)

"The collection is distinctive in presenting the work of six Asian scholars with that of their American colleagues. . . . To this reviewer the more important research reports are those of José Veloso Abueva and Bernard S. Silberman. Abueva's study of Filipino administrative culture and behavior . . . shows that a significant minority of 'disentangled' administrative officials reveal 'modern bureaucratic characteristics. These, he suggests, will be the agents of further administrative development. Silberman examines the background of a random sample (25 per cent) of prefectural governors in Japan between 1868 and 1945. . . . [His] chapter is a useful demonstration of the potential that quantitative analysis of historical data has for the study of administrative and political development." J. T. Dorsey

Am Pol Sci R 65:1237 D '71 2800w

"Because of the 'integration problem' it is difficult to single out any particular themes for comment. An exception is innovation, which is dealt with by several authors, and which the editor treats competently and suggestively in this final essay. 'Development administration' itself, oddly enough, does not constitute such a theme, because it is not evident that all the contributors who mention it (and some do not mention it or give it only casual acknowledgement) mean the same thing by it. The quality of the contributions varies, as will the degree of interest of particular readers in particular contributions." R. S. Milne

Pacific Affairs 44:259 summer '71 380w

DEVINE, DOMINIC. Dead trouble; pub. for the Crime club. 214p $4.95 Doubleday

ISBN 00-231178-X LC 72-166419

This novel concerns "a gigolo who graduates to hunting the fortune of a young woman. She is the daughter of a well-known novelist, a . . . selfish old man who has a secret in his background which makes him an easy victim of blackmail." (Library J)

Best Sell 31:494 F 1 '72 70w

"[This] lightweight little mystery about . . . family intrigues, quarrels, and rolling emotions is not terribly interesting, and takes quite a while to get moving." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:1352 Ap 1 '72 60w

"[Devine's novel is] an old-fashioned British mystery, carefully plotted (though the ending is wrenched a bit), skillful in portrayal, fluent in style, and full of the false clues dear to the hearts of traditionalists." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p38 F 6 '72 30w

"Unworthy Neville contrives a pickup of well-dowered Alma, previously cruelly ditched—but not on his own initiative. There are plenty of mysteries, and to find the murderer is possible only if clues are well seized and pondered. No one is very nice except for Alma's raw-dealed sister who works it all out."

TLS p253 F 26 '71 50w

DEVRIES, PETER. Into your tent I'll creep. 244p $6.95 Little

LC 70-161422

"It wasn't until I had become engaged to Miss Piano that I began avoiding her. . . . Al Banghart, the speaker [once flunked] Miss Piano's high school French class]. . . . Rose Piano, a pretty but aggressive young woman, complicates his life by setting out to reform him. Pygmalion in reverse is the way the hero thinks of the relationship. An intellectual who comes on strong, Miss Piano . . . is continually informing her fiancé about things like the racial unconscious. . . . The Banghart-Piano marriage takes place because Al happily agrees to give up his career in a hat factory to look after the house. After the marriage, Rose becomes quickly disenchanted with her liberated husband. He beguiles himself by making the bed with his toes, by pretending he's married to great feminists of the past and by gossiping with the neighborhood ladies." (America)

"DeVries' primary satirical target, of course, is Women's Liberation, but as always he strikes out in many directions. For instance, there is the . . . super-liberal Rev. Shorty Hopwell, who . . . refers to a funeral service as a 'sob-in' and makes divorce a sacrament on the grounds that it doesn't make any difference 'as long as you don't believe any of it anyway.' DeVries has an extraordinary talent for comedy. In terms of sheer comic inventiveness only P. G. Wodehouse can match him, while the ear for colloquial speech and the self-deprecating quality of the humor bring to mind Ring Lardner and Robert Benchley at their best. The puns, of course, are pure DeVries. DeVries is a natural rather than an acquired taste, but those who are so disposed will find this a truly funny book." J. R. Lindroth

America 125:560 D 25 '71 370w

"[DeVries] could probably convey his impression that man is magnificently absurd without going to all the bother of writing a whole novel; and is that all that he means? Well, even if it is, let us all be grateful that he does take the trouble. . . . He offers man the absurd and not some tract about the absurdity of man, and his absurd people offer some delightful companionship. DeVries may not be making points, but he is doing something immeasurably better; and he can no more be summarized effectually than a poet can be paraphrased. . . . Typical DeVries howlers crowd the dialogue and the descriptions." W. B. Hill

Best Sell 31:353 N 1 '71 650w

Reviewed by H. E. Hutchinson

Library J 97:214 Ja 15 '72 90w

Reviewed by Kenn Stitt

New Statesman 84:135 J1 28 '72 230w

Reviewed by Peter Wood

Sat R 55:35 Ja 8 '72 390w

"Betty Friedan could hardly ask for more pejorative typecasting. Still, [the book] . . . gives domestic equality a very fair run for its money. . . . [When] a cuckolded husband [bursts] into the Banghart kitchen justly bent on vengeance . . . [Mrs. Banghart] is pleased. Nudged by a society not yet ready for Women's Lib, she had been wondering whether [her husband] was really masculine enough and fretting about the unfairness of keeping him 'enslaved' at home. . . . De Vries wisely does not wrestle with the gristly question of whether or not such regressive female reflexes can be reconditioned. He simply launches Al on a career—at his wife's request. . . . Plot is not Peter De Vries' thing. Neither is message. But he handles marriage with a fine affection, suggesting, among other things, that it is women who customarily treat men with chivalric restraint, rather than the other way around." Timothy Foote

DE VRIES, PETER—Continued

Time 98:91 O 25 '71 650w

TLS p864 J1 28 '72 2400w

DE VRIES, WALTER. The ticket-splitter: ■ new force in American politics, by Walter De Vries [and] Lance Tarrance, Jr.; foreword by David S. Broder. 149p il $4.50; pa $2.45 Eerdmans 324 Politics, Practical. Elections—U.S.

LC 74-168435

"The authors have examined various election returns and report that ticket-splitters are a growing, media-oriented group who decide many important elections." (Library J) Glossary of terms describing independent voters.

"The authors provide some survey data on the characteristics of ticket-splitters that is of some general value in developing campaign strategy. Unfortunately, however, one has no measure of data reliability since no information is provided on sampling, questionnaire construction, or coding, nor are the data subjected to sophisticated analysis. Not only do De Vries and Tarrance misrepresent much of the scholarly analysis of voting behavior, they ignore what does not suit their argument, throw out challenges to their own misrepresentations, and tend to lump commercial polls with social surveys in their generalizations about voting analysis. . . . A dubious choice for library purchase." Choice 9:880 S '72 160w

"The perhaps dreary truth is that there is relatively little change in American voting patterns and political behavior. . . . But [the authors] have apparently pin-pointed a change which [does] exist. . . . If party identification has not changed much, 'ticket-splitting' has. . . . In the last decade and a half, the South has developed a pattern of sending Democrats to Congress and voting for non-Democrats for the Presidency. DeVries and Tarrance have not taken this factor into account and hence their argument for an increase in 'ticket-splitting' as evidence of political change is somewhat weakened. But there is enough evidence of 'ticket-splitting' between Gubernatorial and Senatorial candidates to establish their case. . . . The authors tell us how the ticket-splitters make their choice. . . . [and] the technique for getting to a ticket-splitter is neatly described." A. M. Greeley
Commentary 53:91 Ap '72 1650w

"In most previous studies of voting behavior the political independent was classified according to his own perceptions (i.e., whether he thought of himself as ■ Republican, Democrat, or Independent). The authors argue whether this is the most useful method of classification or whether voter categories should not be based on actual behavior rather than perception. In a behavior-oriented typology, the criteria for being labeled a 'ticket-splitter' would be whether or not a voter had actually split his ballots in the past—even if he considered himself a Republican or Democrat. Using this new method the authors [present their] . . . concisely argued challenge to a traditional methodology, and it invites rejoinder from perception-oriented researchers." Hindy Schacter
Library J 97:1442 Ap 15 '72 130w

DEWDNEY, J. C. Turkey: an introductory geography. 214p maps $7.50 Praeger

915.61 Turkey—Geography
LC 79-101658

The author describes the physical geography of Turkey; he surveys the history of the Turkish republic, and "discusses the modern economic geography of the country, emphasizing agriculture as the dominant economic activity of the people but also covering recent developments in industry, trade, transport, and communications." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This study, the only book-length examination in English of Turkey's physical and cultural foundations, will appeal to high school and college students as well as to concerned laymen and scholars. The 16 chapters contain a wealth of facts and explanations. . . . However, the absence of photographs and the use of occasional maps that are overcrowded and difficult to read are minor detractors in an otherwise valuable account."

Choice 8:1505 Ja '72 150w

"[This book] provides a factual basis for any serious visit to Turkey. Indeed, it is intended not merely for scholars but for business men and tourists, it has fifty-two maps and diagrams, all of which are useful. . . . The facts are accurately set out, and the spelling of Turkish words is, refreshingly, impeccable. If the tourist were to take this volume with him he would learn something about almost every mile he traversed. It is an excellent adjunct to the same publishers' geography series."

TLS p455 Ap 21 '72 450w

DEWEY, EDWARD R. Cycles: the mysterious forces that trigger events, by Edward R. Dewey with Og Mandino. 211p il $6.95 Hawthorn bks.

003 Forecasts. Periodicity
LC 70-130720

The authors provide a "list of recurring events that have been researched by the Foundation for the Study of Cycles. Their contention is that it may be possible to predict in advance events that will affect man (i.e., once we have determined the causative factors associated with such rhythmic events)." (Library J)

"Concerned with the literally thousands of natural phenomena which are or appear to be fundamentally cyclical in character, [the authors] . . . search for the answer to the intriguing question, 'How many of these cycles are related, and how?' . . . [But] the material and its importance have been exaggerated out of all proportion in a book which is tiresomely evangelical in tone."

Choice 9:77 Mr '72 170w

"Many events associated with biology, economics, and human relations are apparently repeated at regular intervals or in a cyclic fashion. At least this is the case when the available evidence is evaluated from the standpoint of mathematical averages. The authors provide a long and interesting list of recurring events. . . . [but they] have not devoted sufficient time to contradictory information, casting some doubt on [their contention]." W. E. Southern

Library J 96:1620 My 1 '71 100w

DEYERMOND, A. D. The middle ages. (A lit. hist. of Spain) 244p $7.25; pa $4 Barnes & Noble

860 Spanish literature—History and criticism
ISBN 0-510-32251-4; 0-389-04184-X (pa)
LC [70-871554]

This survey of medieval Spanish literature extends from the early lyric to the fifteenth century. Bibliography.

"This book in its brief but dense totality is almost undoubtedly the best available high-level guide to medieval Spanish literature. It is generally well written, lucid, spare in its rhetoric, and independent in its thought. . . . Deyermund goes to extraordinary lengths to be up to date: his generous notes and bibliography even cite articles and books in preparation. . . . Of its eight chapters, the sixth, 'Learned prose and the rise of fiction,' seems too much of a catch-all, and the last, on medieval Spanish drama, is short."

Choice 9:1137 N '72 200w

"[This] survey of medieval Spanish literature is a tour de force of informative compression. It is packed with well-organized and lucidly expressed material, a good deal of which will not be found in any other historical account of Spanish medieval writing. It gives generous weight to work done outside Spain. Very full bibliographical guidance for further reading is supplied. . . . Professor Deyermund's account of the epic is a model of reasonable objectivity. . . . He also takes his readers easily through the problems of lyric origins and the tangled later history of the medieval Peninsular lyric. What one misses, perhaps, is sufficient recognition of the literary importance of the musical context for which so much medieval poetry was written. The account of medieval prose romance in Spain manages to give a new look to that subject while remaining authoritative."

TLS p419 Ap 14 '72 370w

DIAMOND, A. S. Primitive law, past and present. 410p $16 Barnes & Noble

340.5 Law. Primitive. Law—History
ISBN 0-416-66080-0 LC 72-178965

The author analyses "the nature of law at various stages of economic (bionomic to cultural) development. [He] points out . . . how closely the laws (codes) of early periods of European history, for example in Anglo-Saxon England and Merovingian France, resemble, even correspond to, the laws of such illiterate, though sophisticated, peoples as the Nguni of South Africa, the Lacustrine Bantu and the Nupe of Nigeria." (TLS) Bibliography.

"Though [the book] is irritatingly difficult to read because of the mass of detailed historical data and the very general nature of the evolutionary correlations, it presents a wealth of interesting information and courageously, though ethnocentrically, attempts an analytic evolutionary thesis relating law and material culture. . . . Should be in all undergraduate, graduate, and law school libraries."

Choice 9:724 J1/Ag '72 160w

"Diamond is a legal scholar who also has a very wide knowledge of the literature of social anthropology: a rare combination. He is therefore well qualified to write a book on primitive law, and he has written a very good one—a much revised and extended edition of an earlier volume [Primitive Law, BRD 1936, He has avoided], . . . wherever possible, legal jargon and [used] some of the best modern authorities for the anthropological side. . . . [The book] is certainly a valuable contribution to the sociology of law, and anthropologists, sociologists, lawyers and historians will profit by reading it."

TLS p715 Je 23 '72 600w

DICEY, EDWARD. Spectator of America. See Mitgang, H., ed. Lincoln's long shadow

DICHTER, ERNEST. Motivating human behavior. 253p il $12.95 McGraw

152.5 Motivation (Psychology)
SBN 07-016781-8 LC 70-148982

In the first part of his book Dichter, a psychologist and member of the American Marketing Association, examines a number of methods useful in motivating people, such as humor, body language, flattery, and encouragement. In the second part he seeks to "apply the principles developed in the first part to a collection of twenty major human problems, ranging from motivating for social progress and the satisfaction of newly developed human needs to making people do things that are good for them, bridging the generation gap, combating racial and national prejudices . . . helping people to decide, and many other areas." (Introd. to pt 1) Bibliography. Index.

"If you are interested in motivating human behavior, don't read [this book]. . . . Under the guise of pragmatism, [it] is quite simplistic. At worst it is a shallow, misleading attempt to convey an abbreviated 'how to' approach to the complex endeavor of motivating and predicting human behavior. . . . Succinctly stated, this is a 'Huckster's Handbook' for dilettantes of motivational psychology. Those more serious readers who are aware of the complexities of motivating human behavior would profit by consulting the outstanding feature of this study: the author's bibliography." Jack Biebel

Best Sell 31:267 S 15 '71 550w

"[Dichter's] purpose, as in his work at the Institute for Motivational Research, is to apply the data and theories of academic psychology to the practical business of motivating people. . . . The book would be useless in any academic psychology course, but would probably be a treasure in either a business school where applied business psychology is taught, or a journalism school that offered a program in advertising. Excellent index and bibliography. . . . Highly recommended for those libraries serving schools of business and/or journalism."

Choice 8:1250 N '71 160w

DICKASON, DAVID HOWARD. William Williams; novelist and painter of colonial America, 1727-1791. (Ind. univ. Publication: humanities ser, no67) 263p il $6.75 Ind. univ. press

813 Williams, William
ISBN 253-38667-5 LC 76-628292

This is a "study of the English-born painter William Williams, who spent 30 years of his adult life in Philadelphia and New York as a painter, writer, and teacher of some of America's most famous early painters, including Benjamin West. . . . It was not until the publication of an accurate text of his novel, Mr. Penrose: the journal of Penrose, seaman (1969), that his importance as a writer was considered. The focus of this study is on Williams as a writer; it includes a biography of Williams, a probable chronology of the composition of Mr. Penrose, a . . . discussion of the historical references in the novel, a . . . comparison of Mr. Penrose to Robinson Crusoe, and a description of the paintings attributed to Williams; 19 of the paintings are reproduced in black and white." (Choice) Index.

Reviewed by P. G. Adams
Am Lit 44:478 N '72 500w

"Dickason's enterprise has brought much new material to light and even small favors are better than nothing at all, but the casual treatment of good art-historical stuff must at least be regretted. . . . [This study has] technical shortcomings as art history. . . . There is not much information available here about Williams's artistic endeavors after his return to England. . . . Yet Professor Dickason's study documents an even wider scope than was previously known. . . . Our interest in Williams as an artist is piqued rather than sated by this study, and let us hope that we have not heard the last art-historical word on the subject."

Art Bul 54:101 Mr '72 1050w

"The author carries to an extreme his speculations about how much of Mr. Penrose is based on Williams' own adventures and how much is fictional. A further weakness of the book is a failure to place Williams' life and work in an historical context. This narrow focus limits the appeal of the study, but the colonial specialist should find it provocative and informative. Recommended for libraries with strong holdings in American literature."

Choice 8:1164 N '71 230w

DICKENS, CHARLES. A Christmas carol: the public reading version; a facsim. of the author's prompt-copy; introd. and notes by Philip Collins. 206p $4.95; pa $2.95 N.Y. public lib.

828
ISBN 0-87104-228-2 LC 75-163360

This photocopy contains "the exact text the author used in his lecture tours. . . . The margins contain stage directions, and most of the descriptive passages are canceled, showing that Dickens concentrated on the dialogue. . . . Collins has supplied an introductory summary of Dickens' reading career and a . . . set of notes at the end of the volume." (Choice)

"The book gives the reader a good insight into Dickens' dramatic sense. . . . This facsimile will be of use only to a small group of Dickens specialists and will not be of interest to the general reader. . . . On the whole, the reproduction is good, but the notes in Dickens' handwriting in the flyleaf of the original copy are so dim as to be almost unreadable."

Choice 9:367 My '72 200w

"There survive several eyewitness accounts of Dickens's public appearances. Many of these have been familiar to biographers, as have Dickens's own comments in his published letters. Professor Collins has been able to add a number of previously unknown press reports, British and American, metropolitan and provincial. He has made excellent use of all these sources to annotate passages when the reader departs from his book. . . . Collins's introduction and notes go a long way towards re-creating the bodily presence of Dickens at his reading desk."

TLS p256 Mr 3 '72 750w

DICKENS the craftsman; strategies of presentation; ed. with a foreword by Robert Partlow, Jr. 211p $6.95 Southern Ill. univ. press 823 Dickens, Charles
SBN 8093-0430-9 LC 77-95593

This volume consists of eight "essays on aspects of Dickens' style and method. . . . [Included are] two papers devoted to The Old Curiosity Shop . . . [an] essay on four major stylistic devices in A Tale of Two Cities . . . [and a] study of John Forster's Examiner reviews as a . . . vehicle for Dickens' views on the art of fiction." (Library J) Index.

"An inferior collection of essays. . . . Only Harry Stone's opening piece—on the unusually affectionate relationships of brothers and sisters in the novels—is worth repeating, but even it repeats the familiar charges against Dickens' female characters. After Stone, it is downhill. . . . Not recommended."
Choice 8:222 Ap '71 170w

"These papers will appeal chiefly to a specialized academic audience and will be most useful in the larger college or university library." T. J. Galvin
Library J 95:3286 O 1 '70 140w

Reviewed by John Bayley
N Y Rev of Books 15:8 O 8 '70 450w
TLS p269 Mr 5 '71 1050w

DICKEY, JAMES. Sorties. 227p $6.95 Doubleday

818
LC 70-180739

The first 150 pages contain extracts from journals kept over the past few years by the author. Here are his comments on a variety of subjects including "poets, books, poetry music (he's a guitar player), archery (he's just below the championship level), love, age, death, and work. . . . The second part of [the book] consists of essays on poets, such as Theodore Roethke and Edward Arlington Robinson, the relationship between the poet and the university, the nature and the writing of poetry, poetry written in the first person, and contemporary American poets (Ginsberg, Jarrell, Plath, Sexton, and others)." (Publisher's note)

"[The] journal entries—sorties, presumably . . . give only a distilled Dickey. The selections are not dated and come at the reader like sparks in a vacuum. . . . A few key ideas and concerns [are] . . . more richly and fully developed in the essays in part two. And it is in these pages that Dickey writes with depth and fire, leading his reader to a world beyond sense, glimpsing the ecstasy of being human. In 'The Self as Agent' Dickey probes the frontiers and dimensions of consciousness, sharing his poetical reflexes and the aesthetic of his inner life as nowhere in the journal." D. R. Bishop
America 126:297 Mr 18 '72 340w

Choice 9:212 Ap '72 180w

"If behind-the-scenes browsing among an author's papers is not your bag you can skip 'Sorties.' If, on the other hand, you would leap at the chance to peer over the shoulder of one of America's foremost contemporary poets, and to poke into his daily musings, sally forth and have a go at Dickey's world, and welcome to it." Victor Howes
Christian Science Monitor p 11 Ja 13 '72 300w

"The most intriguing bits [from Dickey's journal] are glimpses at the planning process for his next novel, Death's Baby Machine; but there's a lot of general bitching around about intellectuals, a good deal of egoism and anxiety, and tentative rituals towards self-discipline via dieting, archery, practicing the guitar, and incessant writing. The 'essays' include several reviews and speeches and the introduction to a volume of poetry. . . . The least important of Dickey's books to date, but still of peripheral value." Dorothy Nyren
Library J 97:501 F 1 '72 100w

"To readers of contemporary verse who know that James Dickey can really write, the published journals give little more than swash-buckling costume drama. . . . Or worse, a glimpse of the poet at home, wondering what to wear. . . . In the last sixty or so pages of 'Sorties,' Dickey reprints six fine new essays—gathered, considerate, intelligent arguments about poetic method and contemporary poets (notably Theodore Roethke). Like Hebrew, this book is to be read back-to-front or not at all." David Kalstone
N Y Times Bk R p6 Ja 23 '72 1050w

Reviewed by William Heyen
Sat R 55:70 Mr 11 '72 390w

DICKINSON, PETER. Emma Tupper's diary; il by David Omar White. (An Atlantic monthly press bk) 212p $5.95 Little

LC 77-154953

"Inheriting their grandfather's derelict little submarine invented for hunting down sea monsters, four cousins decide to restore the mechanism and brave the deeps themselves. Their successive ventures, affected by personality clashes . . . conclude with a fantastic surprise and raise a provocative ecological question." (Book World) "Ages eleven to fourteen." (Sat R)

"Ebullient in tone, thrilling—even chilling—in action. . . . Emma's diary plays out the story with conviction and flavor, offering ample technical and marine details and a steady flow of witty teen-age banter." Virginia Haviland

Book World p4 (children's issue)
N 7 '71 110w

Horn Bk 48:152 Ap '72 170w

Reviewed by Nancy Berkowitz
Library J 96:4189 D 15 '71 220w

Reviewed by Ann Thwaite
New Statesman 81:312 Mr 5 '71 90w

"Italicized excerpts from Emma's diary tell part of a diverting story, and the rest is narration—but narration par excellence. . . . Although the plot isn't watertight, there are many delightful incidents. The characters and dialogue are yeasty with fun, and Emma is a quiet foil for the sometimes mad exuberance of her cousins." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 54:46 D 11 '71 100w

"The greater part of the book describes the resuscitation of the submarine, and no one else could have done this so well [as Dickinson]. Possibly even he cannot quite get away with it. The technicalities sometimes defeated this non-technical reader, while the actual climax, the discovery of the reptiles, appears almost hurried, perfunctory in comparison. Yet you can forgive anyone anything who has such a gift for communicating the fascination of technical skills."

TLS p391 Ap 2 '71 240w

DICKINSON, PETER. The lizard in the cup. (A Joan-Kahn-Harper novel of suspense) 196p $5.95 Harper

SBN 06-011041-4 LC 74-181669

Set on a Greek island, "this is the story of James Pibble, lately of Scotland Yard, and millionaire Thanassi Thanatos, who has asked Pibble's help to forestall a possible assassination attempt. The list of characters [includes] Tony, Thanatos' [bisexual] mistress [alias Anna Laszlo, wanted in the United States as a violent left-wing activist]; two monks living in an ancient monastery who appear to be constantly drunk; Mark Hott, up and coming artist and minor drug profiteer." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 32:99 My 15 '72 130w

"James Pibble, the British detective hero . . . is apparently beloved for his past adventures in previous novels, but the author has forgotten to re-create his character in this current episode. . . . Dickinson has been unforgivingly presumptuous about [Pibble's] renown for previous adventures, and it's hard to root for Pibble's client with no allegiance to the shadowy hero himself. I harp on this major flaw at such length only because this is a novel one wants to become absorbed in and to admire for its obvious virtues, which include a respect for the details of both exterior landscape and interior human emotion that is preciously rare in its genre." Sara Blackburn

Book World p13 My 14 '72 390w

"[The author] has given us another beautifully written and absolutely riveting mystery. . . . There are some very strange shenanigans involving the Mafia, the development of a resort in the West Indies, Greek Orthodox monks in a ruined monastery, and a cricket-besotted spy. All these elements are developed fugally, each line in firm control. This is a masterpiece of sleight of hand; there are no false clues; all is perfectly logical, yet the end is a complete surprise; and on the way, the plot offers one pleasure after another." Henry Veit
Library J 97:2120 Je 1 '72 120w

Reviewed by Miles Donald
New Statesman 83:211 F 18 '72 80w

"Any book in which James Pibble appears is, ipso facto, going to be a good book, and so it is [here]. The book is not only a travelogue about one of the Greek islands, and a basic introduction to drug traffic. It is about people. Dickinson is one of the most natural and literate of mystery writers. His people talk as people really talk; they have understandable motivations; and each person emerges as a believable character in his own right. But Dickinson never forgets that he is writing a mystery story. There is plenty of action, and the plotting is impeccable. [This] is Dickinson at his best. If it does not have the macabre terror of last year's 'Sleep and His Brother,' [BRD 1971] it has a different but equally intriguing buildup." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p35 My 14 '72 180w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 80:91 J1 10 '72 250w

DICKINSON, THOROLD. A discovery of cinema. 164p il $8.50 Oxford

791.43 Moving pictures—History. Moving pictures—Production and direction
ISBN 0-19-211439-5 LC 79-592059

In this historical survey, the author "relates the technical facts of the medium to its artistic development . . . [and] discusses the . . . change in photographic values which resulted from the adoption of panchromatic stock in the 1920s as a medium for black-and-white cinematography. . . . He divides the historical mainstream of cinema into two channels—the cinema of montage derived from Griffith and Eisenstein . . . and the cinema of what the French call plan-sequence, the prolonged shot favoured initially by Stroheim." (Encounter)

"Although primarily just another short history of film, this book has some value for its technological orientation. Dickinson links various developments in film art to inventions and refinements of processes; his long experience in film production makes him knowledgeable about matters such as film stocks and lenses that are seldom given much attention in other histories. . . . Oddly, Dickinson's weakness is his eclecticism: he knows a good deal about film economics, sociology, theory, production, distribution, etc., but he makes a mistake in trying to touch all bases in a book of this restricted length."

Choice 8:1596 F '72 180w

"[The author] comments on the interaction of fiscal pressures and personal statements in the art of film-making. . . . Numerous examples—from Chaplin to Fellini. . . ."

Christian Century 88:1117 S 22 '71 40w

"[This book is] beautifully produced and illustrated [and] is a distillation of knowledge, devotion, and hard practical experience."

Roger Manvell

Encounter 37:67 J1 '71 200w

"Dickinson, a British director, film editor, and scriptwriter, has based this survey of the 75-year history of motion pictures on several recent lectures which he gave in England and the United States. . . . The author examines his subject in the light of four significant factors: the social and political milieu, the creative skills of the film maker, the nature of the new technology, and the growth of an appreciative audience. . . . Dickinson arbitrarily makes a distinction between 'movies' (group efforts) and 'films' (made by and identified with the work of a creative director) and thus differentiates in his own mind the manufactured product from the work of art. . . . His review of Jean Renoir's major films is especially illuminating. However, I was greatly disappointed by the author's rather narrow prejudice in favor of European directors and films." Henry Halpern

Library J 96:3632 N 1 '71 330w

Va Q R 48:lxvii spring '72 100w

DICKSON, PAUL. The great American ice cream book. 206p il $7.95 Atheneum pubs.

641.6 Ice cream, ices, etc.
LC 72-78284

The author "traces the history of ice cream from ancient Rome to decadent Los Angeles; the invention of the cone; the coming of age of soda and its jerk. . . . [It includes a glossary of fountain jargon and] a chapter on basic ice-cream recipes for the do-it-yourselfer." (N Y Times Bk R) Index.

"If you have ever enjoyed ice cream on a hot summer day, this book will fascinate you. Much of it is delightful trivia, particularly the chapter on the argot of the soda jerk. Dickson includes a section of popular recipes drawn from early trade magazines; it contains directions for making such concoctions as the 1910 Alaska snowball and the ice cream enchilada from 1932. Also included is a list of dealers supplying authentic soda-fountain supplies. There does indeed seem to be a renaissance of interest in ice cream, and this title on what the author calls 'the creaming of America' is probably the last word." Andy Armitage

Library J 97:2731 S 1 '72 200w

New Repub 167:32 N 4 '72 130w

"[Dickson] has produced a fun book that reflects his own delight in the national ambrosia. But there are, alas, shortcomings. While Dickson goes into great detail on cone evolution, he is very sketchy on sprinkles, or 'jimmies,' as they are called elsewhere. He is also weak on regional nomenclature. For example, that delicious formulation of milk, flavoring and ice cream known in New York as a milk shake is called a 'frappe' in Boston. . . . His most serious error is referring throughout his book to something called 'sherbert.' This is rather like a wine snob running on at great length about 'Chateau Latife.' The word, of course, is sherbet. . . . [But] if the very word 'vanilla' starts the liquid churning in your mouth—if the mere idea of 'banana split' unleashes a barely-submerged crave, run out and get [this book]." Robert Lasson

N Y Times Bk R p6 O 15 '72 750w

DICKSON, PAUL. Think tanks. $69p $10 Atheneum pubs.

001.4 Research

LC 71-162973

The author, a journalist, examines a number of organizations in the U.S. "which 'perform research on matters relating to policy and the application of technology.' . . . Eight are non-profit organizations spawned by the Defense Department, including RAND [and] the Institute for Defense Analyses. . . . three, the Urban Institute and two educational policy research centers, are contract progeny of civilian agencies. . . . [Ten are] privately engendered nonprofit organizations, including Herman Kahn's Hudson Institute. . . . [and] Ralph Nader's activist Center for the Study of Responsive Law. . . . Three are foreign-area research groups affiliated, respectively, with the University of Pennsylvania, Stanford, and Georgetown University." (Science) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Not opposed to think tanks per se, Dickson fears some of the techniques and the secrecy under which they operate, and offers a thought-provoking examination of a number of them."

[For example,] he notes that though established to cater to the federal government, especially the Pentagon, the think tanks have expanded to sell ideas to all levels of government. Even though they are supported by government, they are not controlled by it, nor are they accountable to any other public institutions. This incisive and well-researched book, which relies on primary sources of information, directs the reader to sources where more interesting information can be obtained." Kofi Amkomah

Library J 97:891 Mr 1 '72 370w

Reviewed by Carey McWilliams

Nation 213:700 D 27 '71 40w

"When does a research-and-development firm attain think-tank status? Mr. Dickson explains. . . . Dickson finds that think tanks are quite as capable of blundering as less avowedly intellectual firms. Some are blinded by biases, others merely document the obvious, and still others—especially when engaged in federally sponsored research—are all too apt to indulge in excessive secrecy. . . . Provocative and carefully researched, Mr. Dickson's book may well spur an aware public to create its own think tanks to insure that the views of vested interests in government bureaucracies and in industry do not prevail over the needs of this nation's present and future inhabitants." Leonard Jaquinta

Sat R 55:82 Mr 18 '72 1100w

"[Although] he is wrong on a good many points. . . . Dickson is good at describing the work and very good at capturing the special character of each institute, and his judgments can be refreshingly direct. . . . [He] burnishes the tarnished mystique of 'R&D,' overvaluing its significance and the power of its practitioners. . . . Nonetheless, the book can be heartily recommended as a lively and engrossing contribution to our knowledge of policy research institutes." Harold Orlans

Science 175:162 Ja 14 '72 800w

DICKSON, PAUL—Continued

"[Dickson] has made his excellent journalist's report mainly out of visits and interviews and rather less from the documentary record. . . . There are 'at least 17,000 research entities' in the U.S. today, from the Hale Observatories to the dog-food-company laboratories. About 600 of them are think tanks . . . whose output is not directed toward science and technology so much as toward analytical matter 'relevant to people who make policy,' from admirals to mere voters. . . . Most of this readable volume is devoted to narratives of what in fact goes on at 10 or 15 of these lettered places." Philip Morrison
Sci Am 227:119 J1 '72 1100w

DICKSTEIN, MORRIS. Keats and his poetry; a study in development. 270p $9.50 Univ. of Chicago press

821 Keats, John
ISBN 0-226-14795-9 LC 74-136019

This is a "study of Keats's striving for an aesthetic resolution of his ambivalence. He yearned for insentience, for 'the feel of not to feel it'; yet he also clung to the delights of sensation." (Library J)

"Though Dickstein's critical analysis is often clever and ingenious, it does not have the significance of [E.] Wasserman's The finer tone [BRD 1953], which covers much of the same ground. Dickstein's analysis is sometimes excessive, often repetitious, always serious. It will have considerable appeal to a few dozen specialists, but beyond this limited group, it will attract few readers."

Choice 8:1329 D '71 70w

"[Keats's] famous statement on 'negative capability' (which Dickstein could have stressed more than he does) called for the ability to be in 'uncertainties, mysteries, doubts, without any irritable reaching after fact and reason.' Keats's long search for this state of mind, achieved most strikingly in the Olympian detachment of The Fall of Hyperion, is poignantly revealed in Dickstein's analysis of the poems. The method is painstaking in the extreme; the author is thoroughly conversant with the scholarship on the subject and argues his case with great care and ingenuity. One wishes, however, that he had not so often separated the poems from the life. . . . Yet the poems themselves, and their strong antinomies, are made clear to the mind's eye." N. C. Starr
Library J 96:1713 My 15 '71 130w

"Everyone reads a Keats book according to his own canon, and so I turned at once to the chapter on the great Odes, looking especially for what Mr. Dickstein would have to say about the greatest of them, 'To Autumn.' I found that it was accorded two sentences, and called 'no more than a flawless and seemingly effortless footnote' to the other odes. A bit taken aback, I went on to my second choice the 'Ode on a Grecian Urn.' That got somewhat more space, but Mr. Dickstein warned me that since [it] 'covers in its special way the same ground as the Nightingale ode . . . it is superfluous for me to undertake a full-scale reading.' . . . Keats's bad poems and his slight poems are . . . considered, as they should be, in a central chapter unravelling Keats's difficulties of thought and composition. . . . Far and away the most interesting and capable part of Mr. Dickstein's book is his long pursuit of Keats's notion of a 'bower,' that image that most of us know best in the opening lines of 'Endymion'." Helen Vendler
N Y Times Bk R p5 Mr 21 '71 1050w

"Psychoanalytical distinctions might be invoked to describe the argument of [this study], for the book's main contention is that at the beginning of his poetic career Keats conceived of poetry and its function in terms of the pleasure principle of instinctual gratification and of escape from reality, and that as his poetic gifts matured the claims of reality and of an expanded awareness of tragic situation increasingly supervened. Not that the book is a psychoanalytical study, nor yet a philosophical one. It is rather a tightly knit literary analysis, and it displays an easy command of all aspects of Keats studies. It is also an elegantly written book. Indeed, in some paradoxical way, the gloss of its style becomes almost a hindrance. Not only is the sense of emphasis and summary diminished in order to maintain its tone of well-bred intellectual sophistication, but that same tone seems to filter out some of the energy of Keats himself." Thomas McFarland
Yale R 61:279 D '71 1200w

DIEBOLD, WILLIAM. The United States and the industrial world; American foreign economic policy in the 1970s [by] William Diebold, Jr.; pub. for the Council on int. relations. 463p $13.50 Praeger

382 International economic relations
LC 70-96292

"After outlining the U.S.'s present uncertain policies and their evolution, the author suggests desirable objectives and policies to achieve them with respect to trade, exchange rates, multinational firms, agriculture, private investment, and other areas. He examines broad policy alternatives for the future in the final chapters." (Library J) Index.

"This is a scholarly, thoughtful and detailed study of the foreign economic policy of the United States—at a time when the policy that America put together during and just after the second world war (in a form that was 'reasonably clear-cut and fairly consistent') is fading away; and when there might be some danger that an unequalled 25-year period of international economic co-operation could be replaced by an era of economic nationalism." Economist 245:67 O 21 '72 110w

"Diebold, a senior research fellow for the Council on Foreign Relations, here analyzes in his usual thorough fashion the economic relationships between the U.S., Canada, Europe and Japan. . . . This excellent study, accessible to all, is highly recommended." R. E. Will
Library J 97:2580 Ag '72 140w

DIENST, ROLF-GUNTER. Lindner. See Lindner, R.

DIGGINS, JOHN P. Mussolini and fascism: the view from America. 524p il $16.50 Princeton univ. press

301.15 Fascism—Italy. Public opinion. Italy—Foreign opinion. American
ISBN 0-691-04604-2 LC 78-153845

Mussolini "fascinated Americans in the 1920's and early '30's. Their response—White House and Italian-Americans; business, the church, and the American Legion; newsmen and scholars—is the subject of John Diggins' study. . . . [He considers] American impressions of Italy before 1923; . . . the role of the press and the effect of economic, political, or religious variables in the shaping of [American] opinion; [and] postwar reassessments of Italy by novelists and scholars. His analysis leads [him] to conclude that] . . . most Americans approved of Fascism on the basis of their own predispositions and needs—and would do so again." (Publisher's note) Some of the material in this book has appeared in such periodicals as American Historical Review and Journal of American History. Annotated bibliography. Index.

Ann Am Acad 403:165 S '72 300w

"[It] is the author's somber conviction not only that [Fascism] could happen here, given the right conditions, but that some of the right conditions exist in the United States today. . . . Unfortunately, [his book] is not likely to obtain the wide reading it deserves, for it is primarily a scholarly treatise, and, although it is written in plain English. . . . and is sparsely rather heavily going, for Diggins is not free of the scholarly vice of laboring his points. . . . with the result that he becomes repetitious enough to risk exhausting the patience of any but the most scholarly reader." G. W. Johnson

Book World p 11 Mr 19 '72 550w

Choice 9:571 Je '72 170w

"Diggins has done his homework [in] this original work. . . . [He shows that] conservatives, moderates and liberals were ordinarily either ambivalent and bewildered or favorable toward what they saw."

Christian Century 89:346 Mr 22 '72 60w

"How to explain that [Mussolini's] 'system,' so antithetical to our democratic ideals and traditions, was so extravagantly praised and so widely supported? These are the tasks Diggins of Princeton has set himself in his admirable and, as it turns out, frightening inquiry into American opinion. . . . One explanation for Fascism's appeal to important sections of the middle and upper classes, as well as to many workers, was a state of anxiety, assiduously fostered by our government and press, about a Red revolution. . . . Another explanation was (and still is) a tendency of Americans to view political leaders superficially, to take them at face value, or the value with which their faces are presented. . . . Diggins is convinced that we still suffer from the euphoria." Alden Whitman

Harper 244:102 Ap '72 1200w

"A thorough study of American responses to and interpretations of Fascism." Diggins finds that . . . while American businessmen [in the 1920's] admired Mussolini, there were many critics of Fascism in the ranks of American labor. Intellectuals were attracted to Mussolini . . . [and] American liberals were attracted to Fascism's seemingly enlightened economic theories. . . . The State Department was particularly friendly. Not until after the Ethiopian war did American opinion become more critical. This disturbing, fascinating book is highly recommended." Keith Eubank

Library J 97:2088 Je 1 '72 160w

New Yorker 48:106 Ap 1 '72 140w

DIGGLE, JAMES, ed. Euripides: Phaethon; ed. with prolegomena and commentary. 243p il $19.50 Cambridge

882 Euripides—Phaethon
SBN 521-07700-1 LC 73-96084

"From manuscript, papyrus and literary texts Dr. Diggle has gleaned all that can be traced of Euripides's play: three short choric episodes, a total of less than a hundred complete iambic senarii, and, for the rest, half-lines, half-words and single letters." (TLS)

"Of the 66 plays that Euripides wrote, we have only 17 or 18. . . . Scholarship has recently turned, however, to rescuing the numerous plays that have come down in fragments, and the Phaethon is a case in point. . . . Diggle has reconstructed the basic plot. (down to such Euripidean features as the deus ex machina and the unsuspecting 'father' of a god's son).

The most interesting part of the work for the general reader, however, will be the careful reconstruction of the myth of Phaethon in antiquity. . . . Exemplary for its clarity and for its mastery of detail, the work is an ideal introduction to the real world of tragedy that lies beneath our meager inheritance of plays selected for schoolboys in late antiquity, and should have a place in every good library of Greek and Latin texts."

Choice 8:1448 Ja '72 220w

"What, after all, does Diggle give us in this expensive volume? On the one hand, all the best stuff of scholarship: a conservative and Wilamowitz-debunking introduction; a conservative text with critical apparatus signifying mastery of those two horses, paleography and papyrology; a commentary which discusses in detail textual and other problems' (always first things first!); and three Appendices, on Ovid and Nonnus, the Rhetors, and the Monuments. . . . Let's face it: we have only about one-seventh of Phaethon. . . . Pay your money, pay tribute to scholarship, enjoy what you can—and imagine a beautiful tragedy which, realistically speaking, we simply haven't got." K. J. Reckford

Mod Lang J 56:338 My '72 700w

"[Diggle] has not been able to reveal a masterpiece of Euripidean drama, but it is a pleasure to follow so expertly conducted an autopsy."

TLS p751 J1 9 '70 120w

DIGIACOMO, JAMES. We were never their age [by] James DiGiacomo and Edward Wakin. 185p il $5.95; pa $2.75 Holt 301.43 Youth—U.S. Conflict of generations.

Christian life
ISBN 0-03-086568-9; 0-03-086742-8 (pa)
LC 74-160461

The authors attempt "to bridge the generation gap and to explain to perplexed parents some of the mysteries which enwrap the teenager. . . . Parents are reminded that it is not possible to make comparisons between their own salad days and the present time. Every institution of society which seemed so stable as recently as ten years ago has undergone profound changes." (America)

"It is easy to accept all that Di Giacomo and Wakin have to say about college and high school students in general. . . . But when I try to institute some kind of dialogue with my teen-age children, it is another story altogether. The very fact of my being their father sets up a barrier to communication which all the wisdom of this book cannot penetrate. Yet the main message of the book is valid. . . . It is the change in values which is hardest for adults to cope with. And it is here that I find Di Giacomo and Wakin somewhat unsatisfactory. . . . I grant that teenagers are disgusted with adult dishonesty, facade and cant, but I find that teenagers have not always replaced these failings with valid substitutes. . . . One other thing bothers me. In their discussion of students in Catholic high schools, the question of the viability and validity of such schools never seems to arise. [However, this] book should be circulated widely among all who deal with the young. . . . [they] can learn much from it." Daniel Cogan

America 126:485 My 6 '72 700w

"The book should be read by anyone who works with or loves young people. Intelligent advice is offered in the chapters which deal with communication between parents and young people; the authors' statements on obedience, the cult of sincerity, and subjectivity are particularly good. But the book as a whole does not come off. There is first of all a problem with the prose, which often wears the earnest and embarrassing look of most religious attempts at hip. . . . There are more important things wrong. . . . The similarities between the counter-culture and the parent society are ignored. . . . But if what is most disturbing in the values of our children is . . . an extension of values we accept and exemplify, then we are in some way responsible. [Also, the book] is billed as 'a guide for Christian parents.' The problem is that Christianity is not required for what it does best, or for the virtues it recommends most. . . . The reduction of Christianity to morality has been a major factor in the flight of young people from the churches." James Garvey

Commonweal 97:19 O 6 '72 1000w

DI GIOVANNI, NORMAN THOMAS, ed. Selected poems, 1923-1967. See Borges, J. L.

DILKE, O. A. W. The Roman land surveyors; an intro. to the Agrimensores. 260p il pl maps $12.50 Barnes & Noble

937 Surveying, Rome—History
ISBN 389-04165-3 LC 74-865604

"The Roman land surveyors, forerunners of modern cartographers, were highly professional, trained at first on the job and then academically. What sort of instruments did they use? What system of mathematics? How did they tackle a job of land-surveying and mapping, laying out a new town or allotting an army veteran's plot of ground, setting out the boundaries of a frontier, or making the roads for which they are justly renowned? Professor Dilke has written the first . . . book to answer these and many other questions." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Glossary. Index.

"[This is a] useful, if not overly exciting book. . . . At times the work appears somewhat disorganized, but the scholarship is always sound and thorough. There is no modern book like this in English and the work will prove very valuable as a reference on this very important activity in Roman life. The only area where it will become outdated relatively soon is in the study of the relationship between land planning in the Greek colonies of South Italy and the development of Roman land planning. Dilke gives this less attention than he should when the most current research is considered."

Choice 9:700 J1/Ag '72 130w

"Roads, colonies, military camps, legal order and political strife: all that constitutes the essence of Rome is here shown to depend on surveying. . . . The subject has always demanded illustration, and drawings from the sixth-century Arcerianus A (in Wolfenbützel) and the later Palatinus (in the Vatican) enrich the text. Dilke and his son have added invaluable representations of the geometric problems. . . . Ingenuity and learning vie with each other for first notice in this extraordinary little book." P. N. Lockhart

Class World 65:240 Mr '72 330w

"The enormously wide range of ancient and modern sources which . . . [the author] employs, presenting and analysing them with concise and accurate efficiency, make it seem that, except in the event of new archaeological discoveries, his study will never be superseded. . . . In addition to a text that it would be hard or impossible to fault, there are thirty-three plates, some of them illustrating material that has rarely or never been reproduced before. In addition, there are no fewer than fifty-three illustrations, plans, and maps in the text. . . . The general reader . . . cannot fail to admire, almost with aesthetic emotion, what is so manifestly a masterpiece of scholarly research."

DILKE, O. A. W.—Continued

TLS p1341 O 22 '71 320w

DILKS, DAVID, ed. The diaries of Sir Alexander Cadogan, 1938-1945. See Cadogan, A.

DILLARD, J. L. Black English; its history and usage in the United States. 361p il $10 Random house

427 Negroes—Language. Americanisms
ISBN 0-394-46760-4 LC 71-102330

This is a "study of the distinctive way the majority of black Americans talk. . . . Black English is not a sloppy imitation of white English, Dillard insists, but a precise language with a history and grammar of its own. . . . Using seventeenth-century journals and several writings of Daniel Defoe as evidence [he] traces the origins of black English back to the slave trade. . . . It is high time, he argues, that white teachers and testers stop putting down slow-learning black children as 'non-verbal.' . . . And he suggests that black children first be taught how to read black English so as to learn the principles of reading before being taught standard English." (Newsweek) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:110 S '72 140w

"[The author] presents a fascinating discussion of Black English, not only as an operative tongue in its own right, not only as having strong ties with other such operative tongues throughout the black Caribbean, but also as a speech which has had noticeable word and accent influence on Standard American, whether Northern or Southern. This history and discussion alone is well worth the book's reading. When, however, he moves on to a discussion of what should or could be done in regard to Black English's future status in the United States, Prof. Dillard seems to be in as deep a quandary as anyone else. [But his] knowledgeable book is a valuable intellectual bulldozer clearing the way for further efforts."

J. G. Harrison

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 2 '72 700w

Reviewed by S. R. Rounds

Library J 97:2709 S 1 '72 200w

Reviewed by R. L. Chapman

Nation 215:278 O 2 '72 1650w

"Chapter 2, 'On the Structure of Black English,' seems to me to be Dillard's most substantial contribution. . . . He undertakes here a systematic description of how the syntax of Black English differs from that of white English. . . . Dillard seems to me to prove successfully that Black English differs structurally, as well as in vocabulary, from white, and that white English is best taught to blacks as a second or foreign language. Neither of these propositions is new, but they have not before been demonstrated so fully or convincingly. He seems much less successful in proving African origins, but this is not logically necessary to his case: there is no need to determine origin to establish a dialect's legitimacy and respectability or its difference from Standard English." M. K. Spears

N Y Rev of Books 19:32 N 6 '72 2350w

"[The author] evaluates the numerous techniques of teaching standard English as a second language in terms of their appropriateness and effectiveness to date with black students. And he devotes considerable energy to demonstrating the kinds of drills he . . . used in language courses conducted at Columbia's teacher-training institute. . . . Very little of this book is profoundly new or superheavy. But rather than file through back copies of the Florida FL Reporter or thumb through the cluttered 'Afro-American Anthropology' or plow through the catalogues of brand x publishers the interested reader can have it all in one book. And . . . the book—whose original title was 'Black English and White Professors' opts for a general address to educators rather than a directed attack on diehard pedagogues."

T. C. Bambara

N Y Times Bk R p3 S 3 '72 1750w

"A teacher of linguistics at the University of Puerto Rico, Dillard writes in a laborious, take-nothing-for-granted style that makes for heavy going. But he marshals an impressive—and often fascinating—case. . . . [He] not only shoots down the assumption that the Negro got his dialect from the Southern white, but asserts that the Southern white dialect was in fact heavily influenced by Negro speech. . . . Ultimately, of course, the real test of black English is its usefulness in present-day America. On this score, Dillard has no doubt. . . . His cause is not his own: in recent years, black militants and a few frustrated white educators have been saying the same things with a vengeance. Now, anyone who reads 'Black English' will find it hard not to agree."

Charles Michener

Newsweek 80:81 Ag 14 '72 550w

DILLARD, R. H. W. News of the Nile; a book of poems. 59p $3.75 Univ. of N.C. press

811

ISBN 0-8078-1162-9 LC 77-132251

A collection of poetry by the contemporary American writer.

"Dillard's second book . . . is wonderfully zany and wise. He takes on ideas that come from anybody from St. Augustine on up (or down) to Bram Stoker. And he has the intelligence to make the terror light and the morality a graceful act, and strange. Dillard is not surreal and he's far from camp. . . . [There is a suggestion of] regionalism in some of [his] work, a regional idiom carefully controlled and carried by a music carefully tuned—but ultimately he's closer to Wallace Stevens than he is to Robert Frost or Robert Penn Warren."

James Whitehead

Sat R 54:37 D 18 '71 550w

"This second volume of verse fulfils and goes beyond the promise of Dillard's first, 'The Day I Stopped Dreaming about Barbara Steele and Other Poems' [BRD 1967]. The same qualities of rhythmic elegance, sonority, and a remarkable eye for fine detail are all here, only more refined, more steady, more expert. Dillard's verse has a rare combination of erudition, wit, and warmth. It is the poetry of one in love with life. . . . The title poem of the volume is a fine pure music as the 'begats' of 'Genesis' or the list of ships in the 'Iliad.' Through it all there is a kind of sadness that anything once a part of life should no longer be. But a poet's song can fetch it back to a kind of life."

Va Q R 47:cv summer '71 160w

DILLARD, R. H. W., ed. The sounder few; essays from the Hollins critic; ed. by R. H. W. Dillard [and others]. 385p il $10 Univ. of Ga. press

820 American literature—History and criticism. English literature—History and criticism

ISBN 0-8203-0262-7 LC 77-129467

"Seventeen full-length essay reviews of recent works by living writers selected from the Hollins critic, a journal whose objective has been to invite critics to treat at length individual writers who have done enough to warrant serious consideration but whose reputations are far from settled." (Choice) "This book reprints essays on J. P. Donleavy, John Cheever, Richard Eberhart, Flannery O'Connor, James Baldwin, Vladimir Nabokov, Kurt Vonnegut, Jr., John Barth, Robert Lowell, Wright Morris, William Styron, Norman Podhoretz, and Howard Nemerov (along with four British authors). Each essay has been supplemented by a biographical sketch, a short bibliography, and comments on works published since the original essay appeared." (Am Lit) Chapter bibliographies.

Am Lit 44:349 My '72 90w

"In addition to convenience, this collection has the advantages of updated bibliographies and afterwords to the essays which bring them up to date; but such advantages scarcely warrant purchase by libraries already subscribing to the Hollins critic. The essays themselves are of excellent quality, and judicious criticism of recent literature is not easy to come by, but the nature of the book tends to militate against its appeal and usefulness. Because of the diversity of its content, few people will read it straight through; and a reader interested in a particular essay will have difficulty locating it here."

Choice 9:643 J1/Ag '72 80w

"Produced for a literate but not necessarily learned audience, these seventeen essays succeed admirably in every way. The critics uniformly reveal intelligence, honesty, and enthusiasm. They obviously have not worked up an assignment but rather responded to works that challenged them. Throughout there is the lively play of sensitive and experienced readers who, with pleasure in their own craft, lead their audience to some of the major writers. . . . This is a remarkable guide for the mature reader."

Va Q R 48:l11 spring '72 150w

DILLON, JACK. The advertising man. 316p
$6.95 Harper mag. press
SBN 06-122000-0 LC 72-79717

This novel "covers eleven days in the life of Jim Bower, 48, whose twenty-year marriage is falling apart in Connecticut while his job as copy head of a top agency is slipping out from under him. A new president who believes in market research, time charts and 'tightening up' takes over the office where the 'creative' heads once ruled. As Jim Bower fails to adjust to the new regime, we get swift cross drafts of office politics: Jim's this-can't-be-happening obliviousness to warning signals, his affinity to other middle-aged losers, his attempts to keep his cracking life in separate compartments." (Newsweek)

Reviewed by W. P. Murphy
Best Sell 32:343 N 1 '72 600w

"This [is a] crisp, fast-moving novel. . . . Dillon's slick narrative is cruelly precise in its portrayals of obtuse, unimaginative executives. The clever dialogue, studded with one-liners, keeps the book's tone light, counteracting build-up of tension. More than a fictional exposé of the ad business, the novel gives a stark and alarming picture of the plight of the harried commuter, and of urban man in general." J. W. Smothers

Library J 97:2430 J1 '72 200w

"[This novel] is a superior entertainment and, rather surprisingly, a touching one." Walter Clemons

Newsweek 80:82 S 11 '72 430w

"Dillon, who is himself an agency V. P. (Doyle Dane Bernbach), zeros in on the life of a man about to lose his job. . . . What is entirely believable is the crunch of the business, minus the hokum writers have concocted since Frederic Wakeman laid the facts of Ad Alley life on the line [in The Hucksters, BRD 1946]. . . . The author is unfailingly artful at reproducing the specific gravity of all manner of indigenous dialogue, from occupational to bar car recreational. This requires a highly special gift. It's easier to capture the flavor of the Orient Express than of the 6:05 to Westport." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p40 S 10 300w

Reviewed by Martha Duffy
Time 100:75 S 11 '72 600w

DIODENES OF OENOANDA. The fragments. See Chilton, C. W. Diogenes of Oenoanda: the fragments; a translation and commentary

DIOLE, PHILIPPE, jt. auth. Diving for sunken treasure. See Cousteau, J.-Y.

DI PALMA, GIUSEPPE. Apathy and participation: mass politics in Western societies. 263p $6.95 Free press 329 Politics, Practical. Political psychology. Political sociology
LC 70-120924

This is an "analysis of public-opinion poll data about the correlates of political participation in England, Italy, West Germany, and the United States. [The author] offers data on the attitudes and orientations of people who are more or less likely to vote, attempt to influence the government, be attentive to politics, be informed about politics, etc. He makes an attempt to relate this information to theories of involvement in politics." (Library J)

"The nicest thing about this book is that the author is willing to speculate—to risk venturing where strict attention to presumably

'hard' empirical data would not permit. About a third of the study is relatively 'soft'; it involves the author's judicious and inventive use of historical and contemporary information to explore problems of political participation in modern democracies and complex societies. It includes too a most interesting comparison of structural factors that impinge on participation in the United States and Italy. Without these chapters, the book might well be cited as a limiting case of methodological/empirical overkill. The good that will perhaps derive from the methodologically exhaustive analysis is that the book may become a capstone in the use of data gathered thirteen years ago by Almond and Verba." Joseph LaPalombara
Am Pol Sci R 66:637 Je '72 1050w

"[This work] is based on a secondary analysis of data from four of the five countries treated in [G.] Almond and [S. Verba's] The Civic Culture [BRD 1964] (England, Germany, Italy, and the U.S.). . . . Di Palma's critical analysis of the relationship between modernization and democratic participation across societies is the book's most valuable feature and adds balance to the literature in this area. . . . [This] study is interesting, carefully put together and important to students of comparative politics." John Walton Contemp Sociol 1:106 Mr '72 430w (Review essay)

"The book is competently, though ploddingly, written. It will probably be of interest primarily to specialists in political science." William Silverman
Library J 96:486 F 1 '71 100w

DISCOVERING natural science: an introductory dictionary; ed. director: Paul E. Klinge; executive ed: Leo Charles Fay. 568p col il
Encyclopaedia Britannica

500.103 Natural history—Dictionaries—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-87827-001-9 LC 68-28863

"The various plant, animal and earth science entries in the front section of the dictionary were selected by authorities in their corresponding sciences. Selection was based on frequency of use, particularly in early elementary curricula, textbooks, reference books, periodicals and nature study guides. Science authorities then wrote the text. . . . There is a main text of alphabetically arranged articles identifying, defining, describing, and illustrating terms from the life and earth sciences, then a section of charts and tables. . . . Pronunciation is given for many of the more unfamiliar words. [Illustrated index and glossary of terms.] Elementary grades and up." (Booklist)

"The dictionary covers botany and zoology a little more thoroughly than it does the other natural sciences. Each main entry . . . seldom is more than four or five short paragraphs in length. The accurate, clearly written articles are aimed at the elementary school audience for the most part, although high school students whose reading abilities are lower than normally expected will find them interesting and helpful as well. The binding is sturdy. The pages lie flat when opened toward the center of the volume, but not always toward the extreme ends. [This] is an attractive dictionary for terms commonly encountered in the elementary and secondary curricula dealing with the study of plants, animals, minerals, and other phases of the natural sciences. . . . It is recommended."

Booklist 68:826 Je 1 '72 850w

"[I] found some slips beyond the inevitable troubles caused by trying to boil down a whole specialty into a half a column. For example, . . . it is stated that the planet Mercury rotates with one face permanently toward the sun, a belief now several years out of date. . . . Accretion is described . . . as 'an increase in the size of organic substances,' but the illustrative example is an icicle—hardly organic. In spite of such errors, the illustrations are certainly good, and I have remarked earlier on the futility of trying to keep scientific literature completely up to date. Whether slips like these are too serious to make the book acceptable must be decided by each teacher involved; personally, I plan to keep it around. It might be fun to set students searching for more errors." H. C. Stubbs
Horn Bk 48:75 F '72 190w

DI TUCCIO MANETTI, ANTONIO. See Manetti, A. di T.

DIVINE, ROBERT A. ed. The Cuban missile crisis; ed. with commentary by Robert A. Divine. 248p $8.95; pa $2.65 Quadrangle bks. 973.922 Cuba—History—1959- . U.S.—Foreign relations—Russia
SBN 8129-0183-5; 8129-6146-3 (pa)
LC 70-152090

The editor presents a collection of articles by various authors concerning the 1962 confrontation between Russia and the U.S. over Cuba. "Organized into sections on 'the initial reactions to the crisis,' 'the problem of Soviet motivation,' and 'the continuing debate,' the selections range from the rightist criticism of David Lowenthal through Administration defenses like that of Roger Hilsman to the leftist [latitude] of I. F. Stone." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Divine argues convincingly that [the Cuban missile crisis] which brought the world to the edge of nuclear war represents a unique 'case study' of the political, ideological, and organizational pressures that influence diplomacy in the atomic era. The 16 excerpts in this collection cover the full spectrum of interpretations regarding this critical period, and Divine's commentaries, placing the various arguments in historical context, are most informative. This anthology comprises the most helpful and balanced account of the Cuban missile crisis yet to appear."

Choice 8:1636 F '72 150w

"Because we survived it, we usually like to think of the Cuban Missile Crisis as a model of responsible nuclear brinkmanship. There are observers, however, who for many reasons disagree with this view. Divine, professor of history at the University of Texas at Austin, has now assembled their arguments in a way that handily reveals the dimensions of the controversy. . . . The articles raise a number of interesting questions concerning the processes of decision making and the morality of the government's absolute claim upon the lives of its citizens. Although principally intended for use in college classrooms, the book could well serve all concerned readers." Charles DeBenedetti

Library J 96:2310 J1 '71 150w

Reviewed by Ronald Steel

N Y Rev of Books 19:43 O 19 '72 800w

DIXON, PETER. Rhetoric. (The critical idiom, 19) 88p $3; pa $1.25 Barnes & Noble 808 Rhetoric
SBN 416-66750-3; 416-66760-0 (pa)
LC [72-175822]

"The theme of this book is that 'the fortunes and the meaning of rhetoric are still fluctuating.' . . . [Beginning with a] survey of classical rhetorical theory . . . Dixon proceeds to discuss the impact rhetoric has had on literature—chiefly English literature—and particularly on poetry. He stresses. . . the central place rhetoric had in classical, medieval and Renaissance education. . . . After accounting for the bad fortunes of rhetoric, Dixon highlights . . . the recent renewal of rhetoric." (Class World)

"In a mere 88 pages, Mr. Dixon has attempted rather successfully to indicate some of the . . . fluctuations [of rhetoric] in the past and to re-assert 'the sanctity of words.' . . . [His] failure to explore the impact of rhetoric in . . . literary genres such as prose and oratory is disappointing because the classical notion was that rhetoric is essentially oral persuasive discourse and because he ignores the rich British tradition of parliamentary speakers available to him for illustrative material. For classical scholars, too, the parenthetical and shallow coverage of the enthymeme is quite inadequate. . . . [The] book does not include some of the most recent 'fluctuations of rhetoric' in [England] and thus has too limited a perspective for great usefulness by scholars in disciplines other than English literature. In spite of [its] limitations it does provide beginning students a 'simple and straightforward but reasonably full [discussion]' of the critical term rhetoric." D. R. Heisey

Class World 66:114 O '72 250w

"[This] is not a book for the beginner. . . . In general Mr Dixon is long on history, short on literary criticism. He gives fresh and scholarly accounts of Isocrates and Cicero, but is too uncritical of Socrates's travesty of rhetoric in the Gorgias and does not give enough attention to Aristotle's answers to Plato. . . . His accounts of the 'renunciation of rhetoric' in the eighteenth and its 'renewal' in this century (when?) appear brief and obscure. But he has an important topic, and he provides a lucid and reliable guide to it."

TLS p849 J1 21 '72 250w

DJILAS, MILOVAN. The stone and the violets; tr. by Lovett F. Edwards. 238p $6.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-185100-X LC 76-174507

More prison writing from the author at Sremska Mitrovica about fifty miles from Belgrade. "This volume contains 13 pieces, most of which are fiction. Themes, as in his Under the Colors [BRD 1971], are nationalism, honor, pride, and revenge." (Library J)

"These thirteen vignettes from the tiny Black Mountain republic where, legend has it, God dumped the rocks left over from creation, are parables. . . . The colors here are Montenegrin, but the tapestry is woven of elemental human emotions, of pleasure and pain, of love and lust, of youth and age, of life and death. . . . The stories can bring tears of frustration when legends yield to disillusion, or wonder when freedom is born from the ashes of glory. The author's way with words and emotions confirms the Tolstoyan touch, even in English translation." Walter Jaskiewicz

America 126:439 Ap 22 '72 350w

Reviewed by Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor pB6 My 4 '72 500w

"Two short pieces, 'The Doctor and the Eagle' and 'Two Wolves,' achieve the quality of the folk tale, while 'About Marko Miljanov' is really an essay. As usual in Djilas' fiction, Montenegrin history and national characteristics are used in many cases to illuminate the thought and situation of Djilas himself; and several of the pieces seem autobiographical. Although the translation occasionally seems awkward, libraries collecting Eastern European literature and history will want to add this." R. H. Donahugh

Library J 97:1016 Mr 15 '72 90w

Reviewed by Neal Ascherson

N Y Rev of Books 19:15 N 30 '72 800w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p30 J1 16 '72 250w

New Yorker 48:131 Mr 25 '72 130w

"The power of the Prince of Darkness is eternal and cannot be overcome, but it can and must be resisted. . . . Something of this resistance is conveyed in these tales: the renunciation by Marko Miljanov of the power and honors he has won in order to remain true to himself and his past; the violets an old man tosses into a pit, where the enemies of the people had been thrown by their executioners, as a token of respect for their souls; and, most of all, by the example of Djilas himself, who has been the personification of resistance to evil, as political thinker, writer, and man [since] . . . he was imprisoned for dissidence." Edward Wasiolek

Sat R 55:100 Mr 25 '72 1000w

DOBIE, JAMES FRANK. Out of the old rock. 237p $6.95 Little 818

LC 71-186971

A collection which the author's widow has gathered together of profiles and portraits which had appeared, sometimes obscurely, in Dobie's lifetime. Broken down into fifteen segments, eight distinct personalities who were more or less prominent in their fields of endeavor are covered.

"One chapter in particular is most interesting. When we think of gunslingers and those who won the West by using a six-gun, it seems natural to think of Wild Bill Hickok or possibly Bat Masterson. Dobie [instead writes of] . . . an oldtimer named Clay Allison. As Dobie explains, Clay was a wearer of the white hat and was a much feared individual by those who had a penchant for breaking the law. Also, Allison doubled in brass when it came time to say a few words over the graves of the dear departed. Mr. Allison must have been just a cut above the ordinary. . . . Each [episode in the book] is much different from its predecessor. For those who like to live in the past, this book can be catalogued as light, interesting reading." Al Phillips

Best Sell 32:132 Je 15 '72 250w

"Over the years, Dobie the Old Pro became Dobie the Professional Old Pro, a prodigiously gifted man, writing much—much of which holds up well. His widow's collection of random profiles and portraits might have been, all too easily, a sentimental ragbag of minor pieces. But it is not. Unlike most posthumous compilations, this work is a solid re-collection of hearty stuff. . . . With all his legendary anecdotal skill, Dobie brings back to life the writers and teachers, cowmen and gunmen, artists and preachers, philosophers and wits he had known and admired. . . . Since Dobie did not write the book as a unit and did not shape it, it can hardly stand as a major addition to his own 19. But it is pure Dobie, and, like boiled range coffee, it leaves the partaker revived and wanting more."

Choice 9:967 O '72 160w

DOBNEY, FREDRICK J., ed. Selected papers of Will Clayton. See Clayton, W. L.

DOBSON, JOHN M. Politics in the gilded age; a new perspective on reform; foreword by James P. Shenton. 200p $7.50; pa $2.95 Praeger 320.9 U.S.—Politics and government—1865-1898. Civil service—U.S. Political parties LC 78-170467

In this re-examination of the political parties of the Gilded Age the "first part concerns the development and character of highly organized parties. The second describes the efforts of a group of dissidents who hoped, through the instrumentality of civil-service reform, to reverse the trend toward organization in the parties." (Pref) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Dobson's study rests on a thorough reading of secondary literature as well as on his own research into such primary sources as papers of individuals, newspapers, and pamphlets. While he introduces the latest historiography, Dobson rarely refutes or substantially alters recent interpretations. . . . Well-written in a graceful, lively style [this work] contributes most in its analysis of the 1884 election." S. M. Hartman

Ann Am Acad 404:283 N '72 500w

"Dobson seeks to fill a gap in the existing literature by offering a new synthesis of Gilded Age scholarship. Unfortunately, this is poor fare even for college sophomores. . . . His analysis of the Mugwumps' motivations and programs is extremely superficial. He totally ignores the urban factors which spawned the Mugwump mentality, and his treatment of their social and economic views is hazy at best. Finally, the volume suffers from too much 'present-mindedness.'"

Choice 9:873 S '72 170w

"[This book] traces the tangled politics of the period between the Civil War and the turn of the century. . . . The book appears to be little more than a conventional presentation of established interpretations of the period; and, for a volume which by the nature of its subject is aimed at a scholarly audience, the lack of footnotes is a glaring omission." R. L. Filippelli

Library J 97:1011 Mr 15 '72 250w

DODD, EDWARD. Polynesian seafaring; a disquisition on prehistoric celestial navigation and the nature of seagoing double canoes, with 11 reproducing original field sketches, wash drawings, or prints by artists on the early voyages of exploration and occasional written reports from on-the-scene observers. (The ring of fire, v2) 192p $17.50 Dodd 910.4 Voyages and travels. Pacific Ocean. Ethnology—Polynesia. Navigation ISBN 0-396-06522-8 LC 70-38892

"How did the Polynesians get there? Thousands and thousands of miles over the Pacific to thousands of islands, thousands of years ago? . . . [This book advances the] hypothesis of how they navigated by aligning stars both fore and aft of their canoes, using their little vessels in a manner somewhat similar to the way we used our still much smaller compass needles. Celestial navigation is the first part of the book. The next part on construction and design shows . . . sketches and plans of the vessels themselves, drawings by the first European artists who reported the Polynesian creation of double hulls, the origin of straddle stability and 'catamaran' sailors." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index. For volume one of The Ring of Fire entitled A pictorial peregrination through . . . Polynesian Art see BRD 1968.

"[The author takes] issue with both Thor Heyerdahl's argument for migration from South America by sea-drift and Andrew Sharp's accidental-voyage-from-Asia theory. . . . Dodd, an experienced sailor and devotee of Polynesia, relies on anthropological evidence and personal observation in presenting his readable, careful, and vigorously argued consideration of Polynesian maritime life. His frequent and often critical references in the course of his essay to the work of other authorities helps to compensate for his deliberate omission of specific citations to sources. Highly recommended for all maritime and Pacific area collections."

Choice 9:866 S '72 200w

"Although . . . the jumbled contents of Polynesian Seafaring resemble those of a typical sea bag at the end of a two-day reach offshore Dodd's book serves some useful purposes. It calls to general notice, in an uncomplicated way, a theoretical wrangle centering in the Journal of the Polynesian Society over a simplistic hypothesis refurbished some sixteen years ago by Andrew Sharp to explain the presence, on remote Pacific islands, of similar people speaking slight variants of the same language. It is also probably the most comprehensive source in print of illustrative evidence on the structure of traditional deep-sea craft built in the islands. . . . Dodd is neither as disciplined nor as dull as most of the scholars in this field; he should have presented his book for what it really is, an exercise in love and imagination." Alexander Laing

Nation 215:149 S 4 '72 2400w

DODGE, BAYARD, ed. & tr. The Fihrist of Al-Nadim. See The Fihrist of Al-Nadim

DODGE, DAVID. Troubleshooter. 355p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y) LC 79-122295

The same hero, a special agent of the U.S. Treasury Department, is featured in two separate stories. In the first, he "is undergoing a semi-judicial inquiry in Washington after his release by the Chinese Communists. The questions being investigated relate to the circumstances surrounding his capture in Hong Kong and the reasons for his release after three years' solitary confinement. The second [story] concerns the agent's reassignment to duty in South Africa. There he becomes involved with a black insurrection against the white rulers of that country." (Library J)

"[The second story] is a good adventure yarn, having almost no dependence on the crude first section, and strong social overtones." Leo Fleming

Best Sell 31:27 Ap 1 '71 90w

"Sex and violence permeate both stories but always within the context of the narrative. Not an essential purchase by any means, but worth considering for larger fiction collections; the author has a good eye for local color." Norman Horrocks

Library J 96:205 Ja 15 '71 150w

"[This book] is a thriller with more than mere thrills to recommend it. . . . Here are two enclosed worlds (presented with great care for detail) whose savagery towards their enemies makes them kin, whatever their nominal positions in the political spectrum. An author who can persuade you into a narrow life to experience it, and out again to pass judgment on the experience, is worth any reader's time." John Spurling

New Statesman 83:319 Mr 10 '72 120w

Reviewed by Haskel Frankel
Sat R 54:51 Mr 27 '71 80w

DODGE, DAVID L. Social stress and chronic illness; mortality patterns in industrial society, by David L. Dodge and Walter T. Martin. (Notre Dame, Univ. Inst. for the study of population and social change. Publication) 331p $9.95 Univ. of Notre Dame press

616 Stress (Physiology). Diseases
ISBN 0-268-00435-8 LC 79-122051

The authors are concerned with "the relation of the socio-cultural environment to morbidity and mortality patterns. . . . They seek to explain (1) the shift from infectious to chronic disease as the major cause of death in the developing nations; (2) the absolute increase in chronic disease rates in industrialized societies; and (3) the differential rates of incidence and prevalence of chronic disease among major social segments of a population (such as geographic units, or age, sex, and race categories)." (Contemp Sociol)

DODGE, D. L.—Continued

"Accepting the view from psychosomatic medicine that psychological stress may induce certain forms of tissue damage and disease, Dodge and Martin hypothesize that differences in chronic disease morbidity and mortality rates of different populations are attributable to differences in their exposure to stress-inducing situations. Since measures of stress levels are non-existent, the authors proceed to test their hypothesis indirectly. . . . Methodologically, in its careful derivation of hypotheses from theory, in its detailed analysis of the major hypothesized relation under a variety of conditions, and in its prediction of outcomes prior to testing, this study serves as a model of the scientific enterprise." J. S. Brown

Contemp Sociol 1:156 Mr '72 1050w

"The theoretical arguments in the book are strong and compelling. The empirical testing of the theorem leaves much more to be desired. Using 1950 Census and vital statistics, status integration is measured by the degree of prevalence of modal marital status-age-sex and occupation-age-sex relationships in a population. That is, the degree of atypical relationships is presumed to indicate lack of status integration. These operational measures are exceedingly crude and yet the authors are able to demonstrate that they offer some measure of explanation." C. B. Nam

Social Studies 63:136 Mr '72 300w

DODGE, ERNEST S. Beyond the Capes; Pacific exploration from Captain Cook to the Challenger, 1776-1877. 429p il col il maps $12.50 Little

919 Pacific area—Discovery and exploration
LC 70-149464

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by H. L. Burstyn
Am Hist R 77:1411 D '72 650w

Reviewed by B. M. Gough
Pacific Affairs 45:472 fall '72 350w
TLS p132 F 4 '72 600w

DOE, BRIAN. Southern Arabia. 267p il maps $12.95 McGraw

913.39 Arabia, Southern—Antiquities. Excavations (Archeology)—Arabia, Southern
LC 70-105959

This is a "treatment of recent discoveries in one of the archaeological . . . areas on the rim of the Indian Ocean. . . . [Doe] proceeds from area to area . . . (covering Socotra, as well as the natural divisions of southern Arabia) and then from site to site, giving . . . descriptions of the architecture and the artifacts, if any." (Choice)

"[Doe's work, because of] its inclusion in a series entitled 'New Aspects of Archaeology' suggests new approaches rather than simply new facts. [The] book does have new facts, and important ones; but does it really represent a new way of looking at archaeology, or even at South Arabia? . . . The main trouble with [the book] from the point of view of the reader is that it is neither quite fish nor fowl. It is obviously intended partly for the coffee table market in archaeology. . . . The first half of the book meets this market quite well. . . . [The second part] however, is devoted to accounts of sites discovered in the survey, and reads about as easily as any survey report can. What is lacking is sufficient running interpretation and discussion to allow this material to be fitted into some kind of picture." Jon Muller

Am Anthropol 74:952 Ag '72 280w

"Although the many photographs and plans are welcome and well chosen, the text is taxonomically detailed without being interpretive. Doe's method of presentation is also more archaeological than historical . . . [and he] rarely puts southern Arabia discoveries into any wider historical picture. This failure is disappointing, but Doe's book still remains an essential book of basic reference, and the better libraries must have it on that account alone."

Choice 8:1370 D '71 200w

"Each page of Brian Doe's book reminds us how rich [Southern Arabia] is in archaeological remains which are still almost entirely intact. . . . His book is based, for the most part, on observations and surveys made on the spot. . . . [The] third section, entitled 'Sites' takes up half the book. Because of its numerous archaeological and geographical details it will be of most interest to the specialist. But the layman can appreciate the remarkable photographic documentation and will be given food for thought, either about the archaeological riches of the region, or about the systematic looting of certain sites for raw materials."

TLS p523 My 5 '72 800w

DÖGEN. A primer of Sōtō Zen; a tr. of Dōgen's Shōbōgenzō Zuimonki, by Reiho Masunaga. 119p $6 East West center press

294.3 Zen Buddhism
ISBN 0-8248-0094-X LC 76-126044

The volume "consists largely of brief talks, hortatory remarks, and instructional and cautionary comments by the Japanese Zen Master Dōgen (1200-1253). These were recorded by his disciple, Ejō (1198-1280), and later edited by the latter's disciples after his death." (introd)

"Zen Buddhism . . . has produced a flood of trashy literature. . . . This little book, a careful and attractive translation . . . is a welcome contrast that should stand high on the priority list for acquisition by any library. . . . The title, however, may be misleading: the book was indeed a primer for Dōgen's contemporaries, but it addresses itself at times to controversies and preoccupations that, because of oversimplification of the annotation for the general reader, are less universal than he may assume."

Choice 8:[1337] D '71 170w

"Because of the great influence of Suzuki, Rinzaï Zen has become better known in the West than its sister school, Sōtō, so one is especially happy to see the work of the . . . Japanese monk Dōgen now available to help restore the balance. Sōtō is the milder, quieter of the two schools, depending on meditation sitting or za-zen for achievement of satori rather than the spectacular kōan approach. Dōgen's short paragraphs of advice and direction are aimed at the layman and the novice and, in somewhat repetitious style, emphasize the need for poverty, for decision to follow the Way, for complete abandonment of the concept of ego or personality, and for continual resort to za-zen. A useful addition to Zen literature." D. J. Pearce

Library J 96:2330 Jl '71 110w

DOLAN, EDWARD F. Inventors for medicine. by Edward F. Dolan, Jr. 160p $4.95 Crown

610 Medicine—History—Juvenile literature. Scientific apparatus and instruments—Juvenile literature
LC 72-127521

"This book tells the story of men who, by accident or design, gave important tools to medicine, making so much of its progress possible. Some of the tools are instruments; others are procedures. . . . Here too are accounts of some of the most advanced tools the doctor works with: the electron microscope, the icy needle [and] the laser beam." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"The simplistic diagrams as well as the style of the text create interest. The facts included are of varying ages—greatest consideration and explanation are given to the older. Although not basic this is a worthwhile supplement to a collection on medicine as a career." S. M. C.

Best Sell 31:433 D 15 '71 60w

"Included are the stethoscope, clinical thermometer, ophthalmoscope (for examining the eye), endoscope (for looking into the body), sphygmomanometer (a blood pressure testing device), electrocardiograph, X ray and microscope. There are separate chapters on surgical instruments, surgery and anesthesia, and surgery and asepsis. A concluding chapter concerns the appearance, sections, services and staff of a typical modern hospital. This clearly written book will entertain readers and could motivate many towards scientific research, the medical profession, and related services and technological work. . . . Dolan [offers a] fine piece of science reporting for young people." Bernard Poll

Library J 96:4189 D 15 '71 130w

DOLBEARE, KENNETH M. The school prayer decisions from court policy to local practice [by] Kenneth M. Dolbeare and Phillip E. Hammond. 164p $6.50 Univ. of Chicago press 344.7 Religion in the public schools
ISBN 0-226-15515-3 LC 70-140461

The authors feel that "until recently we have not really studied the social and political barriers to the implementation of the requirements for change found in Court decisions or acts of Congress. [They] look in detail at the . . . impact the controversial school prayer decisions of 1962-1963 have had on 'elites' in the Midwestern state of 'Midway.' . . . Index." (Library J)

"This book is an excellent case study that may serve as a model of research procedure in the various areas where attempts are made to have national policy transformed to public behavior." J. H. Fichter
Am J Soc 78:484 S '72 700w

"This study provides many valuable insights about the links between national and local policies. However, even though the book includes only 157 pages of text, it is too long. . . . The heart of the research—reaction at the local level—begins halfway through the book, but even this requires more pages than necessary. . . . Another problem is that the research procedure is not explained or made explicit. The authors conducted interviews, but we have no clear idea of how many people were interviewed, how they were chosen, and the types of questions asked. Moreover, the authors generalize from their interviews and give the impression that practically all responses were the same. Perhaps they were, but this needs clarification. Despite these objections, the study is well worth reading." H. R. Glick
Ann Am Acad 400:168 Mr '72 550w

"This brief, well-written book will become a valuable addition to the slowly growing body of literature on the 'impact' of U.S. Supreme Court decisions. . . . Of particular value is [the authors'] focus on local 'elite' resistance." R. W. Becker
Library J 96:2002 Je 1 '71 110w

DOMHOFF, G. WILLIAM. Fat cats and Democrats; the role of the big rich in the party of the common man. 203p $5.95 Prentice-Hall 329.3 Democratic party. Elections—U.S. Capitalists and financiers
ISBN 0-13-308171-0 LC 78-38791

"In the author's view, most American political scientists view the Republicans as the party of big business and the Democrats as the party of the simple man. Domhoff differs, believing that both parties are controlled by multimillionaires who make large campaign contributions. To document the nature of large campaign contributions, the author has used campaign records, questionnaires, and interviews with 75 unidentified people." (Library J)

"While [Domhoff] does show that many rich men contribute to the Democratic party, he at no time demonstrates that leaders such as Kennedy or Roosevelt would have acted differently if the millionaires had chosen to donate their money elsewhere. Thus the book becomes merely a compendium of the names of those who contributed money—not a political analysis of what governmental transactions occurred because of contributions." Hindy Schachter
Library J 97:2103 Je 1 '72 140w

"Domhoff's style does not command admiration. His manner is disconcertingly gee whiz. He is given to easy liberal epithets like 'God-forsaken Mississippi' yet forced to admit that except on the subject of race, the proud folk down there are populist to the core, and populist is the thing to be this year. But if one is not put off by the somewhat slap-dash manner, Domhoff has seen and measured the tip of an iceberg which most of the other passengers on the US Titanic have not noticed. He also does his best to figure out what lies beneath the water." Gore Vidal
N Y Rev of Books 19:8 Ag 10 '72 3100w

"[This] is written in a hyped-up style and goes in for far-reaching generalizations the evidence does not support. At least, Mr. Domhoff does not marshal enough evidence to support them convincingly. It was an interesting if rather specialized conception for a book to trace the relationship between the Democratic party's financial backers and its avowedly liberal policies. Unfortunately, Professor Domhoff (a psychologist at the University of California at Santa Cruz) is much less interested in the nuances and complexities of this topic than in advancing a simple-minded conspiracy theory about American politics. But if the two-party system is a snare and a fraud, who cares about the details of how it is financed?" W. V. Shannon

N Y Times Bk R p38 O 15 '72 390w

DOMMEN, ARTHUR J. Conflict in Laos; the politics of neutralization. rev ed 454p maps $12.50 Praeger

959.4 Laos—Politics and government. Laos—Foreign relations
LC 76-145945

This revision adds four chapters to the original edition (BRD 1965). "Two trace the erosion of the 1962 Geneva agreement from the coup of April, 1964, to the South Vietnamese invasion of Laos in February, 1971. . . . [A third] provides new background on the border disputes [between Vietnam and Laos] and on Vietnamese ambitions in Laos. . . . A new concluding chapter analyzes the contest of wills that has locked the United States and North Vietnam in a long confrontation. The revised edition also contains six new maps, three new tables, a new appendix, and an expanded bibliography." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"By comparison with the original work, which was a pioneering study, perceptive, informative and deeply-felt, these [four] additional chapters seem a little flat. . . . Dommen does not seem to approach the problem of Laos with the same efficiency and comprehension that he showed in his earlier work. At times it is almost as if he were apologising for what previously he had criticised. . . . All the same, a reporter of Dommen's quality and experience is well worth reading." J. L. S. Girling
Pacific Affairs 45:155 spring '72 400w

"[This] is not a concise historical account of the Laotian conflict. It does not delve deeply enough into the roots of the problem—the basic struggle for land and labour between overpopulated Vietnam . . . and the Thais, who have for centuries opposed Vietnamese ambitions in Cambodia and Laos. . . . [But the] new edition is welcome, particularly for the illumination [the author] has been able to bring to the so-called Huong Lap incident in 1958-59." TLS p143 F 11 '72 380w

DONALDSON, NORMAN. In search of Dr. Thorndyke; the story of R. Austin Freeman's great scientific investigator and his creator. 288p il $7.95; pa $3 Bowling Green univ. Popular press

B or 92 Freeman, Richard Austin. Mystery and detective stories—History and criticism
LC 72-147819

This is a "study of R. Austin Freeman and his scientist-detective [Dr. John Thorndyke]. . . . [The author discusses] Freeman's life: his medical training, his experiences in Africa, his difficulties—both financial and physical—in England, and his years as an author, beginning about the turn of the century and extending to his death in 1943." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Freeman's famous creation Dr. Thorndyke, specialist in medical jurisprudence, is one of the most important characters in the history of detective fiction. Regrettably, nearly all his adventures are now out of print, but they still attract discriminating readers in older public libraries and (more rarely) used book dealers. . . . [This] is an invaluable contribution to the burgeoning critical literature on the mystery genre. A full Freeman bibliography is included. This thorough, scholarly, and very readable volume is highly recommended to academic libraries and to public libraries owning works by Freeman." J. L. Breen
Library J 96:2644 S 1 '71 110w

"[This account] is a brilliant achievement that leaves precious little for future commentators. Mr. Donaldson's style is fresh and lucid, his control of chronology exemplary, his approach affectionate but still objective, his judgments incisive and soundly reasoned, his attention to detail remarkable. . . . Mr. Donaldson, himself a chemist, treats most expertly the scientific element in Freeman's fiction, and truly does full justice to both Freeman and Thorndyke." A. J. Hubin
N Y Times Bk R p33 F 28 '71 170w

DONOHUE, JOSEPH W. Dramatic character in the English Romantic age [by] Joseph W. Donohue, Jr. 402p il $14.50 Princeton univ. press

822 English drama—History and criticism. Romanticism. Characters and characteristics in literature
ISBN 0-691-0618714 LC 71-112997

The author examines "the change in concepts of dramatic character in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. He treats first the essential nature of Romanticism in the drama and its development from origins in the Jacobean private theater, and then analyzes three plays—Cumberland's West Indian, Sheridan's Pizarro, and Shelley's Cenci—to provide . . . evidence of the nature of the dramatic hero and his reflection of the social, political, and cultural opinions and preconceptions of audiences and readers." (Publisher's note) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"The scholarly annotation is massive, and the long bibliographical note of great value. Although Donohue's style sometimes approaches directness, few readers other than determined scholars will be undeterred by the opaqueness that characterizes his prose. Nevertheless, this study will be of great value for collections on the stage and on English romanticism. The 50 illustrations, delightful in themselves, are meaningfully discussed in the context of Donohue's thesis."

Choice 8:1037 O '71 180w

"[This is] an extremely well, and at times brilliantly written book. . . . In the concluding section, almost half the entire book, Mr. Donohue addresses himself to an intensive survey of critical opinion as to the character of Macbeth and Richard III. . . . [He] writes with grace and with a controlled but genuine enthusiasm for his subject. . . . His book is thorough, illuminating, and incisive." C. B. Hogan

Yale R 61:134 O '71 600w

DONOHUE, JOSEPH W., ed. The theatrical manager in England and America. See The theatrical manager in England and America

DONOVAN, JOHN. The businessman's international travel guide. 253p $7.95 Stein & Day

910.2 Voyages and travels
ISBN 0-8128-1421-5 LC 76-163347

"A country-by-country survey of important holidays, banking hours, required travel documents, currency restrictions, and important addresses. The author also includes several paragraphs of information relating to almost any aspect of the particular country which he feels might be of interest to the average businessman who happens to find himself in that country." (Library J)

"[This book] was assembled for those who must work with government officials and executives of other lands. Author John Donovan contributes to the U.S. financial weeklies, and his non-book reads like a series of stock-market quotations. Admittedly, these figure-cluttered pages deal with most nations from Afghanistan to Zambia. But the job was done in greater depth by the U.S. Department of State Fact Book. . . . The short, generalizing introduction does not do justice to national characteristics, and the book's body . . . is doomed to frequent changes. Librarians will be grateful for the various addresses and export-import figures for the next few months, and this is the first guide, I believe, which pinpoints the amount of . . . the 'airport departure tax.'" C. W. Casewit

Book World p4 Ap 30 '72 140w

"I find it hard to believe that any traveler would find anything unique in this book. Those needing this kind of information should consult the excellent, annually updated pamphlet issued by Morgan Guaranty Trust Company, Bank and Public Holidays Throughout the World, and that marvelous aid to all travelers, Pan American World Airways' New Horizons World Guide . . . also issued annually, which includes most of the information covered here and a great deal more." Sylvia Mechanic

Library J 97:500 F 1 '72 140w

DORÉ, GUSTAVE. The rare and extraordinary history of holy Russia, with over 500 illustrations by Gustave Doré; tr. by Daniel Weissbord; introd. by Richard Pipes. 207p $14.95 Lib. press

914.7 Russia—History—Cartoons and caricatures
ISBN 0-912050-11-X LC 75-161410

An edition of Doré's cartoon engravings originally published in France in 1854 with a translation of the accompanying commentary.

"The present sample of [Doré's] efforts vividly recalls his admirable inventiveness, but it also isolates a certain coarseness of mind, which emerges more clearly in retrospect, perhaps, than it revealed itself to contemporaries. French hostility toward Russia, at that epoch, served as an added warrant to indulge in an undeniable but heavy-handed humor. Unlike the much greater Daumier, Doré could not elevate the topical into the universal. Yet his art deserves to be better known than it now is, and this selection of his vignettes is, therefore, most welcome. It is a bit regrettable that the quality of the present publication's production was not higher: skimpy margins give the pages an unduly crowded look."

Choice 9:634 J1/Ag '72 190w

Economist 245[book survey p11] N 11 '72 380w

"Specialized art history collections and those with a particular interest in European political and cultural attitudes toward Russia in the 19th Century will want to consider this volume. . . . This is the first edition with the caption text in English, and it includes a brief introduction by the director of Harvard's Russian Research Center. In spite of an occasional timeless humorous truth, the book is too rabid in its portrayal of the Russians as squabbling, bloodthirsty barbarians to be of particular interest for reasons other than its place in the art and culture of its time." Karen Horny

Library J 97:1701 My 1 '72 100w

"In more than 500 cartoons and attending captions, Doré created a witty, Rabelaisian book built on puns and Russophobia, on drawings of torture, battles and executions. Doré's Russia is civilized by the knout; its czars march futilely on Constantinople and die of colic. 'News of the secret negotiations leaks out,' Doré remarks and shows blood flowing from beneath a closed door. That kind of thing, and very funny." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 79:108 My 20 '72 100w

DOREY, T. A., ed. Livy. 212p pl Can$8.50 Univ. of Toronto press

937 Livy (Titus Livius)
LC [70-855760]

These "essays on various subjects related to Livy and [his] influence . . . range from essays on sections of Livy's work to an account of his impact on Macaulay and Montesquieu. [Included also is] a chapter on the manuscript tradition." (Choice)

"All [these essays] display scholarly competence, but with varying degrees of imagination and usefulness. The essays on the third decade of Livy and on Montesquieu are probably the best. The studies of the Historiae themselves are superficial and deficient in insight. The overall impression of the volume is that it provides no useful study of the author or of the tradition. Too much was attempted and too little accomplished to make this a really significant work."

Choice 8:1328 D '71 110w

"The volume as a whole suffers from some unevenness of tone and depth of treatment, for which the editor apologizes in the Introduction. But it is admirable for its attempt to give a broad yet scholarly view of Livy as an element of western European intellectual development." J. P. Packard

Class World 85:172 Ja '72 550w

"The trouble here is lack of uniformity plus lack of comprehensiveness—or at least of a rounded picture. The two features combined do make it doubtful whether it was right to construct a book on these lines. . . . The individual contributions are good."

TLS p1083 S 10 '71 750w

DOREY, T. A. Rome against Carthage [b]yl
T. A. Dorey and D. R. Dudley. 205p pl maps
$6.95 Doubleday

937 Punic wars
LC 76-157585

In this history of the three Punic wars, the authors explore the theatres of operations during each war and the political backgrounds and motivations of the leaders and parties of both sides. Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"It is surprising that no other book encompassing the three Punic Wars has been written before. . . . [The] authors have drawn heavily upon the literary sources, especially Polybius for their narrative and have supplemented this with the most important and relevant recent work on the subject. . . . [They] have produced a work which combines style and humor without being overwhelmed by their material. . . . Will be a worthwhile addition to every collection."

Choice 9:558 Je '72 150w

Reviewed by R. F. Willetts

Encounter 37:61 O '71 100w

"[Livy's] account of the Second Punic War has been found by generations of schoolboys and schoolgirls a little hard to assimilate. [This book] will greatly facilitate this process of digestion. It also provides an excellent and up-to-date survey for people who have never previously encountered Livy or the events that he describes. . . . The introductory material . . . is too brief. . . . Readers need to be told rather more about the two protagonists before embarking on their first confrontation. The specialist is not so well served because . . . references are kept down to a minimum. Indeed, there are none, except in the eight bibliographical summaries at the end; and they are not long. But students of ancient history might find the book worth buying for them alone."

TLS p1083 S 10 '71 500w

DORMAN, MICHAEL. The making of a slum.
216p $6.95 Delacorte press

301.34 Hunts Point, New York. Housing.
New York (City)—Social conditions
LC 72-3442

"Hunts Point, a community in the south-east Bronx, became a slum in a period of about 20 years. Dorman's family lived in Hunts Point for five generations. Now, but a few old-timers remain. In his effort to show what happened there and how it happened, the author has interviewed former residents and the 'newcomers'—Puerto Ricans and blacks, among them prostitutes and drug addicts and ordinary people trying to live amid the decay." (Library J)

Reviewed by Norman Lederer

Best Sell 32:320 O 15 '72 950w

"Dorman's book would seem to appeal mainly to readers who grew up in Hunts Point or in a closely similar community. And no doubt writing the book has satisfied the author's nostalgic feelings. But this is by no means a thorough sociological study. It provides the usual insights into the prejudices of white Americans and faults government for being irresponsible, but it falls short of adding substantial new sociological insights into the development of slums and how to make them more viable communities." Marlene Charnizon

Library J 97:3327 O 15 '72 150w

DORMAN, MICHAEL. Payoff; the role of organized crime in American politics. 333p $6.95 McKay

364.1 Racketeering. Corruption (in politics)
LC 73-186559

The author "deals with the many ingenious schemes devised by mobsters in recent years to corrupt public officials and to undermine legitimate businesses." (Choice)

"Much of what is said in this book has been said before in public print. There is, however, some new material, compiled chiefly from interviews conducted by the author; and it is true that Michael Dorman has made a synthesis—plodding and repetitious though it may sometimes be—of what is known about Mafia activity. . . . The older stories, that have reached some sort of conclusion, are the easiest for Mr. Dorman to tell—and perhaps the least useful. . . . The vital part of the story—what remains to be done and how it is being done—can scarcely be told as yet. Still, with meticulous care, 'Payoff' paints a very ugly, very disconcerting picture of life, politics, and finances in our country."

Best Sell 32:211 Ag 1 '72 180w

"A flock of books has been published recently describing [organized crime's] every aspect. This latest work is among the better written, carefully researched, and more interesting of this genre. . . . It resembles [O.] Demaris' Captive city [BRD 1969] in that it does not hesitate to finger public officials from Richard M. Nixon and Lyndon B. Johnson on down. Indeed, in some ways it goes beyond Demaris' exposé, since Dorman describes syndicated crime throughout the nation . . . and he takes pains to differentiate rumor from firm fact and to document the former when possible. This book will appeal to those who have an idle curiosity about organized crime as well as to those who have a more focused, professional interest in the problem. It is packed full of information—mostly new, some old."

Choice 9:1048 O '72 170w

DORNBERG, JOHN. The new tsars; Russia under Stalin's heirs. 470p il $10 Doubleday

914.7 Russia—Politics and government—
1953- . . . Russia—Social life and customs.
Russia—Social policy
LC 74-175367

"The author, a former Newsweek bureau chief in Moscow, offers [an] assessment of Soviet life and institutions during the years immediately following Khrushchev's fall. . . . The main theme is the . . . threat of re-Stalinization in the Soviet Union." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"A hostile and pessimistic assessment. . . . Though undoubtedly a skillful reporter and an alert observer of the Moscow scene, Dornberg only occasionally manages to create an authentic atmosphere of firsthand reporting (e.g., in his chapters on Soviet art and the literary scene). The balance of the work is clearly the result of a paste-and-scissors operation. . . . Frequent parallels drawn between [Dornberg's] own interpretations of Soviet life and customs and those of such 17th- and 18th-Century Russophobes as the Marquise de Custine or Olearius make Dornberg's approach and his intentions somewhat questionable. The novice in Soviet affairs may gain a panoramic view of Soviet life from the book. This view is, however, for the most part a fun-house mirror distortion; and there is little if any new information." I. L. Kaldor

Library J 97:1722 My 1 '72 190w

"[In Moscow the author] became friends with two important Soviet intellectuals, General Peter Grigorenko and Andrei Amalrik, both of whom are now in confinement. Dornberg's conversations with these courageous and eloquent dissenters are a valuable contribution to his book. . . . [It] reports actual events that are almost as bizarre as the Strugatskys' science fiction. It also deals with the larger issues of life in the Soviet Union. The author gives considerable attention to the nationality question and to the condition of the Jews, provides us with character and personality portraits of many Soviet leaders, and devotes an exceptionally fine chapter to Soviet drama. [He] writes in a brisk, although somewhat bumpy, style. Readers will find The New Tsars informative and entertaining—a rare combination for a work on such a somber subject." B. M. Cohen

Sat R 55:60 Je 3 '72 490w

DORSET, PHYLLIS FLANDERS. The new Eldorado: the story of Colorado's gold and silver rushes. 434p il maps $12.50 Macmillan (N Y)

973.8 Colorado—History. Gold mines and mining. Silver mines and mining
LC 71-82558

This account of Colorado's history deals with "forty years of boom and bust—of gold and silver bonanzas, instant fortunes, and shattered lives. For forty years they flooded Colorado—gold diggers, silver miners, outlaws, gamblers . . . prostitutes, pioneers, and millionaires looking for another golden fleece. For most there was hardship. . . . For many there were small fortunes, easy come, easy go. And for a few there were untold millions." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author has] done very extensive reading in secondary sources and has been rather meticulous in her search for and utilization of facts. . . . The notes [attest] the authenticity of the narrative. . . . The historian's craft calls for authentic facts to be sure, but it also demands such a selection of facts as will present an authentic general picture. If the author is endeavoring to present such a picture of early Colorado, she fails; but if her purpose is to paint dramatic scenes, portray primarily the seamy side of life, and give lively entertainment, she succeeds." L. R. Hafen

DORSET, P. F.—Continued

Am Hist R 76:1604 D '71 340w

"This well-written historical narrative is concerned with some of the colorful and famous and/or notorious characters in a most exciting period of Rocky Mountain history. . . . Recommended to all libraries able to afford the price." H. R. Downey
Library J 95:2146 Je 1 '70 110w

DORSON, RICHARD M., ed. Folklore and folk-life; an introduction. 561p il $12.50 Univ. of Chicago press

398 Folklore
ISBN 0-226-15870-5 LC 77-189038

"An introductory essay by the editor brings together a discussion of the historical and theoretical foundations of folklore and folklife. In the succeeding essays, . . . the emphasis is on new trends in the field. Finally, there are . . . short bibliographical essays, notes, and bibliographies. . . . [The essays] are divided into five general groups: oral folklore, social folk custom, material culture, folk arts, and methods of folklife study." (Library J)

"Every once in a while a publisher has a moment of special satisfaction when he knows his book will set the standards in a field for some time to come. That satisfaction must belong this season to the University of Chicago Press people, for Richard M. Dorson has brought together the foremost experts in any number of folkloric fields to introduce the sub-topics. Numerous essays involve methodological concerns."

Christian Century 89:584 My 17 '72 70w

"Folklife is a comparatively new term that in recent years has been receiving the increased attention of folklorists. It covers the panorama of community life, including crafts, food, costume, art, and architecture. . . . The research-oriented reader will find the treatment of fieldwork valuable for its discussion of both contemporary techniques and the development of new methods. Folklore and Folklife maintains a professional, research-oriented tone and still manages to be exciting, readable, and filled with quaint and interesting facts. A valuable teaching tool." Jerome Cushman
Library J 97:1820 My 15 '72 160w

DORSTEN, J. A. VAN. The radical arts; first decade of an Elizabethan renaissance; pub. for the Sir Thomas Brown institute. 146p $10.50 Oxford

914.2 Great Britain—Intellectual life
ISBN 90-6021-001-8 LC 73-114213

The author "attempts to discover how the preceding generation contributed to the achievements of 'the Elizabethan Age' of 1580-1600, and explores . . . areas of Anglo-Continental learning and the arts of the 1560s." (Am Hist R)

"Van Dorsten finds the circle of Catherine de Medici of central importance and discovers the most important links in England with the Franco-Flemish intellectual world to be among the London community of Strangers. Many well-known and obscure men . . . appear, including, for example, the Family of Love, Acontius, Dee, Ramus, Plantin, Hoefnagel, De Heere, Ortelius, and Languet. . . . While Van Dorsten is properly tentative about the connections he thinks existed, he nevertheless believes that the men and ideas he draws together out of the 1560s had a direct influence on the men and activities of the 1580s, on the Sidney circle and the rest. . . . Although an unreflective reader could receive a distorted view of the period from this erudite and handsome book, it will certainly contribute to the more accurate picture being sought by many scholars." W. L. Woodfill

Am Hist R 76:776 Je '71 340w

"[This book] has an interesting theme and something new to offer. . . . Van Dorsten is at pains to link the threads that point to the real Renaissance flowering in the 1580s, in the French and Dutch contacts that culminated in Sidney's circle, in Spenser's first published work, the translations of du Bellay's sonnets for van der Noot's Theatre for Worldlings, 1569. What does it add up to historically? Perhaps not much; van Dorsten's affiliations are rather tenuous. He sees them as precursors of the great cultural outburst of the 1580s, 'when England at last resumed its place in the history of European civilisation.'" A. L. Rowse
Engl Hist R 87:406 Ap '72 460w

"[The author] is in no doubt that the early years of Elizabeth's reign, the 1550s and 1560s were drab. And when he says drab he does not mean workmanlike and plain; he means dreary and undistinguished. . . . Yet in these years of isolation and apparent apathy were laid the foundations of the great Elizabethan age. There must have been some stirrings somewhere of intelligence and pointers towards the future. The Elizabethan settlement ensured peace of a kind and freedom of a kind. A number of Flemish merchants were in consequence able to maintain the continuity of their Continentally-inspired cultural life, refreshed by a constant ebb and flow of refugees. Mr. Van Dorsten is interested in what this group had to contribute to the intellectual life of England, a subject on which he is eminently qualified to come to reliable and well-documented conclusions."

TLS p626 My 28 '71 700w

DORWART, REINHOLD AUGUST. The Prussian welfare state before 1740. 328p il $12.50 Harvard univ. press

309.143 Prussia—Economic policy. Prussia—Social policy. Public welfare
ISBN 0-674-71975-1 LC 77-134954

The author examines "the social history of Prussia through the first three centuries of Hohenzollern rule. He analyzes state intervention in various areas of individual welfare and the common good. . . . [This account contains] chapters dealing, for example, with urban affairs, education and higher learning and public health and medicine. There is also a . . . chapter devoted to the Jews in Brandenburg." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Dorwart's provocative contention is that the concept of the 'welfare state'—commonly linked to Labour Britain and the Rooseveltian New Deal—is actually the latest version of the exercise of 'the police power of the state to regulate' and, as such, dates back to 1500. He submits that Prussia under the Hohenzollern 'epitomized the European Polizeistaat,' postulating also that 'the only proper translation of Polizeistaat is "welfare state." . . . The bibliography is comprehensive and particularly useful to the non-German student." H. G. Reissner

Ann Am Acad 401:174 My '72 320w

"[The result of this study] is illuminating but dry and often wearisome. Students of German history will need to read Dorwart, but they will wish that he knew how to put more life into what is social as well as administrative history. Only the charming contemporary illustrations remind us that the author is writing about people."

Choice 9:1029 O '72 230w

"Contemporary illustrations elucidate the text. A valuable scholarly monograph, recommended for larger academic libraries." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 96:2637 S 1 '71 180w

"The book's spell . . . is cast upon the imagination of the reader and rather less upon the speculative or reasoning part of his mind; for Professor Dorwart soon leaves the plane of ideas where he began. He set out with an invitation to the reader to relate the modern version of the welfare state to its historical antecedents; but, as edict follows edict and the apothecary succeeds the vagabond and the vagabond succeeds the stallholder in the market and he in turn the guest at a betrothal feast, it is not perhaps to this invitation that he will most readily respond. Yet he is bound to appreciate the acute historical sense that the author's reflections on specific topics constantly show."

TLS p1055 S 15 '72 650w

DOSENENBACH, HANS D. The family life of birds; phot. and text by Hans D. Dossenbach; conceived and designed by Emil M. Bühner; foreword and scientific advisor: Otto Koenig; [tr. by Fritz Bauchwitz]. 192p $12.95 McGraw

598 Birds—Habits and behavior
SBN 07-017638-8 LC 70-159304

This book describes courtship, mating habits and nesting behavior of sea and land birds in different areas of the world. Index.

"A superior bird book. . . . The large number of resources used gives strength to the book. Hans Dossenbach's photography is superb; it is lyrical and has the ability to make the picture tell the story. . . . Printed in Switzerland, the book is on heavy paper and well bound. The very fine print . . . is the volume's one disturbing feature. . . . A general audience will find much, workers in biology will find more, ornithologists will admire and value this new book."

Choice 9:234 Ap '72 220w

"The emphasis here is on nesting European, Peruvian, Galápagos, and exotic birds (pea fowl, birds of paradise). Many of the photos are good, but others lack focus or are reproduced on two pages so that they are folded in half. Misstatements and errors are legion; and the translation reads poorly. The book's worst fault is the rampant anthropomorphism." H. T. Armistead

Library J 97:209 Ja 15 '72 100w

"[The book focuses on] a wide variety of birds, from the shag to the Peruvian penguin, and there are some truly magnificent photographs accompanying the text. Dossenbach has a great talent for capturing action and mood in his photographs of birds. . . . An incredible amount of information is contained in this book, but much of it is in small italicized type that some people may find difficult to read. There are also a number of colorful charts, some of which may be readily comprehended and others that are somewhat confusing. (It is difficult, for example, for the average reader to extract anything of value from the spectrograms of bird songs and calls)." Nelson Bryant

N Y Times Bk R p62 D 5 '71 140w

DOSTOEVSKY, FYODOR. The notebooks for the Brothers Karamazov; ed. and tr. by Edward Wasiolek. 279p $9.50 Univ. of Chicago press

891.7
ISBN 0-226-15967-1 LC 74-126073

This "volume, comprising 232 pages of several notebooks, records Dostoevsky's preparations for his last work. . . . It affords a . . . glimpse into the author's mental laboratory before and during the writing of the novel. . . . [It] completes the series begun with the notebooks for Crime and Punishment [BRD 1967] and The Idiot [BRD 1968], and followed by those for The Possessed [BRD 1969] and A Raw Youth [BRD 1970]." (Sat R)

"The book is most interesting in the insight it provides into Dostoevsky's method of creation, proceeding as it did from abstract conception to concrete realization. This volume, like the four previous notebooks, is an important contribution to Dostoevsky scholarship available in English. Necessary for any high school or university library, and of especial interest to students of Russian literature already familiar with the works of Dostoevsky."

Choice 8:682 J1 '71 270w

"Critics have reached for superlatives to describe Wasiolek's translations and editions of material Dostoevsky used in his great novels; this work is likely to attract the most attention of all."

Christian Century 88:260 F 24 '71 20w

Reviewed by Temira Pachmuss
Mod Lang J 56:395 O '72 800w

"This is one of those rare occasions in literature when many puzzling questions that have baffled readers and critics can be answered from the most authoritative source. . . . The value of the volume . . . cannot be stated emphatically enough. Indeed, no teacher, student, interpreter, or critic of Dostoevsky's novel can afford not to read these notebooks. The editor [includes] . . . a short but helpful introduction, followed by the notes themselves divided into chapters paralleling those of the novels and prefaced by brief comments. The text is annotated throughout. The scope of the notebooks is relatively small. . . . Wasiolek has achieved a remarkable scholarly feat." V. D. Mikhailovich

Sat ■ 54:36 My 22 '71 750w

"The notebooks to The Brothers Karamazov, in the original as runic and messy as ever despite Dostoevsky's copperplate, relate more closely to the final novel than do those for the other novels. . . . Reading these notes, we can easily see how they form the skeleton to which the final text gave flesh and blood. . . . [and] how Dostoevsky conceived the novel's ideological structure. . . . Few scholars with a knowledge of Russian will be content to rely on these translations, and those who have no Russian should be chary of placing too much reliance on what Professor Wasiolek and his collaborators have to offer."

TLS p1505 D 3 '71 600w

DOTY, ROBERT. Contemporary black artists in America [exhibit held Apr. 6-May 16, 1971 at the Whitney mus. of Am. art, New York. 64p pl col pl $7.95 Whitney; for sale by Dodd

709.73 Negro artists
LC 74-154608

This catalog consists of an essay on black art by Curator Doty and a selection of fifty plates, including six in color, from the exhibition. Bibliography.

"Better than Doty's commentary, [the] plates reveal just what 'black art of America' is and what the black artist can do to be faithful to his blackness. Doty discusses the controversy among black artists over this issue. . . . Social protest, nonobjective, abstract, realistic and surrealistic works make a wordless statement that the black artist is true to his blackness in all approaches when he maintains artistic integrity. This subtle but striking visual selection makes this catalog a unique document for the history of American black art."

Choice 9:202 Ap '72 120w

"[The book includes] one-line biographic data on each artist, and a fine bibliography. It is nicely produced and will be welcomed by an ever widening circle of readers anxious to know more about the work of today's black artists." W. J. Dane

Library J 97:864 Mr 1 '72 110w

DOUCETTE, LEONARD E. Emery Bigot; seventeenth-century French humanist. 204p Can$10 Univ. of Toronto press

B or 92 Bigot, Emery
ISBN 0-8020-5239-3 LC 72-18473

A study of the life and activity of the classical scholar and bibliographic expert who lived in Rouen and Paris. "He travelled widely and was for some forty years at the . . . centre of a . . . network of mutual assistance and scholarly information that linked the countries of western Europe, from Uppsala to Venice, from Vienna to Oxford, Leiden, London." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This obscure humanist (1626-1689) was known to a large cross-section of literati in France and western Europe. Having examined virtually all of Bigot's extant correspondence of some 600 letters, Doucette has given flesh-and-blood dimensions to this Norman bibliophile whose life facts are extremely meager. Many of the letters were addressed to such eminent humanists as Menage and Chapelain in France, Heinsius and Elzevir in Holland, Vossius in Germany. Those to Heinsius and Menage offer rich evidence of Bigot's tireless bibliographical efforts on behalf of scholarly friends. . . . It is regrettable that Doucette has not provided translations for at least a portion of the many excerpts from Bigot's correspondence, forcing the reader to work through the original French, Italian, and Latin. . . . This painstaking study belongs in all large libraries and graduate collections."

Choice 8:1182 N '71 260w

"[Professor Doucette's] beautifully produced study of Bigot's life, work and influence is a model of clarity and scholarship, initiating the reader into the curious world of the Republic of Letters, where moral, aesthetic and even material values were secondary to rarity, accuracy and knowledge for its own sake. For men like Bigot, Latin and Greek were the only real languages, building up libraries and editing texts the only real pursuits. . . . His interest lay . . . in minor writers of the early Christian era."

TLS p70 Ja 15 '71 210w

DOUGHERTY, RICHARD M. Centralized processing for academic libraries; the final report (Phase III, Jan. 1-June 30, 1969) of the Colorado Academic Libraries Book Processing Center: the first six months of operation, by Richard M. Dougherty and Joan M. Maier. 254p $12.50 Scarecrow

025.02 Libraries, College and university. Processing (Libraries)
ISBN 0-8108-0381-X LC 73-155716

"The report of Phase I-II of the Colorado Academic Libraries Book Processing Center (CALBPC) project, [which was] completed in June 1968, dealt primarily with a general feasibility study, the design of the central system, costs of acquiring and processing in nine libraries and a number of related concerns such as accounting, the congruence of approval plans and user attitudes toward library services. On February 1, 1969, six of the original nine libraries began an experiment to test the validity of the Phase I-II findings. This report focuses on the experimental operations which were concluded officially on September 30, 1969 . . . [and is] concerned with the pragmatics of book processing, the obstacles encountered, and the solutions achieved." (Introd) Index. For the report of Phase I-II see Centralized Book Processing by L. Leonard et al, BRD 1970.

"Despite the naive personnel relations evident throughout the volume . . . this record of a 'grand experiment' is rich in technical data. If anything, the tables are overly abundant and detailed. Every conceivable segment of the operation has been counted, timed, measured, or costed out. If for no other reason than this, every academic library catalog department ought to buy a copy of the book. [The] report is a detailed, data-rich record of an important experiment in library cooperation. From a management standpoint, it will be invaluable to academic library technical services departments. From a human standpoint, however, it leaves much to be desired." D. J. Hickey

Col & Res Lib 33:490 N '72 950w

"The bulk of the report is directly relevant only to those concerned with the CALBPC or with book processing centers in general, but much of this contributes to a better understanding of cooperative programs in the broadest sense. Furthermore, Chapter V is intended specifically for generic application; entitled 'Some problems to be anticipated by others contemplating centralized programs of acquisitions and cataloging.'" Samuel Goldstein

Library J 97:1249 Ap 1 '72 300w

"I highly recommend the purchase of this volume for anyone considering participating in centralized processing. . . . This book is so valuable because it seems to be an honest appraisal of what happens between theory and practice. What parts were overlooked in the study, where some of the procedures broke down or failed, and what human problems occurred are documented in this volume; it can, therefore, serve as a warning to other libraries studying the feasibility of centralized processing. There are very few authors in the library field who have had the courage to provide such data or have scrupulously studied their operations on a cost/effectiveness basis as have Dougherty and Maier." Henry Voos

LRTS 16:272 spring '72 340w

DOUGLAS, JACK D., ed. Understanding everyday life; toward the reconstruction of sociological knowledge. 358p $9.50 Aldine-Atherton

301 Knowledge, Sociology of
ISBN 0-202-30120-6 LC 77-123585

These essays deal with "the problems of method and theory both in 'association' sociology and ethnomethodology." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Douglas has assembled an outstanding collection of readings—outstanding for several reasons, the first of which is the authority of each individual writer. The second is that the book presents a broad, well-rounded approach to ethnomethodology. . . . Unlike so many other books of readings, this one hangs together . . . [making] the transition from one topic to another smooth, logical, and progressive. . . . Extensive bibliography, although for the average reader some of the references cited will be difficult to obtain. The index seems a bit anemic."

Choice 8:615 Je '71 170w

"Of the fourteen essays in the volume, some are good by any standard and some are competent; they do belong in the top-drawer of ethnomethodological theory and research. Easily half of the book, however, is bad—and bad, in ethnomethodology, is very bad indeed. This half consists mainly of 'critical' essays." Thomas Luckmann

Contemp Sociol 1:30 Ja '72 1850w

"Almost all [these] essays . . . are programmatic, and the collection opens with an attack on Durkheim by Professor Douglas and closes with an attack on positivism by Peter McHugh. . . . Indeed, almost every essay in the book . . . is written in a style which is a sustained atrocity against language and communication. It abounds in solecisms, long and shapeless sentences, endless but obscure repetition, and words like 'grammaticalness' and 'semanticalness'. Strange that a movement which ruminates on language and everyday life should convey its cogitations in so extraordinary a manner."

TLS p1600 D 24 '71 1050w

DOUGLAS, PAUL H. In the fullness of time; the memoirs of Paul H. Douglas. 642p il $13.50 Harcourt

B or 92 U.S.—Politics and government—1945—
ISBN 0-15-144376-9 LC 74-182327

The former Senator from Illinois describes his 18 years in the Senate, from 1948 to 1966, and his battles for civil rights, conservation and anti-poverty legislation. He also describes his boyhood in Maine, school years, teaching career, early political life, experiences as a 50-year-old marine, and post-retirement reflections. Index.

Reviewed by Frank Annunziata

America 126:658 Je 24 '72 350w

"For those who idolized and idealized Harry Truman and Adlai Stevenson, Douglas' views may make unpleasant reading. Douglas' style is at times slow moving, and there are one or two minor errors in names and dates. Yet the book is a valuable addition to a library's collection on the political history of the 1940s, 1950s and early 1960s."

Choice 9:1034 O '72 190w

Christian Century 89:488 Ap 26 '72 40w

"There is much . . . in this massive memoir penetrating discussion of current issues and of the national personalities who were and are lined up on both sides. Enriched by pertinent quotations derived from wide reading, illuminated by judicious comment and perspicacious analysis, this is a modestly presented record of half a century of dedication to public service by a public servant of integrity, courage and high purpose." Ernest Gruening

Commonweal 96:365 Je 30 '72 950w

"These memoirs by the former U. S. Senator from Illinois are exciting and absorbingly readable. Well known for his liberal . . . sympathies . . . Douglas, it appears, is also a gifted writer. With amazing honesty he discusses the many crises with which he was confronted, acknowledging with modesty his accomplishments, but quickly admitting his errors in judgment and tactics. . . . He candidly recounts his relationships with such figures as Truman, the Kennedys, Johnson, Humphrey, as well as numerous foreign dignitaries. These reminiscences by a key elected official will interest anyone wishing to gain insights into recent American domestic history." E. A. Engeldinger

Library J 97:1423 Ap 15 '72 150w

"The public career of Paul Douglas is a study in the subtleties of power. . . . In Chicago he was a successful reformer and in the Senate he played a leading part in some of the great legislative breakthroughs. These struggles he describes at great length; they interrupt the pace and diminish the excitement of the book but they are crucial to understanding Douglas' role and achievements and will be sources of enlightenment for students of the legislative process." J. M. Burns

New Repub 166:29 Je 3 '72 1300w

Reviewed by A. J. Mikva

N Y Times Bk R p26 Jl 16 '72 1050w

DOUGLAS, ROY. The history of the Liberal party, 1895-1970; with a foreword by Jeremy Thorpe. 331p pl $15 Fairleigh Dickinson univ. press

329.942 Liberal party (Great Britain)
ISBN 0-8336-1056-0 LC 70-169814

This is an account of the decline and survival of the Liberal Party in England from the late nineteenth century to the present day. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by S. E. Koss

Am Hist R 77:1126 O '72 700w

"In 1914, a Liberal Government was in office. Ten years later, the Liberal Party was reduced to about forty M.P.s. . . . What was the cause of this remarkably rapid decline? So this book begins with an implied promise that the question asked—undoubtedly an interesting and important question—will be answered. The results are distinctly disappointing in spite of the obviously large—even vast—amount of work that has clearly gone into the study's preparation. . . . What happened we are told; why it happened is hardly, in any serious fashion, discussed or, one suspects, even understood. Too often explanations are given by broad, sweeping generalizations unsupported by evidence."

Choice 9:268 Ap '72 170w

"Dr Douglas's book—ostensibly a history—[is] more of a tract for the Liberal times to come. . . . [His] analysis of how politics became distorted and unnatural concentrates on the errors and stupidities of the Liberal whips in the years before 1914 in complacently giving way to Labour demands; and in particular he cites the Trade Union Act of 1914, allowing the unions to finance their own political party, as 'the most disastrous measure which the Liberals could possibly have set upon the statute book.' . . . A major weakness of Dr Douglas's generally competent book is that though he mentions the 'significant' high proportion of Liberal converts to Labour in 1922, such as C. P. Trevelyan and Arthur Ponsonby, and though he is sympathetic to the proposition that Britain had no need to get involved in the 1914 war, he does not even mention the Union for Democratic Control."

Economist 240:47 S 4 '71 260w

"As Douglas was a Liberal party Parliamentary candidate five times, readers will be inclined to regard his sympathetic history of the party with the same affectionate skepticism which the party itself evokes. . . . [Douglas's] failure to examine in depth the underlying causes of the Liberal decline leads to an undue concentration on the politics of top-level Parliamentary personages and groups. . . . For those who like their political history neat and old-fashioned, Douglas's study provides an interesting look at a down but never out party." H. J. Steck

Library J 97:1012 Mr 15 '72 220w

"[The author] has made admirable use of the official party archives and of many manuscript collections. Perhaps the most important part of . . . [his study] is that he oversets the idea that the Liberal Party was destroyed by the unrelenting battle of the followers of Lloyd George and Asquith. . . . One of the recurring themes of Mr Douglas's book lies in his contention that Liberals committed acts of pure folly in truckling to the Labour Party both in its infancy and maturity."

TLS p117 S 17 '71 950w

DOUGLAS, WILLIAM O. The three hundred year war; a chronicle of ecological disaster. 215p $5.95 Random house

301.31 Man—Influence on nature. Ecology
ISBN 0-394-47224-1 LC 72-3640

"A lifetime conservationist here describes the environmental crisis . . . putting the blame on a national commitment to dollar profits and urging a grass-roots reform. . . . Douglas indicts the government agencies and powerful industrial lobbies and asks the people to support and uphold true reform—essentially, a religion must be made of conservation, and it must have its missionaries." (Library J) Index.

"The author does not sentimentalize or offer an ecological how-to, but simply makes a plea for a better, larger ethic. Douglas sees few greys in the conflict of man versus environment; without compromise, he defines the black and white of ecological battle sites, and his views on destruction and waste are stern and unforgiving. He also reminisces about another conservationist—John Muir, who fought for his beloved Sierra—and writes about the Glacier Peak area. . . . A strong, impassioned, important book." Anita Nygaard

Library J 97:2633 Ag '72 140w

"The Justice has a go at ecology. Mankind's attitude toward nature has been one of rapine and destruction; he rejects the growth theory and asks for tenderer care of earth, sea and air by business and government; in separate chapters he examines the damage done by radiation, pesticides, garbage, mining and so on. All quite familiar by now."

N Y Times Bk R p38 O 8 '72 60w

DOUGLAS-HAMILTON, JAMES. Motive for a mission: the story behind Hess's flight to Britain; with a foreword by Alan Bullock. 290p il pl $8.95 St Martins 940.53 Hess, Rudolf. Haushofer, Albrecht.

World War, 1939-1945—Great Britain
LC [75-145429]

This is an account of the flight of Rudolf Hess to England in 1941 and of his hope to "bring about a peace between Britain and Germany which would give Hitler everything he wanted in Europe . . . [and] leave him a free hand to invade Russia without being faced with a war on two fronts. . . . [The book also deals with the activities of Albrecht Haushofer who encouraged Hess in the belief that negotiations were possible." (TLS)

"[This] is an impressive first book. As Alan Bullock, who helped guide the research, has noted in his foreword the study would have been of value even if it did little more than give the English side of the story. . . . There is, however, a great deal more. . . . There are no major surprises in the chapters on Hess, but the author has given the first authoritative and richly detailed account of a story known previously only in outline form." R. G. L. Waite

Am Hist R 77:1149 O '72 230w

Reviewed by G. A. Craig
Atlantic 228:90 Ag '71 850w

Reviewed by B. D. Williams
Best Sell 31:161 Jl 1 '71 400w

"On the historical record [this] book is very good indeed. [The author] makes clear that Hess was involved as deeply as any other Nazi leader in the foul play of the first half of the Nazi dictatorship. . . . But even Lord Douglas-Hamilton . . . through a scrupulous chronicler, cannot really make very much of Hess. . . . [However] Haushofer was evidently a highly intelligent, sensitive, and far-sighted man; and I do not blame James Douglas-Hamilton for having been so far waylaid by his secondary subject that his book could at least as well be described as a study of the two Haushofers as a study of Rudolf Hess. . . . [His] research here is an extremely useful contribution to the study of the conflicts and doubts that racked the anti-Nazi resistance. But I cannot see that the attempt to bring the Haushofer story and the Hess story together altogether succeeds." John Mander

Book World p5 Ag 1 '71 500w
Economist 239:iv Ap 3 '71 550w

Reviewed by F. E. Hirsch
Library J 96:2310 Jl '71 130w

"The main hero of the book is fortunately not Hess, a rather colorless personality, but Albrecht Haushofer, and this greatly enhances the value of the study. For young Haushofer, the son of the founder of the German school of Geopolitik, was a far more complex and interesting character: a staunch German patriot, he regarded the Versailles peace treaty as an unmitigated disaster. But he loathed the Nazis and had no illusions about Germany's ultimate political prospects. . . . This account of Hess's flight to Britain . . . has many merits; it should serve as a salutary lesson for historians forever in search of deeper motives. Almost everyone believed at the time that the only real story would be told only after the war. . . . Yet the record shows that there was no 'real' story; it had been a colossal misjudgment, the impulsive action of a stupid man." Walter Laqueur

N Y Times Bk R p40 My 23 '71 1150w

"[The author] who is the second son of the Duke of Hamilton [with whom Hess hoped to negotiate] has had access to his family papers and can give the inside story. He has also researched widely and turned up relevant documents which have never before been used in English and only in parts in German studies. Finality is a dangerous word for an historian, but there is hardly likely to be anything more to be discovered, and the affair as presented here is cut and dried, stripped of spurious drama and brought down to earth, with a lighter thud than Hess felt on landing in Lanarkshire. The Duke tells his own story in his own words. . . . Why . . . did Hess choose him as the man to whom he would reveal his vital mission? Because his name had been put into his head months before by Albrecht Haushofer. And who was Albrecht Haushofer? That is the main theme of the greater part of this book. . . . It is strikingly accurate . . . and successful also in representing the atmosphere of the circles in Britain and Germany with which it is concerned."

DOUGLAS-HAMILTON, JAMES—Continued

TLS p467 Ap 23 '71 2450w

DOUGLASS, ELISHA P. The coming of age of American business; three centuries of enterprise, 1600-1900. 606p $15 Univ. of N.C. press

338.0973 Business—History. U.S.—Commerce. U.S.—Economic conditions
ISBN 0-8078-1170-X LC 73-132254

In this study of "American business history from 1600 to 1900, Douglass traces the underlying principles of the formation of American business institutions—finance, procurement, management, operations, technology, wholesaling, and marketing. . . . [The book also depicts] the growing gulf between labor and administration, ever-increasing specialization and growing sophistication in management, combination and integration of financial operations, and a dynamic spirit of individualism along with a self-centered exploitation of abundant natural resources." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[Douglass's] object is to bring together the more important monographic and periodical literature dealing with business in what is now the U.S. during its 'formative' period. Thus, he does not intend the work to be original or definitive. Nonetheless, it is a major contribution as no such thorough treatment—recent or otherwise—exists. It is sufficiently authoritative to appeal to academics wishing such a summary, while being written in a style lively enough to attract a more general audience. . . . An attractive feature, in addition to a thorough index, is a bibliographic note of some 40 pages in which [the author] reviews briefly the works he examined in preparation for this volume."

Choice 9:408 My '72 180w

"The difficulty with the book is its lack of focus, the brevity and secondary familiarity of its materials (although this latter is explicitly acknowledged), and the absence of a more sophisticated framework of analysis. The narrative line hops like a bird from one industry to the next rather than following some development increasingly characteristic of firms in many industries. . . . [This book] is more an economic than business history, and though the economic history usefully reflects the recent work of a number of economists, it falls far short of pertinent inclusiveness. And it is mainly innocent of the economic theory that would make its economic data more meaningful. . . . [However] its brief summaries should prove useful to undergraduates in survey courses in American history. In sum, Douglass has given us a generally careful and well-written précis of the literature [dealing with business]." Stuart Bruchey

J Am Hist 59:393 S '72 1450w

"[The author] is successful in conveying a sense of hypothetically standing in the shoes of past entrepreneurs and viewing the business world as they saw it, noting their unique problems and opportunities. . . . The book effectively supplements the type of treatment found in Louis M. Hacker's The Triumph of American Capitalism [BRD 1940] and Thomas C. Cochran and William Miller's The Age of Enterprise [BRD 1942] by providing a new historical synthesis utilizing the scholarly studies of the past 30 years." P. A. Kalisch

Library J 97:869 Mr 1 '72 180w

"The work is not so much an integrated account as it is a series of extended essays. . . . [It] is based entirely on secondary sources. In this respect the work is at times disappointing because of its failure to go beyond this synthesis. Furthermore, some of the essays are weak or incomplete because of the absence of monographic studies of those particular areas. These criticisms are not meant to suggest that this is a poor book; quite the reverse is true. Douglass has done an excellent job of summarizing the existing works in this relatively new field of American history."

Va Q R 48:cv summer '72 190w

DOUGLASS, JAMES W. Resistance and contemplation; the way of liberation. 192p $5.95 Doubleday

301.6 Nonviolence. Government, Resistance to
LC 78-175368

In this "examination of the philosophical bases of resistance, Douglass . . . is concerned with the failure to liberate the self before trying to free the world, the escalation of violent protest of Presidential policies, the self-righteous struggle for power. Civil disobedience combined with a total loss of self—putting the lives and freedom of others above your own—is seen as the only true form of revolution as displayed in the lives of Jesus, Gandhi, and the Berrigans. Violent action and chemically induced awareness are seen as succumbing to, rather than resisting, technological society. Satyagraha, Zen satori, as well as basic Christian principles are explained and illustrated." (Library J)

"[The author's] main theme is the interdependence of resistance to oppression and contemplation which he sees as corresponding to the relationship between Yin and Yang. He sees the discipline of Zen as analogous to Christian self-renunciation and metanoia and he depends a good deal on Thomas Merton's exploration of the life of Zen. . . . This is a strange book in its tangential dealing with many themes and episodes and with its expressions of intense partisan commitments which are unexamined. Yet it is a moving personal witness by one who does his own spiritual and political exploring. . . . [Douglass] should be able to awaken consciences, and he does provide correctives for those who see no need for any change deeper than politics." J. C. Bennett

America 127:40 J1 22 '72 500w

"The author always keeps the goal of resistance in mind. For the cynic and believer alike." Gloria Gehrman

Library J 97:2189 Je 15 '72 120w

DOVER, K. J. Aristophanic comedy. 253p pl $10.95; pa $3.85 Univ. of Calif. press

882 Aristophanes
ISBN 0-520-01976-8; 0-520-02211-4 (pa)
LC 70-182681

This book "begins with an account of the way in which the text of eleven of Aristophanes' plays has survived for more than two millennia, of the theatrical conditions under which they were produced, and of some of the techniques of composition and style. It then treats briefly each one of the eleven surviving plays, with considerable regard for problems of staging. . . . It concludes with short chapters on other practitioners of 'Old Comedy' in Athens and the later development of the comic tradition." (Va. Q R) Bibliography. Index to passages of Aristophanes. General index.

"Will serve as a congenial introduction to Aristophanes for the dilettante. Most scholars will find it nothing more than a welcome opportunity to read the opinion of one well known philologist on a variety of topics, some important, some very minor, concerning Attic comedy. By and large there is little new, and what there is, is usually not argued fully enough in a book intended as a substantive addition to scholarship. . . . Perhaps such a collection of interpretations will evoke productive commentary. If so, the book will have justified itself. For example, like Sifakis recently, Dover argues for a seen chorus of frogs. Will someone reply?"

Choice 9:964 O '72 140w

"Dover, professor of Greek at the University of St. Andrews, Scotland, has written the best, clearest most sensible book ever composed about the chimerical comic author known better by name than by works. The wisdom of his study is crowned by wit. Dover can explicate ribaldry in tasteful technicolor; his graceful employment of the most explicit four-letter words demonstrates that Aristophanes meant to evoke smiles, not smirks. This by no means constitutes the only virtue in the book. For we here find answers to every conceivable question about the 11 extant plays of Aristophanes. . . . Permeating all is a good sense and moderation rarely found among great classical scholars. . . . Still Dover might well have given greater emphasis to the fact that Aristophanes was not for all time. Indeed, he was barely for an age." Erich Segal

N Y Times Bk R p36 O 15 '72 900w

"This book, the author tells us, is designed primarily for the reader who does not know Greek but is interested in Greek culture or in the history of comedy as an art-form. . . . Professor Dover makes a considerable point of the way in which he transliterates Greek words (especially Greek proper names), and he produces some eye-catching oddities. The uninitiated reader whom he claims to be addressing might, for example, have some trouble in identifying 'Aiskhylos' with 'Aeschylus,' and the one who knows a little Greek may have to refer back to the key to decipher some of the Greek words represented."

Va Q R 48:cxxxlii autumn '72 280w

Reviewed by Carroll Moulton
Yale R 62:132 O '72 900w

DOWNS, ANTHONY. Urban problems and prospects. 293p $7.95; pa $3.95 Markham pub.
309.2 Cities and towns—U.S. Negroes—Housing. U.S.—Race relations
ISBN 0-8410-0910-4; 0-8410-0915-5 (pa)
LC 70-136618

Of these eleven essays most "have previously appeared in print. The topics covered . . . [include] urban growth, race relations, housing, transportation, government administration, and education. The focus within these subject areas is on the institutions that play a dominant role in shaping the problem, and the entrenched patterns of behavior built around them." (Ann Am Acad)

"In putting forth his policy prescriptions for urban areas, Downs does not shy away from controversy. In this book, for instance, you will find support for the relaxation of building codes, quotas on the ethnic and/or racial composition of neighborhoods, dispersal of the inhabitants of ethnic and/or racial ghettos into the suburbs, and the voucher system for education. Unfortunately, these conclusions frequently flow neither from a large bank of data nor from a careful theory about the nature of the problem, but rather from casual empiricism and strong opinions. . . . If you are looking for a book that is easy to read and full of provocative ideas on urban problems, then I recommend this. . . . [But if] you reject piecemeal approaches, then I suggest looking elsewhere." T. H. Tietenberg
Ann Am Acad 396:202 J1 '71 350w

"This is a notable book both because of the issues with which the author deals and because of the likelihood that his policy recommendations will be taken seriously. . . . His approach is pragmatic; he is not concerned with overarching theory (he does not believe one exists in urban analysis) nor with constructing an urban Utopia, but with 'simply' making urban America significantly better than it is. The writing style is utilitarian and clear, running to the listing and outlining of major points, subpoints and summaries." S. F. Fava
Contemp Sociol 1:64 Ja '72 1100w

DOWNS, ROBERT B. Famous American books. 377p $8.95 McGraw

809 American literature—History and criticism. U.S.—Civilization. Books and reading. Book reviews
ISBN 07-0176655-5 LC 72-172256

Downs analyzes those books which illustrate the nature of American civilization. "In each instance, discussion is focused on the author, the book itself, the social milieu in which it appeared, and . . . the role it played in the shaping of America. . . . The chief criterion for inclusion of a title has been its effect on history. . . . Literary merit is a secondary consideration." (Publisher's note)

Am Lit 44:350 My '72 50w

"These are the most interesting, best researched, and definitive descriptions I have read of the 50 books which, in the author's opinion, exerted the most enduring influence on the American way of life. . . . Downs is dean of library administration at the University of Illinois and once was president of the American Library Association. If for no other reason, buy the book just to see which volumes rate his enthusiasm. Yes, Moby Dick and Huck Finn and Leaves of Grass and Walden. . . . But also included are Cotton Mather, Franklin, Cooper, Dana, Audubon, . . . Spock, Kinsey, Nader. Surprises abound. . . . Included are not only discussions of the critics' and public's reactions, but also commentary on any legislation which may have resulted from any of the books covered. Highly recommended." W. A. Smith
Library J 97:1437 Ap 15 '72 150w

DOYLE, BERTRAM WILBUR. The etiquette of race relations in the South; a study in social control; introd. by Robert E. Park; new introd. by Arthur Sheps. 249p $7.50; pa $2.75 Schocken 301.451 Negroes—Southern States. U.S.—Race relations. Negroes—Social conditions. Slavery in the U.S.

ISBN 0-8052-0326-5 LC 79-163329

According to this book, first published in 1937 (BRD 1937), "the need for masters and slaves to interact on terms of inequality without friction produced a unique form of etiquette, whereby white authority and black submission would be conveyed by patterns of conduct, language, and mannerisms. Developed on the antebellum plantations, this etiquette survived the upheavals of emancipation and Reconstruction to become in the New South an integral facet of white social control." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Dwarfed by John Dollard's Caste and class in a Southern town [BRD 1937] and Gunnar Myrdal's An American dilemma [BRD 1963], Doyle's study never received the wide recognition it deserved. This reissue has an excellent introduction by Arthur Sheps. Time has not eroded its contribution to the study of Southern race relations. . . . The study is not without its shortcomings. Concentrating upon the larger plantations, Doyle gave short shrift to the smaller farms and antebellum cities. Placing unwarranted emphasis on the 'harmony' engendered, Doyle failed to come to terms with the etiquette's two cardinal sins, its reinforcement of white superiority and its dehumanizing effects upon the Negroes who were forced to bow, scrape, smile, and grovel at every turn. Nevertheless, Doyle's meticulous research and thorough analyses have not been superseded. . . . Should be available in every American library."

Choice 9:430 My '72 240w

"Doyle's book is cautious, level-headed and turgid; it is itself an example of a kind of mannerliness we have largely lost in the last two decades. Doyle, a black, is shocked at the record of the ruler whites of the South, and his book contains much evidence against them that a less passionate scholar might dismiss or temper. But though his passions show, so does his respect for objectivity, dispassion, judiciousness, all the archaic scholarly forms. His book is a mass of footnotes; everything is annotated, buttressed; and the prose is always scholarly cool." Reed Whittemore
New Repub 166:25 Ja 22 '72 1300w

DOYLE, PAUL A. Liam O'Flaherty. 154p $4.95 Twayne

823 O'Flaherty, Liam
LC 76-120016

The author sets out "to survey O'Flaherty's career as a novelist and short story writer as seen through the principal novels and short fiction. He sees O'Flaherty as a consummate 'pictorial' writer, one who writes to make us see rather than hear." (Choice) Bibliography.

"An excellent full-length study of one of the more significant Irish novelists and short story writers of the twentieth century. . . . What emerges from Mr. Doyle's study is an author who is almost a 'primitive.' His novels and short stories are charged with violence and passion; but he can also write with charm of the countryside and of birds and animals. . . . This is a much-needed study of an underserved forgotten Anglo-Irish novelist. . . . [It] belongs in all college and university libraries." S. P. Ryan
Best Sell 32:30 Ap 15 '72 270w

"[Doyle] gives good biographical detail, much of which has been unavailable in print. Though dealing with O'Flaherty's work in the English language, he does provide some interesting notes on his writings in the Irish language, for O'Flaherty his 'mother tongue.' Doyle's selected bibliography . . . is only slightly marred by the misrecording of some Irish language items. In sum, this work is quite useful for its biographical and bibliographical information."

Choice 9:643 J1/Ag '72 240w

DRABBLE, MARGARET. The needle's eye: a novel. 368p $7.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-47966-1 LC 79-178957

"Rose Vassiliou, divorced from her mercurial husband Christopher and raising her children in near penury, is tossed between material need and the desire to renounce her austere family's wealth and privilege. She comes under the protective, then loving eye of Simon Camish, a . . . barrister who sees Rose's heroic forbearance as a lesson against intrusions of unprinciples into his own tense, unhappy family life." (Library J)

DRABBLE, MARGARET—Continued

Reviewed by Laurie Quinn
Am Scholar 42:173 winter '72-'73 1000w
Choice 9:1127 N '72 230w

"A long, slow-paced, stubbornly old-fashioned novel of character centered in an absorbing tangle of ambiguous human relationships. . . . [Rose and Simon] are explicitly paralleled; their separate viewpoints guide us through a confusing net of intrigues and confrontations that overlies a moving, unreconcilable Jamesian moral drama. . . . Each's dilemma is too subtle for the other to penetrate it fully. The 'needle's eye' is the narrow passageway to grace, the slender avenue of moral choice that frustrates imprecise human motions. An unusually mature and satisfying novel." Bruce Allen

Library J 97:2116 Je 1 '72 200w

Reviewed by E. C. Rose
Nation 215:379 O 23 '72 1200w
New Repub 167:26 J1 '72 160w

Reviewed by Anthony Thwaite
New Statesman 83:430 Mr 31 '72 900w

Reviewed by Roger Sale
N Y Rev of Books 19:35 O 5 '72 1900w

"The setting is contemporary London, which Margaret Drabble knows, I suspect, as thoroughly as any novelist has ever known any city; most of her earlier novels are set here, and [this one] makes poetic and pragmatic use of every possible aspect of this city—the ostensibly ugly rows of terrace houses, the . . . homes of the newly-affluent [and] the enormous country home. . . . [This book,] while addressing itself to a spiritual dilemma so profound that many readers—and writers—will not grasp it at all, is at the same time immensely humorous, readable, 'unserious' in its depiction of total human beings. . . . Though I have admired Miss Drabble's writing for years, I will admit that nothing she has written in the past quite prepared me for the depth and richness of [this book]. Here is a real novel." J. C. Oates

N Y Times Bk R p23 Je 12 '72 900w
Reviewed by Kennedy Fraser
New Yorker 48:146 D 16 '72 1800w

Reviewed by Martha Duffy
Time 99:193 Je 26 '72 450w

"Although this is a very ambitious, marvelously written, morally admirable book, its final impact is less than the sum of its parts. Its conclusion is not only a further concession but a defeat. Rose, reflecting on her weakly patched-up marriage, tells herself that she did it 'in the dry light of arid generosity. . . . Her duty, that was what she had done. For others. For him, for the children.' Like a true Puritan, Miss Drabble is sounder on pain than pleasure, on self-denial than on achievement." TLS p353 Mr 31 '72 700w

DRACHE, HIRAM M. The challenge of the prairie; life and times of Red River pioneers. 360p il maps $8.50 North Dakota inst. for regional studies

917 Frontier and pioneer life—Red River Valley (Red River of the North)
LC 70-632775

This is an "account of the economic and social history of the pioneers who settled in the Red River Valley of Dakota and Minnesota. The work focuses on the years from 1870 to 1900 and depicts life on the small farms. . . . The material includes such general topics as early settlement, farming methods, housing, transportation, climate, crops, schools, medical care, religious activities, and social life." (J Am Hist)

"In a final chapter the author shifts briefly to basic economics analyzing land and production costs, grain yield and prices, and taxes and alternative income. From this profit and loss statement he suggests that the major problem of the small farmer was his lack of volume. . . . The bibliography testifies to the author's familiarity with the pertinent literature and his diligence in seeking out the unpublished sources. The extensive illustrations are truly distinctive." W. T. Jackson
Am Hist 77:207 F '72 440w

"In the great detail used to support the narrative the volume resembles Everett Dick's Sod House Frontier [BRD 1937]. This description in depth, like Grandma Moses painting, is effective because of the overpowering factual content. . . . To secure [his] information . . . Drache has made use of extensive unpublished material. In addition, he interviewed a large number of 'old timers' and thus salvaged eyewitness observations before these pioneers moved off the stage. Since the author has lived and worked on farms in this area, his personal experience lends authenticity to his writing. . . . Anyone who has lived in the Midwest, or has tried to make a living by working the soil, will welcome this book because to them the author will have told it like it was, or at least how they would like to think it was on the prairies during the early days." R. M. Wik
J Am Hist 58:194 Je '71 370w

DRAPER, HAL, ed. Writings on the Paris Commune. See Marx, K.

DRESSEL, PAUL L. Institutional research in the university [a handbook, by] Paul L. Dressel and associates; foreword by Frederick de W. Bolman. 347p $12.50 Jossey-Bass 378 Education, Higher—Research—Handbooks, manuals, etc.
ISBN 0-87589-099-7 LC 75-159264

The authors attempt to reveal why institutional research is needed on campuses. They describe how it can "be organized and conducted most effectively . . . [and examine] some of the special problems that should be anticipated. . . . [There is] discussion of developing and using computer data systems. The authors identify . . . the advantages of such systems [and] . . . some of the problems that effect their development and use. Selected bibliographies follow each chapter." (J Higher Ed) "Index." (Choice)

"Dressel, Director of Institutional Research, Michigan State University, is aided by a number of colleagues holding similar posts throughout the country. The writing style reflects clarity of thought and the volume should prove useful to all university and college administrators and not a few faculty members. . . . Comprehensive index; appendix of 'other resources' including annotated sections on various testing instruments, testing agencies, councils, research organizations, educational boards, and related professional associations; table of contents is succinct, yet comprehensive. Should be a welcome addition to the literature on higher education."

Choice 9:258 Ap '72 100w

"This volume is quite appropriately designated A Handbook. It combines a presentation of theory and principles with suggestions on how to organize and conduct institutional research. It does not provide a blueprint for the organization of an office of institutional research, but it does include concrete ideas and warnings that should be helpful in organizing such an office. . . . Anyone in a college or university—administrator, teacher, or director of institutional research—who is concerned with the improvement of the effectiveness and quality of his institution should read this volume and keep it readily at hand." A. J. Brumbaugh

J Higher Ed 43:320 Ap '72 700w

DREUX, WILLIAM B. No bridges blown. 322p $8.95 Univ. of Notre Dame press 940.548 World War, 1939-1945—France.
World War, 1939-1945—Personal narratives
LC 72-165994

"One night in the summer of 1944 two French paratrooper officers and the author parachuted, in uniform, into France. Their primary mission was to lead Maquis groups in an attempt to destroy key bridges. Due to staff mistakes in planning, the paratroopers landed in an area crawling with Germans and far from the bridges targeted to be blown. None were. After several narrow escapes they finally reached their zone of operations, but due to an unexpected change in the strategic situation their mission suddenly took on a new turn. The people in this story were for the most part plain people. . . . Two of them were shot shortly after helping the three paratroopers. . . . The author tells ■ about these people, and the part they played in his past. . . . [He] also describes his training." (Publisher's note)

"If there is such a thing, here is a gentle and unalloyed book about World War II. It is gentle because it is temperate and calm; it is unalloyed because it would make too dull a movie—and that is meant as ■ compliment. . . . [This] is not a studied invective of the absurdity of war. It is a thirty-year-after account of an intimate experience told candidly and with the right amount of passion—enough of each to make you believe what Mr. Dreux says with ease." H. T. Anderson
Best Sell 31:537 Mr 1 '72 270w

"[Dreux has stated] 'This is not a blood and guts story.' In fact, after reading the preface, one wonders why he should read the book at all. . . . What justifies a retelling of these events is not their historical import, but rather the view they give of the boredom, futility, humor, and banality of war. The small scale of the events portrayed, the nuances in the reconstructed conversations, and the delineation of classic personality types who find themselves in uniform combine to make a readable and interesting reconstruction of the past." W. S. Debenham
Library J 96:4002 D 1 '71 170w

DREXLER, ROSALYN. To smithereens. 187p $5.95 New Am. lib; for sale by Norton
LC 76-175196

In this novel, "very young, hefty, good-looking, smart but naïve, and frank Rosa Rubinsky gets mixed up with Paul Partch, an aging, quasi-successful New York art critic with a penchant for being dominated and 'handled' roughly, and embarks upon a whirlwind career as a professional lady wrestler. . . . [Among other characters are:] Shorty, an obsequious but untrustworthy dwarf, and Jean Burly, prime contender for the World Championship of Lady Wrestling." (Book World)

"The relaxed sleaziness and community of the lady wrestling world alternates with the frantic, tired chic of the plastic New York art scene, in which here-barely-disguised New York artists and hangers-on act out their own fantasies of power, success, and grandeur. Does it all sound sickly sick, weird, ugly/sad, and obsessed with violence? It's exactly the opposite. . . . [Drexler] has a marvelous talent for taking this kind of material and imbuing it with qualities of great warmth and wicked satire, pathos, and a haunting aura of nostalgia for a world most of us have never known. The author once earned her own living as a 'lady wrestler.' She's an absolute original who can take all the ingredients that usually characterizes 'serious' fiction . . . and use them with inventiveness, playfulness, and even hilarity." Sara Blackburn
Book World p5 Mr 19 '72 310w

"It seems inconceivable that [this book] could be a love story, but that's precisely what it is—a grotesque, hilarious love story that is really quite convincing and superbly written." Diane Ackerman
Library J 97:698 F 15 '72 300w

Reviewed by Michael Wood
N Y Rev of Books 19:14 Ag 10 '72 950w

"'To Smithereens' is a novel about self-definition. It is also a domestic comedy, a collage of ideas about art, a treatise on sexual fantasy, and the best account of the wrestling scene I've ever read. . . . It is written with almost journalistic objectivity. . . . [This] extraordinarily good book . . . is certainly a feminist novel. . . . New York is seedy in 1972; there are roaches in the bathrooms and everybody looks like a freak. Drexler does seediness well; she makes it look the norm." Sally Kempton
N Y Times Bk R p5 F 27 '72 1350w

DREYER, CARL THEODOR. Jesus. 312p il $9.95 Dial press
791.43 Jesus Christ—Drama. Moving picture plays
LC 73-37443

The "Danish filmmaker spent his last twenty years planning a film on the public life of Jesus Christ. [He never received the financial backing to make it and, instead, here offers a film manuscript.] . . . While remaining faithful to the original text, the Gospels, Mr. Dreyer adds historical, political, and cultural glosses as well as parallels with his own experience of Nazi-occupied Denmark." (Best Sell)

"[This] reads so well one can see the film. . . . [Dreyer's] major purpose is to uproot the roots of anti-semitism sown, according to him, by Paul and John and the 'Catholic Fathers.' . . . After a biographical introduction by Ib Monty, three brief essays by Dreyer pave the way to his 'Jesus.' This is followed by admiring tributes from Preben Thomsen, a friend, and such famous filmmakers as Jean Renoir, Federico Fellini, and François Truffaut. It is a handsomely bound book; a grand memorial to one of Film's master artists." J. J. Quinn
Best Sell 32:166 J1 1 '72 360w

"The strength of the script is its detailed instructions for composing the classic images of the silents. Every scene is described meticulously, and one envisions a cinematic museum filled with newly created masterpieces. The dialogue is another matter. Typical of its blandness is the Prodigal Son's line to his father: 'I tell you that farming holds no attraction for me.' The script finally is not the blueprint of a masterpiece; rather, it is an unintentional record of Dreyer's enduring artistic imagination." Sammy Staggs
Library J 97:2749 S 1 '72 230w

DREYFUS, HUBERT L. What computers can't do; ■ critique of artificial reason. 259p $8.95 Harper

510.78 Computers
ISBN 0-06-011082-1 LC 67-22524

"Are digital computers capable of simulating human thinking? If so, will they ever develop to the point at which it is legitimate to call them persons? . . . [The author] answers both questions [negatively]. He contends that digital computers can imitate only the most trivial aspects of human thought and behavior . . . [and that] human reasoning is so different from computer reasoning that it cannot be simulated to any important degree until we learn how to build an artificial person, with something like a human body, capable of growing, perceiving the world by gestalts, interacting continuously with its environment; in short, until we build a humanoid." (Book World)

"Dreyfus's animadversions have different posits. Judging by his pronouncements and the philosophers he quotes most favorably, he is a phenomenologist influenced mainly by Maurice Merleau-Ponty, the French philosopher who died in 1961. . . . There are curious gaps in [his] philosophical polemics. . . . It is astonishing that Dreyfus, in a book on how computers differ from 'meat people' (as they are called in Oz), can refer to Pascal, Kant, Kierkegaard, Husserl, Heidegger, and Merleau-Ponty without once explicitly discussing the mystery of personal freedom." Martin Gardner
Book World p12 Ja 23 '72 900w

"Dreyfus, of the philosophy faculty at Berkeley, has been troubled by the slow progress in the area of AI computers, and his book is important for the questions it raises and for its provocatively thorough discussions of 'intelligence' (in the philosophic sense). What he fails to do, however, is provide a book that can be meaningful not only for fellow academicians—including scientists—but also for the interested layman. The book ought to be read, but it is itself the greatest indicator of the need for a fully objective treatment of the subject. The three-page preface by Anthony Oettinger is a balanced critique, the author's conclusion is well argued, and the fairly extensive notes are valuable."

Choice 9:1148 N '72 300w

"Skeptics and humorists have been casting doubts on the computer for many years; but few, if any, have scrutinized both the scientific and the philosophical origins of computer science as extensively, meticulously, and fairly as Dreyfus. . . . From Plato's search for 'a set of rules which tells us . . . precisely how to behave' through Leibniz, Hobbes, Boole, Babbage, and the foremost computer experts today, Dreyfus examines with care and clarity the aspirations, as well as the experiments and achievements, which have sustained optimism in the ultimate realization of artificial intelligence through computers. . . . This book is a valuable inquiry into a topic of crucial significance in education, engineering, and philosophy. Although not easy to read, it should be examined by all intelligent people concerned about the future of mankind." F. N. Jones

DREYFUS, H. L.—Continued

Library J 96:2323 J1 '71 260w

"[This] is a partly sober, partly angry attempt to say what man can do that computers can't, and to say why. It is no simple panegyric to humankind, but attempts to meet CS [cognitive simulation] on its own ground, without appeal to will, affect, or entelechy. . . . The hypotheses which have been explored in the 15 years of research which this book criticizes hardly cover all possibilities. Neither this research nor Dreyfus's critique has settled the issue of whether the mind's work is done by computation alone, for while we surely do not know the nature of the mind, we do not know the full power of the computational model either." R. K. Lindsay

Science 176:680 My 12 '72 1200w

DREYFUSS, HENRY. Symbol sourcebook; an authoritative guide to international graphic symbols. 292p il $28.50 McGraw

001.54 Signs and symbols

SBN 07-017837-2

LC 71-172261

"Approximately one-half of this . . . reference book is given over to graphic symbols, arranged by subject, from accommodations and travel, to engineering, to vehicle control. . . . The second half is a listing of basic graphic forms and how they are employed for a variety of duties." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This work is] a fountainhead of insight into the silent language through which all men, all cultures, all nationalities can communicate and by which their environments could become at once more simple, more intelligible, and more humane."

Arch Forum 136:10 Ap '72 90w

"Rather than an all-inclusive dictionary . . . [this book] is limited to a guide to those graphic symbols related to instruction, direction, and warning. Even as such, it is comprehensive, convenient, and well organized. . . . It is a unique as well as very handsome book, and it should, probably, be of interest to all libraries because of its wide appeal to designers, manufacturers, engineers, etc."

Choice 9:354 My '72 120w

"A detailed index pulls [the book] together and here and there are longer explanations for the history of the symbol, e.g., the peace sign, Smokey the Bear. . . . The first part is a ready reference aid, the second an inspiration to designers and artists. . . . [Included also are an] introduction, and color section. All in all the best book now available on symbols." Bill Katz

Library J 97:1002 Mr 15 '72 100w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 55:75 My 6 '72 60w

The DRINKING man [by] David C. McClelland [and others]. 402p il $10 Free press

157 Liquor problem. Alcoholism

LC 79-143504

This work deals with "the role of alcohol consumption in human life. The authors, who believe that drinking is 'essentially a psychologically motivated act,' do not single out the alcoholic for study, but rather focus on the average man and on the motivation behind his use of alcohol." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This collection of loosely connected studies conducted over a 10-year period . . . will be of value primarily to the upper undergraduate. Arguing that their data fail to support traditional anxiety-reduction and oral gratification theories as well as the recently developed 'time out' theory presented in [C.] MacAndrew and [R.] Edgerton's Drunken comportment: a social explanation [BRD 1970], the authors have formulated an alternative 'power need' explanation. Libraries seeking strength in the area of deviance will find this sophisticated contribution a valuable acquisition. Index; extensive appendices."

Choice 9:890 S '72 90w

"This book represents 10 years of research. . . . Drinking is studied as it occurs in a variety of social settings; . . . motives for drinking are analysed cross-culturally; and the relationship between alcohol consumption, fantasy, potency, and the need for power in men is analyzed. Finally, in an attempt to explain alcoholism in terms of the need for individual power, it is hypothesized that alcoholics can be helped by rechanneling their need for power into socially acceptable patterns of behavior. . . . This book is suitable for informed laymen and specialists, and is recommended for academic and large public libraries." H. B. Taub

Library J 97:2410 J1 '72 230w

DRISCOLL, PETER. The Wilby conspiracy. 324p $6.95 Lippincott

ISBN 0-397-00947-X

LC 72-3629

"An English mining engineer from Zambia, vacationing in Cape Town with another man's wife, accidentally befriends a fugitive black man. Thus he finds himself wanted by the police, involved in a black-liberation movement, and openly stalked by two unfriendly security agents. The scene shifts to Johannesburg, to Kimberly, into the empty veldt, [and] across the border into Botswana." (New Yorker)

"Driscoll has written a suspense novel set in the social and political milieu that is Africa and South Africa. . . . At the start, the plot . . . is very involved and it becomes further complicated by the appearance on the scene of James Keogh, a mining engineer on a vacation in South Africa. . . . [The characters] include an assortment of whites and blacks, natives and foreigners. . . . The book is generally well written and moves along at a fast pace. There are a number of unexpected turns of events that add to the general level of suspense in the novel. The result is a better than average thriller." C. J. Keffer

Best Sell 32:332 O 15 '72 190w

"[This novel contains] a subplot concerning diamonds (South Africa, remember?) and a black-liberation movement. . . . Driscoll, a British writer who lived for many years in Johannesburg, . . . accepts things as they are, and the acceptance makes his story that much stronger. Even at the end, justice does not entirely triumph. Law and life are too complicated for that. Part thriller, part sociological document, 'The Wilby Conspiracy' operates on two levels, both of them successful." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p66 N 12 '72 200w

"[Driscoll] is a good writer and a baffling entertainer, and he has us at his mercy all the way."

New Yorker 48:184 O 14 '72 90w

Reviewed by O. L. Bailey

Sat R 55:80 S 30 '72 150w

DRISKELL, LEON V. The eternal crossroads; the art of Flannery O'Connor [by] Leon V. Driskell & Joan T. Brittain. 175p $7.50 Univ. press of Ky.

813 O'Connor, Flannery

SBN 8131-1239-7

LC 70-132828

"Dominant in the fiction of Flannery O'Connor, according to this new study of her work, is the theme of the 'eternal crossroads'—the meeting of the eternal and cosmic with worldly time and place. Here is explored the way in which that understanding controls and infuses her fiction. . . . After examining several . . . literary influences on Miss O'Connor's fiction . . . the authors interpret her [writings] as vehicles for anagogical meaning. . . . In conjunction with their textual analysis [they] . . . examine the novelist's own comments about her esthetics, given in speeches and published in a number of essays." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The authors'] approach through possible influences [on O'Connor's fiction] such as Mauriac, Hawthorne, Eliot, and Nathanael West is not entirely convincing. Mrs. Brittain and Mr. Driskell themselves do not claim that any influence they suggest can be infallibly authenticated or that it is reflected in imitation. They simply observe similarities, especially with Mauriac's ability to make recalcitrant, unprepossessing characters epitomize moral verities and Hawthorne's interest in the darkness that engulfs experience when human love or charity fail. . . . Most original in [this book] is the analysis of revisions which Flannery O'Connor made when she reworked early short stories for the novel Wise Blood or when she made her first published story 'The Geranium' into 'Judgement Day.' . . . To these Mrs. Brittain and Mr. Driskell bring a strong sense of the direction in which Flannery O'Connor's genius led." L. Y. Gosselt

Am Lit 44:517 N '72 400w

"Concentrating on the formal techniques of Flannery O'Connor's fiction, . . . [the authors] provide a needed corrective to the recent spate of O'Connor criticism which has tended to dwell somewhat abstractly on O'Connor's themes as these themes relate to her 'Southernness' or her 'Catholicism.' The explication du texte here may be occasionally labored and pedestrian, but the authors do make judicious comparisons of finished works to sources and earlier versions and do examine closely images, symbols, and plot structures to show just how the stories create the meanings that have been so often interpreted and misinterpreted. . . . Though [J.] Hendin's The world of Flannery O'Connor [BRD 1970] is still probably the best overall introduction to O'Connor, this volume also has its place on the rapidly growing shelf of O'Connor criticism." Choice 9:967 O '72 160w

"Despite the authors' statement that their study rests on an examination of literary form, [this book] is pretty much set from the beginning in those familiar grooves of O'Connor criticism, theology . . . and regionalism. . . . There is no suggestion of the fierce humor that O'Connor's fiction contains or of the awful ironies in her work that can overwhelm the reader." J. A. Avant Library J 96:2644 S 1 '71 200w

DRONBERGER, ILSE. The political thought of Max Weber; in quest of statesmanship. 436p $9.95 Appleton

320.9 Weber, Max. Germany—Politics and government—1898-1919 ISBN 0-390-27384-8 LC 70-133904

"This book attempts to understand and analyze the political thought of Max Weber; to isolate and discuss the principal motives which can be discerned, and to explore certain German social, economic, and political trends between 1885 and 1920 which sustained these motives." (Pref) Index.

"A wordy, assiduous, dissertationlike, heavily annotated and indexed book on Weber's politics which gives the impression of displaying more learning than intelligence. Among other high points, Dronberger narrowly absolves Weber of being a spiritual precursor of the Nazis by virtue of his misgivings about the bureaucratic and his more benign view of charismatic legitimization. This argument is not pursued with rigor. Recommended for the most devoted collectors of Weberiana; optional for others." Choice 8:1381 D '71 70w

"In this massive book Dronberger skillfully . . . covers all aspects of the debate over Weber's intentions and the unintended consequences of his theories. An important achievement." Barry Seldes Library J 97:75 Ja 1 '72 170w

DRURY, ALLEN. Courage and hesitation; notes and photographs of the Nixon administration; notes by Allen Drury; phot. by Fred Maroon. 416p $12.95 Doubleday

973.924 U.S.—Politics and government—1961- . Nixon, Richard Milhous, President U.S. LC 71-163205

The first part of this book "describes the organization and set-up of the White House staff; the positions and duties of . . . the various Aides, Advisers, and Assistants to the President are described, usually in the form of interviews with persons occupying the jobs. Besides describing their job and position in the 'pecking order,' they express their opinion of President Nixon . . . and of Congress, the Press, the Cabinet, and other functionaries. . . . The rest of the book consists of interviews with members of Congress, the cabinet and other government officials. . . . The author includes interviews with President Nixon and with Mrs. Nixon and their daughters." (Best Sell)

"[The subtitle] sums up the contents and purpose of the book very well. It presents a series of excellent photographs of prominent figures of the Nixon administration . . . and a lively interesting text. . . . Drury presents the findings of his investigation quite objectively yet does not hide his own reactions and attitudes. . . . His own attitude is rather mixed: he evidently admires the President as a person and approves of most of his policies but his approval is mixed with annoyance at what he considers a lack of vigor and persistence in pushing the policies through. . . . [The narrative] conveys much unusual information. . . . Most readers will find it an interesting and informative work and it will make a useful addition to the college and high school library." F. J. Gallagher

Best Sell 31:457 Ja 15 '72 390w

"The most impressive parts of the book are those off-the-record comments from some officials who allowed their names to be used and by many other officials and office-holders who did not allow their names to be attached to their comments. . . . The photography is excellent. The written portions are well done but there is a real question about the value of this type of book in college libraries. For those libraries which have everything, this would have a place, otherwise the price makes it a luxury item." Choice 9:576 Je '72 190w

"[This] is a revealing account of how the most demanding job in the world is being managed on behalf of the present incumbent. Mr Drury's verdict is that it is being over-managed, so that the personality and humanity of Mr Nixon are obscured from the public. . . . In Mr Drury's opinion, the blame rests on Mr Nixon's staff. [He] offers some suggestions about how they, and Mr Nixon, might do better. . . . The book is most enjoyable . . . and it is less superficial than it seems at first glance." Economist 243:70 My 6 '72 550w

"Essentially, this is a picture book. Every President deserves this sort of book. Presidents work hard and tend to feel insufficiently appreciated. White House staffs feel that if only the public could see him as they see him. . . . Lyndon Johnson's staff did, and so did preceding ones. . . . [But] there are of course other things about the White House—any White House—that we very much need to know. . . . We should know what a President understands, really understands, to be going on in this country, and where and how he gets his information. . . . What sorts of minds do those whom he listens to have? . . . This book does not tell us." Elizabeth Drew N Y Times Bk ■ p3 Ja ■ '72 1000w

DUBACH, HAROLD W., jt. auth. 1001 questions answered about the oceans and oceanography. See Taber, R. W.

DUBERMAN, MARTIN. Black Mountain; an exploration in community. 527p pl $12.95 Dutton

378.73 Black Mountain College. Community life SBN 0-525-06806-6 LC 70-158583

An account of the Black Mountain college of the arts, which was founded in 1933 in North Carolina. In reconstructing the story of the twenty-three years existence of the experimental community "Duberman interjects his own reactions to the people and events he is chronicling. . . . [They include] many of the major names in the creative arts in America—Josef and Anni Albers, Charles Olson, Merce Cunningham, Eric Bentley, Paul Goodman, John Cage, and . . . others who studied, taught, or stayed there." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"To the stuff of archival and oral history, [the author] adds personal thoughts and a candid commentary that is refreshing, if unexpected from an historian trained in the traditional methods. The narrative reflects the spirits, the hopes, the chaos, the power plays, the various talents, and the overwhelming personalities that formed and marked the Black Mountain community. . . . [Duberman] has succeeded in giving us history that must be recommended for its immediacy and impact as well as its factual content. It will appeal to many types of readers." E. G. Detsfesen Library J 97:3308 O 15 '72 230w

Reviewed by Reed Whittemore New Repub 167:26 N 4 '72 1500w

Reviewed by E. Z. Friedenberg N Y Rev of Books 19:35 N 16 '72 1300w

"Duberman inserts his own running commentary. . . . But including his 'feelings, fantasies and needs,' however sincere, ends up much ado about very little; Duberman has knocked down a methodological straw man. Ironically, 'Black Mountain' is most valuable as documentary history. . . . The book is disappointing—and alarming—because Duberman turns his back on the historical imagination itself. One wishes that in place of his humorless, cross and self-involved journal entries, he had speculated boldly on Black Mountain's affinities with Brook Farm, Oneida and other 19th-century social experiments. . . . 'Black Mountain' does not exploit its rich materials and possibilities for interpretation and comparison. The writing is so academic and lacking in verve that one must ruefully wait for the Black Mountain artists themselves to write its interior history." Herbert Leibowitz

DUBERMAN, MARTIN—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p37 O 29 '72 1250w

Reviewed by Charles Michener
Newsweek 80:102B N 27 '72 650w

"Duberman is at his best in sensitive delineation of character, and the characters in Black Mountain combine the subtleties of those of Henry James with the color of those of Charles Dickens. More importantly, the quest [for community] itself, for all its tragic potential, is not only noble but necessary. If Black Mountain did not quite open the way, it certainly permitted to emerge a new cultural pattern that in the Seventies seems destined to change the very nature of Western civilization. . . . This book is testimony to the incredible pain and foolishness and sacrifice that search entails, and also to its absolute necessity. In our present proliferation of experimental educational programs and communal forms, no book could be more relevant than this record of our intrepid predecessors." Judson Jerome
Sat R 55:70 O 21 '72 1650w

DU BOIS, W. E. B. The seventh son; the thought and writings of W. E. B. Du Bois; ed. and with an introd. by Julius Lester. 2v $25 Random house

301.45 Negroes. U.S.—Race relations
ISBN 0-394-47033-8 LC 77-140716

This "collection contains a . . . variety of Du Bois' published works, including articles written in 1883 as a reporter for the New York Globe, articles from various periodicals (particularly from his period as editor of the Crisis), and chapters from some of his important books." (Library J)

"Although Du Bois is consistently interesting and most of the selections are well chosen, the overall value of the book is questionable. The edition falls somewhere between one useful for scholars and one intended for the general reader; it will likely satisfy neither. Editing and footnotes are kept to a minimum, while transition passages are not adequate. Chapters from longer works can rarely stand alone and could have been omitted. Lester's long biographical chapter is descriptive, rather than analytic, and fails to provide a satisfactory introduction. . . . For large collections Lester's book will quickly become redundant, while smaller libraries would be better off with shorter editions of selected writings, such as W. E. B. Du Bois: a Reader, edited by Meyer Weinberg [BRD 1970]." E. K. Welsh
Library J 96:2628 S 1 '71 180w

"[This work] is useful precisely because Lester has taken pains to edit DuBois's writing so as to illustrate the intricate thought and feeling of a man who was complex and perplexing at times, but rarely inconsistent. As one turns from DuBois's earliest written pieces—his short columns for the New York Globe—to his scholarly and editorial writings, one sees that he always believed that his destiny was to be a public teacher and intellectual leader." H. W. Cruse and Carolyn Gipson
N Y Rev of Books 19:22 N 30 '72 800w

"The core of the book . . . is the voice of a formidably intelligent and educated man attempting to maintain, often in the teeth of the evidence, his faith in the American economic and political system. . . . Lester's presentation of Du Bois's writing is more than serviceable. Once in a while Lester feels obliged to say that white civilization is more evil than Du Bois thought and, occasionally missing Du Bois's point, he can write: 'This sounds like a white liberal, not W.E.B. Du Bois.' Even a white liberal can see that Du Bois meant exactly what he said. These are quibbles: Lester's introductory essay is a model of compression, expertly employing long extracts from Du Bois's own work." P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 78:[75] Ag M '71 900w

DU BOIS, W. E. B. W. E. B. DuBois speaks: speeches and addresses; ed. by Philip S. Foner. 2v 289;346p ea $7.95; pa ea $2.95 Pathfinder press

301.45 Negroes—Civil rights. Negroes—Social conditions. U.S.—Race relations
LC 78-108719

These speeches and addresses, which were delivered between 1890 and 1963, are arranged chronologically (volume one, 1890-1919, with a tribute by M. L. King, Jr.; volume two, 1920-1963, with a tribute by K. Nkrumah) from Du Bois' early activities in the pre-Niagara days to his membership in the American Communist party, and include discussions of such issues as racism, war, poverty, and ignorance. Bibliography. Index.

"Thanks to Foner's painstaking efforts scholars now have a representative collection of speeches by one of the most remarkable thinkers of the 20th century, conveniently accessible in two volumes. For those of us who are inclined to believe that concepts such as 'institutional racism,' 'black separatism,' and 'black studies' are new trends in the struggle, a fresh look at DuBois is a humbling experience. These concepts were identified and thoroughly discussed by him long ago. . . . The speeches here gathered reveal a great historian, sociologist, economist, educator, philosopher, and activist as he grapples with the great issues of our times. . . . A reading of these volumes is a must for understanding the black experience in America and in the world, an experience in which DuBois played a key role."

Choice 8:1242 N '71 190w

"Since Du Bois was a writer rather than an orator, the material represents only a small portion of his total production as one of America's most creative and prolific scholar-activists. However, one can acquire from it some sense of the development of Du Bois' thought on major questions. Recommended for all libraries with holdings in black history, and especially for those that do not have The Crisis, Du Bois' chief vehicle for many years." F. A. Burdick
Library J 96:851 Mr 1 '71 110w

DU BOIS, WILLIAM PENE. Bear circus. 48p il col il $4.95; lib bdg $4.53 Viking

Koalas—Stories
ISBN 670-15073-8; 670-15074-6 (lib bdg)
LC 76-153665

"When the real teddy bears of Koala Park have their food stolen by grasshoppers, they are saved by the kangaroos. In order to repay the kangaroos, the bears perform a circus for them, seven years later. When the grasshoppers return the bears and the kangaroos learn the nature of true friendship." (Publisher's note) "Ages five to eight." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by M. J. Bandler
Book World p2 (children's issue) N 7 '71 70w

"It is easy to see why this author-illustrator has gathered such a solid following, for his extraordinarily realistic style gives the Koala bears more personality and animation than any stuffed teddy bear perched on a child's shelf. . . . The story line is rather odd, but stick to the superb illustrations and there is pleasure enough." David Winder
Christian Science Monitor pB2 N 11 '71 130w

Horn Bk 47:601 D '71 160w

Reviewed by A. D. Schweibish
Library J 97:274 Ja 15 '72 130w

Reviewed by J. A. Smith
N Y Rev of Books 17:27 D 2 '71 120w

"William Pene du Bois is a rare artist-author, one of the most talented and stylish creators of children's books. Let's give him a brisk ruffle of drums for his latest romp, 'Bear Circus.' He is the perfect ring-master, as all small children know who have been lucky enough to enjoy his 'Bear Party' [BRD 1951]. . . . Fellini could well envy the acts: A Child's Garden of Bears, The Three Fur Brothers, The Great Mystery Bear, climaxed by the strong-bear act called The All Babas." Lavinia Russ
N Y Times Bk R p8 O 24 '71 280w

"This tale of friendship-extraordinary is delightful nonsense sedately told, with pictures as amusing as they are lovely. . . . A completely engaging, joyous book." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 54:46 D 11 '71 110w

DUBOS, RENÉ. A God within. 325p $8.95
Scribner

301.3 Ecology. Man—Influence of environment

SBN 684-12768-7 LC 76-37224

The author of So Human an Animal (BRD 1969) offers a rational hope in a time which tends to despair. "Ecological crises, he observes, go back through man's history—and both nature and men have always adapted themselves, re-emerging and surviving in different forms. He is less fearful of the end of life on earth as the result of the current technologically-rooted environmental crisis than he is of the degradation of human life as we know it. . . . He believes men have not done enough in their stewardship of the earth, but can create a new 'scientific theology' out of a sense of 'en theos'—the ancient belief that each place has its deity or spirit." (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by D. J. Sullivan

America 127:324 O 21 '72 750w

"With great enthusiasm, I recommend to every architect, and all those concerned about the quality of life, Dubos' new book. . . . [He] provides the rationale and detailed documentation of what many of us believe but too few are able to live and practice. For architects and environmentalists, this book also provides detailed ammunition—by a highly respected and widely recognized scientist who speaks our language." F. P. Hoskin

Arch Forum 137:20 N '72 1600w

"Reverent rationalist humanism at its finest, the volume represents a mark of hope from within the scientific community."

Christian Century 89:905 S 13 '72 50w

Reviewed by Martin Marty

Critic 31:84 N/D '72 190w

"In a series of brilliant discussions of man's biological, anthropological, and sociocultural history, [the author] demonstrates again and again that man, his societies, and his physical world are inextricably interwoven, and that the interactions between man and environmental events produce results that, more often than not, are completely unpredictable. There is danger in this interdependence . . . but there is also hope based on the proven unpredictability of the long-term results of man's large (or small) interactions with his world. Dubos' wide knowledge of literature, history, sociology, and philosophy, as well as of his own scientific specialties, never ceases to amaze. His latest book will be widely read and cannot help but have a significant and positive impact on the way our world will go." George Adelman

Library J 97:2609 Ag '72 280w

"As a sequel of sorts to [Dubos'] deservedly prizewinning So Human an Animal, the present book emphasizes the good chances and endless possibilities that accompany the magnificent diversity of nature and above all, the human species. . . . Despite the fact that there are new subjects and emphases, a good many passages of the present book are at least somewhat repetitious of the earlier one. But . . . [the book] does make a contribution to the search for what John Dewey called 'a common faith,' the need for which the author recognized in the earlier book as primary for effective action. . . . More than for any of its particular positions, which are sometimes vague and often fragmentary or not fully developed, 'A God Within' is important as an explicit counterstatement to many in the conservation and ecological movements who seem soured or sick of man." Walter Arnold

N Y Times Bk R p10 D 24 '72 1300w

New Yorker 48:132 S 23 '72 130w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks

Time 160:74 S 11 '72 350w

DUBOS, RENÉ, jt. auth. Only one earth. See Ward, E.

DUBIN, ANDREW J. The practice of managerial psychology: concepts and methods for manager and organization development. 326p $11.50 Pergamon

158.7 Psychology, Applied

ISBN 0-08-016764-0 LC 74-154545

The author summarizes "the relevant theory, techniques, and procedures used by psychologists in contributing to the improved performance of managers in handling the 'people' aspects of their responsibilities." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The author deals with all of the conventional professional roles that industrial and organizational psychologists play in a fashion which is informative to the potential purchaser of such services and to those considering becoming a part of the profession. For such an audience it has an adequate bibliography although it falls short of the usual college textbook standards in referencing. From the standpoint of the broad range of problems dealt with and the nontechnical but informative way with which they are dealt, this is a unique book."

Choice 9:689 J1/Ag '72 130w

"An associate professor of behavioral science at the Rochester Institute of Technology, DuBrin leads the reader through the maze of managerial psychology, making it comprehensible to the average person. The book is current and accurate, and should be quite helpful to managers and teachers—it could be used as a textbook—who are searching for ways to improve organizational effectiveness." A. J. Anderson

Library J 97:1316 Ap 1 '72 110w

DUCKETT, ALFRED. Changing of the guard: the new breed of black politicians. 126p il $3.40 Coward-McCann & Geoghegan

920 Negroes—Biography—Juvenile literature. Negroes—Political activity—Juvenile literature

LC 70-132600

"Jesse Jackson introduces this series of sketches, dealing with the development of a new breed of black politicians, made by and sensitive to the black masses." (N Y Times Bk R) Index. "Grade seven and up." (Best Sell)

"Duckett sketches progress on Capitol Hill, in the mayor's office, and in organizational and neighborhood groups. Through it all, one becomes sensitive to a bias for the black cause, one that frequently stoops to offensive, and unnecessary, labelling of the white, and conservative black society. Because the author is Negro? Hardly a valid point . . . A perceptive Political Science teacher may find it thought-provoking to use [this] book—students could observe, firsthand, the dangers of bias and subjective analysis." Mrs J. G. Gray

Best Sell 32:199 J1 15 '72 80w

"Though dated by its reference to Adam Clayton Powell as alive, Duckett adequately provides background information on most of the political figures and captures the style and determination which motivated each to seek political careers." R. K. Goddard

Library J 97:3452 O 15 '72 150w

"Beginning with the 'Soul on Capitol Hill' and circling back to the Black Caucus, Mr. Duckett tells us a little bit about a lot of folks. Too many, I think—Ron Dellums, Julian Bond, Carl Stokes, etc.—too many little bits trying to show everybody not forgetting their roots. Like Percy Sutton—'around the corner from his apartment building are Harlem slums.' It's like that." Fred and Lucille Clifton

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p30 My 7 '72 100w

DUCKETT, ALFRED. I never had it made. See Robinson, J.

DUCKETT, ELEANOR. Medieval portraits from East and West. 270p $10 Univ. of Mich. press

920 Middle Ages—History. Civilization, Medieval

ISBN 0-472-29440-7 LC 70-163620

The author seeks to reveal the "spirit and temper of the Middle Ages as it is reflected in the lives of fifteen people of the medieval world: Theodosius the Great, The Empress Eudoxia and Saint John Chrysostom, Synesius and Hypatia, Honorius and Galla Placidia, Pulcheria and Theodosius II, Valentinian III and Honoria, Dhuoda and Bernard of Septimania [and] Abélard and Heloise." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The author] brings back to life leading personalities of the Mediterranean world in the first half of the fifth century, when the House of Theodosius the Great kept a tenuous hold on the loyalty of subjects of the dissolving Roman Empire. . . . In writing enjoyable narrative history and in citing just the right proportion of early medieval sources, Miss Duckett's book stands worthily in the company of her previous works. . . . The last two essays in the book are disappointing. The one describing the career of Bernard of Septimania and incorporating the counsels of his wife, Dhuoda, to their sons is flat. The last one, a retelling of the famous Abeldard and Heloise romance, is somewhat stilted, inaccurate in details and lacking in Miss Duckett's usual narrative gusto." Fernando Picó

DUCKETT, ELEANOR—Continued

America 126:440 Ap 22 '72 370w

Reviewed by Vincent Cronin
Book World p6 Ap 16 '72 1000w

"Duckett, well known as a popularizer of the history of late antiquity and the early Middle Ages, treats the lives of most important political and church leaders, male and female, in the century centered at A.D. 400 in clear, straightforward, and often elegant style. The principals speak for themselves through extensive (but unfootnoted) quotations from contemporary letters, orations, treatises, and histories. . . . The drawback is that analysis of causes does not usually rise above the narrative provided by contemporary historians; the reader is left with sympathy for the figures treated, but little sense of motives or the relations of individual actions to larger historical movements. The volume [has useful] . . . information not readily available elsewhere, especially for undergraduate students of history."

Choice 9:1188 N '72 200w

"The subjects of these biographical sketches . . . are presented in pairs—a woman is contrasted with a male counterpart. . . . [The author's] style here is rhetorical and antiquated. One aspect of the book's augmentative character is that every one of the seven women is portrayed as courageous, decisive, and honorable, while five of the eight men are shown as faithless, cruel, arrogant, and weak. The three men who come off best are men of the Church . . . and none of these is as faultless as his female counterpart. The uniformity of Duckett's judgment begins to tire after awhile." R. E. Stevens

Library J 97:1803 My 15 '72 140w

DUCKWORTH, ALISTAIR M. The improvement of the estate; a study of Jane Austen's novels. 239p $9 Johns Hopkins press

823 Austen, Jane
ISBN 0-8018-1269-0 LC 75-161839

The author "suggests that Austen's novels contain a thematic unity residing in her conception of the 'estate' and in her idea of 'improvement.' In his view, Austen uses the estate to personify society as a whole, while the feelings of individuals about improving their inheritances become a means of distinguishing social responsibility and proper social attitudes. After placing Austen in the perspective of 18th-Century thought, the author explores Mansfield Park as the key to her philosophy, then analyzes the other novels in depth." (Library J) Index.

"The book is uneven; the general introduction is very fine and the chapter devoted to Mansfield Park the best practical criticism. The thesis seems forced when applied to some of the other novels. Thus, while not entirely conclusive, the book should be a useful tool so long as it is accepted as but one of many attempts to resolve a very complex problem."

Choice 9:812 S '72 170w

"Individual portraits of some of Austen's characters (Lydia Bennet, Henry Crawford) are critical highlights. The extensive footnotes are especially useful as a guide to further criticism." N. E. Gwinn

Library J 96:4095 D 15 '71 150w

"It is surprising . . . that Duckworth should attempt to locate Jane Austen in the history of ideas, to make her not so much the ironical observer of individual behaviour, as a social historian. . . . In order to enforce this view, Mr Duckworth adopts a symbolic approach to the novels. It is a strange approach to an author who seldom used metaphor, and one which produces . . . textual distortion. . . . This distortion is a direct result of the author's preoccupation with sociological generalities. And, elsewhere, historical ideas are applied to the novels as one might fit calipers. . . . This kind of criticism makes Jane Austen not more but less interesting."

TLS p412 Ap 14 '72 1100w

"One is not only impressed with Mr. Duckworth's knowledge and insights in this special analysis of Jane Austen's fiction, but also with his knowledge of English fiction in general as he turns to the works of Richardson, Fielding, the Victorians, and early twentieth-century novelists for comparisons and contrasts to clarify points in his discussion. . . . 'The Improvement of the Estate,' providing as it does an informed commentary on Jane Austen's thought, attitudes, and intentions, should be of interest and value to teachers, students, and to all qualified readers who welcome a fresh approach to the work of a great and beloved English novelist."

Va Q R 48:xxxxii autumn '72 300w

DUDLEY, D. M. ed. The Penguin companion to classical, Oriental & African literature. See Penguin companion to classical, Oriental & African literature

DUDLEY, D. R., jt. auth. Rome against Carthage. See Dorey, T. A.

DUGAN, PATRICK R. Biochemical ecology of water pollution. 159p $14.50 Plenum press 628.1 Water—Pollution. Biochemistry. Ecology
ISBN 0-306-30540-2 LC 72-167676

"A discussion of organic and inorganic nutrients and pollutants, their degradation, cycling, and ecological consequences in aquatic systems." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Dugan attempts to break through the jargon-loaded terminology associated with such concepts as pollution by recalcitrant molecules, thermal effluents, and ionic synergistic effects. . . . However, [the book's] small size limits references to many major concepts, such as pollution and disease production, to a few paragraphs. The author occasionally fails to cite relevant sources but this is overshadowed by his highly readable style. The book is intended for water-related scientists and graduate students, as well as lawyers, politicians, and economists. Its clarity and lack of jargon are a welcome change."

Choice 9:672 J1/Ag '72 110w

"Assuming that the nonbiologist reader is not intimidated by the title, he will find the first portion of the book highly readable and informative. It presents an overview of the significance, types, and causes of water pollution. . . . The second part of biochemistry begins benignly enough but the chapter on the chemistry and biochemistry of water and those on degradation are, as the author himself suspected, too technical for most of the audience. This book also has a chapter on acid mine drainage. Unquestionably it is, for the biologist, the best chapter in the book."

J. T. Staley
Science 176:1008 Je 2 '72 200w

DUIGNAN, PETER, jt. ed. Colonialism in Africa, 1870-1960, v2. See Gann, L. H.

DUIGNAN, PETER, gen. ed. Colonialism in Africa, 1870-1960, v3. See Turner, V.

DUKAS, HELEN, jt. auth. Albert Einstein, creator and rebel. See Hoffmann, B.

DUKORE, BERNARD F. Bernard Shaw, director. 199p pl $7.95 Univ. of Wash. press 792 Shaw, George Bernard. Theater—Production and direction
LC 79-117727

"After an initial chapter examining Shaw's background and experiences in the theater before he began to direct plays, Dukore explores various aspects of Shavian directorial theory and practice. He shows that, while Shaw's basic concern was with the actor, he was also involved in all the minute considerations that make up a successful production, including prerehearsal planning, casting, cutting and changing the script, . . . conducting rehearsals, acting, scenery, lighting, and costuming." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The book is enjoyable and interesting, but it is not a 'basic' Shaw book as it deals only indirectly with the plays. Its greatest value—beyond its natural interest to those who are fascinated by anything about Shaw—is to the student of theater who can learn much here about theatrical technique and procedure."

Choice 9:73 Mr '72 110w

"[This] is a quilt, stitched together blocks of Shavian quotation. Some of the material is unidentifiable. . . . Since the subject of Dukore's book fascinates me, I wish I could report that I enjoyed it. Alas, a quilt does not make for very pleasant reading; the pattern keeps breaking back down into bits and pieces. There are too many quotes, many of them too brief, too unrevealing, and the juxtaposition of comments written years apart is misleading, even if Shaw pretty much retained for his long life an unshakable idea of what a production should be. I will return to the volume frequently, I suspect, but not for the sake of the generalizations that are presumed to grow out of the specific instances of the Shavian directorial mind at work, but because those instances sometimes provide useful additional insights into the Shaw plays." Gerald Weales

Commonweal 95:527 Mr ■ '72 340w

"[This important study] reemphasizes Shaw's theatrical experience in a very scholarly, thorough, and pleasant manner. . . . [It] ought to be read by anyone genuinely interested in theater." T. E. Luddy

Library J 96:3774 N 15 '71 150w

"Dukore has gathered a mass of instructive material on Shaw's opinions and practices as a director. . . . He has drawn on unpublished materials in major theatrical collections: the Hanley Collection at the University of Texas, the Burgunder Collection at Cornell, the Enghoven Collection at the Victoria and Albert Museum, and the manuscripts at the British Museum. Among these are Shaw's rehearsal notes, marginalia to his own plays, and letters—a store of Shavian particulars about the plays and how they should be performed, that is vastly interesting. . . . Dukore has organized his facts reasonably, but he has not gone much beyond the simplest sort of commentary."

TLS p714 Je 18 '71 750w

DULLES, FOSTER RHEA. American policy toward Communist China, 1949-1969; foreword by John K. Fairbank. 273p il $7.95 Crowell

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—China (People's Republic of China). China (People's Republic of China)—Foreign relations—U.S.
ISBN 0-690-07612-6; 0-690-07613-4 (lib bdg)
LC 70-184974

The author of China and America (BRD 1946) seeks to show "how a combination of many factors, including domestic partisan politics, McCarthyism and the . . . dread of international communism . . . the China bloc in Congress . . . and the obduracy of the Chinese Communists, made relations over the years so controversial and involved." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"With skill and objectivity, [the author] shows how America . . . became a victim of its own anti-Communist obsessions and pursued a policy that led to the isolation of China, the confrontation in Korea, and the disaster of Vietnam. . . . From Dulles's carefully researched historical record it becomes apparent how we constructed a bellicose image of China designed to complement our own anxieties and self-righteousness. . . . Those were hysterical times, and Dulles's highly readable reconstruction, despite a ponderous title, puts it into perspective." Ronald Steel.

Book World p1 Ap 9 '72 160w

Choice 9:860 S '72 190w

Christian Century 89:406 Ap 5 '72 30w

"The viewpoint is essentially that of the liberal conventional wisdom: 'Instead of charting our own course, with positive affirmation, we have reacted almost automatically along predetermined lines to every move China has made, or seemingly threatened to make, in challenging our interests in Asia' (page 212); what we should have done instead is never made very clear. . . . [The book] begins with a summary, based on [Dulles'] earlier writings, of pre-1949 Sino-American relations that often tends to treat American policy as not only self-interested and ineffectual but as absurd. The constructive side of historic American China policy, such as the allocation of our share of the Boxer indemnity to educational purposes, gets less than justice." H. C. Hinton

Commonweal 96:486 S 8 '72 900w

"Now that United States China policy has undergone a major reorientation, there is a need for a concise, readable account of that policy over the past 30-odd years. Dulles was a master of this kind of writing and has performed a fine service in this book. . . . He follows the liberal criticism of U.S. China policy over the past 30-odd years. Dulles was deeply into the motivation and goals of the Peking government, but his descriptions certainly provide an excellent introduction to the major directions of American policy and to the men who have made it. . . . The book's greatest drawback is the underplaying, except in the case of General MacArthur, of the influence of the U.S. military and intelligence service on our China policy." D. D. Buck

Library J 97:859 Mr 1 '72 840w

DUMAS, ANDRÉ. Dietrich Bonhoeffer: theologian of reality; tr. by Robert McAfee Brown. 306p $7.95 Macmillan (N Y)

230.4 Bonhoeffer, Dietrich

LC 75-155273

In this analysis of Bonhoeffer's thought all "the theological writings, spanning the years from 1927 to 1944, are examined developmentally and systematically, placed in their biographical and intellectual setting, and compared with other thinkers such as Barth, Heidegger and Bultmann. . . . The interpretations of Bonhoeffer are . . . surveyed and assessed with . . . [an] eye to local nuance even in reference to 'the American scene.'" (Commonweal) Annotated bibliography. Index of biblical references. Index to works by Dietrich Bonhoeffer. Index of names.

"Dumas has the advantage of digging in a field that has been widely plowed. . . . (Incidentally, his chapter on the different types of Bonhoeffer criticism would by itself be enough to make this book worth buying.) A chronological critique of the theologian-martyr's writings is something that has been done often before, and frequently done well. . . . But, Dumas does it again, and with considerable ease and skill. A packed argument, filled out with quite a number of intriguing footnotes, holds us with something of the excitement of a detective story. . . . What emerges most of all from Dumas's presentation is the Lutheran Bonhoeffer, who holds so firmly to the Lutheran belief in the finite being capable of the infinite, and in a way quite different from the understanding of Hegel the neo-Lutheran." Kenneth Hamilton

Christian Century 88:1421 D 1 '71 430w

"Dumas's book is easily the best overall analysis of Bonhoeffer's thought which has yet appeared. It has been well served by its translator, who is a first-rate theologian in his own right. Everything is here. . . . It is, however, a book for professional theologians, and even some of these will be baffled by sections which presuppose a knowledge of the intricacies of European developments greater than that possessed by many English-speaking readers. It also, not surprisingly, lacks sensitivity to Anglo-American linguistic analysis and sociology of knowledge." G. A. Lindbeck

Commonweal 96:527 S 29 '72 600w

DUMÉZIL, GEORGES. Archaic Roman religion; with an appendix on the religion of the Etruscans; tr. by Philip Krapp; foreword by Mircea Eliade. 2v $25 Univ. of Chicago press

292 Rome—Religion

ISBN 0-226-16968-5

LC 76-116981

This is a "study of the beginnings of Roman religious practices and their implementations in cult and law into historical times." (Library J)

"This is the first English translation of one of (Dumézil's) major works, first published in France in 1966. Krapp has done a magnificent job. . . . Dumézil has combined his skill as a student of primitive religion, as a historian and sociologist of religion, with the modern concepts of comparative religion, to produce a seminal study. . . . A must for all serious minded students of ancient Rome, as well as for the anthropologist interested in comparative religions."

Choice 8:686 Jl '71 220w

DUMEZIL, GEORGES—Continued

"For specialists on the subject . . . here is a valuable permanent addition to the lore of myth and the stories of divinities."

Christian Century 88:356 Mr 17 '71 50w

"[The author] has long been known in European circles for his contributions to knowledge of the story of Roman religion. . . . [This is a] scholarly book. . . . but can be enjoyed by the general public since the history of religion is becoming of more popular interest."

J. R. Bram

Library J 96:957 Mr 15 '71 90w

DUMONT, LOUIS. Homo hierarchicus; ■ essay on the caste system; tr. by Mark Sainsbury. (The Nature of human soc. ser) 386p maps $10.50 Univ. of Chicago press

301.44 Caste. India—Social life and customs
ISBN 0-226-16959-6 LC 77-123751

"Using the methods of French structuralism, Dumont shows how the hierarchical ordering of castes derives from a series of oppositions which are in turn related to concepts of purity and pollution." (Choice) Bibliography.

Reviewed by S. J. Tambiah

Am Anthropol 74:832 Ag '72 2500w

"[This] excellent book . . . is a first-rate analysis of caste that lays bare the ideological foundations which manifest themselves in empirical social groups. In isolating the theories of hierarchy and purity Dumont demonstrates the underlying structure of the Indian system of social classification. . . . Dumont's work is more than an analysis of caste, for he wishes to show us how such an hierarchical system differs from an egalitarian regime. For most readers this comparative exercise will be less convincing than the purely Indian material, but though one may feel rather uncomfortable with the global character of his comparisons there is much in them that is worthwhile. Should be on the shelves of every self-respecting library."

Choice 8:616 Je '71 200w

Reviewed by P. G. Hiebert

Contemp Sociol 1:437 S '72 900w

"Dumont outlines a systematic theory of traditional Hindu society that is grandly speculative, sometimes brilliantly incisive, and always provocative, which no one interested in the operation of that society can afford to ignore. (His 83 pages of bibliographic notes are alone worth the price of the book.)" M. M. Ames

Pacific Affairs 45:438 fall '72 1050w

"This is a book about caste which methodologically is almost as peculiar as the institution itself. Yet it should certainly not be written off as an exercise in eccentricity; for, whatever M. Dumont's deficiencies as a comparative sociologist may be, he is a great indologist, with a superb knowledge of his subject and a capacity to convey that knowledge with economical vigour. . . . Mark Sainsbury's translation of this important work is excellently done, and its publication in English is greatly to be welcomed."

TLS p165 F 5 '71 100w

DUNCAN, LOIS. A gift of magic; il. by Arvis Stewart. 183p $5.95 Little

LC 70-150053

"Each of the three Garrett children has a distinctive personality and talent. The older sister, Kirby, is determined to be a dancer, and little brother Brendon is a phenomenal pianist, although he has little real interest in music. But [the] story centers on middle-child Nancy's gift of extrasensory perception and on the responsibilities, problems (in school, with her siblings), and advantages it gives her. It is an understanding high school counselor in love with her divorced mother who convinces Nancy of the values of her gift, and of the need to use it without trying to manage the lives of others. . . . Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"[The three children] are convincing siblings in the process of adjusting to a new way of life brought about by their parent's divorce. The young reader will readily relate to Nancy, suffer with her through her troubles, and be happy when her problems are resolved. The illustrations . . . are extremely sophisticated and do not seem to relate well to the simple realism of the story." E. C. Kenney

Best Sell 31:334 O 15 '71 90w

Reviewed by E. M. Graves

Commonweal 95:181 N 19 '71 60w

Horn Bk 48:152 Ap '72 180w

"Background on extrasensory perception is well woven into the story, and current interest in the occult and psychic phenomena will widen the audience for the book." Peggy Sullivan

Library J 96:3908 N 15 '71 140w

DUNHAM, BARROWS. Ethics, dead and alive. 214p $6.95 Knopf

170 Ethics

ISBN 0-394-42371-2

LC 69-10673

The author traces "the decay of ethical theory against the historical background of massive human suffering and explosions of mass irrationality, through the wars, revolutions, famines, and genocides of the last hundred years. . . . He attempts a recovery of ethics . . . by working out its concepts in terms of ordinary life: the meaning of integrity and kindness; the ambiguities of power; the perplexities of taking sides; the subtle differences between tolerance and abdication of moral judgment." (Publisher's note)

"In his usual arresting style, enlivened by quotations from columnists and even humorists, Dunham presents a vital ethical alternative to the negativism resulting from G. E. Moore ('good' defies definition), logical positivism ('good' defies specification), emotivism ('good' merely means 'I prefer') and philosophers' general aloofness from world crises. The result is a 'humanistic Kantianism'. . . . Dunham's adjustment of Kant's categorical imperative and its corollary to the necessity of using evil means occasionally to attain good ends may be challenged, but it deserves careful study. Recommended for general readers and for students who have encountered metaethics and the problem of universalizability in ethics."

Choice 9:379 My '72 150w

"A well-written, freewheeling romp through moral philosophy, Edwardian intellectual history, world affairs, and the current human situation. Dunham dislikes airy and irrelevant ethical theory, is deeply disturbed by inhumanity, and takes some hope from youth; but his analyses are shoddy, incorrect, foolish. He attacks without understanding G. E. Moore and A. J. Ayer (war-horses whose ethical theories are of greater historical than substantive interest to philosophers), knows nothing of the important work of Rawls, Hart, and Hampshire (to name only a few), and somehow suggests that the moral paralysis he claims we wallow in is an outgrowth of recent Anglo-American ethical theory. . . . But there is no continuity, no thread one can follow, no discernable conclusion, and certainly no recognition that what was once wrong with ethical philosophy was a reaction to books like his." G. J. Schochet

Library J 96:3139 O 1 '71 160w

DUNHAM, LOWELL, ed. The cardinal points of Borges; ed. by Lowell Dunham and Ivar Ivask. 113p il $5.95; pa $2.95 Univ. of Okla. press

868 Borges, Jorge Luis

ISBN 0-8061-0983-1; 0-8661-0984-X (pa)

LC 76-163635

The articles in this book examine the Argentine author's 'philosophy, poetry, essays [and] short stories. . . . [The] book is the outcome of a series of . . . papers presented at an International Symposium on Borges held at University of Oklahoma, June 5-6, 1969, and originally published in the journal Books abroad (Summer 1971). Apart from six literary articles (Alazraki, Christ, Yates, Irby, Rodrigues Monegal, Murchison), there are a recent poem of Borges with a first English translation, three poems honoring Borges by the Spanish poet Jorge Guillén [and] an article 'At work with Borges' by his official translator, di Giovanni." (Choice) Bibliographies.

"[The book contains] three useful bibliographies: 'Towards a bibliography on Borges' (Florence), Borges' first editions and English translations (Lyon), and Borges in Books abroad (Ivask). As a bonus, we have five illustrations (photographs of Borges plus a facsimile page of a Borges manuscript). Though hardly original material, it is useful to have the criticism gathered in one volume. A two-page introduction by the editors and notes on contributors complete the work. Useful addition to Borges collections."

Choice 9:320 S '72 270w

"The essays are very dissimilar in value. Ronald Christ's 'A Modest Proposal for the Criticism of Borges,' which provoked comments when read, remains creative and sound in print. . . . Jaime Alazraki does a creditable, if sometimes pedantic, job in 'Oxymoronic Structure in Borges' Essays'; but John C. Murchison's 'The Visible Work of Macedonio Fernández' would be totally out of place here except for some late references to Borges. . . . Missing is the lively, inspired dialogue among other prominent critics, the real symposium, which brought the sessions to a fruitful climax; its participants are nowhere acknowledged. This is a real omission." Robert Lima

Library J 97:1016 Mr 15 '72 260w

DUNLAP, JOSEPH R. The book that never was; the argument: How William Morris and Edward Burne-Jones attempted to make of the Earthly Paradise a big book with "lots of stories and pictures"; how they fared in this endeavor; and how their dream, though it evaded them, has yet outlived them. 86p il $15 Oriole eds.

094 Morris, William—The earthly paradise. Burne-Jones, Sir Edward
LC 78-156977

"Dunlap traces the attempt William Morris and Edward Burne-Jones made in the 1860's to change mediocre Victorian typography with a great illustrated book in the medieval manner. . . . Morris wrote much of the poetry for The Earthly Paradise. Burne-Jones designed at least 102 illustrations, and friends helped in cutting more than 40 blocks for a book which was never to appear." (Library J)

"An excellent little book (less than 40 pages of pure text) with a large price but nevertheless recommended for a well endowed graduate art library."

Choice 9:799 S '72 160w

"To the typography enthusiast this will be a fascinating book, with its exciting hints, its illuminating illustrations, and its handsome physical form; but to students of literature and art it will be a disappointment. There is insufficient detail and far too little attention to the book's connection with the Kelmscott [Press]. This is really only an embryo for an important historical study. At the price, a luxury item which only libraries devoted to the art of the book and/or the study of the late Victorian period are likely to be able to afford." R. D. Olson

Library J 96:4004 D 1 '71 170w

"There was a curious postscript to this story of non-publication, which is the theme of this short but detailed study. . . . In 1935 the Gregynog Press [in Wales] used twenty-four of the Burne-Jones drawings for its edition of Robert Bridges's Eros and Psyche. Mr Dunlap reproduces three of these alongside three of the early engravings, and, although apparently the Gregynog engravings closely followed Burne-Jones's pencil, the greater virility of those engraved by Morris and his engraver Campfield is clearly demonstrated. Mr Dunlap has pieced together this story with due attention to detail."

TLS p1501 D 3 '71 1000w

DUNLOP, D. M. Arab civilization to A.D. 1500. 368p $15 Praeger

915.6 Civilization, Islamic. Islam
LC 77-125397

The author describes the history of the Middle East before the formation of the Caliphate in the seventh century and the main course of events thereafter. There are chapters dealing "with Arabic literature, history and historians, geography and travel, philosophy, science and medicine, and some famous women in Islam." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"The very important fields of religion and law have been omitted, as have the less central areas of architecture and music, as the author felt he had nothing original to say. Although written in lucid and pleasant English, this is a compilation for the graduate student and scholar in the fields of Islamic or medieval Middle Eastern history or Arabic literature. No library catering to such readers, or to historians of science or thought for the medieval period should be without the book. It is meticulously documented to original Arabic sources and to European language secondary materials."

Choice 9:273 Ap '72 150w

"In those aspects with which [the author] does deal, the result is disappointing. The presentation of material is discursive and anecdotal; there is little attempt to relate cultural developments to the changing social background. . . . While the solid basis of his work is attested by the detail and the careful documentation provided by the notes, Professor Dunlop does not communicate the broad sweep of cultural history, nor does he offer many interpretative insights into the data he presents. One suspects that the general reader will come away confused and unsatisfied, while the specialist will find his material in the sources cited (including Professor Dunlop's own research) rather than in this more wide-ranging survey."

TLS p130 F 4 '72 410w

DUNLOP, R. T., jr. auth. A bibliography of Yeats criticism, 1887-1965. See Cross, K. G. W.

DUNN, EDGAR S. Economic and social development; a process of social learning [by] Edgar S. Dunn, Jr; pub. for Resources for the future. 327p $10 Johns Hopkins press

301 Social sciences. Social change
SBN 0-8018-1198-3 LC 70-134591

"An economist concerned with the problems of regional and national development, Dr. Dunn finds traditional concepts and methods of social science inadequate to deal effectively with the complex phenomena of social change. After examining the limitations of conventional growth models, he concludes that social science must begin to apply learning models to the analysis and control of social processes. He goes on to articulate a preliminary view of the process of social learning that transcends these limitations." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Stanton Tefft

Am Anthropol 74:879 Ag '72 600w

"Creative research on social change and development is rare these days. Dunn . . . has written a scholarly analysis of what he believes to be the new social science paradigm emerging from the morass. . . . The book itself is an exercise in creative learning. If the analysis fails at several key points, it may be as much due to the present condition of social science as to any inherent limitations of the social learning metaphor. . . . Specialists grappling with the hard facts of development in the Third World will find little of use in this book. Students of social change in the more 'advanced' nations will find some thought provoking analysis of the general relations between technology, social organization, and social science. In any event, Dunn's theoretical exploration of the idea of development is well worth the sociologist's attention." R. M. Christie

Contemp Sociol 1:340 JI '72 100w

"[Many readers] will recognize the rationale for identifying evolutionary processes with learning processes, individual and social—and I, for one, basically accept it. This volume provides or suggests much of the additional detail of rationale that is necessary for transforming that broad theory into a form more directly applicable to the analysis of social change. In doing this the book is logically ordered, clearly written, entirely nonmathematical, and generally to the point. I find it somewhat overexplanatory and repetitious, though it may be properly dimensioned for readers not familiar with the background materials. [The book] makes a significant contribution in an area which though neglected lies within the mainstream of contemporary scientific advance. Its scientific usefulness is much broader than its title may imply. . . . [It] has a place in contemporary developmental social science." Alfred Kuhn

Science 174:485 O 29 '71 1300w

DUNN, JOHN. Modern revolutions; an introduction to the analysis of a political phenomenon. 346p $14.50; pa $4.95 Cambridge

322.4 Revolutions
ISBN 0-521-08441-5; 0-521-09698-7 (pa)
LC 72-177942

In these case studies, the author "takes eight major revolutions of the twentieth century, Russia, China, Mexico, Turkey, Yugoslavia, Vietnam, Algeria and Cuba and examines how these events came about." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Dunn has constructed a well integrated book of insightful case studies. . . . He asserts in a concluding section, and his previous case studies would seem to confirm the view, that the differences in the causes of revolutions are more striking than the similarities. Particularly provocative is the discussion of the limitations of Marxist theory for modern revolutions. Readers will appreciate the carefully selected bibliography for further reading and the careful documentation. Essential reading for persons seeking to comprehend the origins and meaning of 20th-century political revolutions."

Choice 9:716 JI/Ag '72 100w

"One of the most influential of the theories which pretend to explain revolution—a theory which is also an ideology—is Marxism. . . . Dunn declares that 'Marxism as a theory, a coherent body of doctrine, is false. His scepticism is commendable, but the book shows it to be neither consistent enough nor radical enough. His very enterprise seems to assume . . . that there is a phenomenon called 'modern revolutions' which can be isolated and studied. . . . Neither at first sight, nor on closer reading is it apparent to the reader why [the] miscellaneous list of civil wars and international conflicts [in this volume] should disclose what it is that distinguishes modern from other revolutions, or why others, of seemingly equal or greater interest, have been omitted." Elie Kedourie

Encounter 39:45 JI '72 470w

"[This is] a reflective study that . . . [re]pays the careful reading that it demands. [Dunn's sentences however] are far too long and he's unduly fond of words like 'syncretistic' and 'conceptual'; on the other hand, he is capable of elegance and makes a number of good dry jokes. He analyses eight . . . revolutions, and the refreshing fact is that he does analyse them instead of merely rehashing the narrative. . . . The main defect of the book is that it doesn't adequately explore, though it does challengingly raise, the question of whether (or where) the promise of revolution has been borne out by results." Mervyn Jones

New Statesman 84:358 Mr 17 '72 310w

"Dunn's aim is 'to assist anyone who wishes to think clearly, honestly and seriously about modern revolutions and who finds the conceptual and informative problems of beginning to do so slightly baffling'. ('Slightly' is nice, and typical of the book's general tone.) There is no question of Mr. Dunn's own honesty and seriousness, not to speak of his reading and knowledge, . . . but, whatever the author's intentions, it is not very likely that the beginner's bafflement will be greatly reduced by this tangled, discursive, suggestive, very much High-Table book."

TLS p464 Ap 28 '72 700w

DUNN, RICHARD S. Sugar and slaves; the rise of the planter class in the English West Indies, 1624-1713; pub. for the Inst. of early Am. hist. and culture, at Williamsburg, Virginia. 359p 11 maps $11.95 Univ. of N.C. press

917.29 West Indies, British—History. British in the West Indies. Slavery in the British West Indies
ISBN 0-8078-1192-0 LC 75-184229

"The opening chapters discuss why the English came to the Caribbean, why the sugar industry developed first in Barbados, and why the planter class was for many years less rich and powerful in Jamaica and the Leewards. The closing chapters examine sugar production techniques in the islands, the vicious character of the slave system, problems in adapting English diet, clothing, and housing styles to tropical conditions, and the appalling black and white mortality." (Publisher's note) Index.

Choice 9:1194 N '72 160w

"Little has been written about those formative years in the 17th Century when sugar surpassed tobacco as the main cash crop of the islands. Dunn has written a careful, studied book on this subject. . . . He provides a social history of Jamaica, Barbados, and the Leeward Islands (St. Christopher, Nevis, Montserrat, and Antigua) during those times. The author bases his account on land patents, travelers' accounts, plantation inventories, wills, and census returns; he . . . recognizes [that] source limitations make his an exploratory study; but it is also a carefully researched, scholarly, and fascinating account of life in the 17th-Century tropics." J. A. Ellis

Library J 97:2728 S 1 '72 230w

"The simultaneous publication of C. and R. Bridenbaugh's 'No Peace Beyond the Line' [BRD 1972] and this new work by Richard Dunn will undoubtedly lead to [comparison]. Where the Bridenbaughs were concerned with the kind of society that 'vexed and troubled Englishmen' formed, Dunn's concentration is on the planter class, its growth and development, and methods of maintaining control. . . . Dunn is specific and detailed. . . . [and] is able to weave a subtle and important comparison between the planter class of the Caribbean and the ruling hierarchy of New England. Well written, Dunn's book . . . is an important contribution to the history of the English colonial enterprise."

Va Q 48:cxli autumn '72 170w

DUNNE, JOHN S. The way of all the earth; experiments in truth and religion. 240p $6.95; pa $2.95 Macmillan (N Y)

200.1 Religions. Spiritual life
LC 78-167928

This book is concerned with "the importance of interreligious dialogue for our time. The book is an outgrowth of The City of the Gods [BRD 1965], in which Dunne sought the meaning of death in a transcultural structuralism. . . . The present book is the conclusion and meaning of the . . . [earlier] volume, since its principal object is life rather than death." (Library J) Index.

"A book of musings about the perennial philosophy of man by a theologian, which means that his conclusions are locked in before he starts. . . . The style is pleasant enough, and the index and notes are good. There does seem to be an honest effort to understand the universal quest of man and some of the evidence of its achievement, wherever, whenever, and to whomever it occurred. Because this personal tour of other religions can serve as a guide to others and thus whet their appetite for further independent personal exploration of the phenomena of religions, the purchase of this book is recommended."

Choice 9:1300 D '72 140w

"Dunne does not write traditional theology but juxtaposes images, parables, insights, eclectically chosen particles and patterns ('passing over,' 'renouncing the fruits of action,' 'being and consciousness'), and out of them he constructs his journey. At the end, silence: 'One does not know what man is and what God is.' John Dunne goes on his odyssey, and the reader follows the journey to the mystic coda: 'The center is everywhere, the circumference is nowhere.' I meet in this book a contemporary American intellectual looking to the mystic Past for identity and insight, and I rejoice at this Catholic theologian's openness and courage to experiment." Samuel Laeuchli

Christian Century 89:1219 N 29 '72 1000w

"[The author] has an open and receptive mind, is seemingly unhindered by any of the conventional orthodoxies, commands a wide range of learning, which he deploys with great perceptiveness, and so provides his readers with a continuous flow of rewarding insights. The book's biblical title is intended to refer to 'the common experience of mankind,' as we pass through life's successive stages. Father Dunne's manner is somewhat academically allusive and eclectic: he passes easily from Gotama and Mohammed, by way of Hegel and Kant, to Jung and Sartre, but not without dropping en route much relevant and illuminating comment." Aelred Graham

Critic 30:68 JI/Ag '72 1400w

"This is an extremely provocative [book]. Dunne's trilogy, which includes The Search for God in Time and Memory, [BRD 1969] . . . is a theological achievement of the first order." R. L. Perkins

Library J 97:2411 JI '72 140w

DUNNE, THOMAS. Ellis Island. See Tift, W.

DUNNETT, ALASTAIR M., ed. Alistair MacLean introduces Scotland, 256p col pl $3.95 McGraw 914.1 Scotland

 SEN 07-018310-4

LC 73-38972

This book about Scotland "tells about the land and its people, its architecture and politics and its educational systems, its arts and its sports and adventures. There are twenty-five . . . color photos of old castles, abbeys, cathedrals, and mountains." (Best Sell)

"This new and attractive book is a series of essays by different scholars and Alistair MacLean's name is in the title because he has written the first essay about the delightful land of the heather and thistle. . . . [Dunnett] has collected a wonderful group of essayists to tell the whole story about their beloved and rugged land. . . . A reader will learn about the tenuous thread that binds Scotland to England, along with the constant underlying desire to make a complete break with the Crown. It is not a menacing desire, but it is there, just the same. . . . The book literally cries out for a hundred quotations, and it reads as well the second time around as the first time. . . . It makes a person want to hurry across the sea to visit Aberdeen and Dundee and Edinburgh and Glasgow." E. A. Dooley

Best Sell 32:268 S 15 '72 600w

"This book, unfortunately, does not altogether come off, despite some pleasant photographs and a really great subject: misty, mysterious Scotland. Too many writers contribute to what should have been an intriguing work on Scottish history, political thought, and character. Some of the chapters are very good . . . [but] others are remarkably pedantic and flavorless, particularly those dealing with sport and adventure. In the end, the reader knows a little more about Scotland, but feels cheated of that inimitable country's own brand of independence and sturdy romance." Anita Nygaard

Library J 97:2420 J1 '72 90w

"Tiresome, somber, sketchy, and zigzagging over too much territory, the book is an off-night at ceilidh (those informal Scottish gatherings at which everybody is expected to say something). None of the authors seems to have had much pleasure writing about a country most tourists fall in love with, and only fleetingly are there any good-natured pokes at the national deficiencies."

Sat 55:103 O 7 '72 190w

DU PLESSIX, FRANCINE GRAY. See Gray, F. du P.

DUPRÉ, LOUIS. The other dimension; a search for the meaning of religious attitudes. 565p $10 Doubleday

248 Philosophy and religion
 LC 73-144261

This "study of the dimensions of religious experience is an attempt at a . . . reassessment of the meaning of religious attitudes in the light of continuing cultural secularization, the critical condition of traditional faiths, and scientific data provided by anthropology, psychoanalysis and comparative religion." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This is] a book of such gigantic proportions and importance that it overshadows everything [Dupré] has written to date. [It] is the best book on the philosophy of religion to be published in many years and is destined to become a standard work in the field for years to come. . . . [It] is a philosophical reflection upon the whole field of religion, directed to the intellectual community at large. The issues discussed . . . according to Dupré, are too important to be left to professional theologians and philosophers. . . . [The book is characterized by its] solid scholarship . . . its lucidity and its timelessness." J. F. Drane

America 126:406 Ap 15 '72 900w

"Amid the proliferation of literature in the field of religion, . . . [this book] will surely serve as a key document, demanding the careful and continued analysis of all serious students." David Tracy

Christian Century 89:1252 D 11 '72 1300w

"This is a very full book, rich in learning and wisdom, a veritable storehouse of views of religion from an exceedingly wide variety of sources brought together by a thoroughly-read, open and sensitive mind. . . . Dupré's learning is immense, and thus he provides a full and varied discussion of each topic he takes up. . . . Especially with regard to his discussion of God, I found Dupré bold and creative. . . . I found it surprising that at the end of the book mysticism, again in its Christian forms, was clearly affirmed to represent the highest level of religious existence." Langdon Gilkey

Commonweal 97:63 O 20 '72 3100w

"The final sections deal with the concrete development of the religious dialectic: absolute reality—estrangement—integration (or, in Christianity, creation—sin—salvation). Here . . . [the author] ranges over a vast field from primitive religions through the Fall, predestination, and redemption, to the mystics. His strict methodology and philosophic agnosticism occasionally limit the effectiveness of this sweeping survey, but he is always subtle and instructive as he draws upon or crosses swords with a wide range of friends and adversaries." W. C. Heiser

Library J 97:509 F 1 '72 180w

DUPUY, R. ERNEST. The National Guard; a compact history. 194p $7.95 Hawthorn bks. 355.3 U.S.—National Guard
 LC 70-130739

"Tracing the National Guard back to the militia organized in the Massachusetts Bay Colony in 1638. Dupuy outlines its history through the Vietnam War." (Library J) Bibliography.

"It is difficult to imagine of what use [this] book might be to any reader—except, possibly, a National Guardsman proud of his organization and eager for a laudatory history. . . . Dupuy's book contains a little information on naval militia not readily available elsewhere and a few bits of personal reminiscence, but in general there is nothing to recommend this chronicle."

Choice 8:1636 F '72 130w

"Those interested in a critical, hard-nosed analysis of the National Guard and its role in American history will not find it in this book. Dupuy skims lightly over the drawbacks to such a system of military reserves—he has not dug deeply enough into the hard questions. Should the governors have less political control in appointing officers? Should the National Guard be used in domestic crises calling for more professionally trained forces (e.g., Kent State)? Certainly the National Guard has played an honorable role in American history, but it deserves more thorough treatment than it receives here." Keith Eubank

Library J 96:2311 J1 '71 210w

DURAN, FRAY DIEGO. Book of the gods and rites and The ancient calendar; tr. and ed. by Fernando Horcasitas and Doris Heyden; foreword by Miguel León-Portilla. (Okla. Univ. The civilization of the Am. Indian ser. v 102) 502p il $12.50 Univ. of Okla. press

299 Aztecs—Religion and mythology. Calendars
 ISBN 0-8061-0889-4 LC 73-88147

This volume contains two works by the author, a sixteenth century Dominican friar. "His Book of the Gods and Rites is a detailed description of the religious life of the Aztecs, while The Ancient Calendar is a guide to their intricate system of measuring time." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"In this volume, a fine study of Aztec religion . . . has been translated into English for the first time. Durán was one of those dauntless Spanish missionaries who mastered the Nahuatl tongue and went on to produce splendid ethnographies of the ancient Mexicans. His primary purpose was to help his fellow priests identify and exterminate the many vestiges of paganism which survived the Spanish conquest of Mexico. . . . His sixteenth-century manuscripts on the ancient calendar and rites remained unpublished until 1867 when the first Spanish edition appeared. Durán surpasses many other authors in his clear-cut explanation of the Aztec calendar which is illustrated with drawings by native artists. . . . This work should be of particular value to Chicano students who want to learn more about their Mexican heritage." William Madsen and Claudia Madsen

Am Anthropol 74:363 Ag '72 900w

DURAN, F. D.—Continued

"The chronicles of the 16th Century on the ancient Mexicans were the forerunners of modern Mesoamerican ethnography. Among the most thorough were the writings of Diego Durán . . . who spent most of his life absorbing the language and culture of the Aztecs. . . . What is remarkable about [his] works is the painstaking research based on the use of native informants, pre-Hispanic manuscripts and paintings, plus his own observations. . . . These two works have been translated into English for the first time and edited brilliantly by Horcasitas and Heyden, whose knowledge of Nahuatl and Mesoamerican culture has contributed so much to our understanding of the world in which Durán worked. After 400 years of obscurity Diego Durán now stands as one of the very best ethnohistorians of Mesoamerica. Most libraries should consider." Mary Gormly
Library J 96:4027 D 1 '71 260w

DURDIN, TILLMAN. The New York Times report from Red China. See The New York Times

DÜRER, ALBRECHT. Diary of his journey to the Netherlands, 1520-1521, accompanied by The silverpoint sketchbook, and paintings and drawings made during his journey; with an introd. by J.-A. Goris and G. Marlier [tr. by Philip Troutman]. 186p $22.50 N.Y. graphic B or 92
ISBN 0-8212-0402-5 LC 72-154330

This translation of Dürer's diary is taken from Lord Conway's The literary remains of Albrecht Dürer published in 1889.

"In his fifties, (Dürer) traveled to the Netherlands, where by nature he soaked up the humanism and fervor of the Reformation. . . . [The Diary] contains his journals transcribed at a time when he was making an aesthetic—and emotional—quantum jump. . . . Sandwiched between Dürer's notations of daily purchases and expenses, kept to a detail that would have satisfied Scrooge, are accounts of notables he meets, draws, barbers with. There are impassioned outbursts when he believes Luther has been kidnapped following the Diet of Worms and fascinating exhortations to Erasmus to rally to the true faith." S. K. Oberbeck

Book World p3 D 12 '71 170w
Choice 8:1576 F '72 190w

"Dürer's character shows through in his reactions to artists and art works, in his purchases of such items as buffalo horn, parrots, shells. . . . [The translation] is not the best. Quite a few German terms remain untranslated, even though English equivalents exist for some (e.g., Trinkgeld), and the difficulties in understanding others have mostly been resolved by more recent scholars. The illustrations . . . do not do justice to the brilliant original drawings and watercolors." J. L. Dewton
Library J 97:186 Ja 15 '72 100w

"A nicely presented version of the famous artist's famous diary of his famous trip, accompanied by appropriate Dürer drawings." John Canaday

N Y Times Bk R p10 D 5 '71 40w

"[This] large quarto . . . contains an introduction by J.-A. Goris and E. Marlier, though it is nowhere stated that this dates in fact from 1937. The text of the diary [is] given in full . . . but printed in a nasty type which matches perfectly the distasteful brown background to the reproduction of the silverpoint-drawings." TLS p1494 D 3 '71 60w

DÜRER, ALBRECHT. Dürer in America: his graphic work [exhibition at the National Gallery, April 25-June 6, 1971] Charles W. Talbot, ed.; notes by Gaillard F. Ravenel and Jay A. Levenson; essay by Wolfgang Stechow. 362p 308il 4col il $15.95 Macmillan (N Y) 769.924
LC 70-152764

This book is the catalog of the National Gallery's exhibition of Dürer's graphic art in American public and private collections. It consists "primarily of individual entries on each of the drawings and the prints, treats them from the . . . traditional art historical approaches of attribution, dating, situation in the corpus of Dürer's work, determination of sources, and reading of the supposed iconography." (Library J)

"[This is a] most rewarding survey of the great man's work. It is composed of the artist's masterpieces in American collections, is handsomely printed, and rather more crisply explicated. The great engravings are very faithfully reproduced, as are the most renowned woodcuts. And the smaller studies—portraits, sketches, landscapes, nature drawings, and Dürer's wonderful animal drawings—give this book a graceful balance. One sees better in this book how Dürer's mania for minute detail was subordinate to his feeling for often majestic, overall composition." S. K. Oberbeck

Book World p3 D 12 '71 170w

"To the best of anyone's knowledge Dürer has had no significant impact on American art. Appreciation of his work in America seems to have been confined to astute collectors. The title, therefore, is a bit of a cheat. All the same, it is fascinating that Americans were such early hunters of Dürer prints. . . . [Those in this exhibition] comprised three-quarters of Dürer's known engravings and two-thirds of his woodcuts, most of the books with illustrations attributed to him and his three published treatises."

Economist 243:suppl 19 Ap 8 '72 290w

"This book . . . is in no way an adequate portrayal of the exact qualities of the impressions exhibited; and thus it offers no substitute means for investigating that central problem of criteria for impression quality. . . . [It] takes its stand with the other massive tomes discussing Dürer's art, with references and occasional summaries of the previous literature, and with some newly proposed solutions of the traditional art historical problems. . . . As for reproductions of Dürer's prints, no contemporary book is of adequate quality throughout. However, . . . [this volume] does contain more of the best reproductions available than any other volume I know on the market. As a catalog of the exhibition, it is thus problematic; but as an independent work, it is a simple 'must' for any serious art library." Andrew Robison

Library J 96:2761 S 15 '71 200w

"[This work] has a sensitive introduction by Charles W. Talbot, and well-considered entries give a summary of the 'state of play' for each item. . . . [It] is a catalogue to read and contemplate in tranquillity rather than allow oneself to be weighed down by its almost four hundred pages." TLS p1494 D 3 '71 200w

DURHAM, JOHN I., ed. Proclamation and presence. See Proclamation and presence

DURHAM, MARILYN. The man who loved Cat Dancing. 246p $6.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-156940-1 LC 72-75415

"The man who loved Cat Dancing is John Wesley [Jay] Grobart, an ex-army officer who married Cat, a Shoshone squaw, when she was only 14. . . . When we meet Grobart, he is about to rob a train: recently released from prison after serving a 10-year term for the killing of three Indians believed to have raped and killed his wife, he wants money to regain his son. . . . At the same time, we meet Catherine Crocker who is on her way to catch the same train to expedite flight from her husband. Instead of catching the train she is kidnapped by the robbers. . . . The story takes place in the Wyoming Territory of the 1880s." (New Repub)

Reviewed by Sister J. M. Anderson
Best Sell 32:237 Ag 15 '72 500w

Reviewed by Victor Howes
Christian Science Monitor p12 S 13 '72 340w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Storey
Library J 97:4093 D 15 '72 140w [YA]

"[The story] is colorfully told, full of rich detail and carefully drawn characters; and it contains enough adventure for the most avid old west fan. Yet there is also a depth of emotion and psychological insight that is unusual among many of today's 'relevant' novels. The insight into Catherine is particularly impressive. . . . The novel is humane and violent but justified in both. . . . It is Mrs. Durham's first, but there are two more soon on the way."

New Repub 167:32 S 16 '72 700w

"The author has loaded her hell-for-leather story with horse opera indispensables mingled with some romantic baggage of her own. . . . If anything can be considered hot-weather literature, this is it. Mrs. Durham has staged a beautifully executed escape into the legendary past." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p23 J1 30 '72 250w

"[This novel] is basically pure feminine fantasy, but the treatment is so fresh and untroubled that the book is one of the most effective entertainments of recent months. . . . Jay is a standard frontier alien, but Catherine is a refreshing variant of the headstrong heroine. . . . Though the narrative is occasionally crude, Author Durham has one important veteran's trait. The reader senses at once that he is in sure hands and trusts her. One feels that, like Margaret Mitchell, she knows absolutely everything about her main character and could tell as many tales as Scheherazade about her. Producer-Director Eleanor Perry, who has bought the book for the movies, has proclaimed it 'the first Women's Lib western.'" Martha Duffy

Time 100:73 Ag 7 '72 1100w

TLS p 1375 N 10 '72 250w

DURRELL, GERALD. Fillets of plaice. 178p $5.95 Viking

828

SBN 670-31327-0 LC 70-162655

These incidents from the author's personal life include a boating party at Corfu during which he and his eccentric companions are held captive by Turkish villagers, his experiences as an assistant in a London pet shop, a mad dinner party with an archcolonialist District Commissioner in Africa, hospital misadventures centering around a nosebleed, and a youthful love affair with a beautiful and boisterous Miss Malaprop.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 228:135 D '71 20w

Reviewed by Jeanne Kinney

Best Sell 31:482 F 1 '72 210w

"Gerald Durrell's plots are about as predictable as the shape of a spoon. But small matter, since in each spoon he puts delectable bits of prose and conversations that slowly build up to belly laughs. . . . [This book] continues his unique chronicle of adventures, made famous by My Family and Other Animals [BRD 1957]. . . . Durrell's minute and human picture of the colonial British in Africa renders the Empire a post factum compliment far more convincing than tomes of historical justification. Probably the weakest story in the book is the first, because it becomes a trifle too predictable. . . . [However] so scarce is really funny writing, and so crucial the timing, that Durrell is either a rare natural humorist and/or an assiduous polisher of words." June Goodwin

Christian Science Monitor p6 D 30 '71 420w

"Mr Durrell has not deserted the animal kingdom for fish farming; his latest title was suggested by Lawrence, when his younger brother told him that he was thinking of another book of assorted reminiscences on the lines of the elder Durrell's Spirit of Place [BRD 1969]. Not a patch on the zoo-collecting books that made his name, but fun for all that."

Economist 241:71 N 20 '71 60w

DUTT, GARGI. China's cultural revolution [by] Gargi Dutt [and] V. P. Dutt. 260p $9 Asia pub.

320.951 China (People's Republic of China)

—Politics and government

ISBN 0-210-98192-X LC 71-15925

The Dutt's "attempt to describe the Cultural Revolution from its origins to the aftermath of the Ninth Party Congress of April 1969. The authors briefly note the role of intellectuals such as Wu Han and Teng T'o in precipitating the Cultural Revolution and then move on to an . . . examination of each successive stage, concluding with some prophecies concerning China's future foreign policy." (Pacific Affairs)

"The Dutt's are distinguished Indian social scientists whose years of research and living in Peking make them well qualified to write about the Cultural Revolution. . . . The book is written in a combination of formal political science terminology and informal semi-journalistic phrases. . . . One major problem for wide-scale use is that early chapters were written in close proximity to the events and consequently lack the more detached analysis that time would provide. The novice will wish for a more extended introduction providing better insight to the complexity of names, issues, and events. The major audience will be in courses of comparative government and history that concern themselves with post-1949 China."

Choice 7:1559 Ja '71 200w

"A generally accurate description. . . . A number of interesting documents are reproduced in part, and the authors have drawn on a wide array of Red Guard newspapers. Nevertheless, . . . there is a considerable amount of needless repetition. The treatment of the Cultural Revolution solely in terms of a personal struggle for power inevitably leads to shallow analysis. . . . The authors accept all too easily the glib and sterile categorization of Mao as the 'extremist' and Liu as the supporter of 'pragmatic and flexible' policies. . . . The most glaring shortcoming, however, is the authors' undisguised hostility toward China. Their animosity appears so entrenched as to prevent genuine analysis. . . . The volume may contain some useful items for the specialists on the Cultural Revolution, but it cannot be considered a fair or thorough analysis." Clive Ansley

Pacific Affairs 45:106 spring '72 480w

DUTT, V. P., jr. auth. China's cultural revolution. See Dutt, G.

DVORNIK, FRANCIS. Byzantine missions among the Slavs; SS. Constantine-Cyril and Methodius. (Rutgers univ. Rutgers Byzantine ser) 484p il maps $17.50 Rutgers univ. press

266 Missions. Cyril, Saint. Methodius, Saint

SBN 8135-0613-1

LC 78-75676

"The nine chapters of the book are devoted first to early Byzantine, Roman, and Frankish missions among the southern Slavs and to the first contacts with the Russians. Next . . . treatment is given to Moravia both before and during the mission of SS. Constantine (Cyril) and Methodius; to Rome's relationship with this mission; and to Methodius's work after his brother's premature death. Finally, Dvornik deals seriatim with the Cyrilo-Methodian heritage in Poland, Bohemia, Croatia, Bulgaria, Serbia, and Kievan Russia." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is] a masterful narration and analysis of the Byzantine role in . . . [the process of the Christianization of the Slavs]. . . . Two related themes are woven subtly through this study. One, arising partly from the Byzantine vantage point that Dvornik takes, is the debt the several Slavic peoples owe Byzantium. . . . The second theme is the unique character that Byzantine missions developed in this area. Despite attempts at Hellenization, there grew up a distinctive Slavonic tradition, composed of both language and literature, which could be traced back to the Cyrilo-Methodian achievement. . . . In addition, this book now provides a clear, reliable treatment of the Slavonic rite in Poland and Bohemia and its probable eastward influence." P. W. Knoll

Am Hist R 77:500 Ap '72 400w

"The quality of Mgr Dvornik's scholarship springs from his deep and non-partisan understanding of both the medieval Slav and Greek cultures. Inevitably his latest book . . . is in large part a synthesis of his earlier work, but he was moved to write it by the notable recent archaeological discoveries in Moravia and the Balkans—the ten churches of Mikulčice and a scattering elsewhere down to Montenegro. They raise their own problems. . . . Mgr Dvornik re-examines other matters in the light of recent scholarship." Anthony Bryer

Encounter 37:77 O '71 270w

"[Dvornik's] new approach gives his work a creative freshness. . . . In view of [his] meticulous scholarship . . . criticisms of points of detail may seem carping. . . . The work of St. Sava of Serbia is not given due weight, even within the compass of a brief survey; while the assignment of the Mongol invasions of Russia, which took place between 1238 and 1240, to 'toward the end of the thirteenth century' is somewhat misleading. But these are very minor defects in . . . [a work] which, by reason of . . . [its] erudition, clarity and intellectual power constitutes a worthy tribute to the 'Apostles of the Slavs.'" TLS p652 Je 4 '71 400w

DWIGGINS, DON. Into the unknown; the story of space shuttles and space stations. 80p il $4.95; lib bdg $4.79 Golden Gate

629.44 Space stations—Juvenile literature. Space vehicles—Juvenile literature ISBN 0-87464-176-4; 0-87464-177-2 (lib bdg) LC 74-157851

This "account of the development of the research vehicles . . . carries the reader from the early X-series, rocket-driven, test 'space planes' to the orbiting laboratories of the future." (Horn Bk) Glossary. Index. "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"This is a good, straightforward, descriptive [account] . . . [which] is extremely well illustrated with photographs and diagrams; indeed, it has the only picture I have seen of the Pioneer probe now en route to Jupiter." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 48:289 Je '72 120w

"A brief final chapter is devoted to unmanned planetary probes which are also on the NASA schedule for the 1970-1990 period. [This book is] timely and well-researched." O. V. Fortier Library J 97:1921 My 15 '72 130w

DYE, LEE. Blowout at platform A; the crisis that awakened a nation. 231p $5.95 Doubleday

338.2 Petroleum industry and trade. Santa Barbara, California. LC 78-150886

"The Santa Barbara, California oil disaster of 1969 focused national attention on pollution problems caused by the oil industry. The first half of this book describes this incident and its repercussions. . . . The second half provides a history of the oil industry and relates the ways in which it influences politics." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Harry Malm

Library J 96:3916 N 15 '71 120w [YA]

"Dye is strongly biased on the side of the conservationists. He vividly describes the influence of the oil lobby on both local politicians, as in Louisiana, and federal authorities, especially key committee members of agencies whose activities affect the industry. He gives many examples of how this influence almost always disposes officials to favor oil profits over what environmentalists consider to be the true public interest. The Santa Barbara conflict is still going on, and this book is a timely rebuttal now that the oil advertisers are trying to ease our fears and doubts and future drilling is rumored for the Atlantic coast." H. T. Amistead

Library J 96:4104 D 15 '71 160w

"[There is a] failure to organize this collection of material into a coherent whole, and in [the author's] apparent uncertainty as to the identity of his audience. . . . 'Newspaper prose'—straightforward, clear and understandable, but unexciting and, worse, lacking in dynamics—is fine for a 200-word story. It doesn't work in a book. Major revelations—some of them genuinely startling—almost slip past notice in the general blandness of the telling. . . . There is a more important sense in which the book does not come together: the author seems not to know his own political stance. He portrays an oil consortium beyond the reach of democratic power, and then suggests electing better representatives." Gene Marine

N Y Times Bk ■ p18 Ja 9 '72 1600w

DYRNESS, WILLIAM A. Rouault: a vision of suffering and salvation. 235p il $3.95; pa $4.95 Eerdmans

759.4 Rouault, Georges LC 73-151985

Dyrness focuses on the French painter as a Christian artist. He begins this book "by tracing Rouault's personal milieu—his family, friends and artistic training—to discern the kind of spiritual influences he felt, and that later became evident in his painting. The author then proceeds to deal with the themes to which Rouault was attracted. . . . A brief discussion of Christian aesthetics concludes the study. Here Dyrness explores the nature of creativity, the limits of art ■ Christian expression, and the unity of form and content that is typified in the incarnation of Christ and illustrated by and in the work of Rouault." (Publisher's note) Chronology of Rouault's life. Bibliography. Index.

"Agnostics and unbelievers are attracted to Rouault's radical Christianity as expressed in his art, but the official church is not. . . . The author's comprehension of the modern art movement appears here to be distressingly limited and his text . . . is marred by gaucheness and parochialness. The paucity of illustrations (27 in all) are of wretched quality. . . . Most impressive bibliography."

Choice 9:359 My '72 170w

"Dyrness has fused a learned and a pious approach to his concentration on the 'Christianism' in Rouault's vision."

Christian Century 89:49 Ja 12 '72 70w

"[The author examines Rouault's] paintings and writings in light of both late 19th Century Catholic thought and the artist's personal religious ideals. He traces Rouault's pre-occupation with symbols of suffering—the clown, the prostitute, the criminal—to epiphanic moments in the artist's life. This was originally written as a doctoral thesis, and it embodies the best characteristics of that form of writing: a clear organization of the material, a footnoted profusion of indebtedness to other scholars, and an excellent bibliography." Phyllis Andersen

Library J 97:1308 Ap 1 '72 120w

DYSON, A. E. Between two worlds; aspects of literary form. 157p $11.95 St Martins

809 Literature—History and criticism SBN 333-13131-2 LC 79-183545

The author examines six literary works in an attempt to show that they "are all concerned with the dilemma of a central character who finds himself poised between opposing moral worlds." (Economist) Index.

"[This] book attests [the author's] prowess as a teacher. It is an absorbing study wherein he groups and links his previously published, but extensively revised, essays of six 'artifacts': 'Comus,' 'The scholar gypsy,' 'The turn of the screw,' 'Death in Venice,' 'The great Gatsby,' and 'The trial.' He draws a provocative, somewhat evolutionary line from Milton through Kafka, illustrating man's quest for self and religion and thereby illuminating ■ ■ ■ own chaotic world. . . . [Dyson's] sometimes sweeping pronouncements will nettle ■ ■ ■ particularly when he takes exception with those [critics] who analyze in 'quasi-Marxist or quasi-Freudian terminology.' Of particular value is his final chapter, which contains a stimulating discussion of the artist and art, and the value of art to life itself. . . . The book belongs in a college library. Carefully compiled index and footnotes make a bibliography unnecessary."

Choice 9:962 O '72 250w

"Convinced that there were common elements that might explain the fascination all six have exercised upon him, Mr Dyson has done his best to provide the book with a unifying thesis. . . . 'Comus' and 'The Scholar Gypsy' do not fit at all comfortably into this framework. . . . nor has [Dyson] much to say about either poem that would not be apparent to an unprejudiced reader—meaning one whose mind has not already been befogged by reading overingenious critical commentary. It is to Mr Dyson's credit that he does, on the whole, keep his eye on the texts, rather than on his fellow-critics; and at his best, as in the examination of 'Death in Venice,' he has perceptive and enlightening things to say."

Economist 242:57 F ■ '72 350w

"[This] is an intense, soberly concentrated project, highly selective in its choice of texts and reverently responsive to their detail. Mr Dyson's preoccupations are metaphysical rather than practical, deeply personal rather than (in the first place) theoretical. . . . [However], the disappointingly conventional nature of some of the individual analyses, which tend quite often to devote more of their space to patient, step-by-step explication and reasonably familiar critical argument [forces] the book's general, potentially highly fertile theme . . . to disappear underground for certain stretches. . . . [It] crops up with full force only in the Prologue and Epilogue."

TLS p123 F 4 '72 500w

DYSON, HOPE, ed. Dear and honoured Lady; the correspondence between Queen Victoria and Alfred Tennyson; ed. by Hope Dyson and Charles Tennyson. $6 Fairleigh Dickinson univ. press

B or 92 Victoria, Queen of Great Britain. Tennyson, Alfred, Lord ISBN 0-8386-7922-6 LC 72-151284

"In Alfred, Lord Tennyson: a Memoir, [BRD 1905] Hallam Tennyson printed excerpts from the correspondence between his father and Queen Victoria . . . [The present work] now makes the full correspondence, so far as it survives, available. Most of the text is a biographical account of the evolving relationship between the Queen and her poet laureate." (Library J)

"The editors simply plug in the letters as they fit into the chronology. The friendship became close—and the letters abundant—only in the last decade of the poet's life; Tennyson doesn't even receive a personal introduction to the Queen until halfway through this little volume. Consequently, the last 50 pages are the most interesting. The editors tell their story ably, but for the most part they are telling a tale that has been told before. It is charming to observe two fascinating human beings gradually emerging from behind their public façades; but, nevertheless, these are letters that contain few surprises." Keith Cushman
Library J 96:4089 D 15 '71 150w

"On the titlepage of [this book] Mrs. Hope Dyson and Sir Charles Tennyson claim merely to have 'edited' the correspondence between Queen Victoria and her Poet Laureate. But the correspondence itself is slender enough, and they have wisely decided to supply a reasonably full biographical setting. . . . Illuminated by the narrative, the letters and other documents are always interesting and sometimes moving. So convincingly do they communicate the closeness of the friendship that we are hardly surprised to find Victoria in 1835 confiding to Tennyson her wish that he would persuade Gladstone to retire from politics 'as much for his own reputation as for the good of the Country'."

TLS p28 Ja 8 '70 180w

E

EAKINS, THOMAS. The photographs of Thomas Eakins, by Gordon Hendricks. 214p $30 Grossman pubs.

779 Photography, Artistic
SBN 670-55261-5 LC 73-114938

This collection of Eakins' photographs contains "nearly three hundred pictures, most of which have never been published previously. [Included] are a dozen of Walt Whitman, all the extant motion studies, Arcadian scenes, and . . . intimate portraits of the artist's family and friends. A separate section contains photographs of Eakins taken by others throughout his life." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Hendricks, in addition to assembling the photographs, has written a very illuminating 13-page text." Tom Lovcik

Library J 97:3306 O 15 '72 120w

"This ranks among the most perfect physical presentations of a single photographic sequence. Format, quality of reproduction, intrinsic interest offer a body of images every lover of America's greatest painter will cherish. However, the book is disappointingly true to its title. It gives the photographs as taken by the artist, with a clear account of who posed when, and where, plus technical information. There can be few more touching documents in art history than pictures Eakins took, or had taken, of himself, his students, in the nude. . . . This book is one way to know Eakins as a person, an observer, if not as a painter." Lincoln Kirstein
Nation 214:629 My 15 '72 1550w

"The pictures in Hendricks's book, mostly taken by Eakins, form an almost random collection, and part of its usefulness as history comes from the fact that it is nonselective, a product of domestic accident—just those plates and prints that once captured his interest and that somehow escaped the rubbish heap. The aesthetic value of these pictures is often extremely limited. . . . Not the least interesting aspect of this whole collection are the hints and unconscious disclosure about Eakins's own life; alike about his intellectual background, his unswerving devotion to art, and his own emotional and erotic relations, in or out of marriage. . . . Perhaps the most telling impression left by Eakins's photographs and his paintings is that there is more in them than meets the eye. . . . What comes out of Eakins's work is what comes out of his life: a sense of his inviolable integrity."

Lewis Mumford

N Y Rev of Books 19:21 S 21 '72
2000w

EARLY Stuart studies; essays in honor of David Harris Willson; ed. by Howard S. Reinmuth, Jr. 271p $9.50 Univ. of Minn. press

942.06 Great Britain—History—Stuarts, 1603-1714. Willson, David Harris
ISBN 0-8166-0587-4 LC 71-139962

This work "contains a brief biographical sketch of Willson by John Wolf, a bibliography of Willson's writings, and eight studies of early Stuart Britain written by Willson's former colleagues and students." (Choice)

"Most of the essays reflect Willson's preference for political history and biography, and hence the book does not offer a wide variety of approaches to [early seventeenth-century England]. . . . One purpose of the book is to emphasize the distinct character of the early Stuart period, a task that is more agreeable to political than to economic historians. Five of the studies deal with the developments of political tension after the accession of James I. . . . This volume makes a noteworthy contribution to the historical literature of the period. The quality of the individual essays is somewhat uneven, but they are all original, thoughtful, and well written." B. P. Levack
Am Hist 77:133 F '72 700w

"A festschrift dedicated to the eminent American scholar, who is best known for his King James VI and I [BRD 1956]. . . . The articles have no central theme except their concern with early 17th-century Britain. The authors deal chiefly with political and to a lesser extent social history. Generally, the articles are too specialized to interest most undergraduates. Joel Hurstfield's study, 'Gunpowder plot and the politics of dissent,' is an exception, however. It is a masterful and relevant treatment of a time-worn subject which should be read by every undergraduate history student. This article itself would make the purchase of the volume worthwhile, but [it is] not strongly recommended for an undergraduate library."

Choice 8:599 Je '71 170w

EAST, BEN. The silence of the North. See Fredrickson, O. A.

EASTLAKE, CHARLES L. A history of the Gothic revival; ed. with introd. by J. Mordant Crook. 372,209p 11 pl $16.50 Humanities press

720.942 Architecture, English. Architecture, Gothic. Gothic revival
SBN 7185-5005-6 LC 70-17391

This book on architecture, which is a reprint of the 1872 edition includes its original handlist of buildings. Bibliography.

"[This] book is still the best thorough study of the Gothic revival in England. It is written clearly and well. . . . [The introduction] adds much material of interest to the subject, and [there is] an excellent up-to-date bibliography. It should be in any library that does not have the original edition, and would be useful as a supplement to the old editions in libraries whose users are interested in British studies or in architecture."

Choice 8:372 My '71 100w

"Eastlake is of course writing as the historian of the Gothic Revival, and his view of a new architecture was inevitably contained within the limits of 'Gothic'. Now as J. Mordant Crook observes in the introduction to his new edition of Eastlake's [book] 'revivalism implies a self-conscious use of antique forms'. . . . The Eastlake has been magnificently done; it carries a long corrective account of the pre-Pugin phase from Dr Crook, who has also added extensive bibliographical information to the appendix of prominent buildings. The arrangement and pagination are a little confusing at first, but at the price it is a handsome bargain—an indispensable prerequisite to that reevaluation and re-writing of the history of the Revival which we now so much want."

TLS p1041 S 3 '71 900w

EASTWOOD, JAMES. Henry in a silver frame. 191p $4.95 McKay

LC 70-190000

"An Italian writer named Marcello finds his imagination blank and therefore commissions two of his innumerable female conquests to commit a crime to provide material for ■ new book. . . . The two women are an English spinster schoolteacher and a woolly-headed American seventeen-year-old, and they keep Marcello informed of their progress through a series of [monologues]. (New Yorker)

EASTWOOD, JAMES—Continued

"[This] is an enthrallingly and satisfying complex thriller. . . . [It] has a rich, meaty texture and unexpectedly vital characters; and the whole is illuminated from time to time with glints of wit. One minor irritation, however: the print is minute." Henry Veit
Library J 97:[2652] Ag '72 100w

"[This novel,] the work of a British writer, is the story of a sexually repressed schoolteacher with lesbian tendencies [and] . . . an Italian writer who is part guru, part satyr and altogether unpleasant. . . . Violent sexual undercurrents abound . . . and the book, in a way, is a case history. . . . [It is also] an unusual piece of work that helps break the mold on the standard suspense novel." Newgate Callendar
N Y Times Bk II p30 J1 9 '72 300w

"Eastwood, a writer of suspense novels, has written a parody of a parody, in the guise of another suspense novel. . . . [He] has a gentle sense of humor, but even the combined efforts of the two women can barely get his story started, much less keep it going. Perhaps he should try straight comedy." New Yorker 48:71 S 2 '72 180w
TLS p500 Ap 28 '72 50w

EAVES, T. C. DUNCAN. Samuel Richardson: a biography, by T. C. Duncan Eaves and Ben D. Kimpel. 728p pl $21 Oxford

B or 92 Richardson, Samuel
ISBN 0-19-812431-7 LC 78-27067

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Ellen Moers

N Y Rev of Books 18:27 F 10 '72 3200w

Va Q R 48:1x1 spring '72 140w

Reviewed by F. W. Hilles

Yale R 61:109 O '71 750w

EAYRS, JAMES. Diplomacy and its discontents. 198p Can$12.50 Univ. of Toronto press 327 International relations. Diplomatic and consular service
ISBN 0-8020-1807-6 LC 73-163811

"In a series of lectures which appeared in 1966 as Right and wrong in foreign policy, [the author criticized] . . . the diplomatic profession for its moral depravity. In later radio talks, published as Fate and will in foreign policy (1967), he developed the theme of diplomatic incompetence and inefficiency. Later articles were devoted to the [ideal] . . . that diplomats are obsolete, redundant, and irrelevant. This [material] . . . has been collected for publication in [this book]. (Choice)

"Eayrs, as usual, is superb. I must confess to a complete lack of critical objectivity about Professor Eayrs. His style is sparkling and he tilts at all the right windmills with some successes. He is, I think, the best columnist in Canada and as good as any in England or the U.S. if not better. [This book], a collection of his newspaper pieces for the most part, is vintage Eayrs and nothing more need be said." J. L. Granatstein
Canadian Forum 52:16 S '72 250w

"[The author] probably is one writer most diplomats and foreign policy makers believe they could do without. . . . Eayrs' tidbits cover a wide and varied range, from policy crises and national diplomatic style to the pitfalls of propaganda and protocol. Their linkage is his basic theme—the decline and fall of diplomacy and diplomatic method in modern times. Eayrs sometimes roams, but his observations are trenchant, often saucy or caustic, and usually most perceptive." Choice 9:716 J1/Ag '72 170w

EBERHARD, KENNETH D. The alienated Christian: a theology of alienation. 190p $6.95 Pilgrim press

261 Christianity. Theology
ISBN 0-8298-0194-4 LC 78-155657

The author declares that "alienation is a human experience of God [and that] religious man is always alienated. After an investigation of the various meanings of alienation in social, psychological, and theological writing to find a 'generic ratio' underlying the various uses of alienation, the author relates these uses to the major body of Old Testament writings, finding them . . . rooted in the Prophetic material. He extends his biblical examination to the New Testament, making a . . . case for his interpretation of alienation and for the links between Old and New Testament materials." (Publisher's note)

"It is a shame this stimulating volume has not received wider attention. Its chief value lies in its ability to deal with the very real problem of alienation from the orthodox and traditional experienced by so many today." D. J. Thorman
America 126:152 F 12 '72 80w

"[The author] who writes with his questioning students in mind . . . presents an accomplished and lucid phenomenological study which concludes that the common denominator of alienation is man's infinite quest in his finite being. Man always tries to be more than he is; his ambitions exceed his grasp. In his attempts to control his life and society he comes to a sense of powerlessness; he falls short of his dreams. . . . [This is an] energetic, imaginative and thorough study." L. J. Biallas
Christian Century 89:610 My 24 '72 480w

"The religious-minded often posit alienation as a necessary condition of salvation or, as Kenneth Eberhard argues in his book, one of the signs of revelation. . . . [His] main point is that only agape can overcome alienation and since our love is always imperfect so our alienation is always with us. . . . What I find basically objectionable in Eberhard's position is that there is no effective way in which alienation can be overcome or even diminished." B. G. Murchland
Commonweal 95:450 F 11 '72 600w

ECKSTEIN, ALEXANDER, ed. Comparison of economic systems: theoretical and methodological approaches. 366p $15.75 Univ. of Calif. press

330.1 Economics
ISBN 0-520-01729-3 LC 79-118085

"The purpose of this book is to provide an analytical framework for the comparative study of economic systems, to explore alternative methodological approaches in the analysis of these systems, and to probe some of the theoretical issues." (Publisher's note) Index.

"A listing of some of the authors of the papers which were first presented at the University of Michigan in 1968, among them Abram Bergson, Morris Bornstein, John M. Montias and Benjamin Ward, will go a long way to indicate the nature and quality of the papers. . . . [They] will be of considerable interest to any serious student of economics and of particular interest to those who specialize in the study of comparative systems." Choice 9:408 My '72 220w

"The burgeoning literature on comparative economics has now become interesting. What is more, the 'meta' stage has been reached. This means that it is now intellectually respectable to discuss the methodology of comparative economics. The present work is an impressive monument to this." Economist 242:71 Mr 18 '72 280w

EDDINS, DWIGHT. Yeats: the nineteenth century matrix. 173p $6.75 Univ. of Ala. press

821 Yeats, William Butler
ISBN 0-8173-7309-8 LC 73-148693

"Eddins reexamines Yeats' poetry written prior to 1900 and stresses those aspects that become the strands of continuity in Yeats' poetry and his aesthetic. The book is . . . [an] analysis of the literary and metaphysical influences that mark Yeats' metamorphosis. [It] delineates the influences, the archetypal images, the arcane symbols, the relation between thought-drama and the daemonic, the experiments with syntactical patterns as emotional equivalents that recur in Yeats' work." (Choice)

"[This study is] scholarly, critical, [and] very readable. . . . Without being redundant, Eddins goes into Yeats' background of the Irish tradition and his ultimate development of political enmities and those intertwined influences of the pre-Raphaelites and the Victorians. His fresh observation of Yeats' use of the symbol as a technique is especially interesting. After reading the book, one is more than usually aware of the painstaking effort Yeats, even though with a cosmic view, continually exerted to develop as a poet who sought to distill the spiritual essence of Ireland and to fuse the beauty and physicality of creation. Highly recommended."

Choice 9:212 Ap '72 160w

"[Dr Eddins's book] is for the addict or the scholar: it is . . . solid, sound, and nourishing."

TLS p311 Mr 17 '72 480w

EDEL, LEON. Henry James [v5] The master, 1901-1916. 591p il $12.95 Lippincott

B or 92 James, Henry

ISBN 0-397-00733-7 LC 76-163225

"With 'The Master' Edel brings to a . . . conclusion his five-volume life of Henry James. . . . [This volume portrays] James the man and the artist. He is seen in his . . . Johnsonian character, at large in London . . . mingling with . . . Mark Twain, Conrad, Adams, Wells, Ford, Crane . . . Bernard Shaw . . . [and the] Bloomsbury Group. . . . Edel paints a . . . picture of James's relationship with novelist Edith Wharton, and . . . reveals James's . . . friendship with . . . Hendrik Andersen, Jocelyn Persse, and Hugh Walpole." (Publisher's note) Index. For volumes one, two, three and four ■■ BRD 1953, 1962, 1963 and 1969.

Reviewed by F. H. J. Homer
America 126:551 My 20 '72 110w

Reviewed by Oscar Cargill
Am Lit 44:330 My '72 160w

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 229:129 Ap '72 20w

Reviewed by A. J. Solomon
Best Sell 31:501 F 15 '72 490w

"Before Edel set to work, Henry James's life had been considered pretty much ■ closed—impenetrable—case. . . . Edel has delivered James from the stultifying hand of legend and in the process allowed us a clearer focus upon his work than had seemed possible. . . . [This] monument to an artist is itself a great work of art—the single greatest work of biography produced in our century." Joseph Epstein

Book World p1 F ■ '72 3050w

Choice 9:212 Ap '72 160w

Christian Century 89:176 F ■ '72 60w

Reviewed by Victor Howes
Christian Science Monitor p11 F ■ '72 700w

Reviewed by Joseph Wiesenfarth
Commonweal 96:44 Mr 17 '72 1200w

Economist 244:48 Ag 5 '72 250w

Reviewed by Richard Stern
Encounter 39:77 S '72 1350w

"[This] final segment of Edel's study was by no means an easy coast home, for the materials Edel had to winnow for this volume were equal in bulk to those available for all the preceding four. . . . If lacking in high drama or psychic tension, Edel's final volume does not flag in page-by-page vividness and insight, and is a worthy finale to this distinguished set."

B. W. Fuson

Library J 96:3613 N 1 '71 260w

Reviewed by D. R. Weimer
Nation 214:539 Ap 24 '72 1600w

Reviewed by Stuart Hampshire
New Statesman 84:162 Ag 4 '72 1350w

"That Edel makes too much of James, that he overestimates his importance in the most extravagant manner possible, that he is much too expansive, even rapturous, about him, has been evident all along. . . . Edel ends his biography with such an excessive tribute to the Jamesian oeuvre as to disclose, to me at least, his grave disabilities as a critic of the very subject to which he has devoted so many long years. For one thing, he is far too staunch an adherent of the James cult, which he assumes is destined to last forever. Thus he expresses no doubt whatever of James's 'enduring fame.' It seems to me, however, that the history of James's reputation fails to bear Edel out. It is a reputation that has waxed and waned, and precisely now it has already begun to wane." Philip Rahv

■ Y Rev of Books 18:18 F 10 '72 5400w

"Mr. Edel has buried forever the notion that James was a writer to whom 'nothing happened,' that he was a sort of inspired dilettante, living out his sheltered life on inherited wealth, spinning his verbal intricacies in ■■ existential void. If we can smile now at such ■■ absurd characterization, which accords neither with the facts of the writer's life nor with the substance of his work, it is largely because Mr. Edel has established the incontrovertible evidence to the contrary. Out of his painstaking researches and his large imaginative grasp of the literary mind, he has given us ■■ biographical James in whom we can at last believe."

Hilton Kramer

N Y Times Bk ■ p1 F 6 '72 2150w

Reviewed by Naomi Bliven
New Yorker 48:137 Ap 29 '72 1300w

Reviewed by Walter Clemons
Newsweek 79:92 F 14 '72 1100w

Reviewed by J. W. Aldridge
Sat R 55:65 F 12 '72 3450w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks
Time 99:70 F 14 '72 850w

TLS p957 Ag 18 '72 500w

Reviewed by Quentin Anderson
Va Q R 48:621 autumn '72 3000w

EDELMAN, MAURICE. Disraeli in love. 417p $7.95 Stein & Day

Beaconsfield, Benjamin Disraeli, 1st Earl of—Fiction

ISBN 0-8128-1484-3 LC 70-187303

"The flamboyant novelist who became one of the best known of Britain's prime ministers is portrayed as a likable (if callow) young man in this fictionalized account which spans five years of his early adulthood. . . . We see Disraeli's political campaigns and love affairs in the years between 1832 and 1837 as crucial to his evolution as enlightened Tory and, later Conservative. The plot is based on his inner conflicts." (Library J)

Reviewed by Carole Kearney
Best Sell 32:443 D 15 '72 420w

Reviewed by J. W. Smothers
Library J 97:2430 J1 '72 120w

"[This] is a splendidly diverting amusement for those who enjoy the contemplation of the intrigues of politics and the entanglements of the heart. . . . We are shown [Disraeli's] manoeuvrings towards a seat, the difficulties of advancement . . . the social gaffes, the wheedling and cabaling. Above all, in a series of sparkling conversational set-pieces, Disraeli is seen exploring and developing a political philosophy through issues still live today. . . . All this takes place against the glittering background of balls, operas, gossip, and rout. . . . Political and social figures are adeptly featured; and without labouring the point there are one or two slyish characterisations where a nod is as good as a wink for students of current political form. . . . The novel is an enjoyable, delightfully serious as well as sympathetic account of a political baptism by fire." Mary Borg

New Statesman 84:27 J1 7 '72 330w

"This Disraeli is no kindly curmudgeon, but a hot-blooded scribbler who made ■■ specialty of poaching in his friends' bedrooms. . . . His energetic love life, according to the author, dovetailed nicely with his literary labors, but interfered with political ambitions. Mr. Edelman (himself an M.P.) shows us his hero vacillating between love and a career, until fate steps in and makes the choice for him. The rosy dawn of the Victorian era is a fine background for this elegant mixture of high seriousness and low passions." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p28 J1 9 '72 170w

"Mr Edelman needs all the actuality he can get—the elaborate London backgrounds, vividly if sketchily done, give the impression of a period Who's Who and What's On rolled into one—in order to make some show of validating the novel's centrepiece, the affair with Henrietta Sykes. In a sense, Dizzy asked for it. In his own early novel Henrietta Temple the heroine starts poor but ends up an unexpected heiress, thus providing the hero with innocent love and money at a stroke. Virtue and pragmatism still go hand in hand. The real-life Henrietta, or Mr Edelman's version of her, is at once less and more accommodating. There is a nice farcical touch about their first clinch. For the fact is, whatever the author's intentions, only the comic and theatrical aspects of the book are secure. Not for even the briefest session can he maintain any convincing private emotional programme for his hero."

TLS p765 J1 7 '72 600w

EDELMAN, MURRAY. Politics as symbolic action; mass arousal and quiescence. (Inst. for res. on poverty monograph ser) 188p $8.95; pa $3.95 Markham pub.

301.6 Political psychology. Violence
SBN 8410-0302-5; 8410-0303-3 (pa)
LC 75-160519

"The basic thesis of the book is that government officials and social scientists would understand and therefore cope more effectively with mass violence and political quiescence, if they realized that most people base their relations to political events on a set of beliefs held in common with others and socially cued, that Edelman labels 'myths'; that peoples' positions on public issues are mobilizable rather than fixed; and that government action is the most powerful shaper of peoples' beliefs and perceptions." (Choice) Index.

"[This is] an attempt to extend and apply the ideas that first appeared in the author's The symbolic uses of politics [BRD 1965]. . . . The book overstates its case, ignores or misinterprets counter evidence, and is inconsistent on the use of key terms (e.g. myth is defined as a set of beliefs, later used as a synonym for false beliefs and distorted beliefs). Nevertheless the book suggests numerous hypotheses and insights which give it heuristic value. . . . The writing is turgid, and the book is filled with technical jargon of the social scientist."

Choice 9:280 Ap '72 150w

Reviewed by Peter Lyon

Encounter 39:73 Jl '72 140w

EDELSON, MARSHALL. The idea of a mental illness. 140p $6.75 Yale univ. press

616.89 Mental illness. Psychiatry
ISBN 0-300-01430-9 LC 71-140527

The author is concerned with "using symbolic forms, processes, and media to move beyond the older Freudian based methods of treating mental illness such as schizophrenia." (Choice)

"[This book] is really a series of four lectures. . . . The presentation is highly theoretical and somewhat tortuous at times, while recognizing the difficulties which the audience is probably experiencing. Some treatment implications are suggested in the fourth lecture. Short bibliography after each lecture. Recommended for professionals involved in the treatment of schizophrenics."

Choice 8:918 S '71 100w

"Edelson formulates the relation between consciousness and symbolic functioning, suggesting 'that crucial aspects of the capacity to achieve, maintain, or regain higher levels of consciousness—include . . . at least the availability of controls for modulating, mitigating, and in various ways managing the expressive aspects of a symbolic form, which may otherwise disturb its function as the representation of a conception.' As the author and his imaginary audience 'wander, wondering, trying to work things out,' they may bore the reader and drive him to other sources." A. J. Sprow

Library J 96:2327 Jl '71 120w

EDGE, CHARLES, Jr. ed. The classic British novel. See Harper. H. M.

EDKINS, ANTHONY, ed. The poetry of Luis Cernuda. See Cernuda, L.

EDSALL, NICHOLAS C. The anti-poor law movement, 1834-44. 285p $12 Rowman & Littlefield

362.5 Poor laws. Public welfare
ISBN 0-87471-026-X LC 77-29767

In this assessment of the opposition to the English Poor Laws, the author "shows that the agitation against the New Poor Law in 1837 gained its apparent strength through the coincidence of inept haste on the part of the [Poor Law] commissioners, . . . of economic recession, and of a temporary confluence of various Northern suspicions of 'London' government and its alleged machinations against traditional local rights. . . . In later chapters Edsall gives a brief account of affairs in the Northern unions after 1838, when active resistance became passive, and old and new systems were alike found wanting in the face of industrial unemployment." (Am Hist R) Bibliography.

"Edsall has a sound grasp of the complexities of political society in the North of England in his chosen period and ■ shrewd eye for the realities beneath the rhetoric of political conflict. He is an able and perceptive historian and writes clearly and succinctly; nevertheless his book is less satisfying in its conception than in its generally admirable execution. . . . [His] assessment of the dilemmas inherent in the problem of providing a viable system of relief in England at this time is scarcely adequate. . . . Edsall shows signs of finding the champions of the new law rather more interesting than his ostensible objects of study, and it is a pity he did not widen his canvas further. . . . This book is a good critical study of the critics, but what of the work itself?" J. R. Poynter

Am Hist 77:1125 O '72 550w

"From the title and length of [this] . . . book it would appear to be the long-awaited study—the work that will explain the importance of the [Poor Law Amendment] Act, offer some explanations of the feeling it aroused, and put the opposition to it in the general context of the history of social policy and of radical thought and action. The Anti-Poor Law Movement is, alas, very far from being such a study. A glance at the bibliography is enough to raise serious doubts. . . . Far from being a history of the Anti-Poor Law Movement, this is simply an account based almost entirely on the correspondence and reports of the Assistant Commissioners. Even then it is unsatisfactory, for it ends in 1844; it does not cover, except in a few hurried sentences at the end, the last part of the story, the years 1844-49. It is, indeed, difficult to see what purpose such a book is intended to serve."

TLS p367 Mr 31 '72 1600w

EDUCATION for librarianship: the design of the curriculum of library schools; ed. by Herbert Goldhor. (Monograph, no 11) papers presented at a Conf. on the design of the curriculum of lib. schools, conducted by the Univ. of Ill. Graduate school of lib. science, Sept. 6-9, 1970. 195p $4 Univ. of Ill. Graduate school of lib. science

375 Library education—Curricula
ISBN 0-87845-033-5 LC 78-633332

Contents: Introduction, by Herbert Goldhor; Designs on the curriculum, by Neal Harlow; The curriculum of library schools today: a historical overview, by S. R. Reed; Curricular change in the professions, by L. B. Mayhew; New trends in the curriculum of library schools, by Lester Asheim; General principles of curriculum construction, by J. W. Ramey; Training for academic librarianship: past, present and future, by G. E. Evans; Curriculum for the preparation of public librarians, by M. E. Monroe; Preparation of the school librarian, by M. H. Grazier; Preparation for special librarianship, by M. J. K. Zachert; The design of the curriculum for the third era of education for librarianship, by A. D. Osborn. Index.

"Certainly this will become a landmark work in library education. The committee which planned the conference . . . planned well: the topic was timely; the organization of the papers logical, progressive, and orderly; and the choice of speakers unusually fortuitous. Each paper contributes to a well-balanced whole. The only lack, for readers who did not attend the conference, is a summary of the fruitful discussions which must have followed the papers." Harold Lancour

Library J 97:171 Ja 15 '72 650w

"Much of the book . . . seems to be a record of a past era, rather than the signpost toward tomorrow which it started out to be. . . . It nonetheless seems to represent well enough the general spirit of thinking in library education. We are certainly short on guiding principles and concepts; as a result we tend to react impulsively, to exaggerate conditions, and to lance windmills." G. A. Marco

Library Q 42:267 Ap '72 1700w

EDWARDES, MICHAEL. East-West passage: the travel of ideas, arts and inventions between Asia and the Western world. 248p pl $8.95 Taplinger

901.9 East and West. Civilization—History
ISBN 0-8008-2355-9 LC 79-137663

The purpose of this book "is to show something of the still largely unacknowledged debt the peoples of the world owe to each other's civilizations and cultures. . . . [It] discusses some of the contributions made by the East to the development of the modern West. . . . Among other things, the Chinese contributed moveable type, gunpowder, and the magnetic compass. . . . The Arabs kept alive the ancient Greeks' studies of science and medicine throughout the Dark Ages, while, on other levels, India and Japan . . . influenced Western art, culture, and philosophy." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Confining his study to the Eurasian experience, [the author] succeeds in ordering and describing the sometimes nebulous, sometimes explosive movement of cultures in terms that will enlighten and stimulate the average reader. He neatly clarifies obscure ancient and medieval contacts and, true to his subtitle, deals with the exchange of ideas as well as of things. Edwardes stresses the westward-moving historical currents and writes thoughtfully of their 20th-Century reversal. His is a good introductory book which may be recommended to most libraries and readers." R. R. Rea
Library J 96:191 Ja 15 '71 110w

"This book presents a kaleidoscopic panorama, ornamented with colorful detail, of the cultural interchanges between Europe and Asia. The author disarms the critic by disclaiming formal scholarship—he is writing about exotic innovations for non-specialists. . . . [However, there are areas] where specialized knowledge might have helped. . . . Musical literature is badly neglected. . . . Despite a reference to Anglo-Chinese gardens, garden plants of eastern origin are poorly treated. . . . It is a pleasant but not an important book." E. H. Schafer Pacific Affairs 44:598 winter '71-'72 320w

EDWARDES, MICHAEL. Nehru; a political biography. 351p il $8.95 Praeger
B or 92 Nehru, Jawaharlal. India—History
LC 78-173442

The author "traces the sources of Nehru's development as a politician describing his education, the . . . influence of his father and of Gandhi, and his relationships with such key political figures as Bose, Jinnah, Mountbatten, and Patel. Nehru's strength lay in his identification with the Indian masses who revered him. This account of his growth as a political leader is also the story of the . . . struggle for independence led by Gandhi and the Congress Party, of the human tragedies of the partition, and of the emergence of India as an Asian power." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Although it deals with familiar ground, the book is a lucid and engrossing survey of modern Indian political developments, providing a necessary corrective to the more adulatory accounts. . . . Recommended."

Choice 9:866 S '72 170w

"The book's message is that Nehru was not particularly good but remained in power because Congress politicians were venal, because they set place before principle and because Nehru towered so mightily above everyone else in the popular imagination that no elections could be won and no places gained without him. Much of this has been said before . . . while pages in the central part of the book can be found word for word in the author's 'The Last Years of British India' [BRD 1964]. In addition some of the history is shaky. . . . This book, therefore, is of doubtful historical merit."

Economist 240:70 S 25 '71 150w

"In this pleasantly written biography, the author . . . discusses [Nehru's] achievements and failures as ruler of some 400 million Indians. The book is rather disappointing, however, both in its contents and interpretations. The sources on which it is based have already been used in the existing literature on Nehru, and Edwardes has neither the acumen nor the expertise to offer new and meaningful perceptions on the life and activities of the Asian leader. Most of the book is simply a rehash of known facts." B. G. Gokhale
Library J 97:1704 My 1 '72 150w

Reviewed by Mervyn Jones
New Statesman 82:367 S 17 '71 700w

"[In his account of Nehru's last months and return to Orthodox Hindu practices, and] often elsewhere, the author is probably dealing with what in his 'Afterword' (a misplaced and misnamed preface) he describes as 'certain facts and interpretations [which] cannot be substantiated by direct references to sources.' . . . But since Mr Edwardes gives no references at all it is impossible for the reader to know when he is being given the documented record and when the author is drawing on his private information. . . . [However] this is a perceptive and stimulating—not to say provocative—book, which will be especially valuable to those younger generations who want to meet Nehru through a contemporary perception."

TLS p1139 S 24 '71 900w

EDWARDS, ALLEN. Flawed words and stubborn sounds; a conversation with Elliott Carter. 128p $6 Norton

780.1 Carter, Elliott Cook. Music—Analysis, appreciation
ISBN 393-02159-9 LC 77-152660

Carter "discusses the state of music today, his experiences as a composer, and the concerns that motivate his music. In addition to . . . comments on the role of music . . . in American society, the composer of the Pulitzer Prize-winning String Quartet No. 2 reminisces about his education at Harvard, his studies with . . . Nadia Boulanger, and his composer colleagues. In talking about his own works, Carter outlines his conception of music as an ongoing process." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This series of tape-recorded conversations (1968-70) with Elliott Carter . . . presently member of the Juilliard School faculty, offers valuable insight into the concerns which motivate Carter's music, and firsthand glimpses of his experiences as an active and highly respected 20th-century composer. . . . Particularly the warm yet objective reminiscences of Nadia Boulanger and Carter's studies with her in pre-World War II France, and Carter's conception of his own music's place in the ongoing process of music, make the book authentic and appealing. One cannot help wishing that a greater portion of the book were devoted to such personal glimpses. . . . At times the questions posed demand answers of a philosophical, more than a musical nature; and Carter responds in frequently subjective, and often controversial terms."

Choice 9:377 My '72 170w

"Edwards has produced a work in the form of a conversation (taken from five actual interviews), putting rather lengthy and involved questions to Carter. Unfortunately, this technique is considerably less than satisfactory since the reader frequently finds himself wanting to interrupt the printed flow with requests for answers more candid, direct, or otherwise different from the ones given. Still, the work does offer a number of interesting insights into some of the creative processes . . . and aesthetic values of this seemingly remote and coolly aloof artist-scholar. Despite its fatuous title, the book will be of value to anyone interested in 20th-Century music." K. C. Rosenberg
Library J 96:3615 N 1 '71 150w

"Carter's unusual mind and forthright tongue bring out firmly . . . [the spectacle] of an artist very little fooled by anyone, or self-deceived either. . . . A great deal of the man is in this book. . . . [He] is seen wrestling, if not quite with music, with the formulation of ideas provoked by the wrestlings that unquestionably went on during the gestation and the writing of music. That is certainly the meaning of its title, which is a quotation from the poet Wallace Stevens." Virgil Thomson

N Y Rev of Books 19:19 Ag 31 '72 1000w

EDWARDS, GEORGE R. Jesus and the politics of violence. 186p $5.95 Harper

232 Violence. Jesus Christ
ISBN 06-062124-9 LC 70-183635

"This book probes the New Testament Gospels to determine the depth of Jesus' involvement in the explosive political scene of early 1st-century Palestine. . . . Relevant passages from the Gospels of Matthew and Mark are discussed in search of valid historical evidence." (Library J) Bibliography. Index of biblical references. General index.

"Professor Brandon in his Jesus and the Zealots [BRD 1969] . . . [claimed] that Jesus was a fellow-traveller of the Zealots and that the pacifistic passages in the Gospels . . . were later insertions by Christians who sought to avoid guilt by association with revolutionary Jewish nationalism. . . . The chief value of Prof. George Edwards' book is that he examines the Gospels in their historical context to refute Brandon's thesis. . . . He examines several sayings and events which Brandon uses as evidence for his position and shows that they can have an opposite interpretation. . . . [The author's] main thesis seems to be that Christian ethics, if it is to be Biblically based, must be pacifist both in relation to war and revolution. Yet he is not always consistent. . . . There is a curious ambiguity about his discussion of the idea of the 'just war' versus that of the 'unjust war.'" J. C. Bennett

EDWARDS, G. R.—Continued

America 127:40 J1 22 '72 500w

"This book is very topical, generally correct in the positions adopted, and rather poorly written. Two chapters discuss war and revolution in contemporary Christian ethics. . . . Libraries which acquire this book will find that it will have a short lifetime of extensive use. . . . General audience. Recommended."

Choice 9:660 J1/Ag '72 100w

Reviewed by J. L. McKenzie

Commonweal 96:503 S 22 '72 800w

"The author critiques the views of S.G.F. Brandon's influential Jesus and the Zealots. Indeed, much of Edwards' effort must be seen as a response to Brandon's thesis of a politically nationalistic Jesus. . . . The concluding chapter is rich in implications for the 20th Century, but it seems somewhat discontinuous with the weighty technical format of preceding chapters. The book is for university and theological collections whose patrons are thoroughly initiated in scholarly and critical biblical studies." Robert Dvorak

Library J 97:2412 J1 '72 110w

EDWARDS, I. E. S., ed. The Cambridge ancient history [3d ed] v 1, pt 1. See The Cambridge ancient history

EDWARDS, JEROME E. The foreign policy of Col. McCormick's Tribune, 1929-1941. 232p 11 $7 Univ. of Nev. press

071.73 The Chicago Tribune. McCormick, Robert Rutherford
ISBN 0-87417-031-1 LC 79-156760

"This book encompasses the period of Col. McCormick's zenith as an influential force on the American scene—the period from Herbert Hoover's accession to the presidency in 1929 until the attack on Pearl Harbor in 1941. . . . [Edwards weighs the] extent of the Tribune's influence and the reasons for the newspaper's popularity. He also assesses Col. McCormick's scathing criticisms of leaders and nations, and . . . the consistency of his isolationist views." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Edwards' book on 'the Colonel' avoids either praise or criticism, although the author's disagreement with the Tribune's position on many issues is made obvious. It is a scholarly work, carefully researched, well documented, and written in a style which conforms to the requirements of care in drawing conclusions. Sources are principally the newspaper itself, although the author has studied Col. McCormick's other writings, his published speeches, secondary studies which bear, and also has interviewed Tribune staff members and others who knew and worked with McCormick. . . . The book is illustrated with cartoons from the Tribune. It presents little that is new, but it is a helpful summary and restatement." F. B. Marbut

Ann Am Acad 402:159 J1 '72 600w

"[The author] makes no serious attempt to explain the origins of McCormick's well-known ideas about foreign affairs. He does not establish that the Tribune's editorial columns had the slightest influence on the men who fashioned American foreign policy in the period from 1929 to 1941. He offers no evidence to support his assertion that the Tribune and like-minded newspapers kept alive the American tradition of freedom of the press during the presidency of Franklin D. Roosevelt. The book, moreover, is flawed by statements of dubious accuracy and others that are patently inaccurate. . . . As for the book's prose, sprinkled as it is with clichés and misspellings, the less said the better." J. E. Wiltz

J Am Hist 59:461 ■ '72 500w

EDWARDS, MARVIN HENRY. Hazardous to your health; a new look at the 'health care crisis' in America. $18p $9.95 Arlington house

362.1 Medical care. Medicine, State
ISBN 0-87000-138-3 LC 73-183679

The author discusses his theory that "the campaign for national health insurance [is] the first step toward a completely government-run medical system. . . . system which could prove Hazardous to Your Health. . . . There is no crisis [in this country], he asserts. . . . [He suggests] that advocates of government medicine deliberately distort statistics and attempt to deceive the American public for propaganda purposes." (Publisher's note) Index.

"A treat for conservatives. . . . Despite a style in which valid points are carried to the point of absurdity, with use of irrelevant adverse personal descriptions in a cheap attempt to discredit opposing viewpoints (and which is often internally illogical and contradictory), Edwards does provide a frequently effective counterargument to those such as Schorr's Don't get sick in America [BRD 1971], Barbara and John Ehrenreich's The American health empire [BRD 1971], or Senator Edward Kennedy's In critical condition [BRD 1972]. No footnotes (surprising, since Edwards chides a 'liberal' study for failure to include such documentation). . . . Primarily for the general audience."

Choice 9:1321 D '72 190w

"The subtitle notwithstanding, this is a restatement of old arguments against government-run health plans: high cost, excessive bureaucracy and control, loss of quality and choice. In trying to prove that there is no 'crisis,' the author accuses his opponents of quoting false statistics, yet produces some misleading figures of his own. His references to supporting sources are often incomplete, and he says little about private insurance—a most important area of controversy. Such faults can only invite skepticism, which is unfortunate for a book that tries as frantically as this one to make its point." Hans Stranska

Library J 97:1729 My 1 '72 100w

"Were [this book] not so disjointed and wildly accusatory, it might have provided not only a reflection of the private practitioner's current desperation (Edwards, a journalist, edits Private Practice magazine) but some useful criticism of the 'liberal' academic medical elite as well. Denying that there is a medical crisis, insisting that 'in an age when more and more people have become accustomed to the government handout—to receiving more from society than they have contributed to it—the promotion of social programs has become politically the thing to do,' Edwards has done the conservative cause, which has its merits, a disservice." M. G. Michaelson

N Y Times Bk R p5 J1 9 '72 1400w

EDWARDS, SAMUEL. George Sand; a biography of the first modern, liberated woman. 271p $6.95 McKay

B or 92 Sand, George
LC 72-75462

A biography of the nineteenth century novelist. Bibliography. Index.

"Edwards' life of George Sand neither aspires to scholarship nor stoops in deference to genius. It is instead a popular, almost journalistic work, marred by clichés, yet on the whole a study written with admirable caution by a biographer chary of rumors. His sources are Sand's own writings and those of her contemporaries, all of which he attempts to see in proper perspective and, where he can, to set straight the facile conclusions of previous biographers. The style he employs, even the feeling one gets that the book was quickly composed, are convincing as a most felicitous means toward a biography of the nineteenth century's most popular and notorious woman." Barbara Harte

Best Sell 32:77 My 15 '72 1100w

Reviewed by John Weightman

Book World p9 My 28 '72 1100w

"Here it is for another go-around: all the gossip-column details of that dazzling and turbulent life, limned (or water-colored) with more dogged persistence than real respect or understanding. . . . Her liaisons are delineated in considerable, not to say tedious, detail, as are her friendships with Balzac, Liszt, Saint-Beuve, Mérimée, Flaubert, Hugo, and others. . . . This latest of [George Sand's] biographers is really not interested in her as a writer—merely as a flamboyant eccentric who happened to scribble. How much more illuminating might this study have been if rather than presenting Sand, opportunistically, as France's Germaine Greer, as the 19th century's Betty Friedan, Mr. Edwards had seen fit to make this the occasion for a serious critical biography." D. L. Parker

Christian Science Monitor p11 My 24 '72 700w

Reviewed by C. B. Osburn
Library J 97:2383 J1 '72 200w

Reviewed by E. P. Sourian
Nation 215:312 O 9 '72 1400w

"Unfortunately, Mr. Edwards adds nothing new to the known facts, so often repeated before him, and so professionally and unbeatably re-created by André Maurois [in] Lélia [BRD 1953. The present book] was very obviously prepared with an eye on the woman's book market. It is a blatant example of the kind of obsession with sex that permeates contemporary writing. . . . To reduce George Sand's emotions for people, whether male or female, simply to sensual excitement is to lose her totally. That is exactly what Edwards does in equating a rich, productive literary and human life with the number of men and women the novelist allegedly slept with, and his 'biography' consists of this enumeration." Anna Balakian

Sat R 55:61 J1 29 '72 750w

EDWARDS, SAMUEL. Victor Hugo: a tumultuous life. 337p il $8.95 McKay

B or 92 Hugo, Victor Marie
LC 79-149000

This is an account of Victor Hugo's life as well as his literary and political career. Bibliography. Index.

"If you have never read a life of Victor Hugo, this biography is surely as good as any to start with, although it is clearly a scissors-and-paste job. In fact, at times you will hunt in vain for some slight footnote; but you will finish the book largely satisfied that you now know the basics of Hugo's life. . . . The book does read well . . . is properly selective . . . [and] is a workmanlike job." Edward Gannon

Best Sell 31:142 Je 15 '71 600w

"Some of the best writing . . . occurs in the chapters describing the years of the Paris Commune and Hugo's political involvements. The 43 illustrations are well chosen, and the endpaper maps, which show Paris as it was in the 1860's, are very effective. . . . This biography is worth including in any undergraduate collection."

Choice 8:1025 O '71 190w

"[The author] gives Hugo's long life, intricate personality, and massive literary output a swift and shallow treatment. He pays considerable attention to Hugo's love life, but provides little information. . . . More of the quotations—few in all—are from his political speeches than from his poetry. The effect is strange because one comes away from reading the book feeling that it is a lesson in patriotism and the proper sort of liberalism. Hugo turns out to be that happy blend of author and politician." H. F. Babinski

Library J 96:1702 My 15 '71 130w

"A concatenation of engaging anecdotes, the text is excellent high-class soap opera. Brisk, racy, slick, it amuses and absorbs. Zip and pizzazz, however . . . not only hook, they corrupt. . . . [Edwards'] flashy journalism is frivolous, forced, sensational, misleading or smug. . . . Cliché and stereotype abound. . . . Literary evaluations are simplistic or antediluvian. For Edwards, 'Les Misérables' represents 'an extreme form of realism'. . . . Edwards's judgment of one of Hugo's plays might also be applied to his own book: 'Marie Tudor' was a splendid evening's entertainment for the middle-class Parisian whose life lacked excitement." William Beauchamp

N Y Times Bk R p4 Je 13 '71 600w

EDWARDS, THOMAS R. Imagination and power; a study of poetry on public themes. 232p $7.50 Oxford

809.1 Poetry—History and criticism
LC 72-173899

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by H. G. Hahn
Library J 97:199 Ja 15 '72 120w

Reviewed by Charles Molesworth
Nation 214:151 Ja 31 '72 1200w

Reviewed by J. C. Lobdell
Nat R 24:1365 D 8 '72 180w

Reviewed by Jonathan Raban
New Statesman 83:148 F 4 '72 550w

Reviewed by Morris Dickstein
N Y Times Bk R p6 Ja 16 '72 2200w

EELLS, GEORGE. Hedda and Louella. 360p $6.95 Putnam

B or 92 Hopper, Hedda. Parsons, Louella (Oettinger)
LC 70-174638

In alternate chapters the author presents the careers of two women who were Hollywood gossip columnists. They are said to have claimed a readership totaling 75 million. Index.

"For these who appreciate nostalgia, this dual biography might be enjoyed, perhaps in the dentist's waiting room." I. R. Hill
Best Sell 32:11 Ap 1 '72 550w

"Eells says both these strangely driven women were 'relentless in demonstrating their influence.' . . . In writing this book, [he found that] many people were still afraid to comment or give offense to the deposed dictators. . . . [Yet] the book is full of good words for both women. Eells analyzes these lower-middle-class, midwestern, and strictly American phenomena sagaciously. . . . He straightens out their own rewriting of history. Louella sometimes took 12 years off her age. Hedda was satisfied to reduce hers by only four. . . . He has done yeoman research . . . correcting errors and giving the inside dope on [various matters. Eells shows] . . . Hedda and Louella as they were—powerful, almost inexplicable forces in the history of Hollywood, laboring like mountains to bring forth their mice of gossip." Liz Smith

Book World p4 Ap 1 '72 1400w

"Parts of the book are fascinating. But other parts are heavily padded; because the book is not well-written, many of the stories fall flat; most important, the point of 'Hedda and Louella' is never quite clear." Nora Ephron
N Y Times Bk R p7 Ap 23 '72 500w

Newsweek 79:109 Mr 20 '72 500w

EFRON, ARTHUR. Don Quixote and the dulcineated world. 203p $7 Univ. of Tex. press

863 Cervantes Saavedra, Miguel de—Don Quixote
ISBN 0-292-70148-9 LC 71-165908

"This study offers a reinterpretation of Don Quixote that is, according to the author, 'fundamentally incompatible with the conclusions of nearly all Quixote critics.' After outlining the mainstreams of past criticisms—'idealist,' 'cautionary,' 'perspectivist'—Efron proceeds to posit his own view. He [argues] that what Cervantes really attacks in his classic work is what Efron terms 'Dulcineism' ('the belief that human life is satisfactorily conducted only if it is lived out in close accord with prescribed ideals of the received culture'). Cervantes, he continues, believed that 'Dulcineism' is debilitating in all human relations and deters the search for truth." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This book will undoubtedly cause much scholarly controversy. It presupposes a grounding in Quixote criticism and is not for the reader idly dabbling in a masterwork. In the reading, the density of detail and the frequently convoluted phraseology often obscure the point Efron clearly makes in his epilogue: that the three critical approaches to the book—which he calls the 'idealist,' the 'cautionary,' and the 'perspectivist' readings—are defective and must be refuted. . . . One wonders on reading Efron if we too should join Ruskin in bitterly rejecting the book, if we can see only 'a world . . . Cervantes so grotesquely and ironically portrayed.'" Choice 9:374 My '72 140w

"Efron is to be commended for striking out on a quest of his own, and for instigating the controversy that will rise out of his reading of Don Quixote." Robert Lima
Library J 97:1326 Ap 1 '72 100w

EFFRON, EDITH. The news twisters. 355p $7.95
Nash pub.

384.55 Television broadcasting. Reporters and reporting
SBN 8402-1206-2 LC 72-167511

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 9:227 Ap '72 170w

Reviewed by D. E. Haight
Commentary 53:91 Mr '72 2600w

Reviewed by N. W. Polsby
Harper 244:88 Mr '72 2350w

EGAN, LESLEY. Malicious mischief. 250p
$5.95 Harper

SBN 06-01156-9 LC 74-156574

This story "is set in the Glendale area of California where the police are confronted with an assortment of crimes: dognapping; . . . murder by automobile; breaking and entering; [and] assault and battery—name it and they have to deal with it." (Best Sell)

"Detective Varal" is a rose fancier. Detective Charles O'Connor's growl is worse than his bite, the other detectives on the squad are also well-developed characters. Miss Egan is expert at this 'procedural' sort of suspense novel. Interesting fare, although somewhat long-winded."

Best Sell 31:435 D 15 '71 60w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 96:4033 D 1 '71 50w

"[This book] is well done—with one proviso. All books like this tend to read the same. . . . At the end everything or nearly everything is neatly wrapped up—a shade too neatly. In Egan's world, there is no graft, no venialism, no sordidness. Her working cops are all up-right men doing a job. Inevitably, they end up a little too good to be true. She performs nimbly, however, flipping from one case to another with the ease of Emmanuel the Great Prestidigitator pulling cards from thin air." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p38 F ■ '72 220w

"While the author keeps . . . [her] various plot lines properly taut, she shows less expertise on matters involving police procedure. This robs her story of the feel of inside-authenticity that one finds, for example, in the Ed McBain 87th Precinct series." Haskel Frankel

Sat ■ 55:73 Ja 29 '72 100w

EGAN, MICHAEL, comp. Ibsen: the critical heritage. 505p $20 Routledge

839.8 Ibsen, Henrik
ISBN 0-7100-7255-4 LC 72-184135

This volume contains "reviews, essays, casual notes, and . . . satirical poetry inspired by Ibsen's plays." (Choice)

"The selections shed considerable light on the controversy that seems to have surrounded Ibsen in his lifetime. From an unsigned 'Comment on the depravity of Ibsen' to Henry James' essay on 'Ibsen's superiority to Shakespeare,' the volume makes fascinating reading, while at the same time providing ready access to late 19th- and early 20th-century literary attitudes."

Choice 9:1135 N '72 120w

"[This] is a book determinedly Anglocentric, and seeming all the more so for Ibsen's being himself so profoundly European. . . . Not Ibsen but Ibsenism is what this book is really about—Ibsenism of the familiar full-bodied Anglo-American kind, with no trace of Ibsenismus or Ibsenisme to contaminate it. And within these tighter de facto terms of reference the book is found to perform much more satisfactorily. . . . Some of the omissions in these pages are nevertheless surprising, a few of them so conspicuous that one has to assume deliberate editorial policy. . . . [There are, however,] three points of solid merit about the book: the American reaction is, deservedly, given much fuller treatment than it generally gets in discussions of Ibsenism; the catalogue of English translations, theatrical performances, and critical essays and reviews (up to 1966) is extremely useful; the index is exemplary."

TLS p601 My 26 '72 1800w

EGGENSCHWILER, DAVID. The Christian humanism of Flannery O'Connor. 148p $8.95
Wayne state univ. press

813 O'Connor, Flannery
ISBN 0-8143-1463-5 LC 79-179560

This is an "examination of O'Connor's works from the limited perspective of her Christian humanism. The first chapter defines the Christian humanist's view of life as a complex but unified whole and describes the complex ways a Christian humanist can examine man as a religious, psychological, and social being. . . . The second and third chapters deal with the short stories. . . . The central issue is the fear of freedom and the escape from this fear through a demonic commitment to things or attitudes, hence an isolation from man and God. The last chapter deals with the two novels [Wise Blood, BRD 1952; The Violent Bear It Away, BRD 1960] maintaining that they make O'Connor's religious preoccupations more explicit and more complex." (Library J) Index.

"Eggenschwiler's accomplishment is that he has both the theological depth to see profound theological patterns in [O'Connor's] work and the literary knowledge to make an aesthetic judgment on her success or failure. . . . The best part of the book is the . . . extended analysis of O'Connor's two novels. . . . Eggenschwiler underlines the patterns and parallelisms in the two novels, and offers a thoughtful interpretation of that difficult book, 'The Violent Bear It Away.' . . . Readers of Flannery O'Connor's fiction often seek further interpretations of her work; and libraries should have this clearly written, intelligent, and often profound analysis of one of contemporary literature's most enduring writers." Eileen Kennedy

Best Sell 32:253 S 1 '72 800w

"Even though Eggenschwiler deliberately confines his emphasis to the elucidation of spiritual 'mystery' rather than sociological 'manners,' the sociology not only remains important but is inseparable from the 'mystery.' . . . When [he] moves away from the almost too obstructive philosophic scaffolding of the first part of his book—Kierkegaard, Tillich, Sartre, et al.—he writes really admirable exegetical commentary on those 'strange shadows,' especially as they appear in the greater short stories." C. A. Brady

Commonweal 97:93 O 27 '72 400w

"This technical and rather difficult book is both literary criticism and theological treatise. . . . The book's argument is thorough, its style academic. Recommended only for specialists." T. E. Luddy

Library J 97:3159 O 1 '72 180w

EGLETON, CLIVE. The Judas mandate. 251p
$6.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

LC 78-183550

"A resistance fighter in Soviet occupied England, [Garnett] faces the most harrowing challenges of his lengthy career. The head of Security Police, in exchange for future favors, promises to deliver the names of guerrillas for execution and David [Garnett] heads the list. The object of a nationwide manhunt, [Garnett] is forced to seek the protection of some of his former adversaries. Plagued by internal conflicts, subversion, and the police close at his heels, [he] wages a desperate battle for survival knowing that 'friends' could be traitors and any minute might be his last." (Library J)

"The vivid action, the details of guerilla warfare, the tactics of the Resistance, are smashingly real portrayals. . . . Highly recommended for action and suspense."

Best Sell 32:44 Ap 15 '72 130w

"[This] most ingenious thriller . . . [gives] a horrifying and fascinating account of an only too possible world in which treachery is the norm." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:1742 My 1 '72 60w

Reviewed by A. B. Master

Library J 97:1933 My 15 '72 140w [YA]

"[This volume] brings to a close the trilogy about England under the Soviet occupation. (The previous titles were 'A Piece of Resistance' [BRD 1970] and 'Last Post for a Partisan'.) The Russians are beginning to pull out because of war with China, and resistance leaders are jockeying for position in the new England. This book is half a chase story, half a jailbreak (freeing political prisoners). But the more things change, the more they are the same. Eggleton does not think much of mankind and its future." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p29 Ap 16 '72 90w

EHMCKE, SUSANNE. Necklace for Laurie, by Susanne Ehmcke and Heiri Steiner [tr. by Elizabeth D. Crawford]. unpag. col. ill. $4.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-256750-X LC 70-22251

"This story focuses on a young girl who, seated in a tub in a garden, plays with her goldfish and her little white elephant. A twittering bird doesn't believe that she is really Princess Laurie because, as everyone knows, princesses have spangled dresses and precious jewels, while Laurie is naked. Laurie begins to cry, but perks up at once when all the garden animals volunteer to go in quest of jewels for a royal necklace. After the natural treasures (berries, pebble, chestnut, snail shell, etc.) have been collected, the garden dwarf strings them and Laurie is proclaimed true princess. . . . Preschool to grade one." (Library J)

Reviewed by C. L. Levy

Library J 96:3890 N 15 '71 120w

"Beautifully printed. Laurie is an enchanting small girl . . . touchingly and affectionately drawn but not sentimental: her companions are an unusual bunch—frog, newt, snail, elephant, dwarf. The clear liquid colours held together by an incisive line make each page delightful: I hope Laurie reappears." David Gentleman

New Statesman 81:781 Je 4 '71 60w

"The pictures, ink line and clear wash colour, are angular and free—the frog is especially nice—and Laurie is for some reason naked throughout. However, she has what we used to call BOO-blurred out organs—which means that there is no genital detail to offend the uptight. A very peaceful, pretty and innocent book, which is saved from the fluff category by that special quality of unhurried simplicity that Europeans seem to bring to their children's books." N.E.

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p45 My 1 '71 180w

TLS p770 J1 2 '71 80w

EIBL-EIBESFELDT, IRENAUS. Love and hate; the natural history of behavior patterns; tr. by Geoffrey Strachan. 276p. ill. $7.95 Holt

590 Aggressiveness (Psychology). Behavior ISBN 0-03-086705-3 LC 70-117292

The author, a behavioral scientist, maintains that "man's aggressive impulses are counterbalanced by equally deep-rooted social tendencies. . . . In terms of the biology of behavior, the author [seeks to] show how bonding drives are innate in human beings; . . . how bond-forming patterns have developed phylogenetically in the evolution of birds and on through the higher vertebrates to man himself; how hate evolves; how aggressive drives are held in check; and how the capacity to form a personal bond is repeated on the individual level as the capacity to love." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of names. Index of subjects.

"Eibl-Eibesfeldt, an able and intelligent observer of the budding heresy of man's innate aggressiveness, sets out to confute it in this solid and scholarly book. His argument restores man's dualism. 'Both aggressive and altruistic behavior,' he writes, 'are pre-programmed by phylogenetic adaptations [those acquired during man's evolutionary history] and . . . there are therefore pre-ordained norms for our ethical behavior.' The book gives a lyrical account of the babbling infant struggling to express its probably innate drive for love and affection, and shows how man can avert, inhibit, or appease his undeniable quota of aggression. Not definitive, but recommended." P. W. Boylston

Library J 97:882 Mr 1 '72 230w

"[This is] a study of the anti-aggressive behaviour common to living things, [including man]. . . . On other animals [the author] is excellent; on man he is inclined to state as facts the received opinions of his own culture. . . . In some cases it may be extremely dangerous to extrapolate from animal to human, particularly in a negative sense. 'Amongst wild animals living free we have no knowledge either of mating between species or of homosexuality,' writes Professor Eibl-Eibesfeldt, while admitting in a later note that 'male wall-lizards attempt to copulate with a rival that acknowledges defeat'. . . . To argue anything about the normality of complex human relationships from such slight material would seem very unwise." Maureen Duffy

New Statesman 83:284 Mr 1 '72 750w

"Professor Eibl-Eibesfeldt's central intention is to put forward the claim that much of human behavior is innate and follows the path of innate or 'pre-programmed' dispositions. That intention, I regret to report, goes essentially unrealized, and 'Love and Hate' does disservice to the discipline it purports to serve. . . . [The author] is frequently incompetent in the judgment and use of evidence, and—skilled observer though he may be—reveals on occasion a sustained incapacity for what is generally regarded as thought. . . . So to the laxities, fatuities and aberrations of Robert Ardrey (although he disagrees with him) and Desmond Morris, Professor Eibl-Eibesfeldt has now now added the budget of his own. . . . The discipline will survive its vulgarization, though it has to be recorded that the vulgarization can do it no good." Steven Marcus

N Y Times Bk R p2 Ap 23 '72 3000w

"The book's title is somewhat misleading, for one thing that emerges from reading it is that very few species below man experience anything that could be called love or hate. Is the fish's urge to stay with his shoal love? Or the iguana's head-butting contest hate? . . . What is disconcerting is the tenuousness of the parallels and proofs from the study of other species. We seem to be on our own. . . . When he develops his argument that man and beast have innately loving as well as hating natures, Professor Eibl-Eibesfeldt relies largely on descriptions of gestures of greeting and hospitality from many cultures. [But these] . . . do not add very much to our knowledge that man has a loving and sociable side. . . . Professor Eibl-Eibesfeldt neither quite convinces that valid parallels can be drawn between animal and human behaviour, nor that our instinctive love will be equal to our mechanized hate."

TLS p238 Mr 3 '72 950w

EIMERL, SAREL. Hitler over Europe; the road to World War II. 179p. $5.95 Little

940.5 Europe—History—1914-1945—Juvenile literature. Hitler, Adolf—Juvenile literature LC 77-154961

"Eimerl focuses on the events of 1933 through 1939. . . . Also covered are the activities of Mussolini, Franco and Stalin. [The author] is chiefly concerned with why it was possible for these dictators of the left and right to gain and hold power. The grinding economic and social conditions in the 30's are . . . illustrated, as are the uses of terror and propaganda. [Index]. Grades seven to twelve." (Library J)

"[This is] an interesting and easily understandable account of the overt and covert activities of Europe's leaders in the decade preceding World War II. Although abounding in simplistic and questionable generalizations, the book's value lies in its investigations into the motives and personalities of such ■ Stalin, Mussolini and Hitler as well as its in-depth chronicling of Hitler's modus operandi. The political implications of homosexuality are frequently discussed." D. A. Parente

Best Sell 32:46 Ap 15 '72 90w

"[Eimerl] does not, as the title seems to imply, limit the account to Hitler. . . . Complex historical events such as the Reichstag fire are handled in a clear, balanced manner. Unfortunately the style is flat reportage; the index is mainly a name listing; and there are no photographs of the main protagonists. Nevertheless this is a useful book, particularly for its broad, lucid coverage of this period for the age group." Dallas Shaffer

Library J 97:1921 My 15 '72 100w

EINSTEIN, ALBERT. The Born-Einstein letters; correspondence between Albert Einstein and Max and Hedwig Born from 1916 to 1955; with commentaries by Max Born; tr. by Irene Born. 240p. $8.50 Walker & Co.

B or 92 Born, Max. Born, Hedwig. Physicists

ISBN 0-8027-0326-7 LC 76-126107

This volume contains "some 120 letters, each followed by a comment written by Professor Born between 1965 and 1969." (Sci Am)

"The Born-Einstein Letters only suggest the riches of the rest of the correspondence that we shall discover when it is finally published. . . . [The book gives] an unforgettable picture of what it is to grow old." David Park

Book World p8 Ag 15 '71 450w

EINSTEIN, ALBERT—Continued

Choice 8:1038 O '71 110w

Reviewed by J. W. Weigel

Library J 96:3316 O 15 '71 80w

"Although the [letters] contain considerable shop talk which is all but incomprehensible to anyone but a physicist, Born himself supplies generally illuminating commentaries; and the glimpse of the Einstein mind at work is unforgettable. Einstein's own letters in the collection never fail to reveal his charm and courtesy." D. M. Locke

Sat R 54:38 S 11 '71 500w

"The drama [of this correspondence] is not mainly science. . . . Each [letter] bears its own telltale date and its contemporary burden of truth and fancy, of opinion, posturing, irony, advice and jest—whatever went back and forth between Einstein and the Borns as they, their century and ours reeled from the years of Field Marshal Ludendorff and Fritz Haber to those of Joseph McCarthy and Robert Oppenheimer. . . . The concerns of pensions and jobs, of the unfortunate and the promising, fill many of these letters, written so often in war and chaos, in exile or in apprehensive return. The largest theme in point of length of treatment, and the one engaged most technically, is of course the problem of the interpretation of quantum mechanics. . . . [This volume] throws light (sometimes heat) on events as they were woven into public history and private biography. These are three rare men and women." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 225:117 Ag '71 800w

"[The original German edition of this] fascinating correspondence . . . was reviewed in TLS, January 15, 1970. . . . [In this English translation] one might have been apprehensive about the sections containing scientific terms, but these must have been expertly checked for the whole of the translation is excellent. The collection provides deep insight into the involvement of eminent physicists in the development of scientific ideas."

TLS p529 My 7 '71 80w

EINZIG, PAUL. The destiny of the dollar. 196p $8.95 St Martins 332.4 Currency question—U.S.

SBN 333-13425-7 LC 71-185860

"A topical discussion of events surrounding the December 1971 devaluation of the U.S. dollar and related institutional adjustments in international finance. . . . [The author] feels that devaluation of the dollar was not sufficient to produce lasting confidence. . . . [and that] this lack of confidence will seriously impair future use of the dollar as a reserve currency and as a means of carrying out transactions among countries. To reduce U.S. short-term liabilities abroad, improve international relations, and stabilize the value of the dollar, Einzig recommends U.S. government policies designed to encourage selling the U.S. long-term investments in foreign countries." (Choice) Index.

"Einzig [is] a prolific writer on subjects in the international track area. . . . Although apparently written for a general audience, the book contains little background information and consists mainly of the author's subjective judgments and his speculations as to future courses of action. Because of its lack of substantive content, this work is an unlikely reference for college level course work."

Choice 9:1174 N '72 170w

"With his customary zeal Dr Paul Einzig appeals for the restoration of the supremacy of the dollar. . . . He believes it to be the moral duty of all free countries to help the United States restore the inherent strength of its currency. Flexible exchange rates, he says, revive economic nationalism, and he has many reservations about the British plan to make special drawing rights (SDRs) the numeraire of the system. He would stick to revalued gold. Much of what Dr Einzig says is against The Economist's beliefs, but he is a dab hand at saying what he means."

Economist 244:82 J1 1 '72 200w

EINZIG, PAUL. Parallel money markets; v2. Overseas markets. 256p $13.95 St Martins

332.1 Finance

SBN 333-11807-3 LC 75-143999

In this "continuation of Einzig's 1971 study of London [Parallel Money Markets; v 1, The New Markets in London, BRD 1971], he describes the new developments in money markets (as distinguished from the banking systems) around the world." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Three-fifths of the book is devoted to the U.S. and Canada, another fifth to Paris, Frankfurt, Zurich, and five smaller centers in Europe, and the final 50 pages cover rather sketchily 12 markets in Asia, Africa, and Australia, but none in South America. The value of the book for most users will be that it goes beyond legal provisions (if indeed there are any) to describe actual practices. A brief bibliography is included for the larger centers, but material for all of them was obtained largely from interviews; there is little reference to even such official documents as are available. The volume bears out Einzig's conclusion that a comparative study of money markets needs more attention than it has so far received."

Choice 9:1174 N '72 160w

Economist 244:83 J1 1 '72 50w

EISELE, ALBERT. Almost to the presidency; a biography of two American politicians. 460p $10.95 Piper co.

B or 92 Humphrey, Hubert Horatio. McCarthy, Eugene Joseph. U.S.—Politics and government—1945-

ISBN 0-87832-005-9 LC 76-187432

In this "biography of Hubert Humphrey and Eugene McCarthy . . . [the author describes] their rise from common origins, the evolution of their political philosophies, and the continuing rivalry that has changed them, the Democratic party and the course of American history." (Publisher's note) Index.

"A wealth of insights about the current factionalization within the Democratic party can be found in Eisele's analysis of the conflicting political ambitions to two of the party's most influential and enigmatic leaders. . . . Strongly recommended for all libraries."

Choice 9:1352 D '72 130w

"[Humphrey and McCarthy] blazed separate trails from the Midwest to the nation's capital. Trying to follow both trails, Eisele leads us on a long, winding, and sometimes confusing journey. Using only information 'available to any researcher willing to struggle through the voluminous public record,' the author has written a comprehensive report on the early careers of both men. The account of their involvement in Minnesota politics reminds us that they were on the political scene many years before the 1964 and 1968 Presidential elections. The remainder of the book covers much the same ground as Theodore H. White's The Making of the President series [BRD 1961, 1962, 1965, 1966 and 1969] but without its depth of analysis and with a narrower focus." M. S. Kingsley

Library J 97:2574 Ag '72 130w

"[This is] an acute, hard-headed dual biography." J. W. Koenig

Sat R 55:62 Je 1 '72 320w

EISELEY, LOREN. The night country; II. by Leonard Everett Fisher. 240p $7.95 Scribner

818 Nature

SBN 684-12563-4 LC 78-162747

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by (Brother) Berchmans Downey

Best Sell 31:457 Ja 15 '72 500w

Choice 9:288 Ap '72 120w

Reviewed by J. G. Campaigne

Nat R 24:164 F 18 '72 600w

EISEN, JONATHAN, ed. Twenty-minute fandangos and forever changes; a rock bazaar. 270p il $7.95 Random house

785.06 Rock music

ISBN 0-394-47163-6 LC 71-159342

In this collection of pieces on the culture of rock music various writers comment on a number of places, performers and groups. Included among the topics are rock and regression, "drugs, the Doors, Iggy Stooze, Andy Warhol, Jim Morrison, Janis, the Byrds, Elvis, sex and the world, N.Y., L.A., S.F., etc. business, fans, secrets." (Publisher's note)

"Rock music journalism is doing very little to promote, explain or even comment intelligibly upon the music, with page after page of first-impression record reviews, superstar trivia, and long, rambling taped interviews. When such ephemera are two years old, they get anthologized in volumes such as this 'rock bazaar.' Eisen . . . offers very little of value here. Two recent history pieces by Sandy Pearlman and Nick Tosches are all right, but they accompany dreary interviews, news snippets, the guest list from a Rolling Stones press conference, and one entire page set with the repeated word Boffalongo. This is rock music journalism as pop art and of little value to most libraries." Collin Clark

Library J 96:2776 S 15 '71 120w

"As the editor says: 'You can start anywhere' and indeed you can. Contains some good satire and a fair amount of social criticism." Carey McWilliams

Nation 213:701 D 27 '71 60w

EISENSTADT, S. N., ed. Political sociology; a reader; ed. and with introd. by S. N. Eisenstadt. 632p $17.50 Basic bks.

301 Political sociology
ISBN 0-465-05941-4 LC 75-103091

These "ninety-seven selections . . . [represent] a blending of the three major traditions in political sociology: the speculative approaches of the classical tradition, the more recent theoretical and analytical trends, and comparative studies in the fields of anthropology, sociology and history. In his . . . introduction to the book, Eisenstadt shows how these varied approaches converge and lead to a comprehensive new view of the whole subject." (Social Studies)

"This is a useful basic reference text. . . . Although adequately organized the . . . selections are often very short and appear truncated in terms of the longer works from which they were extracted. Systematic work in any of the areas covered in this volume would require supplementary material of a more narrowly focused and in-depth quality. All in all, an especially desirable edition for an undergraduate library."

Choice 8:584 Je '71 120w

"In spite of its minor weaknesses, this survey is the best available one from the whole lot and easily supplants all others with its command of the subject. . . . There is no reference whatever to the influential field of knowledge known as Political Geography (or Geopolitics), or to the related field of ecology. Furthermore, in spite of the remarkable erudition of the editor, he has failed to include any reference to P.A. Sorokin's well-known studies in this sector of political sociology, or to Robert M. MacIver, Sir Halford J. MacKinder, Georges Sorel, and a few others. The symposium is not easy reading, but it is a book of enduring value, and in its wider implications it opens vistas not yet scanned." J. S. Roucek

Social Studies 63:184 Ap '72 310w

EISENSTADT, ALFRED. Wimbledon: a celebration. See McPhee, J.

EISENSTADT, ALFRED. Witness to nature. (A Studio bk) 126p il col pl $16.95 Viking

779 Nature photography
ISBN 0-670-77685-8 LC 71-155658

A collection of "119 color plates of Birds and Animals, Landscapes and Flowers; Forests, Fields, and Ponds; Patterns and Textures; and Special Effects. These are the divisions used in the arrangement. Notes on each of the plates in each section are presented before the photographic plate (numbered consecutively)." (Best Sell)

"A beautiful collection. . . . Even those people who are not much interested in photography will find illumination in [these] studies." Best Sell 31:377 N 15 '71 150w

Choice 9:634 J1/Ag '72 100w

"Eisenstaedt, a successful photojournalist, loves 'nature.' With this motivation, he presents a collection of colorful clichés. It is true that this is a frequent approach to nature photography, but it is not necessary. Elliot Porter, whose color photographs have been published by the Sierra Club, is sometimes garish in his use of color, but he is not maudlin about 'nature.' Ansel Adams gives a more primal view of landscapes abstracted from color. Eisenstaedt combines an excess of color with mawkish sentiment. Predictably, the book closes with the setting sun silhouetting a drowsing bird; it is a golden sunset." Tom Lovcik

Library J 97:672 F 15 '72 100w

"Inspid color pictures, by a photographer who is good in black-and-white on Dr. Goebbels and other fauna. Here he is out of his area of competence." David Vestal

N Y Times Bk R p43 D 12 '71 30w

EISSLER, K. R. Discourse on Hamlet and Hamlet: a psychoanalytic inquiry. 656p $15 Int. univ. press

822.3 Shakespeare, William. Hamlet
LC 73-125475

In this study of "the play and the protagonist [Eissler . . .] [also] discourses on Newton and Niels Bohr, Nietzsche and Nero, Sophocles and Spengler, Moses and Mozart, all of whom are . . . tied into the work at hand. . . . [According to the author] Hamlet is not neurotic but a gifted adolescent who 'has achieved the highest degree of synthesis and passivity—the freedom that allows for self-chosen action' based on reality." (Choice) Bibliography. Name index. Subject index.

"In three splendid appendices Eissler writes on Freudian literary analysis, Erikson's psychosociological approach, and the ego function in literary genius."

Choice 8:1322 D '71 210w

"[This is a] massive and disorganized book. . . . Eissler's 'psychoanalytic inquiry' is constructed on the model of free association, and he can neither repress nor compress. Whatever value this might have is lost in the chaff." E. Pearlman

Library J 96:2773 S 15 '71 120w

EISSLER, K. R. Talent and genius; the fictitious case of Tausk contra Freud. 403p $12.95 Quadrangle bks.

B or 92 Freud, Sigmund. Psychoanalysis. Genius. Tausk, Victor. Roazen, Paul—Brother animal: the story of Freud and Tausk
LC 70-162813

The author offers a "defense of Freud against the charges made against him in Paul Roazen's Brother Animal [BRD 1969, 1970]. Roazen charged that Freud was jealous and fearful of his . . . pupil Victor Tausk and by rejecting Tausk drove him to suicide in 1919 at age 40. Eissler, secretary of the Sigmund Freud Archives, says that Roazen misrepresents, distorts, and fails to document." (Library J) Name index. Subject index.

"What troubles Eissler . . . is the fact that Roazen's book has been prominently and enthusiastically reviewed. Fearing that the calumny heaped upon Freud will redound to psychoanalysis's disadvantage, Eissler has undertaken the refutation. In his effort, much that is new and interesting about Freud, the Viennese milieu and psychoanalytic origins, emerges. In final judgment, Freud stands vindicated. . . . The book ends with a special section on talent and genius which gives it its name and provides a lively discussion of this important area. . . . [However,] Eissler's determination to track down hundreds of inaccuracies ultimately overwhelms the reader." Morton Levitt

Ann Am Acad 404:300 N '72 280w

"Eissler goes beyond merely refuting Roazen's thesis that Freud was responsible for Victor Tausk's suicide. He gives his book a broader context by expatiation on the differences between talent and genius. Eissler has added much to our knowledge of Freud, his colleagues, and students; aficionados will find this a treasure trove concerning Freud and the history of the psychoanalytic movement. The reader constantly marvels at Eissler's incredible erudition. Students of psychology and historians will be grateful to Eissler for . . . setting this particular record straight, even though it may be over-kill."

Choice 8:1646 F '72 170w

"Eissler is impressively persuasive, particularly in the evidence he cites to show that Tausk was a psychopathological type, possibly a schizophrenic (as Ernest Jones, Freud's biographer, suggested), a depressive with a proven clinical history long before he came to

EISSLER, K. R.—Continued

Freud. Eissler also presents telling documentation to indicate that Freud was devoid of fear or jealousy of his young student. This is only the latest chapter in a controversy that will probably rage for a time. It is obviously a book for those who continue to study and evaluate the master's every word, frown, and gesture. But it is not likely to arouse in any but a small group of specialists the vehemence of this newest defender for whom Freud remains the incomparable explorer of the mind and human behavior." Allan Angoff

Library J 97:204 Ja 15 '72 200w
 TLS p499 Ap 28 '72 1450w

EKELÖF, GUNNAR. Selected poems; tr. by W. H. Auden and Leif Sjöberg; with an introd. by Göran Printz-Påhlson. 141p $5.95 Pantheon bks.

839.7
 ISBN 0-394-47232-2 LC 78-177240

"Ekelöf's last work before he died in 1968 was a series of three volumes known as the Byzantine triptych, and these Auden-Sjöberg translations are selected from the first two of those: Diwān over the Prince of Emgion, which deals with political decadence, and The Tale of Fatumeh, about personal alienation. The rendering of these themes reflects Ekelöf's . . . interest in music and Oriental mysticism." (Publisher's note) Some of these poems have appeared in Bennington Review, Denver Quarterly, the New York Review of Books and other periodicals.

"No one would question the authority of poetic conception of the team responsible for the translation of these very recent poems by the late Gunnar Ekelöf, Leif Sjöberg and W. H. Auden . . . [have] brought forth a volume reflecting insight and admiration. And yet, in comparing individual translations with the originals, one is left with the uneasy feeling that the English versions are somewhat more rational, comprehensible, than Ekelöf's tautly brittle Swedish, that the spatial word tension that is the hallmark of Ekelöf's poetry is only rarely present. Even so, on its own, Selected poems is a volume of great beauty."

Choice 9:973 O '72 120w

"As more translations of the Swedish poet Ekelöf (1907-1968) appear, it is clear he is part of that great tradition of Western mystical poetry that stretches from St. John of the Cross to Bonnefoy. This is the largest, most exciting volume yet. . . . Ekelöf's interest in the Orient was no escape nor a passing concern, but a lifelong passion which fills all his poetry. (He believed that the mythical Prince of Emgion was his spiritual 'I'.) The translations are direct and read excellently. There are notes, but a few more would be helpful: 'Diwān' is never defined, nor 'Karagöz.'" J. W. Charles

Library J 97:1441 Ap 15 '72 300w

ELBERT, SAMUEL H., jt. auth. Hawaiian dictionary. See Pukui, M. K.

ELIOT, T. S. The waste land; a facsimile and transcript of the original drafts including the annotations of Ezra Pound; ed. by Valerie Eliot. 149p $22.50 Harcourt

821
 ISBN 0-15-194760-0 LC 70-160401

T. S. Eliot had showed the original manuscript of "The Waste Land" to his friend and mentor Ezra Pound, and on Pound's advice he had omitted much of it, perhaps a third of the original lines. . . . [This] raised a number of questions. Would the omitted passages cast light on the somewhat ambiguous meaning and nature of the poem? How much of its final effect was owed to Pound? In the light of such permanent judgments . . . were Pound's deletions and changes the right ones to make? . . . [The poem] has now been published in facsimile, with a transcript on facing pages, and with [an] introduction and notes by the poet's widow. . . . Pound's contribution revealed page by page." (Book World)

Reviewed by P. C. Rule
 America 126:28 Ja 1 '72 430w

"The homosexual interpretation of The Waste Land, which is now quite fashionable, gains no new support, and indeed seems even more gratuitous. Another view of the work, often strongly expressed, that [it] is merely a sequence of distinct poems which we have somehow been induced to regard as a unified structure, will, I suppose, survive the clear indications that Eliot, at any rate, thought of it as one poem. . . . Eliot's own 'Notes' have notoriously done much to prevent people from reading the poem in this way. . . . Yet Pound did read it in that way. . . . He cared only about the verse and, it must be stressed, the voice of Eliot. This voice he cultivated, and it is hardly too much to say that what we recognized as unmistakably the tones of a great poet owe a good deal of their peculiar quality to Pound's practical advice." Frank Kermode

Atlantic 229:89 Ja '72 1650w

"[This is] a masterly job of editing and bookmaking . . . and the publication is an event . . . not in the art of poetry, but in the world of literary scholarship. Mrs. Eliot's introduction casts new light on the poet's early years in England and on the circumstances in which The Waste Land [BRD 1923] was written and given to the public. . . . I was intensely curious to see Pound's comments on the original draft of The Waste Land. Was it possible . . . that the draft might even be better in the light of permanent standards, than the poem as Pound finally approved it? But, no, it was no better, as I found before reading to the end. Pound had gone straight to the weakest lines and passages in Eliot's draft, and, except in one instance, there can be little doubt that he was right to delete them. . . . The fact remains that The Waste Land is definitely Eliot's work." Malcolm Cowley

Book World p3 N 7 '71 2000w

Reviewed by Victor Howes
 Christian Science Monitor pB5 N 26 '71 290w

Reviewed by Timothy Materer
 Commonweal 96:409 Jl 28 '72 1200w
 Economist 241:71 N 20 '71 200w

Reviewed by Bernard Bergonzi
 Encounter 38:80 Ap '72 2050w

Reviewed by Keith Cushman
 Library J 96:4017 D 1 '71 $10w

Reviewed by R. W. French
 Nation 213:470 N 8 '71 1250w

Reviewed by Hugh Kenner
 New Repub 165:25 N 13 '71 1900w

Reviewed by Helen Gardner
 New Statesman 82:654 N 12 '71 700w

Reviewed by Richard Ellman
 N Y Rev of Books 17:10 N 18 '71 4000w

Reviewed by Helen Vendler
 N Y Times Bk R p1 N 7 '71 4200w

Reviewed by George Steiner
 New Yorker 48:134 Ap 22 '72 1250w

"[The] manuscript is uniquely exciting: first, because Pound's editing was a brilliant creative act; second, because we can see more clearly the personal roots of the poem Eliot repeatedly insisted he'd never intended as the expression of 'the disillusionment of a generation.'" Walter Clemons

Newsweek 78:122 N 15 '71 650w

Reviewed by David Mus
 Poetry 121:156 D '72 2300w

"To the matchless passages of the poem Pound rises with the only kind of celebration that, among literary peers, is ever wholly convincing—silence, an end to pencil jottings and marginal jokes, a single word declaring with full authority that here in this stretch nothing, absolutely nothing, could be improved: 'Echt.' At its best this facsimile edition of the poem is a splendid revelation of two powerful literary intelligences meshing in unselfish service of their art—a sort of meta-poem, or hymn to craft, and an exceptionally inspiring handbook of right attitudes in critic and creator. But striking as a creative collaboration is, it's scarcely a guarantee in itself that a poetic masterpiece has been brought off." Benjamin De Mott

Sat R 54:35 N 27 '71 900w

Reviewed by Timothy Foote
 Time 98:105 D 6 '71 1350w

"Marginal queries about [James] Joyce and (more surprisingly) at one point about William Blake are among several which suggest that Pound saw Eliot doing for London what Joyce's Ulysses [BRD 1934] had done, in the more expansive and cumulative mode of prose, for the city of Dublin. We may wish that this indeed had been Eliot's intention; and certainly the excisions which Pound demanded have made The Waste Land far more a poem about London than it looked like being when in draft. Yet Eliot's imagination was, even so early, Virgilian rather than (like Joyce's and Pound's) Homeric. And the existence in draft of passages later excised make it quite clear that Eliot at no time was concerned to register the 'out there' of London and London life at a specific epoch."

TLS p1551 D 10 '71 2400w

ELKORDY, ABDUL-HAFEZ M. Crisis of diplomacy: the three wars . . . and after. . . . 296p maps $7.95 Naylor

956 Jewish-Arab relations. United Nations ISBN 0-8111-0408-7 LC 75-153934

"This is a discussion of the activities of the UN, its peacekeeping operations, and the international diplomacy of the three Arab-Israeli wars, with materials on the causes of the wars and their international legal aspects." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[The author's] presentation of diverse official commentaries on matters such as Egypt's demand for withdrawal of U.N. forces from Sinai and Gaza, disputes over free passage through the Suez Canal and the Gulf of Aqaba, enhances its value, especially since much of this discussion is difficult to acquire except through the original U.N. documentation. The book is a good supplement to [F.] Khouri's The Arab-Israeli dilemma [BRD 1968] which attempts a more objective analysis. The bibliography and appendices, giving numerous primary sources, appropriately supplement the text."

Choice 8:1634 F '72 170w

"In general the author tries to be objective, but he tends to assume that the Arab position is correct, particularly in legal matters and in the interpretation of UN resolutions; and too often the discussion revolves around the Arab presuppositions, and in spots is almost polemical. There are too few details, and too many statements and conclusions which need proving, though some of them seem to be sound perceptions. Due to faults in the argument and logic, occasional dual standards, inadequate presentation, and poor writing, the book is not convincing; it shows good potential, but does not quite achieve it." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 96:2519 Ag '71 140w

ELLIN, STANLEY. Mirror, mirror on the wall. 179p $5.95 Random house

ISBN 0-394-47168-7 LC 72-636

"A strange body is discovered in an apartment. The finder is vaguely uneasy, suspecting that the body might be linked to his past. If so, how? Interrogators prod his mind and bridge the gap between present and past, inner self and outer world." (Sat R)

"[This novel] is brilliant, kinky, stunning, poleaxing, and must not be missed. . . . Ellin pulls the reader along, dragging out stranger and stranger clues, until the hallucinating and totally unexpected finale is reached." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:3184 O 1 '72 80w

"[The author] is a skillful professional, and his writing is bright and fast-moving. . . . The characters tend to be stereotypes, skillfully as they are drawn; the satire is broad but not too deep, and there are no real surprises in the way they talk and act. Nor are there surprises in the sex episodes, natural and unnatural. . . . What Ellin does is build toward a situation rather than a concept, and a fine storyteller that he is—suddenly socks the reader in the teeth with it. And it is indeed a haymaker that he lets loose." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk p39 S 24 '72 350w

"[This] is an eerie excursion into psychopathic crime, a horrific account of victim and violator. . . . The novelist's technique parallels that of the psychoanalyst, constructing a coherent pattern from detached, seemingly unconnected flashbacks that build to a shocking and disturbing climax. Whatever solution you might conjure up, Ellin's mirror yields the scariest of them all." O. L. Bailey

Sat R 55:62 Ag 26 '72 160w

Reviewed by Jay Cocks

Time 100:97 S 18 '72 350w

ELLING, RAY H., ed. National health care: issues and problems in socialized medicine. 287p $7.95; pa $2.95 Aldine-Atherton

614 Insurance, Health. Public health—U.S. Medical care, Medicine, State ISBN 0-202-30232-6; 0-202-30233-4 (pa) LC 77-159602

This is a "presentation of the principal issues of national health care in the United States: how to finance, distribute, and supervise care; how to satisfy patients' needs without depriving medical personnel of proper rewards. The 12 essays (most of them previously published elsewhere) are organized into . . . sections: historical background; controversial articles, one condemning present health care available to black Americans and another defending the present system; insurance, and physicians' remuneration; group versus individual practice; interaction between agencies, and regional planning." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Reading [this book] is like tasting a few morsels of delicious food and going away still hungry. It is obvious that Dr. Elling has the depth and breadth to write the definitive compendium of materials on the historical sociology of health care, yet [he] is limited by the skimpiness of his own materials. . . . Elling carefully introduces his subjects. . . . [His book] is a good introduction to the field." H. R. Hunter

Am J Pub Health 62:1550 N '72 350w

"[Elling] has attempted an original composite of differing views on a world problem. That selection from varied sources does not tell is usual, but here the difficulty is compounded by repetition and/or contradiction. . . . Elling's own discussion of health planning offers imaginative guidelines. The concluding chapter is rich in new insights on underdeveloped countries but somewhat irrelevant to the others. Useful sources for debating issues, but is difficult to relate to the literature."

Choice 9:402 My '72 110w

"[This is a] much needed, balanced [account]. . . . Elling wrote one of the articles, the introduction, and prefatory remarks to some of the pieces. He does not seek to convert, but merely to clarify; and he succeeds. Good notes, bibliographies, and index." Hana Stranska

Library J 97:891 Mr 1 '72 120w

Reviewed by Robert Bazell

N Y Rev of Books 19:38 N 1 '72 750w

ELLIOTT, GEORGE P. Conversions; literature and the modernist deviation. 238p $7.95 Dutton

814 SBN 0-525-08575-0 LC 74-158579

Included in these essays, which were published between 1964 and 1971 in various magazines, are discussions of such subjects as "pornography, revolution, symposium speakers [and] teaching writing." (Publisher's note)

Choice 9:207 Ap '72 80w

"[Elliott's] opening paragraphs lead one to expect a provocative, even iconoclastic, discussion of the literary establishment. Unfortunately, the discussion soon becomes merely crotchety and tiresome. Elliott fervently argues the truism that artistic judgments are frequently subject to the Zeitgeist. He also contends that art affects the individual's moral life. 'Modern' art, then, being based on fashionable but bad judgments, is contributing both to the corruption of the individual and to the stagnation of society. Elliott seems only dimly aware that his assertions represent but one side of a difficult and ancient question, one which has itself always been subject to the Zeitgeist. One wishes that he would have done with this didacticism and get back to the making of short stories, for which he has such fine talent." P. A. Dollard

Library J 96:4013 D 1 '71 170w

"Most of these essays are anecdotal or journalistic or slapdash. . . . They come to us, however, heavy with moral concerns since the author pretends to deep thoughts on Nothingness and the literature of Extremity. It is as if one were reading about existential anguish in the pages of The Saturday Evening Post."

N Y Rev of Books 17:45 N 18 '71 260w

"Elliott calls himself a writer-critic rather than a scholar-critic or philosopher-critic. He deserves the name, not only because he has published novels, stories and poems as well as another volume of essays, but also because he writes well. His manner (when not oracular) is attractively informal, neat yet colorful, and he combines cultural-literary comment with a kind of personal reminiscence that offers us a few glimpses into the role his temperament played in the formation of his opinions. But a little more of the philosophic and scholarly spirit might have strengthened his reasoning. . . . His praise of the art he loves—Dante's, Chekhov's or Tolstoy's—is fine indeed. His comments on teaching, pornography and the novel—subjects on which a sensible position is lent force by radical fashion—are consistently engaging and nicely balanced." D. J. Gordon

ELLIOTT, G. P.—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p28 F 6 '72 950w

"In a prose packed with qualifications [Elliott] explores the irremediable ambiguity of moral issues. . . . Several lively pieces on the novel as a literary form urge us to value the inexhaustible moral variety, of good fiction. Most of these essays are marked by Elliott's shrewd sense of history, his freedom from tentatiousness, and his bright commonsensical wit. . . . Sometimes his desire to resist the most tempting, subversive aspects of modernist literature leads him to distort the achievements of writers such as Flaubert, Joyce, and Eliot. Although he admits that modernism produced marvels, Elliott is glad to see it go." Lawrence Graver

Sat R 55:43 Ja 15 '72 850w

ELLIOTT, GEORGE P. Muriel; a novel. 155p $5.95 Dutton

SBN 0-525-16140-6 LC 74-158607

This "is the story of a possessive woman, of her husband and two children. As it chronicles the collapse of one American family, it conveys the atmosphere and attitudes of small-town life. . . . Spanning four decades, Muriel also reveals the momentous changes in American culture, especially as they relate to the family." (Publisher's note)

"From beginning to end, Muriel is a spare, deadly accurate portrait of joylessness and mediocrity practiced as a virtue: Muriel is their frightened, proper, passive, asexual, not-very-bright embodiment, in whom all the bitter emptiness of the Protestant ethic is encompassed. . . . I read this novel with fascination, and greatly admire Elliott's skill at conveying his characters and their peculiarly American world. And yet, I can't imagine recommending it to anyone except, medicinally, someone who is herself a Muriel." Sara Blackburn

Book World p10 F 20 '72 210w

"The writing is deliberately flat, to reflect the lack of imagination of all the characters. This sort of book is risky to write, and Elliott does not succeed completely. The early sections of the book are unconvincing; Muriel is too much the stereotyped girl. . . . However, as she grows older, the reader becomes more involved, and the last section, which shows her as an old woman, widowed, obese, and senile, is quite powerful. In spite of its weaknesses, Muriel is definitely worth reading." S. B. Pfeiffer

Library J 97:1459 Ap 15 '72 130w

Reviewed by Peter Wolfe

Nation 214:730 Je 5 '72 1050w

Reviewed by Roger Sale

N Y Rev of Books 18:3 My 4 '72 1150w

"The book is exceptionally short, yet reaches through space and generations as though it were an epic chronicle. It is not like any book I have seen for quite some time. . . . But for the sake of 'Muriel' [Elliott] has rightly chosen a cliché-ridden idiom, almost terminally folksy, studded with 'cripes' and 'land-o-goshen' and straws that break camels' backs and people who 'look as though you'd swallowed a dill pickle whole.' By some most curious alchemy, the reader does not balk at this language, but rather lets it support a more subtle structure of imagery." Geoffrey Wolff

N Y Times Bk R p5 Ap 16 '72 700w

Reviewed by Burton Bernstein

Sat R 55:74 Ap 8 '72 400w

ELLIOTT, SARAH M. Our dirty air. 64p 11 $3.95 Messner

614 Air—Pollution—Juvenile literature

ISBN 0-671-32467-5 LC 70-141833

This is an "account of the causes of air pollution, instances of death from pollution poisoning, and the urgency of solving the problem, which pinpoints 1970 as a particularly dangerous period. Elliott demonstrates that dirty air in such countries as the United States and Japan has a measurable effect on other parts of the world, outlines the roles of both governments and individuals, and suggests procedures for readers. [Index]. Grades four to six." (Library J)

"[Elliott presents] a straightforward, sobering account of the causes of air pollution. . . . Although the reluctance and procrastination on the part of polluters in implementing solutions is insufficiently explained, this title, liberally illustrated with black-and-white photographs, can be used profitably by a younger audience than would read [L.] Kavalier's Dangerous Air [BRD 1968]." Margaret Bush

Library J 96:4184 D 15 '71 120w

"Succinct and businesslike, this is one of the best of several books on the subject for younger readers." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 54:46 D 11 '71 70w

ELLIS, ABRAHAM. The social security fraud. 200p $7.95 Arlington house

368.4 Insurance, Social

ISBN 0-87000-093-4

LC 75-115346

The author, a lawyer, criticizes the promise and performance of the Social Security Program.

"An excellent case is made that our [social security] system is too tightly geared to risky assumptions of constant expansion of GNP and population, and persistent deficit spending. Too much, however, is either simplistic propaganda or disconnected obiter dicta. . . . Style is disorganized and wandering. A distinct disservice to advocates of needed reform." Choice 8:1384 D '71 100w

"Although Ellis may have some perfectly valid criticisms of the Social Security program in the U.S., including the near-fraudulent use of the word insurance and the lack of adequate reserve funds to back payments, his book is so full of undocumented remarks and sweeping statements that its good points are virtually obliterated. . . . Even though aimed at the layman, the book is notably lacking in acceptable bibliographic references; in some spots references are fully documented, in others they are not documented at all. . . . [The program] must be examined thoroughly. Ellis' book does not do the job." Paula Kaufman

Library J 95:2795 S 1 '70 120w

ELLIS, ALEC. Library services for young people in England and Wales, 1830-1970. 198p 11 $10 Pergamon

027.62 Libraries, Young adults'. Libraries, Children's. Libraries—England. Libraries—Wales

ISBN 0-08-016586-9

LC 77-151095

This is "an examination of library services for children and young people. . . . Grouped by 7 chapters into seven periods: 'The Pioneering Years 1830-1880,' 'The Educational Impetus 1881-1990,' 'The Edwardian Interlude 1901-1914,' 'The Years of Change and Challenge 1915-1927,' 'Years of Depression and War 1928-1944,' 'The Brave New World 1945-1959,' 'A Professional Approach 1960-1970.'" (Library Q)

"This is a worthy attempt to present the whole picture of children's library service over a period of almost a century and a half—its frustrations and triumphs. For the author it has meant scanning mountains of library records, minutes, and journals, and voluminous research. It is a careful study diligently pursued but difficult to read. The somewhat confused style may be responsible for this. . . . Nothing on the scale of Mr. Ellis's has been attempted before for English children's library service as far as I know, and as such [it] will furnish useful material. The lengthy Bibliography is valuable in itself and would be of particular use in an English library." Marguerite Bagshaw

Library Q 42:269 Ap '72 600w

"It would perhaps be overstating . . . [the author's] achievement to call his book a history. The historian collects his facts, puts them into a meaningful order, and draws general conclusions from them. When Mr Ellis on rare occasions ventures upon a generalization or an opinion he is apt to be wrong. . . . [He] sadly fails [to inject] life into a fascinating subject. . . . There are many names in this book but no personalities; not a hint that the children's library services of this country were built by people who suffered weariness and disappointment but who also put into, and drew from, their work a great deal of fun." TLS p788 J1 2 '71 180w

ELLIS, FRANK H., ed. Poems on affairs of state, v6. See Poems on affairs of state, v6

ELLIS, HARRY B. Israel: one land, two peoples. 183p il maps $4.95 Crowell

956.94 Israel—History. Jewish-Arab relations
ISBN 0-690-45028-1 LC 73-175104

"This book tells the story of the Jews and their 'promised land' from the time of Abraham through the periods of exile and return and the development of modern Israel. It describes current political and social conditions in Israel and traces the roots of conflicting Arab and Jewish claims to the land from ancient times to the present." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"It's been quite a few years since Harry B. Ellis was covering the Middle East for the Monitor (he is now assigned to Bonn) but it has never lost its fascination for him. His latest book, Israel One Land, Two Peoples for young people will also be welcomed by any adult looking for a simple but uncondescending history of modern Israel complete with photographs, maps, facts and a touch of poetry." P. M.

Christian Science Monitor pB6 My 4 '72 90w [YA]

"Mr. Ellis produces the facts. The effect is cumulative. His prose is clean. He makes no comments. He is concerned with modern Israel. Yet he sketches enough of the past to stimulate thought. . . . [His book] helps fill a gap—one that has been painstakingly ignored by our educators. Jewish children don't need to be told. The rest of us do." William Stevenson

N Y Times Bk R p8 O 15 '72 430w [YA]

ELLIS, MEL. This mysterious river. 208p $5.95 Holt

ISBN 0-03-091347-0 LC 74-182753

"The river is the Rock River in southern Wisconsin, the time summer 1932. Hammond Drumm, age twelve, has impulsively stolen ten dollars from the church collection plate to buy a bicycle, and he spends his summer trying to replace the money and avoid confessing his theft to the priest. The small town where he and his family live is beginning to feel the effects of the Depression." (Book World) "Age twelve and up." (N Y Times Bk R)

"This brief novel succeeds best as an evocation of plants, animals, wind, water, mud, storm, sky, land—the whole world of the river. The writing is sometimes self-consciously poetic, but it isn't coy or evasive. Mel Ellis obviously loves what he is describing and can make us see and sense it without avoiding ugliness or trying to make it Eden-like. Death and waste and predators are a part of it too. This isn't a children's book: We see beyond and understand more than Ham does about his encounters on the river, but Ellis doesn't moralize through the eyes of a child or attempt to arrange our understanding to be judgmental." Alan Hislop

Book World p5 My 21 '72 340w

"Not only is Ham aware of the rich variety of flora and fauna—of sights, and sounds, and smells—in his summer environment, but each episode in the story is centered around Ham's relationship either with members of his family or with neighbors. . . . The author's conscious awareness of the procedures of nature shows itself in his frequent references to physiological processes, and part of his power in the presentation of the growing boy's experiences and development is revealed in his frank allusions to Ham's incipient sexuality. Most important of all, Ham—like the author—learns 'that all life is transient and only dreams can bridge the muddy rivers of despair.' Essentially for high-school readers, the book suggests the intense blend of sensuous and moral awareness that one finds in the novels of Mauriac." P. H.

Horn Bk 48:375 Ag '72 270w

Reviewed by A. B. Master

Library J 97:2245 Je 15 '72 90w [YA]

"I love to read about young hellions, about Huck Finn and Tom Sawyer, the Katzenjammer Kids and Ham Drumm. . . . The adventures of Hammond Drumm are high comedy, despite the grimness of the Great Depression and the stern Catholicism of that period. . . . The novel is rich in the earthy details of a rural life long gone. . . . This is a fine novel for teen-agers—not to mention parents like myself who boast of being poor and surviving the Depression." Robert Hood

N Y Times Bk R p8 J1 23 '72 350w [YA]

ELLIS, RICHARD E. The Jeffersonian crisis: courts and politics in the young republic. 377p $9.75 Oxford 973.4 U.S.—Politics and government—1783-1809. Courts—U.S.

LC 70-141844

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by L. R. Gerlach

New Eng Q 45:141 Mr '72 1050w

Reviewed by Paul Goodman

Pol Sci Q 87:661 D '72 1100w

TLS p11 Ja 7 '72 600w

ELLIS, RICHARD N. General Pope and U.S. Indian policy. 287p il $10 Univ. of N.Mex. press

970.5 Indians of North America—Government relations. Pope, John. Indians of North America—Wars
ISBN 0-8263-0191-6 LC 72-129306

"This book tells the story of federal relationships with Western Indians as seen from the . . . position of General John Pope, U.S. military commander in the West, from the time of the Civil War to his retirement in 1886." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Those students and scholars who are acquainted with the U.S. Army and Indians of this period will already be aware of much of the information. For those who want a general overall view of the [Indian Wars] . . . the book would be useful. Ellis has done a craftsmanlike job in bringing Pope out into the light. . . . Extensive section of notes. Primarily for the very enthusiastic reader of Western military operations and of former Indian problems. For college libraries with special sections on these subjects, an excellent addition."

Choice 8:605 Je '71 190w

"This study is based on extensive research in manuscripts, newspapers, and published materials, and it is presented in a lively style (despite some repetition and the fact that Pope was not particularly glamorous subject). The absence of maps hinders understanding in places. . . . The limitation of this publication to Indian policy is somewhat disappointing. Ellis does, of necessity, venture into other aspects of Pope's career. Also, he covers many aspects of the 'Indian wars' often not directly related to Pope and which have been presented many times by others; Pope's direct connection with Indian policy and his reform program could be presented more effectively in an article." L. E. Oliva

J Am Hist 58:764 D '71 500w

ELLMANN, RICHARD. Ulysses on the Liffey. 208p il $8.95 Oxford

823 Joyce, James—Ulysses
ISBN 0-19-519665-1 LC 79-190477

The author seeks to show "how Joyce reconstituted the classical Odyssey with medieval elaborateness and modern meaning. Much of the evidence is internal, but he also makes the first use of some important indications by Joyce himself. . . . The book also discloses how Ulysses accommodates and discommodates the literary and philosophical tradition. It demonstrates that the presences of Homer, of 'Daunt, Gouty, and Shopkeeper,' of Blake, Shelley, and Yeats, of Aristotle, Bruno, Vico, and Hume, form a shadowy congeries behind the incidents of Joyce's novel." (Publisher's note) Index.

ELLMANN, RICHARD—Continued

Reviewed by W. E. McNelly
America 127:157 S 9 '72 600w

Reviewed by C. G. Anderson
Book World p6 My 21 '72 650w
Choice 9:967 O '72 220w

Reviewed by Victor Howes
Christian Science Monitor pB8 N ■ '72
600w

Economist 243:suppl 11 Ap ■ '72 150w

Reviewed by R. R. Harris
Library J 97:3314 O 15 '72 280w

"In his new book Richard Ellmann offers a superb exegesis of the 20th century's most famous novel, a critical study superior to all but a handful of essays and equal to any of them. . . . In the elaborate schemes of bodily organs, colors and technics which Joyce so carefully followed, Ellmann sees 'a silent, unspoken portrayal of an archetypal man who would never appear and yet whose body would slowly materialize as the book progressed, linguified as it were into life.' Not every reader will agree that these assembled organs come to life. . . . But few readers will fail to respond themselves to Ellmann's liveliness, his very Joycean 'jocoseriousness.'" Max Byrd
Nation 214:795 Je 19 '72 1150w
New Repub 166:31 Je ■ '72 600w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett
New Statesman 83:243 F 25 '72 2100w

"[Ellmann is concerned] with Joyce's meaning (about which the writer was reticent) rather than his means. Provided we go along with him, a good deal of what might otherwise seem mere arbitrary pattern-weaving can consequently be interpreted, and justified, as significant form. . . . The main strength of the book lies in the insight, subtlety and tact with which the corresponding problems are first analyzed and thought through. It is also, one should add, a highly entertaining book, wittily written and enlivened by some ingenious detective-work. . . . As far as it goes, the final result is as distinguished as anyone who knows Mr. Ellmann's biography James Joyce [BRD 1959] would expect; lucid, well-proportioned, humane." John Gross
N Y Times Bk ■ p5 My 14 '72 1500w

"In Ellmann's new work . . . a sustained effort [is] undertaken to translate Joyce's rhythms, images, intricate narrative, and dramatic structures into 'propositions'—wisdom articulated—that are open to direct inspection and assessment. The propositions that emerge range, predictably, through the standard Aristotelian fields—ethics, politics, esthetics, metaphysics. Professor Ellmann sets them forth in three interchapters that separate his discussion of major divisions of the novel. . . . His interchapters at once offer striking clarifications of the groundthemes of the novel and illuminate the fundamental moral and imaginative unities of a great creative mind. . . . [The deepest insight] is that which edges out from Joycean willingness to accept Everyman as an artist to the set of propositions concerning love and art in life." Benjamin De Mott
Sat R 55:67 My 13 '72 3450w

"There is a small group of people, not all of them academics, who enjoy puzzling out the esoteric levels of Ulysses [BRD 1934], and of Finnegans Wake [BRD 1939]. . . . It is for this happy minority that Richard Ellmann has written his admirable explication, based on the T. S. Eliot Memorial Lectures that he gave last year at the University of Kent. . . . There is nothing in this reading which is not thoroughly Joycean, and Joyce would probably have approved of almost everything in it; and yet it is an extremely imaginative commentary, which solves trivial and quadrivial problems, such as those raised by Molly Bloom's menstruation and birthplace, by bold leaps of thought. . . . The only flaw in Professor Ellmann's exposition is that it is itself sometimes too oblique." TLS p310 Mr 17 '72 900w

Reviewed by Kenneth Connelly
Yale R 62:94 O '72 5550w

ELLSBERG, DANIEL. Papers on the war. 309p $7.95; pa $2.95 Simon & Schuster 559.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961-. U.S.—Foreign relations—Vietnam
SBN 671-21185-4; 671-21186-2 (pa)
LC 72-81350

In these papers, the author argues that the Vietnamese Conflict has been "America's longest, most futile, and least defensible war. . . . [He describes] the pattern of decision-making with respect to Indochina that runs from Truman's Administration to Nixon's. . . . Mr. Ellsberg argues that this pattern has been fostered by political expediencies that have governed since our 'loss' of China in 1950. . . . [Other papers discuss] the invasion of Laos, the internal politics of South Vietnam, the failure of rural pacification, the American way of war, and the renewed escalation in the spring of 1972. In 'The Responsibility of Officials in a Criminal War,' Mr. Ellsberg describes his own career in order to explain how bureaucrats and politicians screen out the moral dimension of their policies." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Alfred Hennelly
America 127:155 S 9 '72 1300w

"The author says he [had] been 'reporting failures, criticizing mistakes, protesting evils, yet felt no personal responsibility for those evils.' Here he pounces on them. He says: the government is guilty of war crimes. . . . He contends that 'like Kennedy and Johnson before him, Nixon believes that he cannot hold the White House for a second term unless he holds Saigon through the first.' . . . If you can survive a great deal of critical attitude, the book may, after all, be useful in displaying the character of the author, in spite of his disclaimer of this result—or aim. . . . The book's value is seriously damaged by the lack of an index." Elbridge Colby
Best Sell 32:211 Ag 1 '72 430w
Choice 9:1202 N '72 160w

"Dr. Daniel Ellsberg's new collection of his writings could just as easily be called 'The Making of the Pentagon Papers,' for it clearly outlines the arguments, concerns and frustrations that led the former hawk to turn over the top-secret Pentagon Papers [BRD 1971, 1972] to the press. Originally written between 1965 and 1971, these journal samplings, book reviews, and articles basically react to and rehash the ever-perplexing questions of war and military intervention. Sprinkled with too few personal reflections, the book often lapses into heavy intellectual debate. Such heaviness, however, does not outweigh the book's value to any student of current history." R. W.
Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 2 '72
90w

Reviewed by D. D. Buck
Library J 97:2559 Ag '72 330w

"These papers favor us with the texts of . . . reports [Ellsberg] dispatched home [from Vietnam]; . . . They are models of cool observation, and could, if attended, have done much to separate the fact of failure from the fancy of success. . . . [The book includes] the paper 'The Quagmire Myth and the Stalemate Machine,' which he offered before the 1971 annual meeting of the American Political Science Association. It was admired there and unnoticed in most other places. . . . The Pentagon Papers have no point nearly so useful as the one Ellsberg has drawn from them; his thesis is reprinted here in expanded form and is worth more than any confession he may have withheld from us." Murray Kempton

N Y Times Bk R p1 J1 23 '72 2350w

"These papers do cover a good bit of time and, quite literally, a lot of ground. . . . Though [Ellsberg] does not talk very much about himself, the papers clearly show him as an exceptionally intelligent man who became painfully unhappy about American policy because he thought (first) that it was stupid and (second) that it was wicked. He is quite frank about his own sense of guilt for the part he played, but his writing is never overwrought or rhetorical. It is precise, graphic, and sober—first-class all the way."

New Yorker 48:83 Ag 5 '72 180w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 80:80 J1 24 '72 700w

Reviewed by Jonathan Mirsky
Sat R 55:54 Ap 19 '72 800w
Time 100:71 Ag 14 '72 800w

ELLUL, JACQUES. Autopsy of revolution; tr. from the French by Patricia Wolf. 300p $8.95 Knopf

323 Revolutions
ISBN 0-394-47131-8 LC 73-154944

The "French social philosopher here treats revolts and revolution. But his purpose is not to construct ■ sociology of the several revolutions or ■ general history of revolution. Instead he provides ■ synthesis which treats revolution developments in both their historical and intellectual contexts. The whole conceptual analysis is ultimately designed to offer an explication and comprehension of contemporary phenomena." (Library J)

"Through the 18th century revolutions were essentially protests against the prevailing drift of historical development. . . . Then Marx particularly conceptualized revolution as the essential vehicle for inevitable historical development. To Ellul this effort is an 'unpardonable deception,' and in a brief concluding section he advocates the need for a more traditional revolution against the pervasive and interrelated growth of statism and technology. Throughout Ellul exhibits an impressive knowledge of the literature on rebellion in modern history, and he assumes a considerable acquaintance with this material on the part of his readers as well."

Choice 9:716 J1/Ag '72 170w

Reviewed by Richard Schickel
Harper 244:96 Ap '72 3650w

"As with all of the author's works, the analysis is penetrating, carefully founded in its documentary base and quite brilliant in its projection of ideas and theories. The work will be an important addition to contemporary thought." Paul Wasserman

Library J 96:3328 O 15 '71 100w

"One of [this book's] central themes is a sharp polemic against Marx as a sort of technocrat of the revolution who has no sense of spontaneous process. Such an image may be relevant to the Marx of French communism . . . but it has little to do with the historical Marx. . . . In Ellul there is too little sense of history and a mechanistic counterposing of centralism and decentralism which ignores Marx's sense of a historic process in which such contraries mingle with each other." Michael Harrington

Nation 213:694 D 27 '71 1000w

"[Ellul's] first two chapters . . . serve him mainly to set up some distinctions he needs later, notably between 'revolt' and 'revolution.' [Here] he hits out right and left against inadequate interpreters of revolution, particularly Albert Camus, Hannah Arendt, and, with supreme contempt, Herbert Marcuse. . . . One takes away from [this] some refreshing bits of clear thinking. . . . It is in the next two chapters, though, that the book makes exciting reading for conservatives. Under the title 'Revolution Betrayed' [Ellul] attacks Marx with arguments that go to the heart of the matter. . . . The book ends with what amounts to an anarchist manifesto, for ■ revolution that 'must be made . . . as a moral imperative.' At this point, Ellul makes no more sense than those whom he has criticized." Gerhart Niemeyer

Nat R 24:104 F ■ '72 3200w

ELLUL, JACQUES. False presence of the kingdom; tr. by C. Edward Hopkin. 211p $4.95 Seabury

261.1 Christian life. Church and social problems

ISBN 0-8164-0235-3 LC 77-163969

"In an earlier book, Presence of the Kingdom, Jacques Ellul discussed the imperative need of Christ's presence through his church in the modern world. In False Presence of the Kingdom he examines how Christians can misunderstand the distinctive basis of that presence and end up by conforming the church and themselves to the world. By examining numerous programs, activities, and statements in which the church has attempted to be contemporary and relevant and to address itself to the world's problems, he explains . . . which of them is outside the church's vocation—and why. . . . [and] what does constitute the church's vocation to the world." (Publisher's note)

"The author illustrates his points with examples from the Reformed Church and with specific reference to the Algerian situation. In a sense this dates the work (the original appeared in France in 1963) but it is relatively easy to make applications to more recent problems and to the United States and to the Catholic Church. . . . I found this a difficult book to read. At times, Mr. Ellul's theses come through loud and clear; at other times, he struggles too hard to make ■ point that somehow, in the end, does not come through. The book is primarily negative (as the title might suggest). The author pleads such a strong case against the wrong type of presence that the most obvious conclusion is that there should be no presence of the kingdom in the modern world. The issues raised might need raising and any churchman 'work.'" C. J. Keffer

Best Sell 32:11 Ap 1 '72 500w

"While not central to the Ellulian canon, this comment on French Reformed (and other) Christianity is in character: it scorns cheap adaptation to the world and seeks biblical bases for worldly engagements and disengagements."

Christian Century 89:314 Mr 15 '72 30w

"Ellul is very much the rage in theological circles these days. Many viewed his The Meaning of the City [BRD 1970], as the most important theological work of 1970. . . . [He] will be misunderstood, maligned, and dismissed for his intransigence and one-sidedness, but he will surely continue to be discussed. And this work is one of his most discussible." D. W. Dayton

Library J 97:1026 Mr 15 '72 120w

ELMSLIE, KENWARD. Motor disturbance; pub. for the Frank O'Hara foundation. 75p $4.95; pa $1.95 Columbia univ. press

811

ISBN 0-231-03612-4; 0-231-03613-2 (pa)

LC 78-172173

A collection of poems by the winner of the 1971 Frank O'Hara Award for Poetry.

"At best a mediocre book of poems. . . . Elmslie is a curious combination of verbal strain and yet effects that are excruciatingly flat and prosaic."

Choice 9:644 J1/Ag '72 50w

"[Elmslie's] work is characterized by bizarre imagery and the use of certain traditional devices of diction, especially assonance. . . . He loves to accumulate layers of unrelated things. Suggestion, the tangential, the put-on—they're his forte. I find least successful those ineluctable. But interesting things happen poems that may be called surrealist, where the imagery too often seems gratuitous, not when his language is working." Sanford Dorbin

Library J 96:4016 D 1 '71 60w

ELSEN, ALBERT. The drawings of Rodin [by] Albert Elsen [and] J. Kirk T. Varnedoe; with additional contributions by Victoria Thorson and Elisabeth Chase Geissbuhler. 191p il $13.50 Praeger

741.092 Rodin, Auguste

LC 76-159409

These five essays seek to "confirm the artist's skill as a draftsman and clarify problems of dating and authenticity. . . . [The book] served as the catalogue for a major exhibition at the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C., and at The Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum in New York." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography.

"[One of the] purposes of this volume . . . [is] to establish some principles by which the work of the numerous forgers can be distinguished from Rodin's. . . . [The] chronological study by Varnedoe, which traces Rodin's drawings from 1854 on . . . is the most valuable part of the book. . . . The concluding essay, [also] by Varnedoe, a systematic attempt to deal with the problem of forgeries, is an interesting introduction. [There are] one hundred fifty-three illustrations (four in color), adequately reproduced and well related to the text . . . full description and documentation under each. . . . [This catalogue] is a useful introduction and can be recommended."

Choice 9:262 Ap '72 190w

"True Rodins are separated from false, his iconographical themes are recovered; ■ celebration of Rodin's draftsmanship emerges, despite the book's pedagogic form, which is like a graduate seminar." Lawrence Alloway

Nation 213:665 D 20 '71 30w

ELSOM, JOHN. Theatre outside London. 232p il pl $9 Fernhill

792 Theater—Great Britain. Theater—Little Theater movement

LC 171-8615951

This book describes "the current status of the movement for good theater beyond London that was established early in the century

ELSOM, JOHN—Continued

by wealthy patrons—Barry Jackson in Birmingham, Miss A. E. F. Horniman in Manchester. In today's Britain, the government, acting through the Arts Council, has become the patron. The theater itself . . . has become more concerned with its society; as new theater techniques have been assimilated, more dynamic modes of production have come into use. The author discusses the plays, the kinds of theater and companies that present them, and the . . . ritual which must be pursued to receive government largesse." (Choice) Index.

"An extremely useful work for any student of contemporary British theater. . . . Elsom offers a useful case history for Americans of the ways in which theater can be developed by an enlightened government that places the arts higher in its priorities than does ours. This work also demonstrates the difficulty of finding equitable ways to allocate funds. . . . Photographs."

Choice 8:1464 Ja '72 170w

Reviewed by Richard Findlater

Encounter 37:89 Jl '71 250w

"[The author's] chief concern is with trends and policy and that of the Arts Council in particular. His attitude is that of the candid friend. Failure as well as success is duly acknowledged. It is an exploration of an area in which the beneficiaries of patronage hesitate to tread for obvious reasons. Mr Elsom has no such inhibitions." Matthew Coady

New Statesman 82:88 Jl 16 '71 600w

"[Elsom] rather underestimates the difference between progressive theatres run by millionaire enthusiasts and those of today. But it would be hard to envisage a clearer analysis of the positive and negative results brought about by the present complex subsidy system, or of the tensions between artistic directors and governing boards. . . . Elsom also succeeds in finding a formula to distinguish the qualities of the main reps without passing adverse judgments against any of them. . . . The main issue he takes up is the much-bruited Theatre Investment Fund (designed as an aid to the failing commercial circuit in the provinces) which he takes apart point by point and leaves in a heap of rubble. . . . Within its modest scale the book is remarkably thorough, and includes a valuable alphabet of reps containing the basic facts of every important house in the country."

TLS p695 Je 18 '71 700w

ELTON, G. R. Policy and police; the enforcement of the Reformation in the age of Thomas Cromwell. 446p $19.50 Cambridge

942.05 Great Britain—Politics and government—Tudors, 1485-1603. Reformation. Treason
ISBN 0-521-08383-4 LC 79-172831

Elton deals with the "opposition to the religious reformation of Henry VIII . . . [and] describes the legal dragooning by Thomas Cromwell that was necessary in order to force Englishmen to accept the new religion, the break of ancient ties with Rome, the Acts of Supremacy and Succession." (Choice) Index.

"[The author uses] primary sources almost exclusively. . . . [His study] revises the old view of such historians as Pollard, Mackie, and Fisher that the transition from Roman Catholicism to English Protestantism was facile for the bulk of Englishmen. . . . [While this work] presupposes an extensive knowledge of Tudor history, it serves as a vital supplement to the undergraduate library already well stocked in this field."

Choice 9:704 Jl/Ag '72 130w

"This long, detailed and beautifully written book . . . is vastly entertaining as well as instructive. . . . [Elton] is most convincing when defending Cromwell's reputation [but] is less successful in demonstrating the uniqueness of . . . [this] period. His awe-inspiring researches in the archives serve chiefly to evoke echoes of similar situations, before and since. . . . What stands out in this book is the colour and robustness of ordinary English speech; a Henrician prelude to the full glories of Elizabethan language. Elton needlessly apologises for the number and length of the stories he has to tell; they are, in fact, a continual fascination. . . . [He] concludes with a splendid chapter on the two outstanding protagonists, More and Cromwell." Paul Johnson

New Statesman 83:603 My 5 '72 1100w

"Among the author's qualities are relevance, conciseness, accuracy, relentless pursuit of exact detail, lucidity of exposition, precision as well as vigour of argument, and a certain flexible, pragmatic shrewdness. Interest is evenly sustained, and the quality of the writing very seldom falters. Professor Elton's limitations are perhaps the obverse of his qualities. Where wider considerations of ideological principle or of social development impinge upon his theme, he sometimes appears to draw back. . . . A complex matter, but one of some substance in relation to the general thesis of the book, involves the jurisdiction of different courts in cases of treason. . . . A judicious and exhaustive count is undertaken of all those accused of treason and related offences. . . . More than any other single book, Policy and Police tells us how law and government actually worked, and what it was really like to live under the rule of Henry VIII and his great bureaucrat minister."

TLS p296 Mr 17 '72 1250w

EMANUEL, ELIZABETH. Baby baboon: pictures by Bernard Garbutt. 60p $4.50; lib bdg $4.33 Golden gate

599 Baboons—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-87464-174-8; 0-87464-175-6 (lib bdg)
LC 78-157852

An account of the first year in the life of a baby Olive baboon in Kenya. "Ages eight to twelve." (N Y Times Book R)

"This well-written title describes the life of baboons in their natural habitat . . . and follows [the baby's] growth to near maturity. Clear descriptions of the complex social structure and intelligent behavior of baboons should dispel much of the misunderstanding concerning these often maligned primates. Black-and-white drawings are accurately and skillfully done . . . [and the] book avoids misleading oversimplifications about animal behavior."

Muriel Kolb
Library J 97:1169 Mr 15 '72 90w

"A straightforward rather dry account. . . . The book covers the life style of the baboon troop and the mother's relationship to her offspring and others of the troop. . . . It's hard to tell for whom this book is designed. In appearance it seems to be for the under-10 set, but the presentation is better suited for those over 10."

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ja 9 '72 90w

EMBODEN, WILLIAM A. Narcotic plants [by] William A. Emboden, Jr. 168p 1l col 1l $12.95 Macmillan (N Y)

581.6 Botany, Medical. Narcotics. Plant lore
LC 77-173691

"This account of drug plants is divided into five sections according to the effects produced and/or the kind of narcotic involved. Regional sources and local uses are given for each drug." (Library J) Bibliography.

"I have learned from Dr Emboden what every jungle simpleton knows, that while there's no kick like the nature kick, you have to know where to look. It takes a botanist and a scholar of Dr Emboden's calibre to track down some of the most mind-bending plants that make cannabis and the opium poppy seem almost innocuous, and to include photographs, paintings and drawings of almost all of them, although a few remain hard to identify."

Economist 243:70 My 6 '72 370w

"Emboden deftly blends folklore and facts into a work with timely applications. The color photos of living material and the botanical plates are excellent; some are depicted for the first time in the popular literature. Readers may start upon seeing species of Lobelia, Coleus, Salvia, and Cineraria included. An appendix contains an authoritative outline of the botany and chemistry of plants. This solid survey of drug sources will interest a large audience." C. R. Long

Library J 97:2414 Jl '72 100w

EMERICK, KENNETH FRED. War resisters Canada; the world of the American military-political refugees, by Kenneth Fred Emerick, with the help of the Maple Leaf 33; a foreword by Charles Owen Rice. 320p $4.95 Knox, Pa. Free press

355.2 Conscientious objectors. Americans in Canada. Vietnamese conflict, 1961—Conscientious objectors. U.S.—Immigration and emigration. Canada—Immigration and emigration

ISBN 0-912822-00-7 LC 70-188682

The author who "attempts to treat this subject through the systematic . . . selection of interview subjects, [suggests] that American resisters come from normal, loving homes in every part of the U.S. . . . mainly from the urban and suburban middle class. They can have any political or religious background (but rarely fundamentalist) and, though young (the average age is 22), represent a wide range of skills and job experiences. . . . The story is told in the resisters' own words; they describe the decision-making process, the process of immigration, parental reactions, and their new Canadian environment." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Emerick's obvious sympathy with the young men does not stand in the way of a factual presentation, and although the work would have benefited from editorial pruning, it will be a basic resource on the subject." J. M. Elrod

Library J 97:2197 Je 15 '72 200w

"The author systematically interviewed thirty-three—out of maybe 75,000—draft resisters and military deserters now living in Canada. . . . The tone of the book is sometimes patronizing ('a lad of only 19') and often tendentious; Emerick wants to show that the resisters are not sons of disreputable deviants or themselves 'bums, freaks, cowards or sad and hungry cop-outs,' and especially not revolutionaries—those stay in the States.' . . . The excerpts from the interviews are nevertheless interesting. . . . But many of the author's conclusions, such as 'less than half the resisters had any remorse,' seem meaningless. Another interviewer might have gotten more complex responses. . . . [Still] Emerick's raw material itself deserves a place among the literature of resistance and conscientious objection."

N Y Rev of Books 18:40 My 4 '72 300w

EMERSON, RALPH WALDO. The collected works of Ralph Waldo Emerson; v 1, Nature, addresses, and lectures; introd. and notes by Robert E. Spiller; text established by Alfred R. Ferguson. ii $15 Harvard univ. press

814
ISBN 0-674-13970-4 (v 1) LC 70-158429

"The selections, collected in 1849, are the same as in the Centenary edition [published by Houghton] vol. I of the Complete works [BRD 1905], beginning with Nature and consisting mainly of addresses and lectures. The copy-text is the earliest printed form, there being no surviving manuscript versions. It is based on a collation of all American editions published in Emerson's lifetime and the two posthumous ones. All notes, textual variants and alterations, etc. are placed at the back of the book. . . . [The introduction] traces Emerson's transcendental ideas of 1832-38, his 'crisis of faith' of 1838-44, and the gradual evolution of a pragmatic idealism out of his earlier Platonic idealism." (Choice) Index.

"The first in the new Harvard edition of Emerson's Collected works, this volume presents the most definitive, critical, and unmodernized text of Emerson's major published writings from the years 1836-42, apart from the two series of Essays (1841, 1844)."

Choice 9:1128 N '72 170w

"Working under the guiding principles of the National Endowment for the Humanities and the Center for Editions of American Authors of the Modern Language Association, Spiller and Ferguson have produced a 'critical' and unmodernized text as close to Emerson's original intent as modern bibliographical research can come. Also included are a brief but perceptive bibliographical introduction, some very helpful annotations, and the seemingly inevitable CEAA textual apparatus which, while essential in creating the text, is of interest only to the scholar." Walter Harding

Library J 97:2399 Jl '72 120w

EMERSON, RALPH WALDO. Talks with Emerson. See Woodbury, C. J.

EMERY, WALTER B. Broadcasting and government: responsibilities and regulations. rev ed 569p $12.50 Mich. state univ. press

343 Radio—Laws and regulations. Television—Laws and regulations
SBN 87013-159-1 LC 70-154335

"The revision eliminates a few obsolete topics (such as CONELRAD) and adds or expands matters of technological, social and economic concern that have developed since 1961 regarding radio, television, CATV, boosters, translators, spectrum allocation, satellites, and licensing. The abbreviated appendix eliminates outdated material and listing of codes, but adds . . . sections pertaining to the fairness doctrine, community ascertainment needs, and lists of available FCC publications. The index also is . . . rewritten." (Choice) Bibliography. Index. For first edition see BRD 1962.

"Emery's book maintains its leadership as a basic, readable work concerning broadcasting as regulated by the FCC and other agencies. . . . Emery, former FCC attorney and examiner, is internationally renowned for his thirty-five years of writing on legal, regulatory, and social aspects of the broadcast media. Comprehensively enlarged, 87 pages longer than its predecessor, the 1971 edition remains a bargain at $12.50. Useful, not only as a text for advanced students, but also as a reference tool for broadcasters, journalists, researchers, and professionals involved with the mass media."

Choice 9:73 Mr '72 150w

Reviewed by R. R. Harris

Library J 96:3595 N 1 '71 50w

EMMANUEL, ARGHIRI. Unequal exchange; a study of the imperialism of trade; with add. comments by Charles Bettelheim; tr. from the French by Brian Pearce. 453p $16.50 Monthly review

382 International economic relations. Economic conditions
SBN 85345-152-4 LC 78-158920

Emmanuel seeks to show that international trade sustains unfavorable economic conditions among underdeveloped nations. "He concludes that wealth does not diffuse from center to periphery, equalizing factor returns and living standards in the process; but rather it tends to concentrate at the center, at selected growth poles. Thus the Marxian forecasts, largely unrealistic with industrialized nations, are being realized on the scale of the world economy. The six chapters cover domestic and international equilibrium prices, permanent inequality in wage levels, implications of unequal exchange, and comparative costs. The five appendixes include comments by Bettelheim, the author's colleague at the Sorbonne, and Emmanuel's replies." (Library J) Bibliography. Index. Originally published in France in 1969.

"Emmanuel, director of economic studies, University of Paris, integrates a new theory of international trade, reversing the conventional Ricardian assumptions, with the classical, and Marxian, general theory of labor value. . . . Recommended for academic collections in international trade theory." R. E. Will

Library J 97:2034 Je 1 '72 120w

"Emmanuel's immensely stimulating book is required reading for all development economists and Third World Firsters. I cannot pretend to have followed the author through every equation, but the importance is as much political as economic. . . . Third Worlders will want to know what Emmanuel offers them. Let the underdeveloped countries shut themselves up, he recommends, let them curtail imports and exports, and embark on a course of development 'directed towards the internal economy'. The very idea gives the international financial institutions of the West a collective heart attack. But I'm sure it's the right one." Richard Gott

New Statesman 83:397 Mr 24 '72 550w

EMMERICH, HERBERT. Federal organization and administrative management. 304p $6.75 Univ. of Ala. press

353 U.S.—Executive departments
ISBN 0-8173-4813-1 LC 75-185704

"In treating the evolving trend toward effective executive control amid numerous pressures in the opposite direction, [Emmerich] examines the general problem of presidential control over executive management, deals with some historical landmarks of administrative reform between the years 1789 and 1933, and discusses the Brownlow Commission (1937) and the Hoover Commissions (1947 and 1953). . . . The author argues that Roosevelt 'was the president who institutionalized the presidency,' discusses the legislative veto and its effects on executive reorganization, and offers a number of . . . reform proposals." (Library J) Index.

EMMERICH, HERBERT—Continued

"A fascinating, valuable, and exciting study of the reorganization of the Federal administrative structure since 1933. . . . Portions of this study are based on 'unrecorded incidents' and firsthand observations, but here are also solid documentation and probing insight. . . . Should be used as required reading in American government courses. Highly recommended for junior and senior college libraries. Important appendices."

Choice 8:1381 D '71 110w

"Conceived as a revision of the author's Essays on Federal Reorganization [BRD 1951], this work, published posthumously, sheds considerable light on attempts to reorganize the administrative structure and functions of the federal government, especially since 1937. The reader benefits from the author's direct involvement in the process of reforming administrative institutions at the national level, an involvement which began with his participation on President Franklin Roosevelt's Committee on Administrative Management (Brownlow Committee) and continued until Emmerich's death. . . . A valuable book." Kofi Ankamah

Library J 96:3766 N 15 '71 160w

Va Q R 48:lxiii spring '72 130w

EMMERSON, JOHN K. Arms, yen & power; the Japanese dilemma; foreword by Edwin O. Reischauer. 420p $15 Dunellen pub. co.

327.52 Japan—Relations (general) with foreign countries. Japan—Military policy
ISBN 0-8424-0057-5 LC 70-168683

A former U.S. minister to Tokyo discusses the economic and political status of Japan. He then considers the "crucial and interlocking problems facing Japan in the 1970's (its relations with the U.S. and its Asian neighbors, the problem of security and its implication of Japan's becoming a military power once more) and on a cluster of decisions that must be made—including going nuclear." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney

America 126:544 My 20 '72 80w

"This is one of the most far-reaching of the six or eight books on Japanese foreign policy to be published in the United States between 1970 and 1975. . . . The high price of the book, however will limit its use in academic circles where it is most needed. One hopes it can be made available in a cheaper paperback edition for students. . . . The style varies considerably; depth of coverage ranges from excellent on military issues to good on economic ones and shallow on the socio-political aspects. The book could have been improved considerably by more rigorous editing to tighten the overlapping redundancy [and] correction of the few factual errors." D. H. Mendel

Ann Am Acad 402:144 JI '72 900w

Choice 9:561 Je '72 160w

"The great value of the book lies in Emmerson's ability, derived from long experience in Japan, to present the Japanese perceptions of [their] problems. A careful reading of this volume will do a great deal to combat many of the uninformed stereotypes of Japan prevalent in the thinking of European-oriented Americans." E. R. Beauchamp

Library J 97:880 Mr 1 '72 150w

"The merit of Emmerson's book is that he is very well aware of Japanese sensitivities. . . . He suggests that Japanese sensitivity to history, and memories of the 1930's, will lead the Japanese to an appreciation of the need for 'interdependence,' a concept on which he lays great stress. . . . He develops his argument against a . . . broad historical background. . . . [However] Mr. Emmerson, despite (or possibly on account of) long residence in Japan fails to intuit all of what is going on in Japan today. He believes that political stability is likely to be the basic condition in the 1970's, whereas in fact the ruling conservative party, the Liberal Democratic party, has lost much ground in the major cities. . . . Nor does he foresee the difficulties which may arise in the economy in consequence of a low rate of growth." H. S. Stokes

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ap 9 '72 360w

EMMONS, DAVID M. Garden in the grasslands; boomer literature of the central Great Plains. 220p pl $10 Univ. of Neb. press

333 Great Plains—History. Colonization
ISBN 0-8032-0753-0 LC 70-125100

The author "focuses on the efforts of railroads, land speculators, and other interested promoters to entice settlers to establish themselves in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and Wyoming. The 'boomer literature' they generated . . . [attempted] to discredit the concept of the Great American Desert." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"This study would be worthwhile even if it were limited to just a description and analysis of the many tracts used. However, it also deals quite usefully with the relationship of the immigration campaign to the then generally accepted safety-value doctrine as well as with the activities and arguments of the opponents of the idea that ultimately there could be a 'graden of grasslands.' . . . A straightforward, readable, and original study which covers its subject satisfactorily. Good bibliography; good index."

Choice 8:1617 F '72 150w

"[This book] is tightly organized, thoroughly researched and documented, and completely written and edited. . . . Students of immigration, westward expansion, railroad history, land policy, economic history, and the ideas of progress and pastoralism will profit by a reading. One of Emmons' best chapters concerns the impact of the Great Plains cheerleaders on Europe and in the course of the discussion he takes still another stab at the much-abused Homestead Act of 1862. Another achievement is the analysis of the strange yet potent idea that 'rain follows the plow.' How otherwise practical pioneers could come to believe this figment of the boomer imagination reveals much about the basic hopes and fears of the late-nineteenth century." Roderick Nash

J Am Hist 59:158 Je '72 400w

EMPEY, LAMAR T. Explaining delinquency; construction, test, and reformation of a sociological theory [by] LaMar T. Empey with Ronald LaPorte. 223p $12.50 Heath Lexington bks.

364.36 Juvenile delinquency
SBN 669-74641-X LC 70-158950

"This work is committed to testing the class-biased sociological theory which views official delinquency as a lower-class phenomenon. This theory is stated in formal and operational terms, followed by testing through path analysis, etc." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The authors wisely anticipated that the entire text of this relatively short but highly technical book would not lend itself to easy digestion by the layman interested in substantive findings but not in theory construction and research methodology. The two-track system for reading suggested in the preface is a most valuable piece of advice." M. L. Barron

Ann Am Acad 402:182 JI '72 260w

"The senior author was former Director of the Youth Studies Center at the University of Southern California, also Director of the Provo Experiment and the Silver Lake Experiment. The book, thus, brings into focus theory and method tempered with the insights of the practitioner. . . . The authors have provided a cogent formulation of a 'middle range' theory of delinquency. This will be a valuable tool for those interested in problems of logic and inquiry in the field. The undergraduate and general reader will profit from the summaries and formulation of theory, but will find that the book assumes considerable sophistication in statistics and methodology. . . . Even without an index, it is an excellent reference work."

Choice 9:441 My '72 120w

EMPEY, LAMAR T. The Silverlake experiment: testing delinquency theory and community intervention [by] LaMar T. Empey and Steven G. Lubeck. 354p $12.50 Aldine-Atherton

365 Juvenile delinquency

ISBN 0-202-30065-X LC 70-123591

The research on which the experiment was based "involved derivation of a number of postulates and theorems from sociological delinquency theory, and testing these by comparison of two samples of male youth drawn from the Los Angeles Boys Republic. The control group remained in the Republic; the experimental group lived with a resident staff in a community location. This constituted a 'field experimental model' in which all the usual elements attending delinquency control were present. Creation of a group culture . . . was the major anti-delinquency stimulus. . . . Individual counseling is absent by design. . . . Data were obtained by interview and questionnaire from many sources." (Ann Am Acad)

"The authors of this compact research report . . . promoted a community-based experimental program. In evolving their plan [they] sought to move from a strategy of activity to a strategy of search. . . . The search strategy is spelled out to include the formulation of a theory of delinquency, principles of intervention, and correctional procedures, together with methods for empirically testing all of these. . . . Following the theory construction is tedious for the reader. . . . Some of the most provocative and intriguing portions of the study appear in chapters discussing critical incidents, runaways, and program failures, together with the reactions of staff and boys to these disruptions. . . . One immediately useful finding is that a good deal of correctional money can be saved by earlier discharge of delinquents from residential control." E. M. Lemert

Am J Soc 77:1017 Mr '72 800w

"[This report] gives rich insight into a number of problems: limitations of current sociological theory as a guide both to research and practice; difficulties in researcher-practitioner collaboration; details of process, including failure, success, and ambiguity, in one design for delinquency reduction; and many suggestive findings about what works in delinquency control. . . . There are intriguing and illuminating findings in several areas, including . . . the reactions of staff, boys, and community to 'critical incidents' when boys broke rules. . . . Discussion is unusually full and candid. Readers should not be put off by the frequently turgid language of the introductory chapters; or by the puzzling statements in Chapter 6 regarding the lack of relation of social class to delinquency. This book should be greatly stimulating to researchers and practitioners in juvenile delinquency; and it is a perfect mine of research ideas for aspiring scholars in the field." C. N. Lebeaux

Ann Am Acad 401:205 My '72 320w

"This book is not for the beginning student interested in social problems but is excellent as a reference for upper division work in crime and delinquency courses and for the general reader who is particularly interested in the relation between theory and implementation." Choice 8:913 S '71 160w

"This study is one of several carefully conceived and carefully executed attempts to change delinquent boys. . . . The fact that the program itself was not particularly successful, or that theory was modified considerably by the findings, should not obscure the importance of this study as a model for future work. . . . The authors use an axiomatic model and a number of diagrams which enhance clarity. As a result, deficiencies in the original model are apparent upon analyzing the data. . . . [Despite some weaknesses] this study will stand as one of the best illustrations of quality research in delinquency prevention." J. C. Hackler

Contemp Sociol 1:346 Jl '72 650w

Reviewed by W. R. Arnold

Social Studies 63:336 D '72 850w

EMRICH, DUNCAN. Folklore on the American land. 707p il $15 Little 398.0973 Folklore—U.S.

LC 72-161865

This book includes such topics "as names for places, animals, quilts, cattle brands, etc., children's folklore, street cries and gravestone writ, legends and tales, folksongs and ballads, folk beliefs and superstitions, love songs, sea chanteys and a great deal more." (Christian Science Monitor)

"[In] this fat, engaging book there is much scholarship underlying the fun, but fun is what counts—the pleasure of meeting language as she is spoke." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:128 Ap '72 50w

"This book should be shared. Not the expected experience of solitary sitting and reading, it is a treasury of short, immediate, and living experiences to be read to someone. . . . At first glance, the book appears disjointed. It is unified by the pleasure it gives, however, and by its Americanism. The fifty-three evocative photographs will arrest your attention first and generate interest in the 'folk.' From there on it is a mixed bag. The broad scope of the volume defies summary. . . . Do not hesitate to acquire this volume if you are interested in the American language, the American people, and the oral traditions in America. Although the elements of the book have been subjectively selected, the range is broad and has something for everyone." J. T. Gilboy

Best Sell 32:30 Ap 15 '72 420w

Choice 9:812 S '72 170w

"This is a glad and moving book, one which will deeply touch any man or woman who cherishes the wit, the gladness, the imagination, the bravado, the vision, the earthiness, the insight, and the power, which have grown up around and characterize the American land. . . . It may be encyclopedic, but it is also a book which can be sat down with and read for long periods without that mental taxation which usually comes with so immense an amount of material. . . . For sheer unadulterated, unalloyed joy of reading, this book cannot be too highly recommended." J. G. H.

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ap 27 '72 410w

"Emrich's patriotism sometimes gets in the way, and his song selection lacks depth; he has categorically not specified the regional origin of most of his entries, nor labeled them black, white, or immigrant. . . . He has offered practically nothing of the Indian heritage. . . . The book is not inexpensive. Still it is one of the best introductions available . . . to . . . American folklore." John Heidenry

Commonweal 96:90 Mr 31 '72 1150w

ENCYCLOPAEDIA Judaica. 16v unsp il col il set $500 Macmillan (N Y)

031 Encyclopedias and dictionaries. Jews—Dictionaries
LC 72-177492

This encyclopedia provides a picture of "aspects of Jewish life and knowledge up to the present day. . . . [It includes such categories as the] Bible, Hebrew and Semitic Languages, Second Temple Period, Rabbinical Literature, Talmud and Talmudic Period, Jewish Law, Jewish Philosophy, Mysticism, Medieval Hebrew Literature, Zionism, Contemporary Jewry, Holocaust, Modern Hebrew Literature, . . . and Modern Yiddish Literature, Americana, and Erez ('Land of') Israel. . . . The encyclopedia claims 25,000 entries . . . 8,887 black-and-white illustrations, 238 color illustrations, 424 black-and-white maps and one in color, 149 charts and diagrams, and 300 tables. . . . There are four tables of abbreviations: general, abbreviations used in rabbinical literature, bibliographic abbreviations, and one for the Index. . . . There is also a five-page glossary of recurring Hebrew and technical terms at the beginning of each text volume. [As a] guide [to] translation, there are charts for Hebrew, Yiddish, Arabic, Greek, and Russian. . . . [The index which] constitutes volume 1 . . . [contains 200,000 entries. . . . Almost every article has references for further reading." (Booklist)

"[This work is] intended for both the Jewish and non-Jewish reader. . . . [The encyclopedia] is very legibly printed, in 8 and 9 point type. . . . The illustrations are generally good to excellent, though a few are too small to be useful. . . . The pages are generally printed in two columns, and it is the columns that are numbered. The binding is attractive, but perhaps not so sturdy as it needs to be. . . . [There] is a very accurate index. . . . It is also quite comprehensive, including all illustrations except photographic portraits. . . . The bibliographies vary considerably in usefulness and quality; some are full and clearly related to the articles while others are skimpy or absent. The tendency is to be weak for minor subjects where the needs are probably greatest. . . . Specialist reactions to selected subjects covered in the encyclopedia were sought . . . [and] what emerges from [their] survey . . . is that there is considerable variation in quality. . . . Although there is a clear bias towards Israel throughout, the encyclopedia works hard at, and is more than acceptably successful in, presenting an objective position. . . . Very unsettling are the many errors, both typographic and substantive. . . . There is abundant evidence that Encyclopaedia Judaica was produced too hurriedly. . . . For further updating and provision of new results of research, [the editors] plan the Encyclopaedia Judaica Yearbook starting in 1973. . . . There is much in Encyclopaedia Judaica that is useful and even excellent. There is, however an inexcusably large amount of material written or edited at a less than satisfactory level of reliability. It is, therefore, not possible to recommend this encyclopedia without reservations; indeed, some of the specialists consulted would not recommend it at all. . . . [But in] the absence of a competing work of any quality . . . Encyclopaedia Judaica is recommended for purchase by libraries where there is substantial interest in Israel, Jewish history, and Jewish life."

ENCYCLOPAEDIA Judaica—Continued

Booklist 69:209 N 1 '72 2450w

"The past 75 years have seen an unparalleled flourishing of Jewish scholarship that has yielded an unprecedented quantity of information on the Jewish experience. The publication of this work, providing a synthesis of this vast corpus of information, with special attention to the past 75 years (especially the development of the Jewish community in the United States, the destruction of European Jewry in the Holocaust of World War II, and the establishment of the state of Israel), is a very welcome event. . . . A note of caution, the monumental English-language Jewish Encyclopedia [BRD 1906, 1934] and the German-language Encyclopaedia Judaica (1928-1934) are still indispensable reference tools; indeed, the present work specifically refers readers to both these works for certain categories of information. But as the latest, most comprehensive, and in many cases, most authoritative summary of research in all areas of Jewish scholarship, this new encyclopedia should be readily available in, and is recommended for, all academic libraries and medium and large public libraries. (A yearbook will be sent automatically to owners of the encyclopedia)." Charles Berlin

Library J 97:2562 Ag '72 400w

"The EJ should be in every library that calls itself cosmopolitan." D. M. Glixon
Sat R 55:76 N 25 '72 80w

ENDICOTT, KIRK MICHAEL. An analysis of Malay magic. 188p pl $7.25 Oxford 133.4 Occult sciences. Malaya
SBN 19-823162-8 LC 78-520451

This is an "analysis of a large body of Malay ideas categorized as magic. . . . [It is] an attempt to use modern anthropological theory to bring order to a large body of materials either left virtually unanalyzed . . . or brought within a . . . framework of historical influences and origins which implied that there was little unity or Malayness about them. . . . Endicott's work [also] attempts to find an underlying unity beneath these manifold beliefs and practices at the level of the rational interrelatedness of concepts that he finds to be their basis." (Am Anthropol)

"[The author] relies most heavily upon sources dating from the beginning of the present century, but his free use of later works indicates that he does not feel himself bound by time, place or by the politico-economic context of his objects of study. . . . Endicott appears neither to have visited Malaya to test his conclusions against any living Malay experience or even to have made use of the large body of literature in the Malay language dealing with the entirety of Malay life (novels, short stories, plays, etc.), within which magic does play some part. This lack of firsthand experience of Malay life makes his claim to present an analysis of the world 'as Malays see it' ring all the more hollow." D. J. Banks

Am Anthropol 74:28 F/Ap '72 1150w

"Endicott has some perceptive things to say about the order of Malay magic. His treatment of the major idea of Malay magic semangat in its bound and free forms covers familiar territory but is probably more complete than the discussions elsewhere. The notions of how Malay magic operates, especially the bomor and pawang in the trance cure, are more orderly than the sources from which it draws. Endicott uses, thankfully, a minimum of speculation and stays fairly close to his sources. The conclusions to the book are what can be expected when, from the outset, the goal was a logically ordered set of principles and categories. Endicott says the basic structure of Malay magic is triadic. Ideas and concepts are tripartite, not dual or binary. What such a revelation means in terms of the general and comparative study of magic (or other symbol systems) escapes me." Manning Nash

Am J Soc 76:948 Mr '71 410w

ENGDAHL, SYLVIA LOUISE. The far side of evil; drawings by Richard Cuffari. 292p $6.50 Atheneum pubs.

LC 77-134808

In this sequel to the author's Enchantress from the Stars, Elana, a "member of the Anthropological Service of the Interplanetary Federation, is given an observation assignment on Toris, a planet in the Critical Stage. All planets pass through this stage when their peoples have the technology to destroy themselves but not enough self-control to keep from doing so. Little was known about the Critical Stage, and it was hoped that observation would increase the knowledge of why some planets come through it and others do not. Through the ill-advised actions of a fellow agent, Elana finds herself faced with jail, torture, possible death, and the necessity of strictly forbidden intervention in a planet's affairs. . . . Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"[This story] provides thrilling escapist literature with a chance to view world problems from the outside. . . . A surprising, haunting, poetic book . . . full of provocative philosophical and psychological questions as well as tense adventure and romance." E. M. Graves

Commonweal 94:265 My 21 '71 60w

"While the reader will find the basic plot exciting, the book itself seems too long, and the constant emotional reiteration by Elana of the author's philosophic conjectures can be wearing." S. B. A.

Horn Bk 47:172 Ad '71 180w

"[This book] contains good characterizations and some thoughtful concepts about our own world, set in a skillfully written SF plot. . . . Although slow-moving at times, this novel should nevertheless appeal to thoughtful SF fans." Elizabeth Haynes

Library J 96:1514 Ad 15 '71 140w [YA]

ENGEL, LEHMAN. Words with music. 358p $7.95 Macmillan (N Y)

782.8 Librettos. Musical revues, comedies, etc.

LC 74-160078

The author of The American Musical Theater (BRD 1968) "sets down some of his principles for the construction of successful musicals—ideas which he has presented in his musical theater workshops sponsored by Broadcast Music, Inc. He feels that the basic requirements can be learned through a study of appropriate models [such as] My Fair Lady, Carousel, Oklahoma!, West Side Story, Fiddler on the Roof; and he analyzes the basic elements (characterization, choice of subject matter, plot construction, romantic content, lyrics, musical style, and use of comedy episodes) of these and other successful musicals." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Dika Newlin

Library J 97:696 F 15 '72 120w

"[This] is the Complete Musical Manual, in which everything his young writers and composers need to know is set forth. What works and what doesn't work and why is made specific. . . . The same virtues that will make it of lasting importance to them are what make it of interest to the general reader, who can take pleasure in the company of an expert writing with penetration on the subject he knows best. In doing so he conveys a world, and we are struck by his force of feeling for the theater itself." Eudora Welty
N Y Times Bk R p7 My 28 '72 1850w

"A prominent Broadway musical director examines the whole field of musical theatre, from the musical show to opera. . . . He is very knowledgeable on the subject, and his analyses of music, plots, characters, and situations in contemporary musical comedy, as well as in previous modes of drama with music, are shrewd and illuminating. He considers the Broadway musical to be the most honest and most direct, as well as the most successful, musico-dramatic expression of present-day America, and he presents his reasons. . . . Nearly everyone interested in the theatre can learn something from this book. It is comprehensive in its scope and penetrating in matters of detail."

New Yorker 48:112 Je '72 140w

ENGELS, FREDERICK, jt. auth. Birth of the Communist manifesto. See Marx, K.

ENGELS, FREDERICK, jt. auth. Cologne Communist trial. See Marx, K.

ENGELS, FRIEDRICH, jt. auth. Writings on the Paris commune. See Marx, K.

ENGLAND; introd. by Angus Wilson; phot. by Edwin Smith; notes on the pl. by Olive Cook. 224p $16.95 Viking

914.2 England—Description and travel—Views

ISBN 0-670-290607-4 LC 75-101787

The introduction offers comments "on the beauties of the English countryside, but mostly on English architecture—castles, cathedrals, crofts, great estates, palaces. [The rest of the book consists of color photographs and monochrome illustrations arranged in four sections:] . . . before the Norman Conquest, Medieval and Tudor, Renaissance and Georgian, Victorian and Modern." (Best Sell)

"Wilson is author of the thirty-six page introduction. . . . The photographs enhance the book—eight in superb color; 138 in black-and-white. . . . The comments are more than adequate and show considerable enthusiasm for the subjects. . . . The only drawback is that the monochrome photographic plates are divided into four sections, with the photographs all together in each section, followed by the notes. . . . Sturdily bound in blue cloth, this will be appreciated by many an armchair traveller. ■ well as by historians and architects and artists." R.F.G.

Best Sell 31:45 Ap 15 '71 180w

"This book has more to offer than just its handsome format. Wilson's comments on the quality of English life are probably the most wide-ranging since H. V. Morton. The photographs are, for the most part, extremely good although a few are trite (e.g., that of Tintern Abbey). Others are outstanding (those of Canterbury Cathedral and a 19th-Century tweed mill). The notes are clear, concise, informative, and interesting. This will certainly be popular in public and academic library browsing collections and may be of some use in large art collections." W. C. Allen

Library J 96:2084 Je 15 '71 110w

"This splendid work does perfectly what it sets out to do: show what England looks like. Mr. Wilson contributes a brisk, acerbic essay on English styles in architecture, city planning, and landscaping, and Mr. Smith's photographs, starting with prehistoric stone forts and coming down to International Style glass boxes illustrate the varieties of beauty (and ugliness) in England today."

New Yorker 47:148 My 15 '71 70w

ENGLISH, E. SCHUYLER. A companion to The new Scofield reference Bible. 165p $4.50 Oxford

220.7 Bible—Criticism, interpretation, etc. LC 70-190298

"The 15 chapters survey issues such as the authorship of the Bible and the nature of inspiration; themes and events such as Creation, the Exodus, and the Christ event; and matters of faith such as salvation, sin, and 'things to come.' . . . The author aims to 'present . . . an over-all view of God's revelation to men as it is made known in the Scriptures.'" (Library J)

Christian Century 89:610 My 24 '72 20w

"[English] provides perspectives for readers belonging to his school of interpretation and belief who 'would like to know the Bible better but do not know how to go about it.' . . . New Bible readers might use this book before beginning the text or while using the New Scofield Reference Bible. For those sympathetic to more critical methods of biblical interpretation, this volume gives a brief, readable summary of the results of another, less critical approach."

M. M. Wilson

Library J 97:2412 J1 '72 150w

ENGLISH writers of the eighteenth century; ed. by John H. Middelndorf. 298p $10 Columbia univ. press

820 English literature—History and criticism. Clifford, James Lowry
ISBN 0-231-03516-0 LC 70-175643

"A collection of essays by former students of James L. Clifford, for and to whom it was compiled and dedicated. The collection is divided into five topics: (1) problems of biography, (2) publishing and journalism, (3) drama, (4) novel, and (5) criticism and language. Five of the 15 essays deal with Johnson." (Choice) Index.

"This collection would be an excellent and useful source for a graduate seminar. Recommended highly for college libraries."

Choice 9:506 Je '72 220w

"No coherence governs the collection, and one wonders whether the professor would have been more honored by students collecting his essays than by presenting their own. It would certainly have been a greater gift to scholarship."

Va Q R 48:lv1 spring '72 100w

ENRIGHT, D. J. The typewriter revolution ■ other poems. 140p $5.95 Lib. press; for sale by World pub.

821

ISBN 0-912050-07-1 LC 73-158612

This book "contains some new poems and selections from [the author's] six earlier volumes." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Enright might be modestly content to call a good many of his poems simply 'observations,' and so they are, and very good ones too. The plainness of forms leads into ■ peculiarly stringent mode of vision, so that the most important notes are those struck most quietly. The sharp focus happens ■ though without effort: rhyme (when it is there at all) occurs only as an afterthought, and there is never any worry about making things 'dramatic.'" David Bromwich

Nation 213:599 D ■ '71 750w

"There is no one quite like Enright writing today in English, and for that reason his poems may be difficult to appreciate, if not to read. Enright himself doesn't help matters; at times his style becomes ■ mannerism, his irony a nervous tic, his targets too easy to hit. And at times Enright wears his conscience on his sleeves—sententious in his dislike of 'sententious phantoms.' His hero is Cavafy. . . . [He] is bitten by poetry, but he longs to keep his reason. Sometimes he keeps it without a fight, and the results is ■ snide hyena; but at his best he is our minor Dryden, whose art is in the service of reason, whose mordant poems wake us up to the temptations of the artist and the evasions of art." Stephen Miller

N Y Times Bk ■ p6 F 13 '72 1150w

ENROTH, RONALD M. The Jesus people; old-time religion in the age of Aquarius [by] Ronald M. Enroth, Edward E. Ericson, Jr. [and] C. Breckinridge Peters. 249p il $5.95; pa $2.95 Eerdmans

269 Jesus movement

ISBN 0-8028-3368-3 LC 73-188249

The book begins by examining "the origin and growth of each of the . . . branches of this new religious revival. . . . [It describes the] basic tenets held by most or all of its members: insistence on the simplicity of the gospel, a sense of the impending end of the world, espousal of charismatic gifts, and efforts to achieve a sense of community. In the second half . . . the authors discuss these fundamental beliefs in the light of insights from sociology, theology and psychology." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Despite the fact that this work is more timely than scientific in its sociological focus, its positive qualities are such that most undergraduates would find it exciting reading. The bibliographic essay . . . and index are useful, but not all quotations have their allotted internal footnotes."

ENROTH, R. M.—Continued

Choice 9:660 JI/Ag '72 140w

Reviewed by D. L. Warren

Commonweal 97:44 O 13 '72 1200w

"[The authors] have written what is surely the best book yet on the Jesus movement. It is carefully researched, detailed, and well written (though occasionally affected in style), and describes the movement as of fall, 1971. The authors write from the perspective of evangelical Protestantism and so find themselves much in sympathy with their subject, but they are sharp in their criticisms of its excesses, irrationalism, simplicity, lack of social and cultural concern, etc. . . . [However, the] concluding evaluation is of less value." D. W. Dayton

Library J 97:2412 JI '72 110w

Reviewed by Alberta Hankenson

Library J 97:3475 O 15 '72 110w [YA]

"In their thoughtful . . . [book, the authors] probe many of the major questions asked of the movement. They combine on-the-scene reporting with mountain-top reflection to produce ■ stimulating examination of the Jesus community." David Poling

Sat R 80:57 JI 22 '72 410w

ENVIRONMENTAL side effects of rising industrial output; ed. by Alfred J. Van Tassal. 548p $19.50 Heath Lexington bks.

614.7 Pollution. Factory and trade waste LC 77-129152

"This is ■ collection of essays appraising pollution problems in the United States as of 80 years hence from an economic point of view. . . . Each addresses ■ different problem—industrial water, population growth, electric power, pesticides, and ■ on." (Science) Bibliography.

"Almost certainly the best available book of such broad scope on this topic. . . . Recommended as collateral reading for undergraduate and graduate courses and as source material for lectures and discussions on resources and environmental problems. Useful bibliographies; good index, many informative tables and graphs."

Choice 8:440 Mv '71 180w

"The authors undertake the large and difficult task of estimating current pollution coefficients—ratios of pollution to economic output—in various sectors and technologies and of forecasting how these might change. These coefficients are then multiplied by the economic activity levels that Resources for the Future has projected for the year 2000 (H. H. Landsberg, L. L. Fischman, and J. L. Fisher, Resources in America's Future [BRD 1964]). In this way estimates of pollution flows for that year are generated. . . . The book takes the welcome view that pollution is ■ problem for rational analysis and discussion rather than mysticism, propaganda, or political manipulation. . . . We recommend the book as a serious effort and ■ substantial accomplishment." H. J. Barnett and R. E. Kohn

Science 172:666 My 14 '71 1300w

EPPSTEIN, JOHN. Has the Catholic Church gone mad? 173p $6.95 Arlington house

282 Catholic Church. Catholic Church—Doctrinal and controversial works, Popular ISBN 0-87000-163-9 LC 71-179719

The author seeks "to analyse and assess, in the context of contemporary history, the changes and dissensions which have been at work within the Roman Catholic Church since the Second Vatican Council." (Foreword) Index.

"Eppstein's book is . . . eye-boggling; that is, if you read it as serious literature—which is not advisable. No one deserves to be taken seriously who believes that John Courtney Murray's large objective at Vatican Council II was 'to obtain satisfaction' for his 'conceptive enthusiasms'; nor anyone who researches John Leo's fun piece on the Catholic Establishment in the December 1966-January 1967 Critic and reads it as a literal blueprint of the liberal conspiracy. One may as well read Art Buchwald for State Department policy." John Deedy

Critic 30:92 Mr '72 120w

"This elegantly written polemic will be enjoyed not just by Catholics, but also by all those who cannot help being fascinated by what happens to the most long-lived political institution in the world. And Mr Eppstein is particularly good and entertaining ■ well as occasionally quite deadly on the politics of it all. It would not be fair to expect from a polemical book of this kind any balanced analysis of the ideas and motives which have inspired men like Chardin and Suenens. But by questioning the new liberal orthodoxy the author has certainly performed ■ valuable service, not least to the liberal reformers themselves, who so rarely encounter so articulate ■ critic." Economist 239:55 My 1 '71 500w

"This English Catholic author deplores the changes and trends in the church that have followed Vatican II. . . . This is ■ wide-ranging and knowledgeable statement of the conservative Catholic position written with fervor, style and skill."

■ Y Times Bk ■ p16 F 13 '72 130w

"A rhetorical question hardly expects a reasoned answer, and Mr. Eppstein's book is too busy with the prosecution to provide a convincing verdict. His attack on almost all that has happened during—and since—the Second Vatican Council is sustained, and well documented. But he might have been writing about the League of Nations, with which he was intimately concerned for many years, so innocent is his book of any serious consideration of the deeper spiritual reality that underlies the Church's mission and which has, in Catholic belief at least, enabled it to survive crises far graver than any he describes. . . . Dyspeptic and ill-tempered as his criticisms often are, Mr. Eppstein ends on a contemplative note that is certainly absent from much of the frenetic propaganda for radical change."

TLS p684 Je 11 '71 450w

EPSTEIN, CYNTHIA FUCHS, ed. The other half: roads to women's equality; ed. by Cynthia Fuchs Epstein [and] William J. Goode. (A Spectrum bk) 207p $5.95; pa $2.45 Prentice-Hall

301.41 Woman—Civil rights
SBN 13-642983-1; 13-642975-0 (pa)
LC 71-153436

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 8:1357 D '71 170w

Reviewed by C. W. Gilbert

Contemp Sociol 1:84 Ja '72 1000w

Reviewed by Colln Bell

Encounter 38:64 Mr '72 150w

EPSTEIN, EDMUND L. The ordeal of Stephen Dedalus; the conflict of the generations in James Joyce's A portrait of the artist as a young man. 219p $8.95 Southern Ill. univ. press

823 Joyce, James—A portrait of the artist as a young man
ISBN 0-8093-0485-6 LC 77-132479

This is an "analysis of the character of Stephen as he emerges from the family context, forms a vocation, and creates ■ self-image." (Choice)

"The subtitle suggests a tawdry contemporary relevance which is, thankfully, not present in the study. . . . It ■ in the . . . [discussion of imagery] that the book is most perceptive and sensitive. A specialized study for libraries already containing a substantial collection of more general Joyce scholarship."

Choice 8:1451 Ja '72 170w

"[The author] follows the classic father-son conflict throughout A Portrait [BRD 1917] and concludes with an examination of what he considers to be a crucial episode in Ulysses [BRD 1934]—Stephen's dance in the Night-town scene. Throughout the study, Epstein carefully and convincingly refers to Finnegans Wake [BRD 1939] for substantiation. While he does make some valid and interesting observations, the author tends to ignore Stephen's arrogance and obnoxiousness and only briefly deals with his self-deceit. . . . [However] . . . the book is well written and thoroughly documented; it should be read by all Joyceans and is recommended for academic collections." R. R. Harris

Library J 96:4014 D 1 '71 200w

"Long awaited in Joycean circles, this book is the most authoritative work to date on Joyce's 'A Portrait.' . . . Students of Joyce will henceforth need to come to terms with Epstein's stimulating reading of the early work." Va Q R 48:lvii spring '72 140w

EPSTEIN, H. The origin of the domestic animals of Africa; rev. in collaboration with I. L. Mason. 2v 573;719p il maps $85 Africana pub. corp.

636 Domestic animals—History. Animals—Africa

ISBN 0-8419-0066-3 (v 1); 0-8419-0067-1 (v2)
LC 76-136491

"Volume I treats the dog, cattle and buffalo of Africa, Volume II the sheep, goat, pig, ass, horse and camel. Each chapter opens with a survey of the wild species from which the domestic may have descended, followed by . . . descriptions of the morphological, physiological, taxonomic and distribution characteristics of the African breeds and varieties of the animal in question. The historical and prehistorical record is then traced back to the animal's place of origin in Asia, Europe, or Africa; . . . attention is paid to this study of the animal's descent in order to establish not only the relationships of the domestic species to the wild species and to extinct archaeologically-established forms, but also to each other and to the domestic species of other continents." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of subjects. Index of geographical names. Index of authors.

"The work is encyclopedic in scope and unequalled in content. . . . The photographs and drawings are very helpful. Unfortunately, the high price and the specialty of its contents may preclude this work from many libraries." J. H. Zar

Library J 97:2418 J1 '72 190w

"This work is a curiously old-fashioned one to be published in the latter third of the 20th century; it is old-fashioned in language. . . . in its discursiveness . . . in its wealth of illustrations . . . in its thoroughness . . . in its assumption that the reader is educated and thus will be thoroughly familiar with multiple names of places, tribes, archeological sites, and historical personages, and old fashioned in a reliance on flowing anatomical description to a degree of detail that most readers will find skippable. . . . In Epstein's present volumes we have for the first time in English a source to which a student can be sent to acquire the historical background for his studies in mammalian domestication." C. A. Reed

Science 176:656 My 12 '72 1350w

EPSTEIN, RICHARD A., jt. auth. The miracle of cosmetic plastic surgery. See Aronsohn, R. B.

EPTON, NINA. Victoria and her daughters. 252p il $7.95 Norton

920 Victoria, Queen of Great Britain. Princesses and princesses
ISBN 393-05446-4 LC 70-162796

The author, "making use of unpublished material from the Ponsonby family papers, traces the . . . lives of Victoria's five daughters, Vicky, Alice, Helena, Louise and Beatrice, on all of whom the Queen relied for companionship and support." (New Statesman) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Sister J. M. Anderson
Best Sell 31:482 F 1 '72 270w

"Epton's book is chronologically arranged in five divisions which generally correspond to phases in the lives of Victoria's five daughters. It is an arrangement which is admirably enhanced by Epton's highly readable style and adroit use of quotations. . . . [But the author's] claim that her incentive arose from a desire to relate the queen's public image with her domestic life seems difficult to justify in view of the plethora of Victoriana and the student will find little in the book which cannot be readily obtained elsewhere." Choice 9:121 Mr '72 180w

"[This book is light] in texture and reads like an intelligent, superior kind of gossip column." Economist 241:56 O 2 '71 150w

"This item is a pleasant, readable, and reasonably well-written account of Victoria as the mother of daughters, and of the daughters' careers after they escaped the confines of

'home' into marriage, usually with minor German princes. . . . For Victoriana buffs and readers of court memoirs." Dorothy Sinclair
Library J 97:675 F 15 '72 130w

Reviewed by Arthur Marshall

New Statesman 82:406 S 24 '71 250w

New Yorker 47:95 Ja 29 '72 80w

"[This book] contains nothing but what's already well known and some well-known matters are unaccountably omitted. . . . [The author] has very little to say about the many and serious differences between the Queen and Princess Alice and nothing at all about the behavior of Princess Alice towards the Princess of Wales at the time of the Prince of Wales's attack of typhoid. The only value of Miss Epton's book to those seriously interested in royal history lies in its lavish quotations from the unpublished Ponsonby papers. Although no references are given, these are easily identifiable, Sir Henry Ponsonby's pungent style being unmistakable." TLS p1175 O 1 '71 550w

ERDOES, RICHARD, jt. auth. Lane Deer, seeker of visions. See Lane Deer, J. F.

ERDOES, RICHARD. The Sun Dance people; the Plains Indians, their past and present; written and photographed by Richard Erdoes. 218p $4.95; lib bdg $5.49 Knopf

970.4 Indians of North America—Great Plains—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-394-82316-8; 0-394-92316-2 (lib bdg)
LC 77-155812

This is an account of "the Plains Indians, and of the many tribes that once roamed the buffalo lands east of the Rockies. Mr. Erdoes concentrates upon the Sioux, the Northern Cheyenne and the Crow with occasional references to the . . . Blackfeet. . . . [He] goes into such . . . topics as Indian cattle (buffalo), . . . horses and horsemanship, life in a tepee, dangerous games (battles and coup-counting), medicine men, and the . . . Sun Dance of the Sioux, with photographs of the modern four-day ritual . . . [as well as] the coming of the white settlers. . . . The last section is devoted to the Indian as he is today, and to his problems." (N Y Times Bk R) Index. "Grades six to ten." (Library J)

"[This is] a detailed, dramatic account of the past and present cultures of the Sun Dance People. . . . The anthropological sections are very well done, and young readers cognizant of ecology will appreciate such details as the practice of using the entire buffalo—from the skull as an altar of the Sun Dance to the tail as a fly swatter. The author competently compares the open society of the Plains Indians with the government of the white people and includes discussions of the government's and white society's obligations to the Indians today, the Bureau of Indian Affairs (B.I.A.), civil rights and the position of minorities, and 'Indian Power.' . . . Although it is sometimes sentimentalized, the book is written with considerable understanding and most readers will admire, respect, and sympathize with the Indian point of view." E. R. Downum
Library J 97:3459 O 15 '72 350w [YA]

"The book is well done, and filled with . . . fascinating information. . . . [It] is liberally illustrated with reproductions of old prints and paintings and photographs by the author. . . . Erdoes's versions [of some of the battles] are not the same as those in most textbooks. Chivington and Custer both wear the black hats of the villain, and high time. . . . [This book] will be an asset to any school library." E. G. Lampman

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ag 13 '72 450w

ERICKSON, ERLING A. Banking in frontier Iowa, 1836-1865. 183p il $7.50 Iowa state univ. press

332.1 Banks and banking—Iowa
ISBN 0-8138-0160-5 LC 75-146931

During "Iowa's development from an unpopulated wilderness to a state . . . [it] experimented with several different banking systems in its efforts to meet the demand for a sound and flexible currency. . . . [The author discusses such] questions as: Why was it difficult to place state banking on a sound basis? What was the relationship of banks to politics? What substitute financial institutions developed when banks of issue were outlawed? . . . The answers to these questions provide . . . coverage not only of Iowa's banking in this period but of its political history, economic development, and settlement as well." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

ERICKSON, E. A.—Continued

"[This is] a detailed, clearly organized, and well-written monograph. . . . The author suggests that his generalizations 'are probably true for a number of other frontier states.' This may well be so, but the scene is far different from that shown, for example, by William H. Brantley for frontier Alabama. The genre of state banking history, although well established and perhaps somewhat rigid, is far from exhausted." H. R. Stevens
Am Hist R 77:1508 D '72 400w

"This small book does for Iowa what B. Hammond did on a larger scale in Banks and politics in America from the Revolution to the Civil War [BRD 1957]. Erickson has combed old letters, contemporary newspapers, and official documents to uncover the motives for the anti-bank clause in the State Constitution of 1846. . . . Would be good supplementary reading for courses in economic or financial history. Excellent bibliography, notes, and tables."

Choice 9:408 My '72 100w

"[In] this well-researched monograph . . . the treatment of banks and politics is excellent. . . . Erickson exaggerates the 'wild-cat' banking stereotype, and underemphasizes merchant and farmer defaults on bank loans, and the cumulative impact of a national debt-deflation spiral. Yet he sympathetically acknowledges the developmental benefits of land agent banking and similar 'schemes' of the prohibition years. The deficiencies of [his] work arise from his dependence upon traditional banking historians and their sometimes faulty theories. He shows little familiarity with modern monetary theory, or with the major contributions to banking history of such economists as Peter Temin, Lance Davis . . . or Milton Friedman and his cohorts." G. D. Green
J Am Hist 59:419 S '72 600w

ERLANGER, PHILIPPE. The King's minion: Richelieu, Louis XIII, and the affair of Cinq-Mars [tr. by Gilles and Heather Cremonese] [Eng title: Richelieu and the affair of Cinq-Mars]. 247p il $6.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 Cinq-Mars, Henri Coiffier, Ruzé d'Effiat, Marquis de. Richelieu, Armand Jean du Plessis, Cardinal, Duc de
ISBN 0-13-516310-2 LC 75-37256

The subject of this biography 'Henri Coiffier de Ruzé—Monsieur le Grand to his contemporaries, Cinq-Mars to historians—was a beautiful, brainless teenager introduced by Cardinal Richelieu as a playmate for aging King Louis XIII. Although drenched with royal favor, Cinq-Mars betrayed both Cardinal and King and was finally brought to the block, the victim of his own vanity and the treachery of his friends.' (Library J)

"[This] is an extraordinary story of intrigue, passion and uncertainty."

Economist 240:58 J1 24 '71 180w

"Erlanger is an authority on the early 17th Century. His flowery prose aptly portrays perfumed courtier and the hothouse aristocrats of the time, and he does everything possible to elevate Cinq-Mars' character. The book is a vivid, sympathetic apologia for a foolish young man, an exquisite vignette of a gilded age of French history recounted with true Gallic attention to detail and effect. There is no comparable modern study of the subject in English."

R. R. Rea

Library J 97:2390 J1 '72 130w

"Erlanger's treatment of the Cinq-Mars affair . . . is simply a restatement of the old story without any of the excitement generated by de Vigny in his famous novel [Cinq Mars, 1826]. For all his success as a popular historian in his own country, M. Erlanger often manages to make the past seem infinitely tedious. The great underlying causes of social behaviour both high and low are no concern of his. Instead he likes to follow every petti-fogging backstairs intrigue until one quickly loses the wood for the trees. The Cinq-Mars affair is seen in terms of a mere conflict of personalities. The treatment of Richelieu is thoroughly conventional."

TLS p936 Ag 6 '71 160w

ERLANGER, PHILIPPE. Margaret of Anjou, Queen of England. 251p il $7.95 Univ. of Miami press

B or 92 Margaret of Anjou, consort of Henry VI, King of England
ISBN 0-87024-214-8 LC 79-161438

A biography of the consort of Henry VI. First published in French under the title Marguerite d'Anjou et la Guerre de deux roses.

"Employing primarily 19th-century sources and posing as 'an impartial Frenchman' who is 'using modern methods,' Erlanger presents a story in which an enchantingly beautiful damsel is rescued from the 'arbitrary sentence' of history involving 'five centuries of loathing' and made into a tragic and sympathetic figure who from high fortune of a royal throne is forced to suffer 'every martyrdom of heart and mind that a woman can be called upon to endure.' An attractive format and skillful illustrations do not rescue this book from the world of fiction."

Choice 9:422 My '72 110w

"Margaret of Anjou remains a baffling character. Amid difficulties and disasters, she showed great courage and then, at certain decisive moments, lost all sense of proportion and reality. What demon of perversity prompted her to wreck all her most promising and ambitious schemes? Philippe Erlanger, a remarkably prolific and romantic historian, fails to solve this enigma, being naturally enthralled by Margaret's colourful personality and tragic fate. . . . 'It is so sad,' he comments naively, 'that English schoolchildren are taught to hate Margaret as the wicked French queen, and never know that she was the unhappiest of women: as a Queen heroic, as a mother sublime.'"

TLS p375 Ap 2 '71 550w

ERRINGTON, R. M. The dawn of empire: Rome's rise to world power. 318p maps $8.75 Cornell univ. press

937 Rome—History—Republic, 510-30 B.C.
ISBN 0-8014-0689-7 LC 75-176296

The "author explores the critical years during which the pattern of Roman expansion was developed and points out . . . analogies to modern events. Starting with the first overseas adventure in 264 B.C., [he ends] his story in 133 B.C. He focuses on two major conflicts—the war with Hannibal and the battle of Pydna—to show that Rome was a reluctant imperialist. Rather than a deliberate move toward empire, each conquest during the period is viewed as a means of achieving security for Rome's everwidening sphere of interests." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"No other book in English has dealt comprehensively with this critical time span. Errington's thesis, that Rome's empire was an 'accident,' 'not created by any initial desire to rule or exploit others,' and that Rome was primarily concerned throughout with her own security against 'threats, real or imagined,' is far from new. . . . The text and footnotes are designed to lead the Greek and Latinless reader to the ancient sources and the modern literature (up to 1969). . . . All college libraries should acquire [the book]."

Choice 9:700 J1/Ag '72 170w

"This interesting book, [is] designed for the general reader. . . . This is not a military history; but feats of arms are a necessary background, given as such."

Economist 242:54 F 12 '72 400w

"[This is a] compact, informative, and well-organized study of Rome's rise to domination of the Mediterranean world from the first Punic War (264-241 B.C.) until Carthage's destruction (146 B.C.). . . . In sum, a readable, clear account of an important historical period."

J. P. Hershbell
Library J 97:2088 Je 1 '72 130w

"[This] book, which moves as fast as the events it describes, is in the highest degree contemporary. . . . The book is [also] intended, it seems. . . . [for] students for whom, here and in America the history of the ancient world has a fast-growing appeal. In Roman history they have been well served from the Gracchi onwards, but for the earlier period when, with all its far-reaching consequences, the Roman empire came into being, they have desiderated a scholarly book of this compass, embellished for the curious with adequate, but not over-detailed, notes. They should constitute a large public for this book, but not at its present price. The sooner it is paper-backed, the better."

TLS p375 Mr 31 '72 550w

ESHERICK, JOSEPH, Jr. auth. Modern China: the story of ■ revolution. See Schell, O.

ESLER, ANTHONY. Bombs, beards and bar-ricades; 150 years of youth in revolt. 336p $8.95 Stein & Day

301.43 Youth movement
ISBN 0-8128-1403-7 LC 71-163351

"Starting with the student revolts in Ger-many in 1815, Esler covers the St. Petersburg Terrorism in 1881, and the American 'lost generations' of the 20's, 50's and 60's. . . . [His account is] concerned with the why's and wherefore's rather than the how-to-do-it as-pects of revolution." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Ostensibly a history of 'youth in revolt,' Esler deals almost exclusively with Western youth. . . . The extremely significant May Fourth Movement in China is dismissed in a single paragraph, Japan's Zengakuren—perhaps the single most important student movement of the postwar age—is superficially discussed in a little over one page. On the other hand, 28 pages are used to describe the 1815 German student revolt, 24 pages given over to the 1848 Austrian student revolt, etc. In addition, a number of Esler's judgments are, at best, questionable. . . . The serious scholar of stu-dent movements would do better to read any of a dozen solid works on this important subject. Not recommended."

Choice 9:1166 N '72 180w

"Contending that 'the Youth Revolution . . . seems likely to be with us as long as . . . alternative truths are made available for youth-ful expression,' the author treats the various revolutions, led by youths, that have occurred in Germany, France, Austria, Russia, and the United States. . . . [He shows that] as each of the various movements gained in strength, they sought to show their power via marches, rallies, etc. Throughout the volume, the author illustrates youth's passion for new ideas and the opportunity to publicly present them. In addition, it can be observed that . . . youth revolutions have frequently been able to change favorably the basic life style of a given society. Recommended." W. M. Forman

Library J 97:494 F 1 '72 150w

Reviewed by Martha Liddy
Library J 97:1629 Ap 15 '72 100w [YA]

ESMAN, MILTON J. Administration and de-velopment in Malaysia; institution building and reform in a plural society. 341p $12.50 Cornell univ. press

354.595 Malaysia—Politics and government
ISBN 0-8014-0685-4 LC 71-173991

"In 1967, John Montgomery and the author undertook a mission to study the Malaysian civil service with a view to developing a pro-gram of reform. Following the acceptance of the Montgomery-Esman Report (part of which appears here as an appendix), Esman became an adviser to the Malaysian government to oversee the implementation of some of the re-port's recommendations. The second half of the book is based on that experience and deals with efforts to reform the administrative structure and change the attitudes of top administrators to enhance the ability of the bureaucracy to plan and administer development projects and manage communal tensions. In the first half, Esman describes the development of the Malay-sian civil service since independence and sur-veys the social context in which it operates." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. H. Berkov
Ann Am Acad 404:260 N '72 500w

"Esman is uniquely qualified to write such ■ book as he is one of the founders and a main protagonist of the institution building approach to development administration as well as first director of the administrative reform effect in Malaysia. His book is a marriage of con-venience between two themes that produces ■ number of valuable offspring. One partner is an analytical study of administrative reform set in the context of 'institution building.' The other is a specification of the political prob-lems of a plural society. The union of the two is a happy one. . . . It should be worth-while reading not only for those concerned with political development and administrative reform, but also for any serious student of Malaysia or other Third World countries where the bureaucratic role is paramount and ethnic pluralism rampant."

Choice 9:541 Jo '72 160w

"The book is well written and authoritative and should appeal to those interested in the general area of change in postcolonial bureau-cratic systems ■ well as to Malaysia spe-cialists." C. R. Bryant

Library J 97:202 Ja 15 '72 140w

ESPY, WILLARD R. The game of words. 27p $6.95 Grosset

793.7 Word games
ISBN 0-448-01196-4 LC 73-183017

An alphabetically arranged assortment of acrostics, anagrams, conundrums, tongue-twisters, malapropisms, epigrams, palindromes, riddles, spoonerisms, cleriheus, humorous verses, and other examples of word play. In-dex of quoted sources.

"What [Mr Espy] has espied, and as-sembled in this book . . . amounts to a jack-daw's nest of bright notions and nonsenses. He proceeds from acronyms (with due mention of cabal and posh) to word games. . . . Along the way, he stops off for double dactyls, or hig-gledy-piggledies. . . . Very couthly, however, he includes in a select group of burlesques and parodies by Lewis Carroll, Sellars . . . and others."

Economist 241:69 N 20 '71 310w

"For those who take joy in playing with chain verse, charades, clichés, cockney, cryptograms, . . . to list a fraction of the word games, . . . this book (if a cliché can be forgiven) is ■ must. Linguistically, to be sure, it is naive (cf. author's assertion that to a person born to any of the other 1700 languages in the world, Basic [English] affords perhaps the easiest possible entry to English.). It is thus also an exemplary collection of the sort of tommyrot we have to unteach." B. H. Smeaton

Library J 97:2635 Ag '72 120w

ESSAME, H. The battle for Europe, 1918. 216p pl maps $8.95 Scribner

940.4 European War, 1914-1918—Campaigns and battles
ISBN 684-12946-9 LC 72-643

"Major-General Essame not only explains the strategy and tactics on either side, but ex-amines the campaign in human terms. By drawing on his own experiences at the time and by quoting from numerous eye-witness ac-counts, he shows that it was the morale of the front-line troops that determined ultimate victory. . . . In [his] view it was the quality of the Allied soldier rather than the performance of the primitive tanks—so dear to the military theorists—that proved decisive." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Essame replays the usual battles, with the accent placed upon those fought by the British. . . . The best part of this otherwise pedestrian book is the author's knowledgeable description of the foot soldier's life—the misery of the trenches, the joys of home leave, the agonizing problem of moving supplies, and the venality of the local peasants to whom he paid dearly for a fresh egg. Aficionados of this war may find Essame's version entertaining light reading; but it is outranked in veracity by scores of others." E. G. Hamann

Library J 97:2837 S 15 '72 230w

"Essame, now in his 75th year, was a soldier; his military histories crackle with authenticity, a first-hand feel and an affection for enlisted men. In his latest book he . . . addresses him-self to what he thinks are the lingering myths about the war put forth by such authorities as Basil Liddell Hart and disillusioned poets and novelists. Essame examines the battles of . . . 1918 and hands out credit and blame with an even hand to the officers and men of the French, British, Australians and Americans."

N Y Times Bk R p[40] O 15 '72 160w

"Draws a more than usually accurate and convincing picture of the soldiers and their commanders in the armies of the British Empire, and sometimes of their allies, and the conditions in which they fought in these last and decisive days of the war. . . . The account given here of the great battles of 1918 from Ludendorff's March offensive to the breaking of the Hindenburg Line and the final operations of October and early November is extremely lucid and very well done. . . . The parts played by men such as Generals Mangin, Pershing and Monash . . . stand out, as do the achievements of the Canadian, Australian and American expeditionary forces. . . . This book is one of the best, and most readable, of the available short histories of the war in France in 1918."

ESSAME, H.—Continued

TLS p1294 O 27 '72 500w

ESSER, ARISTIDE, H., ed. International symposium on the use of space by animals and men, Dallas, 1968. See International symposium on the use of space by animals and men, Dallas, 1968

ESOE, GABE. The films of Clark Gable; foreword by Charles Champlin. 253p il $10 Citadel

B or 92 Gable, Clark
ISBN 0-8065-0011-5 LC 79-111695

In addition to the "cast listing, credits, synopses, and reviews [of films in which Gable appeared, this book contains] several appreciations and reminiscences." (Choice)

"Among the reminiscences is a rather interesting one by Franz Dorfler, a friend of Gable's in the 1920's. . . . [This book] is strongly recommended. The complete description of Gable's films alone is worth the price of admission."

Choice 8:1464 Ja '72 150w

"[This book is] bound to please the general audience towards whom [it is] aimed. . . . The main thrust of [the] volume is a nostalgic celebration of the qualities that made these mortals into stars." Marshall Deutelbaum
Library J 95:2933 S 15 '70 40w

ESTALL, ROBERT. A modern geography of the United States; aspects of life and economy. 401p maps $10 Quadrangle bks.

330.973 U.S.—Economic conditions. Geography, Commercial
ISBN 0-8129-0242-4 LC 77-183732

In this geographic study of the United States, "chapters 1 to 4 provide background essays on population, land use and patterns of economic activity. Chapters 5 to 12 examine the major productive systems—agriculture, mining and manufacturing . . . and Chapters 13 and 14 review the urban geography and Federal government activities. In each part, the issues specific to the system under discussion are examined, but one or two themes recur throughout, notably the increasing role of government and the problems of resource use and of the underprivileged." (Pref) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"The style of writing is entertaining. The illustrations are numerous. The statistics are sometimes completely outdated, being as old as 1960. The inadequate index decreases the book's value as a reference tool. For factual, interesting socioeconomic information on the U.S. it is an excellent presentation, usually with a historical slant."

Choice 9:1036 O '72 180w

"The author, using a wealth of reliable and current statistical data from many sources, has produced an authoritative and valuable modern geographic study. . . . Inevitably, from the selection of subjects, the emphasis is on economic activity. Some topics are conspicuously absent (e.g., transportation, climate, and landforms). Maps and tables are numerous, but the maps are rather ineffective in demonstrating spatial relationships. However, Estall has chosen a very large subject and has handled it quite well." R. T. Redden
Library J 97:2388 J1 '72 110w

"The volume is a sober, prudent one, without easy cures or much excitement about trends. It is nonetheless a reasoned starting point for those who would press remedies in a dozen major issues." Philip Morrison
Sci Am 227:124 O '72 550w

ESTERLY, GLENN, Jr. auth. Freedom from dependence. See Esterly, S.

ESTERLY, STANLEY. Freedom from dependence; welfare reform as a solution to poverty [by] Stanley and Glenn Esterly. 178p $6 Public Affairs press

362.5 Public welfare. Guaranteed annual income
LC 74-159584

This book reviews "the content and defects of the present welfare system, the idea of income maintenance, the definition and incidence of poverty and Nixon's Family Assistance Plan. . . . [It also discusses] the report of the President's Commission on Income Maintenance Programs (1969) and . . . Leon Keyserling's recommendations on welfare reform." (Choice)

"Referring to the 1968 Nixon campaign the Esterlys state that he 'discussed the welfare situation with generalized statements.' No more apt summary is possible of the present offering. [It is] written in a style befitting professional journalists (the background of at least one author). . . . Six appendices include extracts from Keyserling's works, the commission report, the text of the Family Assistance Plan, Moynihan's Saturday review article on the plan, and Senator McGovern's critique. Perhaps suitable for the general library."

Choice 8:1217 N '71 180w

"Systematically, objectively, and in clear, nontechnical terms the authors examine existing welfare practices. . . . Nixon's Family Assistance Plan and the controversy surrounding it are scrutinized in detail, and the plan is found to be a laudable first step toward what the Esterlys advocate. Considering the urgency and the turmoil presently surrounding welfare reform as a national goal, this book is an important purchase for any library." H. J. DuBois

Library J 96:2617 S 1 '71 100w

ESTES, ELEANOR. The tunnel of Hugsy Goode; il. by Edward Ardizzone. 244p $5.25 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-291100-6 LC 79-167833

In this sequel to the author's The Alley (BRD 1964) "a new generation of children now rule the T-shaped island of faculty residences known as the alley on the campus of Granby College [in Brooklyn]. Two boys—11-year-old Nicholas (Copin) and 8-year-old Timothy (Tornid)—surrounded by a multitude of girls are determined to find the legendary tunnel supposed to lie beneath the alley and to keep the project a secret from girls and parents. Whenever the boys are alone they chip away at the brick wall outside the house where Hugsy Goode used to live. They actually do break through into a tunnel which, when explored by flashlight, is found to contain disembodied voices, a skeleton over which they stumble, and two eyes shining out of the dark. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

"Eleanor Estes, with the skill which created the 'Moffats' [BRD 1941], has succeeded in composing her hero with enough mischief and daring to be both real and likable. Sophisticated readers may object to 'Hidey holes,' 'Hugsy,' and 'Nubsy.' This is not a book for every 8- to 12-year-old. But some will be warmed and intrigued by its charm." C. T. K.
Christian Science Monitor pB6 My 4 '72 100w

"[The author] has gone to a great deal of trouble to re-create a contemporary childhood adventure by scrupulously noting the interests, clothes, mores, and pastimes of children in the 1960's. But although her details are precise, her observations apt, and her imagination active, she has created a world where characters move like programmed robots, unable to think or act with spontaneity. . . . Ironically, the atmosphere of the story is just contemporary enough—college kids have beards, children possess tape recorders and call their parents by their first names—to make the illustrator's chubby jump-rope-skipping children seem like anachronisms that have wandered into the book by mistake, taking it, perhaps, for one of the author's earlier stories about the Moffats." S. D. L.
Horn Bk 48:143 Ap '72 300w

Reviewed by S. L. Kennerly
Library J 97:1928 My 15 '72 130w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 55:110 Mr 25 '72 100w

ETHRIDGE, WILLIE SNOW. Strange fires; the true story of John Wesley's love affair in Georgia. 254p pl $3.95 Vanguard

B or 92 Wesley, John. Hopkey, Sophy
SBN 8149-0693-1 LC 77-170902

This is an account of the young John Wesley, who, while living in Georgia, "fell in love with eighteen-year-old Sophy Hopkey and underwent . . . emotional and spiritual turmoil in struggling to decide whether to marry her, an inner-agony that changed his character profoundly. All this he . . . recorded in his Georgia Diary, which he kept in a code so difficult to decipher that it was broken only in this century." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"In spite of the author's initial youthful admiration for John Wesley and her later painstaking research and obvious documentation, her alleged factual account of John Wesley's agonized love for Sophy Hopkey is a mélange of sentimentality and overabundant detail. John Wesley never emerges as a flesh-and-blood man but remains a cruelly insensitive, egocentric, cardboard figure. . . . Although her research convinced her that she must write a book of fact, not fiction, about John Wesley and his consuming love for Sophy, [the author] allows her imagination to fill in the details and to describe situations, conversations, and incidents as they might have taken place. . . . [This book] will find its niche on the library shelves of the innumerable colleges, universities, churches, and missions named for the founder of Methodism." C. P. Collier

Best Sell 31:483 F 1 '72 410w

"[This account] falls between two stools: no news to scholars and not much entertainment for amateurs of romance. Also, it is padded and awkwardly organized."

N Y Times Bk R p10 O ■ '71 190w

ETTINGER, R. C. W. Man into superman; the startling potential of human evolution—and how to be part of it. 312p $8.95 St Martins

301.24 Man. Technology and civilization. Cryonics
LC 76-184552

In The Prospect of Immortality (BRD 1964) the author discussed the possibility of freezing humans at death in anticipation of revival, repair and rejuvenation in the future. Since then over a dozen bodies have been preserved by cryonics. In this new book, Ettinger describes what the future may hold for these frozen "cryonauts." Bibliography. Index.

"While starting out to be a look into the future, much of the book, is in fact, an ironic examination of the present human condition. Ettinger does some speculating on a few of the futuristic possibilities available to man, including the control over his own evolution. However, all of this seems to be a prelude to the last two chapters when the real subject of the book emerges. Ettinger asserts that the future, immortality and all, may be available to us now through cryonics. . . . He is quite serious and offers much rebuttal of past criticisms of cryonics. . . . His arguments will give pause to the thoughtful reader. The book is valuable if for nothing more than the exercise in openmindedness it requires." R. L. Hough

Library J 97:3169 O 1 '72 170w

"Considering all that has transpired in this field during the past few years, one turns to Robert Ettinger's latest effort with some trepidation. What new tidbits has the cryonics pioneer dished up for us? At the very least one expects a comprehensive review of the state of the art. . . . Unfortunately, Ettinger is not equal to the task in this poorly written, badly organized book. The first few chapters are devoted to the author's personal vision of what humankind will someday be, and his vision is not very attractive. . . . [He] seems to have raided the writings of science-fiction authors for their more imaginative speculations, and served them up here in a potpourri of pseudo-scientific prognostications. . . . Ettinger's best chapters are the ones dealing directly with immortality." Jerome Tuccille

Nation 215:155 S 4 '72 1450w

EUNSON, ROBY. When France was de Gaulle. 184p il lib bdg $5.95 Watts, F.

B or 92 Gaulle, Charles de, President France—Juvenile literature. France—Politics and government—Juvenile literature
SBN 531-02005-3 LC 71-161838

"Opening with the death of de Gaulle, the account [continues with] chronological coverage of [his] entry into the army. . . . Eunson concentrates on de Gaulle's military career . . . [stressing] the shrewdness of [his] decision to leave the government after World War II and to wait for the moment of crisis when he could return to govern on his own terms. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

"A highly illustrated and brief presentation of de Gaulle and his beloved France. This title should help the young reader clarify his ideas of some of the foreign relations of the major nations from World War I to the immediate past." S. M. C.

Best Sell 31:433 D 15 '71 100w [YA]

"The author is on the whole sympathetic toward de Gaulle but also notes occasions when his obsession with the grandeur of France led to policies not in the best interests of the people, e.g., the build up of nuclear power while the economy suffered. School libraries especially will find this brief political biography useful as supplementary material on modern French and European history." A. P. Michalik

Library J 97:2243 Je 15 '72 150w [YA]

EURIPIDES. Phaeton. See Diggle, J., ed.

EVANS, G. EDWARD, jr. auth. Introduction to technical services for library technicians. See Bloomberg, M.

EVANS, JOHN W. The Kennedy round in American trade policy; the twilight of the GATT? 333p $13.95 Harvard univ. press

382.1 U.S.—Commercial policy. International economic relations
ISBN 0-674-50275-2 LC 77-139725

"A review of the history of U.S. international trade policy, with specific reference to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), within the general context of the modern international economy. The main principles of U.S. trade policy are reviewed, as are the major conflicts that have arisen between the U.S. and its major trading partners in recent years. The main portion is devoted to an analysis of the Kennedy Round of international trade negotiations during 1964-67, discussing in turn all of the principal issues that arose. [Bibliography. Index.]" (Choice)

"The final section examines critically the efficacy of the GATT as a viable institution under conditions that will obtain in the 1970's and beyond. The latter discussion is rather too cursory but valuable nonetheless. . . . Highly recommended for college and research libraries."

Choice 8:1220 N '71 180w

"Evans writes soundly and from long experience on the subject. . . . His is not a scintillating book. . . . But the world of Gatt is perhaps not a scintillating subject. . . . [The book, however,] is essential reading for serious students of what the developing battle over free trade in a time of affluence and attempted full employment is all about."

Economist 245:71 O 7 '72 40w

"The events described by this book have not attracted all the attention they deserve. The campaign to revise the trade agreements program, culminating in passage of the Trade Expansion Act, was among the chief legislative successes of the Kennedy administration. . . . The trade negotiations carried out thereafter—the Kennedy Round itself—lasted some four years. . . . The author of this book is well qualified to deal with much of this history. He led U.S. delegations to many GATT meetings and served as assistant special representative for trade negotiations during part of the period on which he reports. His narrative is authoritative, comprehensive, and readable—surprisingly, given his intricate subject. Those who are new to the subject, however, may acquire more information than they need, without also learning the answers to their questions, while specialists are bound to notice major omissions. . . . This book can be read with profit by students of diplomacy and should be read with care by many economists." P. B. Kenen

Pol Sci ■ 87:450 S '72 1300w

EVANS, LAURENCE, ed. The Middle East supply centre. See Wilmington, M. W.

EVANS, ROBERT. The labor economies of Japan and the United States [by] Robert Evans, Jr.; foreword by Solomon B. Levine. 276p $17.50 Praeger 331 Labor supply. Wages. Labor unions
LC 77-153834

This study focuses "on analyzing the differences and similarities in certain important aspects of economic and social life between the two most productive economies of the non-Communist world [Japan and the United States]. . . . Evans examines the performance of the following selected aspects of the two labor economies: institutional aspects of union mobility, wage patterns, wage differentials and low-wage industries." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Written in technical language but easily understood by both experts and laymen, . . . [this work] will be of great interest to students in comparative economic systems and labor economics. No index; bibliography very helpful to researchers."

Choice 9:408 My '72 120w

"The contribution of this study is probably not so much in terms of . . . limited comparability of the two economies as in the careful analysis of several specific aspects of the Japanese wage-system, little covered in the English language. . . . What is stated in terms of Japanese management philosophy, all through the volume, could be better expressed in terms of the sociology of the enterprise, and by the same token throw further light on the peculiar nature of Japan's enterprise unionism." R. J. Ballon

Pacific Affairs 45:287 summer '72 240w

EVANS, W. MCKEE. To die game; the story of the Lowry band, Indian guerrillas of reconstruction. 282p il maps $8.95 La. state univ. press

975.6 Reconstruction. North Carolina—History. Lumbee Indians. Lowry family
ISBN 0-8071-0816-2 LC 77-142335

"The Lowry band was a very small outlaw group, most of whom belonged to the Lumbee Indian community of Robeson County, North Carolina. Denied equal treatment in the Confederate army, Indian youths like Henry Berry Lowry took to the woods to evade conscription officers seeking to draft them for essentially slave labor on the coastal fortifications below Wilmington. . . . The fugitives consistently received Lumbee support, but occasionally they raided white plantations for provisions, thereby perpetuating their outlaw status into the Reconstruction period. For about seven years the band stood off all organized attempts to exterminate them, but eventually they fell prey to bounty hunters and general attrition." (Choice)

"The Lowry band remains a local legend, nowadays more celebrated than otherwise, even outside the Lumbee community. Their story is of limited general significance. However, Evans (a Robeson native who is a professional historian) combines scholarship with literary grace to tell it very well indeed."

Choice 8:1082 O '71 170w

"[Although] Evans sticks closely to the facts supported by local newspapers, state records, and personal papers, he allows hints of legends to surface. . . . [He] tells his story with meticulous attention to verification of every incident, but the documentable incidents of shootings, failings, and confrontations form no clear narrative. Evans shifts back and forth from the arena of complex state and county political issues to such bloody scenes of Lowry killings as get into the records. He sympathizes with the Indians who were denied means of livelihood and seeks to present their version, but he writes as a conventional historian, employing no ethnology or folklore. This is a white man's history of Indians, and his Indians behave like white men." R. M. Dorson

J Am Hist 59:432 S '72 600w

EVANS-PRITCHARD, E. E. The Azande: history and political institutions. 444p il pl maps $13 Oxford

916.7 Azande
ISBN 0-19-823170-9 LC 70-889223

"[Part one] is concerned with the ethnic diversity of Zandeland. The Avongora clan brought a number of other peoples under their rule, more or less assimilating them, until they and the other true Azande formed less than half the total population. The foreign elements are sorted out and listed in some detail in a series of chapters. In part two, Evans-Pritchard deals . . . with elements of culture which the rulers borrowed from various subject peoples, particularly in the way of crops, building styles, and arts and crafts. . . . [He then describes] the Azande kingdoms, which were divided into provinces under princes who often pursued secessionist policies. . . . The final chapter in this section describes techniques of warfare. The fourth part of the book . . . deals with the history of one kingdom to exemplify the development of the Zande state in all its complexity." (TLS)

"During his own fieldwork in the southwestern Sudan among the Zande in the early 1930's . . . [the author] gathered a corpus of orally-generated information—origin stories, clan accounts, and epics. Unlike most other anthropologists, he consulted the writings of travellers and administrators (but not the district records) and used their reports to co-ordinate and supplement his own findings. The result is not history in the most modern, professional sense, but a supremely valuable collection of interpretive case studies of the sources and some contemporary (1930's) studies from which he extrapolated back. . . . For college and university libraries."

Choice 9:584 Je '72 170w

"[This book] is made up largely of papers published between 1955 and 1965. This is a scholarly and generally a readable book. At times, particularly in the description of the courts, it is the equal of any ethnographic account in the literature. Nevertheless it cannot be judged a success . . . for it fails as history."

TLS p1523 D ■ '71 950w

EVENARI, MICHAEL. The Negev; the challenge of a desert [by] Michael Evenari and others. 345p il maps $15 Harvard univ. press

630 Agriculture—Israel. Physical geography—Israel
ISBN 0-674-60670-1 LC 75-119073

The volume "summarizes 20 years of research which has led to the successful development of food production in the Negev Desert. The development drew upon the knowledge surrounding the existence of an ancient farming system. The report describes how an interdisciplinary approach was used in which botanists, geologists, archeologists, agronomists, engineers, photogrammetrists, soil scientists, and historians pooled their efforts in the solution of the problems involved." (Choice)

"Will be of interest to students and researchers interested in this phase of arid agriculture."

Choice 8:1357 D '71 80w

"This book describes a combined operation by a selected team of Israeli specialists, and some of their work is too special for the common reader. Completed by tables, graphs and diagrams, as well as over 200 interesting photographs, it will be of use chiefly to students of underdevelopment and to teachers of farming in rain-starved country. These will learn a lot about the best gradients for collecting run-off water, how to deal with flash-floods on porous soil, the reasons why it is worth clearing stones and collecting them into mounds, and the optimum size of run-off plots. Soils and slopes are bound to vary, but the book teems with suggestions that any desert farmer might find worth a trial."

Economist 240:56 Jl 17 '71 250w

EVSLIN, DOROTHY. The fortunate sex. 261p $5.95 Saturday review press

B or 92 Women in the U.S. Mothers
ISBN 0-8415-0157-2 LC 74-182481

The author presents the story of her own years as a mother and housewife as an argument for a woman's right to stay home if she chooses.

"[The author] offers in her volume a warm rebuttal to those who put down the woman who desires to be 'just' a housewife. She sincerely believes that the home maker has the best of all possible worlds—she can make her own schedule, be her own boss, and find creative and stimulating outlets if she wishes. . . . Actually, I came away from this book with a strong feeling that the author had written a love story to her past. She is a happy person and content with the role life has made for her. . . . Not every woman will accept Mrs. Evslin's premise. It is too much a generalization to be applicable to the masses. It is refreshing, however, to find that there are some intelligent women with nothing against which to rebel." P. J. Earl

Best Sell 32:229 Ag 15 '72 230w

"Some middle-class women could probably identify with Evslin's writing on house decorating and child rearing, as well as her life as an army wife and her own teaching career. Contrary to the author's contention, however, many women do not have a choice between working outside the home or opting for 'home-making' as is shown by statistics of women in the work force published by the U.S. Department of Labor, 1970. The book includes the standard justifications for traditional feminine roles."

Choice 9:844 S '72 110w

"[Evslin] seems to have been born to enjoy an intimate association with potted plants and spins treacle as if it were gold. . . . [She] dismisses women liberationists as spoiled upper-middle-class brats who have never been faced with 'the challenging necessities of thrift and management.' But to whom, in fact, are her homilies addressed? . . . She exhorts us to take pleasure in the simple joys of housewifery—'sunlight streaming through a kitchen window,' for example. It does not occur to her that, while the sunny kitchen windows of New Rochelle may indeed look out upon green and pleasant views, the kitchen windows of decaying inner-city tenements offer the prisoner within no such surcease from pain. Nor does Evslin suggest how it is possible to make dinner a celebration when the food-stamp menu is bologna sandwiches and cold cereal." Barbara Harris

Nation 214:662 My 22 '72 650w

EWEN, DAVID. The new encyclopedia of the opera. 759p $15 Hill & Wang

782.1 Opera—Dictionaries
ISBN 0-8090-7262-9 LC 71-148237

This volume replaces The Encyclopedia of the Opera (BRD 1956). Approximately three-quarters of the book consists of new or rewritten material. More than 1,500 entries have been added. The stories of the operas, with brief summaries of lesser-known works, are listed in alphabetical order, as well as biographies, history of opera, opera in performance, literary sources and definitions of terms.

"This encyclopedia . . . is a splendid collection, not only of facts but of full and accurate summaries of all the . . . plots. . . . There is not much that one would want to know about the opera that could not be found in this big, handsomely composed tome. For the opera lover, for the person who just likes erudition, for the simply curious, for almost anybody, this is a great book." W. B. Hill

Best Sell 31:240 S 1 '71 200w

"Ewen . . . addresses himself to 'the present-day operagoer.' He is quite right, therefore, in giving pride of place to over one hundred detailed synopses of well-known operas. He is right, too, in preferring to include biographies of all the currently famous singers and in . . . [devoting space] to the proper identification of hundreds of operatic characters and first lines of musical numbers. . . . that constitutes one of the book's original contributions and is a most useful feature. Not so, however, its presentation of operatic history. At best, this is simplistic. . . . [There are also] little inaccuracies of date, spelling, and fact that make it impossible to recommend this as a reference work." Piero Weiss

Music Lib Assn Notes 28:679 Je '72 1000w

"The 5,000 entries and cross references . . . make it easy to find virtually anything relevant to the subject: phrases ('Siegmond! sieh' auf mieh!'), arias ('Casta diva'), characters (Fillipievna: 'a nurse, mezzo-soprano, in Tchaikovsky's Eugene Onegin'), librettists, composers, singers, musical trends (electronic), terms (leitmotif), opera houses and organizations, and of course the operas themselves. For these Ewen outlines the plot, and deftly characterizes the atmosphere and music." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 54:47 D 4 '71 60w

EXTERNAL financing for Latin American development; pub. for the General secretariat of the Organization of Am. states. 248p il $10 Johns Hopkins press

332 Economic assistance. Latin America—
Economic conditions
ISBN 0-8018-1208-9 LC 74-119109

"This volume reports the results of a . . . study of governmental assistance to Latin America during the period 1961-1968. Credits and other contributions of U.S. and Washington-based international agencies are computed and evaluated . . . [not only] in terms of absolute amounts, but also of true 'opportunity costs' to the United States and 'aid components' received by Latin America. It is concluded that levels of financing projected by the Alliance for Progress have not been met. . . . Projections of financing gaps are calculated for each country." (Library J)

"Prepared . . . from a report which the OAS Secretariat presented to the Sixth Annual Meeting of Inter-American Economic and Social Council, Port of Spain, June 1969, . . . this volume is laced with detailed statistics and explanations of methods. A major contribution—no other study provides such authoritative data and analysis."

Choice 8:1222 N '71 220w

"The report will deserve intensive study by economists throughout the hemisphere." C. T. Goodsell

Library J 96:631 F 15 '71 150w

EYDOUX, HENRI-PAUL. In search of lost worlds; the story of archaeology. 344p il maps $17.50 World pub.

913 Archeology. Archeologists. Near East—Antiquities
LC 77-143202

This work tells the "story of the great archaeological discoveries from the . . . finds of the early Egyptologists to the explorations at Masada in the 1960s, when archaeologists were able to make use of the latest scientific techniques. It shows how these discoveries have not only thrown fresh light on the famous civilisations of the past—Assyria, Egypt, Persia and many others—but have also revealed flourishing cultures, such as those of Minoan Crete and Mycenaean Greece." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Chronology. Index.

"This book truly captures the meaning of archaeology. . . . [Eydox] sensitively confronts the plaguing question, why do men devote their lives to uncovering the past? He conveys the explanation in the carefully constructed panorama of his book—obviously a labor of love. . . . The book's illustrations support well the evolution of archaeology theme: many are drawings prepared by the pioneer archaeologists and show how these men conceived of their finds. . . . [The over-all impressive effect] is marred by the author's desire to drag in too many of his predecessors: the result, at times, is a laundry-list-type gallop through the 16th- and 17th-century precursors of modern archaeologists. . . . Still I recommend this book to anyone interested in the past, in the study of people, to anyone who wants a good story of modern scholarship, well told with sympathy and love." Jon Sutherland

Christian Science Monitor p10 F 10 '72 400w

"[This is] the work of a genuinely informed enthusiast with admirable and sometimes unfamiliar illustrations. Behind them it covers predictable ground, mainly in the eastern Mediterranean and the Near East. Again, much information but essentially uninspired dragoon-stuff." Mortimer Wheeler

Encounter 37:63 O '71 110w

EYSENCK, H. J. The IQ argument; race, intelligence and education [Eng title: Race, intelligence and education]. 155p il $5.95 Lib. press

155.8 Intellect. Race. Education
ISBN 0-912050-16-0 LC 71-169974

A professor of psychology at London University attempts to present evidence which agrees with Professor A. R. Jensen's hypothesis that race affects intelligence. He presents statistical evidence that "the average Black American has an IQ of 85, compared to the average White American's IQ of 100. . . . Eysenck argues and attempts to prove . . . that the reasons are not solely environmental but, in part, genetically caused. . . . [He] believes it should be the purpose of education, through adequate research, to make maximum use of the abilities which children have rather than assume that all are genetically equal in all their abilities." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

EYSENCK, H. J.—Continued

Choice 9:94 Mr '72 90w

"The major objection to Professor Eysenck's work is that he is simply out of touch with the more recent anthropological thinking, has little understanding of the implications of genetics and neurobiology, and disregards the basic tenets of the very science he maintains he is using. . . . It is clear that this is not a careful, scientific, scholarly work written for fellow scientists. Professor Eysenck has written a work for public consumption in an attempt to influence public policy in education. In such a situation one would have hoped he would proceed more carefully and on better philosophical and scientific grounds than he has." A. F. D'Adamo

Commonweal 95:42 O 8 '71 1700w

"Professor Eysenck has done his best . . . to rescue [Jensen] from the distortions that inaccurate reporting have wrought on his theory. He does find the evidence of intelligence tests, so far as possible 'culture-free,' carried out in the United States on negro, Indian and white children convincing. In fact the black children showed up better, relative to the white, on culturally biased associative tests than in supposedly fairer conceptual ones. But no one could call him a racist. First, he points out that the issue is not one of black versus white races: the conclusions only apply to small sub-groups within large ones—different results have been achieved in the south and north of the United States, and similar differences have been found between the Irish and English."

Economist 239:64 Je 19 '71 340w

"[Eysenck] explains the kind of criticism that racial psychometry has to meet. What he cannot altogether succeed in doing is to establish the value of comparisons between groups with different life experience. He himself would not rely upon comparisons, based upon tests now available, between members of widely different cultures. . . . He suggests ways of getting to grips with this question but one is left, despite his advocacy, with the feeling that there are too many complexities at too many levels for the results to mean very much. . . . He himself draws no racist conclusions from [his findings]. . . . but others may. . . . His egalitarian believing in the innate equality of all human beings is an Aunt Sally. Who actually believes this?" D. E. Newth

New Statesman 82:18 Ji 11 '71 1500w

"[Eysenck has written] a generally inflammatory book . . . clearly designed to tempt the lay reader into a pseudo-battle between Truth and Ignorance. . . . For the careful reader, the battle fades out inconclusively. . . . This book is an uncritical popularization of Jensen's ideas without the nuances and qualifiers that make much of Jensen's writing credible or at least responsible. . . . It is a maddeningly inconsistent book filled with contradictory caution and in-caution; with hypotheses stated both as hypotheses and as conclusions; with both accurate and inaccurate statements on matters of fact. . . . [It] is carelessly put together, with no index; few references . . . and long, inadequately cited quotes. . . . Furthermore, considering the gravity of Eysenck's theses, the book has an occasional jocularity of tone that is offensive."

Sandra Scarr-Salapatek

Science 174:1223 D 17 '71 1900w

TLS p1073 S 10 '71 1050w

F

FAAS, LARRY A., ed. The emotionally disturbed child; a book of readings. 386p il $14.50 Thomas, C.C.

371.9 Problem children—Education

LC 74-100421

This book "is an overview of issues regarding emotionally disturbed children in the public schools and the roles of psychologists, psychiatrists, and teachers." (Am Soc R)

"There is an uneven quality to this collection of papers. . . . [Many] are not new, nor do they reflect most current research or clinical findings. Further, there is some discrepancy between the titular intent and the accomplished fact. The book is not entirely about the emotionally disturbed child, but is in fact an overview of areas related to such children, at times with dubious relevance. Many of the papers are excellent and should be read by anyone interested in dysfunctional school children. . . . The book has much to recommend it as ancillary reading for undergraduate education majors wishing to teach emotionally disturbed children." M. S. Perlmuter

Am Soc R 36:1154 D '71 320w

"Extremely broad and yet thorough in its scope. . . . The contents are practical, informative, and very readable, except for two contributions. . . . Most adequate reference features."

Choice 8:450 My '71 120w

FABER, DORIS. Oh Lizzie!; the life of Elizabeth Cady Stanton. 159p il $4.59; hb bdg $4.69 Lothrop

B or 92 Stanton, Elizabeth (Cady)—Juvenile literature. Woman—Suffrage—Juvenile literature
LC 79-177322

This is an account of the life and career of Elizabeth C. Stanton "who in 1848 dared to propose that women should vote, and who reworded the Declaration of Independence to state that all men and women are created equal. With Susan B. Anthony as her collaborator. . . . Lizzie carried the crusade of women's rights from Maine to California throughout her long and active life." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades four to eight." (Library J)

"The book is most winning in bringing alive the young Elizabeth Cady. . . . Effortlessly, the book reveals how the struggle for women's rights grew naturally alongside two other 19th-century crusades: abolitionism and temperance. The reader comes to understand the uphill battle of Mrs. Stanton and her colleagues to convince not only male legislators but members of their own sex that all men—and women—are created equal. It is a timely, sound, and entertaining work." S. G. L.

Book World p5 (children's issue) My 7 '72 240w

"[This] is a semi-fictionalized account. Although written in a lively manner, the book is riddled with small inaccuracies." A. S.

Horn BK 48:386 Ag '72 50w

"[This is a] sympathetic biography. . . . But questions are left unanswered. For example, how did their long periods of separation affect Henry and Elizabeth Stanton's marriage? Why, in light of her growing commitment to the women's rights movement, did Mrs. Stanton continue to bear so many children? Although this is the only biography of Stanton available for the age group, the simplistic treatment of these issues poses obvious contradictions for modern children who are familiar with the women's liberation movement." J. D. Barnett

Library J 97:2483 Ji '72 140w

FACOS, JAMES. The silver lady. 279p $5.95 Atheneum pubs.

LC 74-184723

"This story of a U.S. bomber crew in England during World War II focuses on the relationship between Wyatt, the bomber's ball-turret gunner, and Hagen, the right-waist armorer. Wyatt is a New England Quaker who, after much soul searching, has joined the Air Force. Hagen, a product of the Boston streets, is little given to introspection and quick with his fists. The unexpected friendship between these two develops under the pressure of repeated raids over Germany. Wyatt's involvement in a tragic love affair threatens to break the bond between the men and highlights their differences." (Library J)

"Facos in his first book, . . . succeeds in treating the subject [of war] with sincerity and freshness. . . . [He] has acquitted himself admirably in handling the scenes involving . . . life on the air base, and in the skillful presentation of the complex Wyatt. The contrast between the way the bomb crew ■■■ the 'outsider' and the way he sees himself is extraordinarily well done. The treatment of the love affair, on the other hand, smacks of sentimentality. . . . This book, much better than the average novel, deserves reading." Eileen Kennedy

Best Sell 32:90 My 15 '72 450w

"The author offers us little more than conventional situations and characters: the crew as ■ cross section of America, the loner who gradually becomes a team player, the airman's perverse love for their plane (and) the final mission when the crippled plane and crew stagger home. . . . This retelling of an oft-told tale is neither inspired nor exciting." R. T. Dillon

Library J 97:2431 J1 '72 110w

Reviewed by Judy Kristofferson

Library J 97:3473 O 15 '72 140w [YA]

"Like his hero, Facos was a ball-turret gunner on a Flying Fortress during the air war over Germany. He has distilled this experience into the fictional essence of what it was like to sweat out 25 excursions into hell. As the B-17 (The Silver Lady) limps back from each deep penetration run, its crew members—inevitably—feel ever-mounting tension. . . . The philosophical differences [between the two gunners] develop a hollow ring when contrasted with the stunning realism of the novel's airborne chapters." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p41 Ap 23 '72 120w

FAGE, J. D., ed. Papers in African prehistory; ed. by J. D. Fage and R. A. Oliver. 331p il maps $10; pa $2.95 Cambridge

916 Africa—History. Africa—Antiquities

SBN 521-07470-3; 521-09566-2 (pa)

LC 74-77286

"This book contains eighteen articles on various aspects of mostly Sub-Saharan pre-and proto-history which appeared in the Journal of African Prehistory between 1960 and 1966. Four papers have been updated, and one translated from the French." (Am Anthropol) Index.

"The editors achieve a fair balance between general, topical reports and local or regional accounts. The whole forms an excellent sampler of African archaeology in the 1960s, and could be used as ■ supplement to a survey volume in a course on African prehistory." G. W. Hewes

Am Anthropol 74:115 F/Ap '72 1000w

"The essays, all by ardent scholars in the field, range from a survey of the Stone Age by J. D. Clark . . . to a more particular look at the archaeology of Ife, Nigeria by Frank Willett. . . . Scanty materials in African prehistory make this readable work . . . must buying for every college library. . . . Excellent bibliographic material; good line diagrams and photographs; fair index. Highly recommended for all college libraries."

Choice 8:128 Mr '71 180w

FAHEY, JOHN. The ballyhoo bonanza; Charles Sweeny and the Idaho mines. 288p il maps $10 Univ. of Wash. press

979.6 Mines and mineral resources—Idaho. Sweeny, Charles. Coeur d'Alene, Idaho

LC 68-11046

"The years from 1885 to 1910 saw Idaho's Coeur d'Alene mines evolve from a scattered group of prospect holes to corporations that produced a third or more of the nation's lead. A major catalyst in this transformation was Charles Sweeny, a second-generation Irish immigrant who had ventured westward to seek his fortune after the Civil War. . . . Sweeny bought up the district's first townside and plunged immediately into the prospecting, speculation, and manipulation that were to characterize his . . . career. . . . [Fahey traces the] circuitous path of buying and selling, organization and reorganization, financial dealing and legal dueling, which enabled [Sweeny] by 1903 to consolidate most of the major mines of the Coeur d'Alenes into the Federal Mining and Smelting Company." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is] neither a definitive biography of Sweeny (1849-1916) nor a complete history of the Idaho mines. . . . Chapters on the district's labor troubles in the 1890's and on the bringing of electricity to the mines are only incidentally concerned with Sweeny, while the introductory and concluding chapters (on Sweeny's early life and his last years) have little to do with the mines. The publisher's claim that the book cuts 'across a major section of western history, business history, and the social history of the self-made man at the turn of the century' is substantiated in the text (though one is left in some doubt as to precisely how Sweeny built up his fortune, for he seemed to lose more money than he made). . . . The book is well researched and written, but because of the meticulous detail large sections are tedious to read. . . . Recommended for libraries, with mining or Western history collections."

Choice 9:102 Mr '72 220w

"Based on letters, newspaper files, interviews, and official records, The Ballyhoo Bonanza is a scholarly study of an entrepreneur who was the epitome of the American dream of 'rags to riches.' For readers who are unfamiliar with business history, the elimination of some unnecessary repetitions and the expansion of the summations of Sweeny's respective business involvement would be helpful. . . . The editing is superb, the format of the book is attractive, and the study is ■ significant contribution." Ernest Wallace

J Am Hist 59:437 S '72 550w

"Fahey has done a good job of reconstructing the complicated story of both the man and the district. A scholarly treatment, recommended for specialists in Western or mining history." W. E. Parrish

Library J 97:675 F 15 '72 110w

FAIN, HASKELL. Between philosophy and history; the resurrection of speculative philosophy of history within the analytic tradition. 329p $10 Princeton univ. press

901 History—Philosophy. Analysis (Philosophy)

ISBN 0-691-07158-6 LC 70-90946

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by G. G. Iggers

Am Hist R 77:110 F '72 380w

Reviewed by L. O. Mink

Am Pol Sci R 65:1164 D '71 1100w

Reviewed by R. H. Weingartner

J Philos 69:227 Ap 20 '72 1900w

FAIR, RONALD. We can't breathe. 216p $6.95 Harper

SBN 06-011216-6 LC 72-156560

This novel, the author's fourth, is autobiographical. It concerns "a young black growing up in the slums of Chicago during the thirties and forties. . . . [It opens with] 7-year-old Ernie—the narrator-protagonist—and his gang roaming the streets scavenging, killing rats, smashing wine bottles, finding games in the filth. . . . Somehow, Ernie becomes a writer." (Nation)

Choice 9:644 J1/Ag '72 100w

"Fair has written an unsparing, brilliant, yet unexpectedly warm and touching book." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p6 D 30 '71 370w

"[This] novel, naturalistic in style and narrated in the first person . . . is intended as a memorial to the rural Southern blacks who left their homes for the unknown evils, and hoped-for benefits, of the Northern cities. Fair graphically portrays the sad details of slum life—rats and roaches, fragmented families—along with the close-knit adolescent friendships, the uneducated but loving parents, and the teacher who introduces the hero to books (via a biography of Toussaint L'Ouverture). Anecdotal in structure, the novel is further weakened by the narrator's detached viewpoint—that of an adult looking back upon the past. Nevertheless, it can be recommended for large fiction collections, and libraries with particular interest in black fiction." S. L. Silverman

Library J 96:4029 D 1 '71 150w

Reviewed by J. H. Bryant

Nation 214:253 F 21 '72 1050w

Reviewed by George Davis

N Y Times Bk R p6 F 6 '72 950w

New Yorker 47:103 F 5 '72 160w

"The novel succeeds best in conveying a tone, compassion and regret. We witness families destroyed, lives wasted, justice denied. Although not primarily a protest or political novel, We Can't Breathe . . . dramatizes the hypocrisy of a legal system based on a double standard of punishment. . . . Judged as a document of ghetto life, [this book] is detailed and informative. But Fair has chosen to write a novel, and his work must be judged as such. Although the opening section, describing winter games in an ugly slum, is a lyric gem, the writing in general is very uneven." Leonard Fleischer

FAIR, RONALD—Continued

Sat R 55:74 F 19 '72 480w

Reviewed by Michael Cooke
Yale R 61:599 Je '72 430w

FAIRBANK, JOHN KING. The United States and China. (The Am. for. pol. lib.) 3d ed 500p maps $9.95 Harvard univ. press 951 China—History. U.S.—Foreign relations—China. China—Foreign relations—U.S.

ISBN 0-674-92401-0 LC 71-152270

In this "latest edition of Fairbank's account of modern China and [the] U.S. . . . the author [has] brought his treatment of the People's Republic up to date with . . . [an] interpretation of the period from the Great Leap Forward to the Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution. . . . [He also attempts] to explain the historical meaning of both old and new China against a background of American attitudes toward an involvement in China and East Asia." (Choice) For the first and second editions see BRD 1948 and 1958.

"In trying to educate ourselves about China, there is probably no better starting point than [this book]. . . . [It] furnishes a readable and concise history . . . compendious and authoritative without ever being pedestrian or dull." Ronald Steel

Book World p1 Ap 9 '72 160w

"[The author] has carefully rearranged and rewritten much of the earlier material in order to incorporate new insights of his own as well as the recent researches of younger scholars (many of them his own students). More an interpretive study than a historical survey, this volume does not replace such recent publications as [H.] McAlvay, The modern history of China [BRD 1967], [G.] Moseley, China since 1911 [BRD 1970], or [I.] Hsu, The rise of modern China [BRD 1970].

. . . As Fairbank indicates at several points in the book, this edition was prepared for the press under the tremendous impact of the Viet-Nam crisis and reveals clearly just how much of a moral dilemma the American intervention in Viet-Nam has been for concerned Asian scholars in America. Indispensable for all libraries."

Choice 8:1232 N '71 230w

"Despite its title, this lucid survey emphasizes China, with the United States and other foreign nations but briefly entering center stage before returning to the wings. There is a human vitality in this book—thanks to Professor Fairbank's close contact with Chinese culture." F. A. Moritz

Christian Science Monitor p8 S 30 '71 180w

FAIRFAX, JOHN. Britannia: rowing alone across the Atlantic; the record of an adventure. 221p il $6.95 Simon & Schuster

910.4 Britannia (Rowboat). Atlantic Ocean. Rowing. Voyages and travels
SBN 671-21005-X LC 70-163494

"On January 20, 1969, at 10:30 A.M., John Fairfax rowed his twenty-five-foot open boat away from the beach on the Canary Islands. On July 19, 180 days and 4,500 nautical miles later, he touched shore in Florida—having crossed the Atlantic by the strength of his own two hands at the oars of his boat. . . . [He] describes how he planned his voyage, how he persuaded the . . . English boat designer Uffa Fox to draw up the plans for Britannia—and how he survived six months alone at sea, rowing twelve to twenty hours a day in an open boat." (Publisher's note)

"[This] book begins with the planning of the voyage in London, and then . . . [Fairfax] shares with the reader his ship's log and adds retrospective embellishments." J. C. Parker

Library J 97:1324 Ap 1 '72 90w

"By his own account, Mr Fairfax emerges . . . curious kind of nautical frontiersman, relieving the drudgery of rowing by singing opera, imploring 'his' Goddess Venus for following winds and filling his log with purplish patches of insight (or is it hindsight?): . . . [The author] is very different from the British superman of the sea of recent years. It is this self-assertive Errol Flynn-ish life-style rather than the adventure itself which makes his book readable: an account of a two-steps-backward-for-each-step-forward passage, its monotony relieved only by encounters with passing ships."

TLS p639 Je 2 '72 450w

FAITH, NICHOLAS. The infiltrators; the European business of America. 242p $7.95 Dutton 332.6 Investments. Business enterprises. Foreign—U.S.

SBN 0-525-13305-4 LC 72-173028

This book describes foreign enterprises in the United States, their organization, problems, and success. Bibliography. Index.

Choice 9:1012 O '72 190w

"There is far less to be afraid of in the United States than most European businessmen seem to believe, and the real value of Mr Faith's book is to demonstrate, in a breezy and readable way, and with reference to all the well-known examples of European investment in the United States, that the difficulties are surmountable and the advantages great—even if the profits are not always worth writing home about."

Economist 241:64 O 23 '71 550w

"The author, a business editor of the London Sunday Times . . . details the problems which have made such assaults into the New World very difficult, as foreign corporations have had to deal with a more complex governmental structure and more complex constraints, difficult tax barriers, and the ever present anti-trust division of the Justice Department. [He] also provides corporate case histories of such well-known firms as Schweppes, Beecham, and Olivetti. (Whitehead's foreword does not add appreciably to the work, however.) If the book is not the most exciting account possible, it is surely intelligently written and holds the reader's interest." Paul Wasserman

Library J 97:2169 Je 16 '72 200w

FALES, DEAN A. American painted furniture, 1660-1880. [by] Dean A. Fales, Jr.; Robert Bishop; il. and design ed; Cyril I. Nelson: general editor. 299p $33.50 Dutton

749.2 Furniture, American. Decoration and ornament. American
SBN 0-525-05387-5 LC 75-186361

The author "explores the history of American painted furniture from the restrained coloration of the Taunton chests to the Rococo exuberance of 19th-century country furniture . . . [and includes] such diverse topics as the decoration of Windsor chairs and Victorian papier-maché." (Choice) Bibliography. General index and index of owners of furniture illustrated.

"Fales, a name known in museum and scholarly circles, has written a groundbreaking book that should be well received by curators and collectors alike. [The author maintains] high scholarly standards. . . . The high quality illustrations, many of which are of objects in private collections, are well chosen, and the lucid text does much to enhance one's appreciation. All survey books suffer from some superficiality, but the pioneering nature of this volume does much to compensate for this almost necessary shortcoming. This book will be of value both to libraries having a clientele concerned with antiques, and major academic institutions interested in making a basic addition to their collections in American culture and design."

Choice 9:1120 N '72 160w

Reviewed by Marilyn Gell

Library J 97:3576 N 1 '72 100w

FALES, EDWARD D. Belts on, buttons down; what every mother should know about car safety. [by] Edward D. Fales, Jr., and members of the staff of the Boston Children's Medical Center; il. by Marc Simon. (A Seymour Lawrence bk) 164p $5.95 Delacorte press

614.8 Automobile drivers. Automobiles—Safety measures. Accidents—Prevention. Safety appliances
LC 77-148600

This guide is "meant for mothers who must drive with children. It deals with the causes of accidents and how best to avoid them and includes discussions on car maintenance, safety devices, rules to insist on while driving, and related matters. There are instructions on what to do in emergencies and an appendix on how to keep children amused while traveling by car." (Library J)

"This is an excellent guide. . . . The sections dealing with children in accident situations are sobering indeed. On the whole, this is a very useful and important work, one from which all mothers (and fathers) who drive could profit." Judith Hoffman

Library J 96:4102 D 15 '71 100w

"The book is based on wide research and offers a wealth of tips."

N Y Times Bk R p57 N 14 '71 40w

FALK, RICHARD A., ed. The future of the international legal order, v2. See The future of the international legal order

FALK, RICHARD A., ed. The international law of civil war [by] Quincy Wright [and others] pub. under the auspices of the Am. soc. of int. law. 452p maps $15 Johns Hopkins press

341.6 War. International law

ISBN 0-8018-1200-3 LC 72-123193

"This work was initiated by the American Society of International Law. It comprises six case studies of civil war situations—namely, in the United States, 1861-1865, representing the nineteenth century; in Spain, 1936-1939, as the pre-World War II prototype; Algeria, Congo and Yemen, in the postwar era; and the still-in-progress Vietnam conflict. . . . The investigation tests the adherence to and relevance of international law during civil strife by the internal antagonists and the external foreign supporters." (Ann Am Acad) Index.

"Each study represents independent research, scholarship, and excellent presentation by one or two contributors bearing their own trademark of style. . . . Each study does not touch, with equal emphasis, the same criteria—for example, the factual account, foreign policy considerations, role of neutrals, treatment of prisoners, protection of civilians, avoidance of nonmilitary targets, and so forth—because each civil war has its own peculiarities, yet in each instance the contributor underscores the practice of international law principles or its token application of its complete abandonment. . . . The contributors confront in depth the patterns of state practice, illuminate the policy behind decisions and demonstrate the interplay of domestic violence and external participation." D. C. Turack

Ann Am Acad 403:165 S '72 650w

"As a result of the panel's guidelines, there is a similarity in the presentation of the various cases. Not only nation-states, but also international organizations, especially the UN, are taken into consideration. Only recently has the necessity for the modernization of international law been realized, and this remarkable book will stimulate further work in this direction. While suitable chiefly for specialists in international law, it will also be of interest to political scientists." H. H. Bernt

Library J 96:202 Ja 15 '71 160w

FALK, RICHARD A., ed. The Vietnam War and international law: the widening context [sponsored by the] Am. soc. of int. law. v3 951p $25; pa $9.50 Princeton univ. press

341.5 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- . Intervention (International law)

ISBN 0-691-09224-9; 0-691-02753-6 (pa)

LC 67-31925

"This volume embraces four new areas: international legal and constitutional aspects of the 1970 Cambodian incursion; war crimes, with focus on the My Lai incident; the wide-ranging U.S. constitutional debate on the Viet-Nam war as to executive, legislative, and judicial prerogatives; and a special question on the 'legitimacy and legal rights of revolutionary movements with special reference to the Provisional Revolutionary Government of South Viet-Nam.'" (Choice) For volumes one and two see BRD 1968 and 1971. Index.

"The third in an open-ended series which might go on after the Viet-Nam war is over, by a well-known antiwar legal scholar and activist. A useful compendium for researchers. . . . Useful documentary appendices and index.

Main criticisms are (a) overselectivity of articles and topics included, and (b) absence of non-American contributors. . . . Also, the cost of this series seems too high in view of minimal editing and cold-type reproduction of articles. Nevertheless, it is recommended for all four-year colleges and large public libraries."

Choice 9:1039 O '72 180w

Christian Century 89:758 J1 5/12 '72 60w

"While there is at least some evidence of an editorial thumb on the scales, this study is fairly balanced, and the selections are almost uniformly valuable, drawn from some forty eminent experts. Overambition in scope is compensated by richness of material."

Va Q R 48:cxlix autumn '72 150w

FALK, RICHARD A., ed. Wealth and resources. See The future of the international legal order, v2

FALKIRK, RICHARD. The chill factor. 232p $5.95 Doubleday

LC 75-150888

This mystery is set in the "cold areas of Iceland where William Conran, British agent, is investigating the activities of three supposed Russian supporters. The seemingly unrelated death of a young girl confounds the investigation which ultimately brings Conran into the heretofore unknown operations of several prominent Icelanders who sought to gain a foothold for Germany in Iceland during the days of [Hitler]." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 31:236 Ag 15 '71 80w

"This fast-paced story of sex, death, and intrigue heats up the frigid landscape of Iceland to produce an exciting story of contemporary adventure. . . . Carefully plotted, and with accurate depictions of the flora and fauna of Iceland, this is an exciting story which all readers of the adventure-spy genre will appreciate." P. D. Thomas

Library J 96:2102 Je 15 '71 100w

"[This is a] well-done example of [its] kind—taut, cleanly written, building to bang-up climax. . . . [It] demonstrates a writer well on his way to thorough professionalism. Perhaps next time Falkirk will dispense with the antique device of the final confrontation between a hero held at gunpoint and a confident criminal who explains all. By now, this kind of get-together is as surprising as garlic in an Italian restaurant." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p46 S 26 '71 100w

"An all-right story. . . . It gains much from the background; without it, the tale would be a bit soggy."

TLS p1638 D 31 '71 30w

FALLACI, ORIANA. Nothing, and so be it; tr. by Isabel Quigly. 320p $7.95 Doubleday

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- —Personal narratives, Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- —Journalists

LC 79-150889

"Life, what is it?" asked Oriana Fallaci's small sister the night before the . . . Italian journalist was to leave for Vietnam. 'Life is the time that passes from the moment we're born to the moment we die . . . that's all,' the older sister replied. Nothing, and So Be It is the . . . account of Miss Fallaci's search . . . for a better answer to that question. The diary of her three trips to Vietnam in 1967 and 1968 . . . comprises the bulk of the book." (Sat R)

"Anti-war books are not pretty reading. . . . [This one] stays with you after you finish it; it details, it questions, it demands answers, it outrages. In short, it is one of the finest anti-war books to come out of this war." P. T. Majkut

Best Sell 32:12 Ap 1 '72 650w

"The most moving parts of the book are two translated diaries of dead North Vietnamese soldiers. Most North Vietnamese soldiers keep little personal diaries and when they are killed the Americans (because Fallaci is Italian she doesn't identify with the Americans and the American reader can enjoy the book with less than the usual guilt) seize them, catalogue them, and translate them to collect information for counterpropaganda.

FALLACI, ORIANA—Continued

They are worth buying the book to read. Also not to be passed over lightly are the last few pages of the book, which deal with the student massacre in Mexico City in the summer of 1968, in which she herself was badly wounded. It is devastatingly horrible." Sally Quinn
Book World p12 Mr 19 '72 800w

"[Fallaci] interviewed refugees and soldiers at the front, taped conversations with Vietcong prisoners and Nguyen Cao Ky, went on a bombing mission whose purpose was to kill South Vietnamese farmers who had refused to buy our rice and insisted on growing their own (which the Vietcong would then steal). The bestiality on both sides, as well as the kindnesses, leaves her questions unanswered, her feelings numb. . . . Many of her experiences are interesting and enlightening, especially the interview with Ky. But the thinking seems muddled, and much that is here has been discussed time and again." Juliet Woodbury
Library J 97:891 Mr 1 '72 220w

"[This book] reveals Miss Fallaci as a woman who is not only courageous but passionately honest as well. . . . In Hue, she nearly reached the end of her emotional resources, for there she saw children playing with corpses as if with toys, and the thought of belonging to the human race made her ashamed. Like other women correspondents who have seen more horror than they can bear, Miss Fallaci reached out for fresh life in a vain effort to adopt a Vietnamese child. . . . [Americans] emerge at the worst as savages and at the best as well-meaning, clumsy innocents. But Miss Fallaci is as critical of Russian guns in Prague as she is of American artillery in Vietnam, for she has learned that man's inhumanity to the poor and defenseless is the ultimate obscenity regardless of who displays it." Margaret Parton
Sat R 55:75 Mr 18 '72 900w

TLS p936 Ag 11 '72 470w

FANTEL, HANS. The waltz kings; Johann Strauss, father & son, and their romantic age [Eng title: Johann Strauss: father and son, and their era]. 246p il $6.95 Morrow

B or 92 Strauss, Johann, 1804-1849. Strauss, Johann, 1825-1899
LC 71-151920

This is a portrayal of the lives and musical careers of the two Strausses whose life span ran from 1804-1899.

"The Strauss histories are told frankly but sympathetically, and there is again the wonder how lives as turbulent, and often depressing, as theirs could give rise to the serenity and joyous optimism of their music. The author seems most comfortable in his descriptions of . . . [their music]. Many otherwise notable personages enter the story of the Strausses, and of these encounters Johannes Brahms' relationship with the younger Johann is perhaps the most touching. . . . The final chapter of the book throws interesting light on the true nature of the composers' ancestry, facts which the author asserts have appeared in no earlier Strauss biographies." H. A. Kennedy
Best Sell 32:183 Jl 15 '72 250w

"I find it difficult to take this book seriously. . . . The Strausses wrote entertaining and sometimes very good music, but they hardly deserve the veneration Fantel gives them. He makes them seem, if not musical geniuses, then at least the creators of the principal musical expression of their age. The Strausses may warrant a new biography in English, but a less worshipful one would have done better." A. B. Skei
Library J 97:2188 Je 15 '72 100w

FARADAY, ANN. Dream power. 334p $6.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

154.6 Dreams. Psychotherapy
LC 75-146083

The author reviews modern experimental dream research and findings, critically appraises the dream interpretation theories and methods of Freud, Jung, Hall, and Perls in view of these findings, expounds three major aspects of dreams for the self-analyst to consider, citing examples from her group-work experience, and suggests future social benefits derivable through dream power. Bibliography. Index.

"Faraday is . . . an English psychologist whose speculation grows authoritatively out of several years of original research. Her book is an admirably readable, often charming guide to the field as a whole. While well-grounded in her profession, she writes in a brisk, unstuffy style and her approach has no doctrinaire axes to grind. Her survey radiates much personality, mainly because she punctuates it liberally with case material from her research and with many remarkably candid references to her own life waking and dreaming. . . . As Faraday shows, . . . dramatic extrapolation [as used in the Perls method] can unearth a deal of repressed truth about the subject—though I wonder if the dream is really a necessary basis for the technique." Theodore Roszak

Book World p1 Mr 26 '72 1200w

Christian Century 89:374 Mr 29 '72 60w

Economist 243:79 My 20 '72 480w

"The author is concerned with showing how dreams can help 'normal' people get to know and understand themselves better. . . . Faraday is a professional leader of encounter groups in dream therapy. . . . Well-chosen case histories show dreams may be existential experiences packed with information. . . . Many of the examples she uses deal frankly with sex, marriage, and Women's Lib. Her approach is relaxed, and her book will help readers to appreciate their dreams as tools for personal growth." C. M. Schoen
Library J 97:1816 My 15 '72 140w

"In the first section of her book Ann Faraday reviews the past twenty years' research on dreaming in a lucid and entertaining way, demolishing some myths and distinguishing facts from hypotheses. She discusses the possible function of dreaming . . . [and]—depending on the reader's point of view—more speculative or more fascinating material, based on the author's work with therapeutic 'dream groups' and on her own experiences. She is splendidly frank about the latter. . . . Even an enthusiast for dreams as an essential part of experience may not, however, be able to share the author's conviction that dream-therapy groups—in schools, churches, businesses, and families—are going to be the future answer to society's problems." TLS p340 Mr 24 '72 550w

FARAGO, LADISLAS. The game of the foxes; the untold story of German espionage in the United States and Great Britain during World War II. 696p $11.95 McKay

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—Secret service. Espionage, German
LC 72-179352

The author "tells how agents of the Abwehr, the German Intelligence Service, pulled off such . . . feats of cloaking and daggering as swiping the Norden bomb sight, tricking spies into sensitive spots in Washington and London, tapping the Roosevelt-Churchill hot line, and the like. . . . Farago's book is the outgrowth of a find he made in a dark loft of the National Archives in Washington, D.C. The find was a forgotten footlocker which turned out to contain microfilm documents on the internal workings of the Abwehr under its . . . chief, Admiral Canaris." (Book World) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by P. R. Schratz
America 126:436 Ap 22 '72 200w

Reviewed by Elbridge Colby
Best Sell 31:501 F 15 '72 330w

"This is [Farago's] sixth or seventh book on spying, and he has had some rather special experience at first hand in that curious endeavor. Though a naturalized citizen, and a native of a country with which we were at war, he rose high in U.S. Naval Intelligence. . . . Everything is scrupulously, not to say laboriously, documented, down to the last street number, date, and middle initial. . . . At the end, though, one wonders whether the game of foxes has been worth the candle. Despite the successes of Nazi espionage—sometimes detailed here with what can only be called misplaced enthusiasm—nothing really decisive was accomplished. . . . There is, to be sure, a certain fascination in getting this unexpected peek into all those Streng Geheim! papers . . . but the fun is a good deal diminished by the circumstance that the Abwehr, like Germany itself, was a loser." Richard Hanser
Book World p12 Ja 16 '72 850w

Choice 9:1181 N '72 240w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p11 My 24 '72 160w

Reviewed by G. C. Zahn

Commonweal 97:229 D ■ '72 500w

"British and German Intelligence Operations and Personalities which Changed the Course of the Second World War" is the subtitle. Readers would be unwise to take it too seriously. Modern intelligence is far too intricate a web of interlocking elements for even a superspy to . . . change the course of history. . . . [Farago] has chosen to present the unique but indigestible mass of facts at his disposal in a form designed to attract the widest possible readership. The result is a series of easy-to-read, separate stories—one or two to be taken at bedtime—rather than a consecutive narrative. . . . The author has managed to distill the official documents on the agents concerned, and reconstitute them as colourful human beings."

Economist 243:53 Ap 1 '72 700w

Reviewed by Norman Horrocks

Library J 97:679 F 15 '72 210w

"That Sir John Masterman, double-cross expert, was himself double-crossed is the only fact of value (and perhaps the only fact) in [this] bulky, pretentious book. . . . Episodes are presented in a sensational form which provokes more skepticism even than they merit. . . . I am not qualified to check the stories dealing with American affairs. But there are also British episodes, presumably based on the German records, and these contain large quantities of undiluted nonsense." A. J. P. Taylor

N Y Rev of Books 18:16 F 10 '72 500w

"[This] is an ample book, well documented, always entertaining, moving quickly, if unsystematically, from highlight to highlight. It will undoubtedly, and deservedly, be a popular book. As history, its value is uneven. . . . [The author's] sources are of varying value, and he does not sufficiently distinguish between them; so good and bad evidence is inextricably mixed. Moreover, in the interest of a good story, he will sometimes make arbitrary connections. . . . But with all these qualifications, Mr. Farago's achievement remains remarkable. His revelations are always diverting, often novel, generally well based. His book reveals more about the game of espionage, on a particular front, than anything so far published. Those who are interested in that game, as a game, will find plenty to enjoy here." Hugh Trevor-Roper

N Y Times Bk R pl Ja 30 '72 1150w

New Yorker 47:94 Ja 29 '72 220w

"With painstaking research that included globe-hopping and personal interviews, Farago pieced together a fascinating chronology of Nazi spying inside and outside the U.S. and England between 1920 and 1945, from the non-descript dock watcher in Brooklyn to the Norwegian-American oil tycoon, Torkild (Cap) Rieber, who was welcome in President Roosevelt's office." S. K. Oberbeck

Newsweek 79:68 Ja 24 '72 950w

Reviewed by H. H. Ransom

Sat ■ 55:74 F 26 '72 430w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks

Time 99:83 Mr 13 '72 210w

TLS p538 My 12 '72 650w

FARB, PETER. Yankee doodle. 249p $6.95
Simon & Schuster

SBN 671-20676-1 LC 74-130196

In this novel "Benjamin Pennyman, last of an illustrious line, continues the family tradition of recording for posterity his impressions of the country his ancestors helped found. His story describes his thoughts and activities on 'a typical afternoon' in 1963. [They concern] America's social, political, and industrial ills." (Library J)

Reviewed by W. K. Kraus

Best Sell 80:336 N 15 '70 400w

"This novel will give a great deal of pleasure to those undergraduates who are put off by Joyce's erudition and comic genius, who want something simpler, less funny, closer to home. . . . But one caution: One of our greatest native wits (Peter DeVries) had a character comment on the late novels of Henry James, 'He chews more than he bites off.' It's a fair assessment of Farb, students." Paul Theroux

Book World p6 O 25 '70 340w

"Farb has written several books on the human and natural history of America, including the popular work on the American Indian, Man's rise to civilization. . . . [BRD 1968]. His first novel . . . is a stream-of-consciousness account in which Pennyman's mind wanders over American history and legend, finding examples of bigotry and flaws in the American dreams. His imaginings are an ironic counterpoint to Martin Luther King's famous 'I have a dream' speech, given just before the novel's opening. A weakness in this subtle book is the pervasive influence of Joyce. . . . The punning style of Farb's prose evokes his Irish master on every page. But the book is ambitious and the constant humor is worthy of Joyce's disciple. The work . . . will appeal to a socially-concerned audience."

Choice 8:1451 Ja '72 160w

"[This novel is written] in a style calculated to test the reader's patience. [It is] replete with puns, parodies, plays on words, dialect, and satire. . . . [Pennyman's] conclusion, 'that things were never as discouraging as they appeared at the time,' will probably not comfort many of today's troubled people. For persevering readers." J. W. Stevenson

Library J 95:2826 S 1 '70 100w

FARBER, BERNARD. Kinship and class: a midwestern study. 210p $7.95 Basic bks.

301.44 Kinship. Social classes—U.S. Family
SBN 465-03721-6 LC 72-147007

Farber "attempts to explore the role of kinship and family in sustaining class structure. A central concern is the manner in which the quality of the socialization procedures within the various social classes affects social mobility. On the theoretical level, two sets of concepts are used. The first is designed to deal with the integration of kinship systems into society at large, whereas the second involves the specific nature of social interaction through which kinship can maintain itself as a viable sphere in society. . . . In the context of societal integration of kin systems, Farber posits the existence of two types: the biblical and the Western American ones. . . . The data presented in the book were gathered in . . . the community of Champaign-Urbana, a town [in Illinois]." (Ann Am Acad) Index.

"While the earlier chapters are unfailingly interesting even when one finds complex anthropological issues oversimplified, the final chapters which seek to explain the relationship between kinship and poverty are distinctly irritating. . . . The contrasts [Farber] draws between middle- and lower-class kinship and general life styles are not inaccurate . . . but to suggest that the condition of the poor is inevitable because adherence to lower-class kinship forms automatically relegates them to superfluity in modern industrial society is, to say the least, unproven. . . . The author has fallen into the error of confusing his neat models with statements about reality; not only is the model inadequate but his account of the reality of lower-class life is without sympathy, without warmth, and ultimately without understanding." R. T. Smith

Am J Soc 78:469 S '72 1400w

"[This important book] does not have a concluding chapter; instead, each section carries its own conclusion. On the whole, although to varying degrees, Farber's initial assumptions about the differential functioning of kin systems in relation to socio-economic class are supported. . . . The main contribution of this book lies . . . in its conceptual approach." Jetse Sprey

Ann Am Acad 398:198 N '71 600w

"An informative sociological investigation. Recommended for undergraduate and graduates in social science, especially in the areas of methodology and kinship studies. Excellent conclusions at end of each chapter. Good references; useful index."

Choice 8:919 S '71 120w

FARBERMAN, HARVEY A., Jr. auth. Social psychology through symbolic interaction. See Stone, G. P.

FARIS, JAMES C. Nuba personal art. (Art and society ser) 130p il pl Can$16 Univ. of Toronto press

572.9624 Nuba (People) Kordofan, Sudan
ISBN 0-8020-1857-2

This book describes the use of body and facial painting and decoration by the "Southeastern Nuba of Kordofan Province in the Democratic Republic of the Sudan. . . . [The purpose of the art] is to celebrate and enhance the strong and healthy body. The representational designs in particular are highly stylised, and they can be analysed as though they constituted a visual grammar. . . . Professor Faris documents the unique Nuba art tradition, placing it in its social, ecological and cultural setting. He also specifies the principles of the visual grammar in algorithmic form, using methods derived from generative linguistics." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

FARIS, J. C.—Continued

"[Faris'] latter argument, a generative grammar of representational elements, is flawed, as it fails to account for the equally important nonrepresentational aspects and certainly does not support his claim to generate 'all possible productions.' The book is excellently designed for visual clarity and exposition. This is the first presentation of this Nuba art and is a significant addition to the small number of books on body decoration arts. . . . Very useful for all libraries of primitive art."

Choice 9:724 J1/Ag '72 120w

"[Faris'] detailed and informative account of cicatrization and body painting used in a large variety of circumstances by both sexes of this vigorous tribe culminates in the attempt to write a 'Generative algorithms for Southeastern Nuba representational design.' . . . [However there are] serious theoretical objections to this attempt at emulating Chomsky's generative grammar in the field of design. Whatever difficulties the linguists may have encountered with this method, its purpose at least was clear. It was to test the capacity of rules to generate novelty in the way in which a speaker of a language has to do it in uttering sentences he has never heard spoken and to try them out for intelligibility. There can be no analogy here with Mr. Faris's algorithms." E. H. Gombrich

N Y Rev of Books 18:35 My 4 '72 1150w

"The work done by the author is particularly important because of the ephemeral nature of the art, and because social and political pressures are likely to bring such art forms to a sudden end. [The volume is] scholarly, highly informative and beautifully produced. There is however, one criticism to make. Though [it] appears in a series entitled 'Art and Society' . . . [it does not] succeed in conveying the atmosphere of these societies for the vast majority of readers who have never had the opportunity of being near them."

TLS p620 Je 1 '72 430w

FARMER, FRANCES. Will there really be a morning? an autobiography. 318p il $7.95 Putnam

B or 92

SBN 399-10913-7 LC 78-189885

This "self-portrait of the once well-known motion-picture actress who spent much of her adult life in a state mental institution . . . [documents details of those] years in a mental hospital and her solitary struggle for reality. . . . She was released after seven years. . . . [Later her] appearance on a network show. This Is Your Life [and] . . . summer stock brought her to Indianapolis and to a point in her rehabilitation where she could undertake her own local television show and play lead roles in Midwestern theaters. . . . [This] narrative was completed a few days before her death in 1970." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by R. J. Rafalko

Best Sell 32:166 J1 1 '72 300w

"[This] is the most astonishing movie star autobiography I have ever read—a hard, bitter summing up of a terrible life. . . . Farmer's portrait of Hollywood is corrosive. . . . If [her] book becomes celebrated, however, it will be for its treatment of insanity and mental institutions. . . . She writes vividly about . . . the violent ward. . . . Part of the book describes a lesbian rape that [she] witnessed in the asylum. . . . This scene, powerfully written, is true pornographic violence, unbelievably revolting yet sexually exciting. . . . [The volume] is horrible to read. It's clearly a valuable book that libraries must purchase, but I personally couldn't recommend that anyone read it without a warning that its upsetting qualities will linger on after the reading is done." J. A. Avant

Library J 97:2179 Je 15 '72 250w

N Y Times Bk R p20 Ag 20 '72 130w

FARMER, PENELOPE. The serpent's teeth: the story of Cadmus; il. by Chris Connor. unnp $4.50 Harcourt

292 Cadmus—Juvenile literature

ISBN 0-15-272904-6 LC 76-137760

A "treatment of the Cadmus myth by the author-artist team of Daedalus and Icarus [BRD 1971]. The story . . . involves Cadmus's search for [his sister] Europa, his slaying of the serpent, and the sowing of its teeth from which spring an army, reduced by internal strife to five mighty warriors who with Cadmus found the city of Thebes. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

"The cadenced prose and a vivid, forceful word choice perfectly suit the tale for reading aloud, while the illustrations—spreads in sepia alternating with those in full color—have the angularity and movement of traditional Greek painting." Elva Harmon

Library J 97:2948 S 15 '72 170w

"The somber, theatrical text has the same relentless drive as Cadmus moving toward his fate. Just as dramatic are Chris Connor's angular illustrations, especially his close-ups of steely-eyed Athene, the snorting white bull that is Zeus, and the slithering, snapping serpent." Flo Morse

N Y Times Bk R p24 Ag 27 '72 120w

"Penelope Farmer's telling . . . is simple and vigorous but she is not afraid of formality or of strong dramatic effects. The stylized figures and broad slabs of colour which Chris Connor uses a good deal in his illustrations are beginning to wear a slightly jaded look, like 1950s furniture which is too old to be smart but not quite old enough to stow away in the attic pending resurrection as an antique. Yet underneath the style are glimpses of an original and exciting artist if Mr. Connor will only bring his mind to bear and let him out. Layout and gorgeous colour are not enough."

TLS p388 Ap 2 '71 90w

FARMER, PHILIP JOSÉ. Tarzan alive; a definitive biography of Lord Greystoke. 312p $5.95 Doubleday

813 Burroughs, Edgar Rice

LC 70-17571

The "science fiction writer herein purports to give the reader the 'definitive biography' of the man who is Edgar Rice Burroughs' Tarzan [Tarzan of the Apes, BRD 1914, and others]. Farmer . . . reconstructs the ape-man's life, 'in true chronological order,' indicating where Burroughs altered fact to disguise reality and where he wrote pure fiction. In . . . addenda, Farmer explores Tarzan's possible relationship to . . . literary characters who may have been based on real men, including Sherlock Holmes, Doctor Watson, Bulldog Drummond." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"Of course Farmer insists that Tarzan . . . is quite alive—remarkably preserved [by] a witch doctor. . . . Farmer has written what he calls an 'analogical biography,' . . . [meaning] that the writings of Edgar Rice Burroughs were themselves biographical. The reason given for this conclusion is both simple and simplistic. . . . Any final evaluation of this book must depend upon its efficacy as an 'analogical biography.' As such it is more like criticism than biography and is more a reflection of Burroughs than a creative piece in itself. . . . It follows more or less that Farmer is strong where Burroughs is strong. . . . All things considered, the reader might expect to emerge from this book uncertain of having read anything yet faintly certain of having enjoyed something." W P. Murphy

Best Sell 32:254 S 1 '72 650w

"Tarzan is seen as a 20th-Century heroic figure having much in common with the mythical demigods of an earlier day, and this book will not fail to please and enthrall his many followers." Deborah Halprin

Library J 97:1437 Ap 15 '72 140w

FARNER, DONALD S., ed. Avian biology. v 1. See Avian biology. v 1

FARNHAM, WILLARD. The Shakespearean grotesque: its genesis and transformations. 175p $6.50 Oxford 822.3 Shakespeare, William—Characters.

Grotesque in literature

ISBN 0-19-811699-3 LC 77-23160

This "book traces the development of the English grotesque from antiquity to Shakespeare and discusses the different uses of the grotesque within the Bard's works. . . . The Gothic meld of the comic and the religious spirit in late medieval moralities is seen as direct antecedent of Shakespeare's serio comic mode, and chief ambassadors of the medieval grotesque in Shakespeare are identified as Falstaff, Hamlet, and Lear, noble figures who move freely on comic planes. Still another grotesquerie, the diabolic, is noticed in Thersites, Iago, and Caliban, descendants of the antique Fool, the medieval Vice, and renaissance man-monsters, respectively." (Choice) Index.

Choice 8:1037 O '71 210w

"This is a subject that could fill more pages than Professor Farnham's book contains, but, characterized by the ripe and humane scholarship of his long-sustained interests in Shakespeare's medieval heritage, his account is succinct and enlightening within its narrow compass. A notable omission, nevertheless is that of Ovid."

TLS p557 My 14 '71 430w

FARREN, DAVID. The return of magic. 118p $4.95 Harper

133 Occult sciences
SBN 06-062333-0 LC 72-78054

The author examines the historical and psychological roots of the contemporary absorption with magic and witchcraft. He "sees the return to a belief in a magical universe among members of the counter-culture as an effort to respond to and conceive of the natural universe on a personal rather than impersonal level. [An ex-Jesuit seminarian,] he discusses his own loss of faith in established religion and argues for the reality of the supernatural in light of his wife's experiences with ESP. [She considers herself a white witch.] Magic, he thinks, can be efficacious in filling a religious need even if one only acts 'as if' he believes." (Library J) Annotated bibliography.

"With . . . [the author's] bizarre background, his tentative appraisal of what he has learned about magic is well-researched and interestingly written. His phenomenological viewpoint leads him to search for the meaning of magic in a study of human consciousness, drawing on his own experience and that of his wife. . . . [Farren concedes] that he does not know whether magic is supernatural; intrinsically extraordinary; or something ordinary, taking place under extraordinary conditions. Inclining to the first explanation, he defines 'the supernatural' as constituted by the objectification of strictly human images! It is too bad that he never learned the Catholic meanings of the word supernatural. Even worse is the fact that his ignorance of the Catholic distinction between Sacraments and Sacramentals, and their functions and uses, would cause him to flunk a child's catechism exam." E. B. Gallagher

Best Sell 32:269 S 15 '72 390w

"Perhaps we do need the return to a belief in a more animistic universe than our age of inhuman technology can provide. The 'banality of evil' in the 20th Century has been due not to a belief in the devil, but to empty nihilism. This is an interesting and provocative essay which will certainly find a readership among the youth of today." Robert Stenzel

Library J 97:2620 Ag '72 160w

FARRINGTON, ROBERT. The killing of Richard the third. 286p maps $5.95 Scribner
Richard III, King of England—Fiction
SBN 684-12567-6 LC 70-162742

A "retelling of the intrigues that led up to the killing of Richard III on the field at Bosworth. Robert Farrington builds his fiction around one Henry Morane . . . a commoner [who] has good friends at court and so stands close to the king." (Best Sell)

"Mr. Farrington could qualify for membership in the Society for the Rehabilitation of the Reputation of Richard III. His Richard is honest, forthright, strong, not at all physically repulsive, with no designs on his own niece except her protection, deeply in love with his wife Anne. . . . Mr. Farrington may be unconscious of the fact that though his Richard is brave—as the historical character indubitably was—he is also a rather stupid warrior. The best thing about this book is the re-creation of fifteenth-century England; it is not just that the research has been good—anybody can do research—but Mr. Farrington has hit on just the right images for bringing to mind the sights and sounds and movements of the times."

Best Sell 31:515 F 15 '72 380w

"A mistitled book, as Richard III is a minor, almost neutral personality, merely the excuse for a series of more or less improbable adventure-intrigues. . . . There are an execution, a little torture, a lot of mild ribaldry, and plenty of action, but little depth. The fictional hero, Henry Morane, is virile, and the heroine lively, but most of the characterization is barely adequate, and the century seems to be the 20th in disguise, not the 15th. . . . The isolated flashes of good writing are not enough to give the book any literary value. Youthful readers might like it, but not all parents would agree that its raw parts are harmless. Not recommended." Phyllis Karr

Library J 96:3345 O 15 '71 130w

Reviewed by Brad Darrach
Time 99:68 Ja 3 '72 250w

"Morane is a fifteenth-century James Bond, crashing from one exciting adventure to another, and managing to string along his fierce mistress without marrying her for many pages. It seems unlikely that a royal clerk would be such a thug. In the matter of Richard's reputation Robert Farrington steers a middle course: he imputes some crimes to Richard but Buckingham is his real villain. The historical background is on the whole accurate. . . . Unfortunately many of the facts are introduced by that most primitive device of characters telling each other things they both know already. There is little depth of historical background to the facts except in the description of London. Good adventure but the history surrounds it uneasily."

TLS p571 My 14 '71 130w

FASHING, JOSEPH. Academics in retreat; the politics of educational innovation, by Joseph Fashing and Steven E. Deutsch. 325p $8.50; pa $4.95 Univ. of N.Mex. press

378.73 Education, Higher. Educational innovations
ISBN 0-8263-0209-2 LC 78-153940

This is an account of "some of higher education's recent student problems and academic innovations at six West Coast campuses: University of California at Berkeley and Los Angeles, San Francisco State College, University of Oregon, Western Washington State College, Stanford University. . . . [It also deals with] such areas as experimental colleges; cluster concepts; racial and minority curricula; and student, faculty and administrative interaction and conflict." (Choice) Index.

"Worthwhile reading. Academics in retreat concludes that 'higher education must address itself to the crisis outside its walls, as well as inside' . . . Twenty-three pages of supporting notes; explanatory appendix on methodology; precise index."

Choice 9:258 Ap '72 190w

"The authors have no theoretical apparatus which locates the university in the higher system of power in American society. Though they continually stress that we should look at the university in its political context, they never do this themselves. True, there are references to war-mongering and racism, but what is missing is a specific view of the functions which the university performs in the service of American capitalism. . . . Most importantly, the lack of theory means that there are no conclusions reached in the book, except the most trite ones. One comes away from reading the book unsure why it was written in the first place. The six case studies are interesting, though more unrelated than the authors would care to admit, but they essentially stand by themselves." Alan Wolfe

J Higher Ed 43:674 N '72 440w

"[This is] an informative and generally well-written account of innovative student-activated education programs. . . . The authors' sympathetic assessment of these programs is based on a 'natural history,' using a combination of strategies including . . . examination of records and written materials, focused interviews, and participant observation. . . . All persons concerned with higher education in any way will find this book interesting and very valuable, even though they may not agree with the authors' viewpoints and sympathies." J. E. Kephart

Library J 97:1710 My 1 '72 240w

FAST, HOWARD. The Hessian; a novel. 192p $5.95 Morrow
LC 76-170236

"A Hessian drummer boy is captured by Connecticut militia and tried for what might now be called a 'war crime,' in which he had no direct part. While in hiding, he had been befriended by a family of Quakers and attended by a maverick Catholic surgeon. But the Continental Establishment apprehends the boy, and puts him in the dock of a kangaroo court." (N Y Times Bk R)

FAST, HOWARD—Continued

"By sketching rather than probing in depth the characters and their relationships to each other, by keeping the dialogue and descriptions simple, Mr. Fast moves his story at a deceptively gentle pace as if the event being recorded demands no dramatic exposition. The effect of this understatement is to draw the story from its historical setting and gently prod the reader to reflect on human motivation, institutional codes, religious prejudices, and those dark areas of fear and hatred within men which manifest themselves in time of war and stress." T. A. McVeigh

Best Sell 32:277 S 15 '72 150w

"[This] is a hard flint chip of a story, a shard preserved from the American Revolution. Mr. Fast holds up his flint to the present and says, in effect, this is what war does to men, this is the insane inflexibility that war induces, that induces war. . . . The Puritans who move against the boy are not evil. . . . They are simply implacable. . . . That, I suggest, is the weakness of 'The Hessian' as a story. It simply records the plodding implacability of [war]. Yet there are men who oppose the times they live in, but they are outnumbered, outgunned by history. There is conflict, there is also authentic regional and temporal atmosphere, and dialogue as tight as a soldier's drum, in 'The Hessian,' but the forces of 'righteousness' are too firmly entrenched, the forces of love and kindness never have a chance." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 23 '72 500w

"Fast is always a wonderful storyteller, and the story is a good one. But the anguish of the family for the innocent boy is so understated that it is not believable. The conflict between those who hate and those who love comes to nothing except the conclusion that there are no answers, no hopes, no hint of any grace. . . . which can redeem the stupidity and cruelty which are the human condition. Yet we are left only vaguely out of sorts, not really crushed by the weight of human folly. Entertaining and memorable." D. C. Taylor

Library J 97:2642 Ag '72 130w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 97:3473 O 15 '72 140w [YA]

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p41 S 10 '72 150w

FAST, JULIUS. The incompatibility of men and women, and how to overcome it. 173p il $5.95 Evans, M.&co.

158 Man, Woman, Human relations
LC 70-164549

Fast is concerned with the "concepts of womanliness, manliness, self-evaluation, sexuality and other human relationships, [and] assumes that men and women quite frequently do not understand each other's feelings and attitudes regarding sex roles and behavior. . . . The book [also] provides . . . information regarding aggression." (Best Sell)

"[The author] has presented an authoritative how-to-do-it course on incompatibility. . . . Basically the research cited may be a beginning of a scientific basis for the theoretical relationship between aggression, fear, and sexuality in man. . . . The book offers us a good, hard look at the sexual equality which according to all research cited is greatly misapprehended. The final section on marriage presents a plea to all readers to focus on what in our concept a male-female relationship should be, and how this concept should be answered. . . . The book should be recommended reading for all adults, married or not, for it provides an interesting understanding of human relationships at the most important levels. It no doubt could provide building blocks for better relationships for couples on the brink of separation or divorce." J. A. Szuhay

Best Sell 31:398 D 1 '71 500w

"This is a better book than Fast's Body Language [BRD 1970], partly because the subject, intimately experienced by all of us, has attracted a greater number of interesting researchers whose findings Fast cites from time to time; but it suffers from the basic faults of the earlier book. Since he is writing for a popular audience, Fast uses a colloquial style that will alienate some readers, as will many of the banal case histories included to illustrate various points. His sights are entirely on middle-class mentality, values, and mores. . . . In an overall sense, he offers nothing new or original; but some readers may feel that he sharpens the view of some areas of incompatibility through his scenarios for using dolls to act out certain male-female problems and roles." Margaret Cooley

Library J 96:4100 D 15 '72 170w

FAST, JULIUS. You and your feet; drawings by Klaus Stoscheck. 119p $5.95 St Martins

617 Chiropody
LC 74-145434

In this book on the elements of foot health the "subject matter provides discussions of the following areas: Children's Feet; The Teen-age World; Men's Feet; Women's Shoes; Fungus Infections; Toenail Problems; Fallen Arches; Skin Problems; Corns, Calluses and Bunions; Aging Feet; The Arthritic Foot; The Foot and Surgery; Jogging and Your Feet; Toeing In and Out; and Mobilize for Youth." (Am J Pub Health)

"Drawing on authorities from the fields of Podiatry, Medicine and the Allied Sciences, the author has developed a . . . [book] which essentially is a health education manual, designed for the nonprofessional adult. The approach to the subject is relatively comprehensive and is presented in a mature manner. . . . The majority of the subject matter is covered in adequate depth. However, the author's lay background does not provide the professional qualification for personal opinion as to matter of treatment. . . . The text contains a significant index that includes both subject areas and a listing of doctors cited in the various chapters. [This book] should provide a welcome addition to health education libraries and courses. It should however, not be considered as the total text for such use." A. E. Helfand

Am J Pub Health 62:608 Ap '72 340w

"The author of Body Language [BRD 1970] has produced a handy and valuable guide. . . . Fast succeeds in conveying his conviction of the importance of his subject to the health of the whole body. This book should have a wide readership among the clientele of public libraries." M. L. Garvey

Library J 96:3149 O 1 '71 70w

FAULK, ODIE B., Jr. auth. North America divided. See Connor, S. V.

FAULKNER, WILLIAM. Faulkner's revision of Absalom, Absalom! See Langford, G.

FAUX, GEOFFREY, Jr. auth. The star-spangled hustle. See Blaustein, A. I.

FAX, ELTON C. Garvey; the story of a pioneer black nationalist; foreword by John Henrik Clarke. 305p il $7.95 Dodd

B or 92 Garvey, Marcus
ISBN 0-396-06521-X LC 77-38520

A biography of the man who in 1922 was president of the Universal Negro Improvement Association, publisher of the Negro World, and leader of the back-to-Africa movement. Bibliography. Index.

"The book treats its subject very well, not only bringing forth his superb and farsighted plans and aspirations but speaking also of his imperfections as a hero. . . . [Garvey] was a man of the present, a soothsayer, a prophet, and a worker for the cause of the black minority, and therefore, in the final analysis, as American as anything else we might somehow revere in a fit of national pride. This is a fine addition to the genre of biography." L. D. Mitchell

Best Sell 32:78 My 15 '72 500w

"Relying mainly on secondary sources, Fax adds little to our knowledge of Marcus Garvey. . . . However, the author's theme . . . that the Jamaican was a pioneer black nationalist, does much to strengthen Garvey's rightful place in Afro-American history. One may take issue with Fax's attempt to underplay the opposition Garvey faced from other blacks. . . . The volume, not particularly well written, is of some worth to the general reader, particularly as a buttress to black nationalist enthusiasts."

Choice 9:1196 N '72 160w

Christian Century 89:552 My 10 '72 20w

Reviewed by J. R. Willis

N Y Times Bk R p5 Ag 20 '72 450w

"Fax's book does not deal with most of the important questions about Garvey. It does provide the most detailed narrative so far available of Garvey's life, including a good deal of new information about his early years in Jamaica, the internal workings of the UNIA, and his experiences after his exile from the United States. Even this contribution, however, is marred by a poor writing style. More important, and most surprising, the book lacks any real overall analysis or interpretation of Garveyism. Garvey's personal strengths and weaknesses are fairly assessed, but the reasons for his successes and failures are only sketched in. . . . We still need an up-to-date study of Garveyism." Eric Foner

Sat R 55:52 Jl 1 '72 750w

FAX, ELTON C. Seventeen black artists. 306p il $7.95 Dodd

709.73 Negro artists—Biography

ISBN 0-396-06391-8 LC 72-165671

The environment and personal experiences of the seventeen "black American artists presented in this book form the basis of the commentary revealed by their creations in such media as painting, sculpture, and photography. [The artists include] Romare Bearden, John Biggers, Elizabeth Catlett, Jacob Lawrence, Norma Morgan, . . . Charles White . . . [and others]." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The book would have greater literary power if the author did not periodically preach about the importance of expressing the black experience as he highlights certain events in his resumé. The very lives of the artists and their competent visual statements speak the message far more convincingly than Fax's interpolations. Despite this annoying feature, Fax pleasantly introduces to the grassroots population 17 black men and women who fight racism by exceptional artistic achievements. More scholarly works would not reach the popular mind and heart so well."

Choice 9:204 Ap '72 170w

"[The author] attempts to explain the social and family background that produced each artist and sets their work in the context of their time and place, successfully delineating the black experience as it affects creativity. He also includes quotations from the artists, photographs of them, and black-and-white reproductions of their work. . . . Recommended." P. C. Black

Library J 97:1308 Ap 1 '72 80w

FAY, LEO CHARLES, ed. Discovering natural science. See Discovering natural science

FAY, STEPHEN. Hoax: the inside story of the Howard Hughes-Clifford Irving affair, by Stephen Fay, Lewis Chester and Magnus Linklater. 310p il $10 Viking

098 Fraud. Forgery. Irving, Clifford. Hughes, Howard Robard
SBN 670-37430-X LC 72-76797

The authors recount the details of the 1971-72 literary scandal in which Clifford Irving persuaded McGraw-Hill to publish a purportedly authorized biography of the reclusive billionaire Howard Hughes.

Reviewed by E. J. Linehan

Best Sell 32:167 Jl 1 '72 350w

Reviewed by Harold Hobson

Christian Science Monitor p11 Jl 19 '72 200w

Economist 244:54 Jl 15 '72 360w

"Until Clifford Irving's own account of the 'hoax' turns up, this work by three English journalists will do quite nicely. Both the speed with which it was delivered and the detail which fills it are impressive, although the detail at times—where it seems unnecessary, both in significance and in pacing—indicates the rush to print. Nevertheless, the book ably chronicles the characters and their roles in the affair, and provides many fascinating bits of information along the way. The writing and research represent good journalism, although the authors' attempt to explain Irving's motives isn't convincing. If readers want a direct, thorough 'inside story' by outsiders, this is it." R. W. Schoch

Library J 97:2182 Je 15 '72 130w

"Apart from their own egregious appraisal of the hoax, to which they ascribe 'historic dimensions,' Messrs. Fay, Chester and Linklater have done an extremely workmanlike job of tracing and correlating all the facts that could be found. . . . Though they make no effort to hide their distaste for all the principals in this shabby affair, [they] are always scrupulous with fact. . . . [They] show how amazingly often [Irving] merely improvised, and how frequently Hughes's own efforts to avoid publicity redounded to Irving's benefit. . . . This brings us to an issue that the publishers of Hoax purport to raise—whether the powerful rich man has the right to impose his unique concept of privacy in an open society. One questions the good faith of this oversimplification." C. L. Markmann

Nation 215:152 S 4 '72 1250w

Reviewed by Anthony Bailey

New Statesman 84:93 Jl 21 '72 1000w

"Most of us have kept a warm spot in our larcenous souls for Irving, who has come across in the newspapers as a sort of literary Robin Hood, complete with Friar Tuck and Maid Marian. But after reading 'Hoax' you may have a different impression of this Jack Ripperoff. Conning the Establishment is one thing, and attempting to patch together a phony biography from old newspaper and magazine material is also forgivable, and the whole business of forging Hughes's handwriting and staging a number of phony interviews is the kind of unholly fun that makes 'Hoax' very entertaining reading, but when Irving stole Phelan's transcripts, when he tricked a little guy, well that's quite another story." John Seelye

N Y Times Bk R p2 Je 25 '72 1000w

Reviewed by Thomas Meehan

Sat R 55:56 Jl 1 '72 400w

TLS p911 Ag 4 '72 800w

FECHER, CONSTANCE. The last Elizabethan; a portrait of Sir Walter Raleigh. 241p il $5.50 Farrar, Straus

B or 92 Raleigh, Sir Walter

ISBN 0-374-34361-6 LC 74-178882

The author presents a biography of the explorer who started life as "a young man struggling against poverty with little to help him except his own genius." A minor position in the Court entourage eventually brought him to the Queen's attention. . . . His vitality permeated his adventures on land, on sea, or at court; his explorations when he sought 'new worlds for gold, for praise, for glory'; his colonization attempts; his successes and tragic losses; . . . and finally his imprisonment in the Tower of London and his execution." (Horn Bk) Bibliography. Index.

Best Sell 32:243 Ag 15 '72 60w

"Illustrated with reproductions of paintings, drawings, and engravings. Children who read this biography of Sir Walter Raleigh should not grow up, as have many of today's adults, remembering him chiefly as a light-hearted young courtier who gallantly spread his jeweled cloak in the mud before Queen Elizabeth. . . . This is a superb portrait of a remarkable man—brilliant, talented, ambitious, daring, hard-working, adventurous—a man of unusual charm and vitality, whose fortunes reached a high peak, but whose life ended on the scaffold. The author's scholarship and her evident respect for the subject have produced a substantial picture of the period and a vivid re-creation of Sir Walter's life. . . . An excellent Bibliography is appended." R. R.

Horn Bk 48:281 Je '72 200w

FEDER, LILLIAN. Ancient myth in modern poetry. 432p $12.50 Princeton univ. press

821 English poetry—History and criticism. American poetry—History and criticism. Mythology in literature. Mythology, Classical
ISBN 0-691-06207-2 LC 70-154994

"The aim of this book is twofold: to develop a definition of myth as a continuous and evolving mode of expression, and to indicate how classical myth functions in modern English and American poetry as an aesthetic device which reaches into the deepest layers of personal, religious, social, and political life. . . . In this study I focus on the work of four major poets—William Butler Yeats, Ezra Pound, T. S. Eliot, and W. H. Auden—and analyze their adaptation and use of ancient Greek and Roman myth as a creative instrument." (Pref) Index.

FEDER, LILLIAN—Continued

"This exhaustive and exhausting book moves doggedly through poem after poem by Yeats, Eliot, Pound, Auden, and other modern poets. . . . There is no indication that Feder is interested in, or capable of, doing literary criticism; instead she has read all the books about these poets and added to them one more academically impeccable contribution. There is something stultifying about forcing interesting poets into the rigid confines of such a relentlessly conceived study; but Feder is perfectly humorless in her solemn attention, through 400 pages, to the myth-kitty."

Choice 9:640 JI/Ag '72 100w

"[The author] examines the works of her specimen poets under three topics—'Myth and the Unconscious,' 'Myth and Ritual,' and 'Myth and History'—and concludes her study with an investigation of 'Evolving Mythologies.' Because of its useful survey of psychoanalytical theories of myth, its clarity of expression, the originality of its insights, and the pertinacity of its applications, [this] is a study that merits attention." W. W. Waring

Library J 97:1326 Ap 1 '72 110w

"Miss Feder's breakdown of myth into malleable components from which poets depart is both sophisticated and clarifying. By attention to the differences among the poets' use of myth, the similarities built into the mythic apprehensions are made to stand out from the complex pattern of minute details."

Va Q R 48:cxxviii autumn '72 130w

FEDER, NORMAN. American Indian art. 445p

il col pl $35 Abrams

709 Indians of North America—Art

ISBN 0-8109-0014-9 LC 69-12484

This survey of post-contact American Indian art—"art created after the Europeans' arrival—and some of [it] quite recent . . . [contains examples of] masks, rugs, shirts, blankets, baskets, totem poles, pins, sculpture, paintings and the like. The book arranges Indian art by geographical areas and . . . [also has] old photographs that show the art in the possession of the people who made it." (Newsweek)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:110 Mr '72 40w

"[This is] one of the simplest and most compact guides to the elementary characteristics of Amerind arts and art forms in all the major cultural regions of North America. . . . [The text] makes original, concise evaluations of the problems of materials, Indian artists' character, commercialization versus decadence, future prospects, etc. None of the remarks are especially new thoughts but everything is said clearly and with a punch that is lacking in the more usual pedantry of art historians. This excellent work was printed in Japan, with 302 illustrations, 60 of them tipped-in color plates of nothing less than magnificent quality. . . . The only criticism I can make is the annoying absence of even a helpful guess at dates for more than half of the items shown." Lee Ash

Library J 97:1004 Mr 15 '72 100w

"Short text and abundant illustrations define the tribal arts at points in time when past traditions have not yet been lost. Especially strong are the arts of the Pacific Northwest Coast." Lawrence Alloway

Nation 213:666 D 20 '71 50w

"[This book shows] what a primarily technical, material culture-oriented text can be at its best. . . . [Feder] is very informative indeed on intertribal borrowing, acculturation to White America and contemporary art: though here he does not go much beyond the Disnevesque Southwestern watercolor school and, in his predictions for the future, does not seem to have heard of 'Red Power.'" Nathaniel Tarn

N Y Times Bk R p7 D 12 '71 250w

"My only complaint is that Feder is stingy with the space he awards Eskimo art: none of their lovely stone carving is shown at all."

P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 78:108 D 13 '71 100w

FEEKEN, ERWIN H. J. The discovery and exploration of Australia [by] Erwin H. J. Feeken [and] Gerda E. E. Feeken. 318p il col il maps col maps $17.50 Verry 994.03 Australia—Discovery and exploration.

Explorers—Biography

ISBN 0-17-001812-1 LC 76-585800

The story is told "in the form of chronologically arranged biographies of explorers who were responsible for the more important discoveries in Australia. . . . [There is a] gazetteer of Australian place-names . . . [which] explains the origins of approximately 4,000 placenames." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"[This work contains] accounts of the European explorers of Australia from 1606 to 1901. . . . Twenty-three excellent maps illustrate the routes taken by the 120 major explorers of the continent, and an unusual key to the maps locates specific places discovered and named by the travelers. . . . Of great use to geographer and historian."

Choice 9:561 Je '72 160w

"[This volume is] unusual, because it is really a combination of three books: a scholarly historical outline, a general history drawn from biographies, and a gazetteer. . . . The lengthy introduction by O. H. K. Spate is an excellent account of the nature of the exploration. . . . It is a tribute to the narrative skill of the authors that most of the explorers emerge as real people with identifiable personalities. . . . Perhaps the most original and informative section is the gazetteer . . . [which] is supported by an excellent collection of maps. . . . There is a comprehensive bibliography, an adequate index, and a large selection of excellent illustrations."

TLS p1178 O 1 '71 400w

FEEKEN, GERDA E. E., jt. auth. The discovery and exploration of Australia. See Feeken, E. H. J.

FEELEY, SISTER KATHLEEN. Flannery O'Connor: voice of the peacock. 198p $9 Rutgers univ. press

$13 O'Connor, Flannery

ISBN 0-8135-0705-7 LC 76-163958

In this "critical study of Flannery O'Connor and her literary art . . . [the author divides her] study into five major themes exemplified in Miss O'Connor's two novels, 'Wise Blood' and 'The Violent Bear It Away' [BRD 1960], and the stories in her two collections, 'A Good Man Is Hard to Find' [BRD 1955] and 'Everything That Rises Must Converge' [BRD 1965]. Under such headings as: the vision of Flannery O'Connor, the creation of a false self, alienated modern man, death in the context of history, the luminous quality of reality, and a prophet's view of reality, Sister Kathleen reveals the . . . springs that flowed into Flannery O'Connor's stories." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] lucid, sensitive exploration of Flannery O'Connor's fiction . . . is a valuable contribution to literary scholarship—especially so because the work under scrutiny is so powerful and enigmatic. . . . [This] is no mere influence study, however. It does not presuppose that complex fiction can be reduced to its sources. Each chapter of her study explores the implicit relationship in O'Connor's art between the natural and the supernatural world. . . . Dr. Feeley's own critical and theological background allows her to handle her material with competency and ease." Barbara Mutkoski

America 126:212 F 26 '72 550w

Reviewed by L. Y. Gossett

Am Lit 44:517 N '72 400w

"[The author] draws heavily on the three sources that fed O'Connor's fiction: Southerner, Catholic, writer. . . . [She] spent hours studying Miss O'Connor's private library and noting various passages she had marked or commented on in the margin. These books . . . are chiefly theological and philosophical studies. They are the key to unlock the meaning of O'Connor's fiction. With citations from Miss O'Connor's own ars poetica (Mystery and Manner [BRD 1963]) to substantiate her interpretations, Sister Kathleen sheds light on original fiction. . . . Readers of O'Connor are indebted to Sister Kathleen for her analysis of unforgettable stories. Her study enriches the reader's experience of O'Connor fiction. It is a marvelous accomplishment." J. J. Quinn

Best Sell 31:483 F 1 '72 600w

Choice 9:368 My '72 150w

Christian Century 89:150 F 2 '72 40w

Reviewed by C. A. Brady

Commonweal 97:93 O 27 '72 400w

Reviewed by Mary McBride

Library J 97:1326 Ap 1 '72 140w

"For critics who have been quartering the field for years, Sister Kathleen's study is a view halloo. To domesticate the metaphor, it is a landmark in O'Connor criticism. Though the scholars' quest may range as far and deep as Kafka criticism in the fifties, it will have to return to this book. . . . This is not a comfortable book to read. One gets the blood of the narratives on one's hands. But it shows Flannery's emblematic intelligence forcing contemporary violence and Biblical archetypes into a matrix; and creating comedy too, though she is a comic artist less of the school of Goya and Daumier than of Rouault. Her brush is dipped in pain." Francis Sweeney

N Y Times Bk R p30 F 13 '72 600w

"Sister Kathleen Feeley does neither better nor worse than most of the sundry others who have attempted to interpret [Flannery O'Connor]. . . . [This] is a book that scholars will want to read, but that no literate admirer of the O'Connor short stories need feel uneasy about missing. As for readers unacquainted with the brief works of fiction which Sister Kathleen discusses at such length, they would be better advised to spend twenty minutes reading an O'Connor tale than hours on this book. Such criticism of a study that was quite probably intended solely for those who want to dig deeply in the O'Connor oeuvre may be unfair. Yet books that scrutinize an author's writings in great detail should lure the reader into the work being analyzed; this is hardly the case here." P. K. Cuneo

Sat R 55:79 F 26 '72 320w

FEELINGS, MURIEL. Moja means one; Swahili counting book; pictures by Tom Feelings. unp $4.50; lib bdg $4.17 Dial press

916.7 Counting books. Africa, East—Juvenile literature
LC 76-134856

"Each double-page spread hosts a Swahili number, from 1 to 10, and its pronunciation, a brief . . . sentence with the object to be counted printed in reddish brown, and a grey and white painting depicting that object. . . . Preschool to grade two." (Library J)

"On the plus side, illustrations in shades of brown and smoke evoke the beauty of rural Africa. On the minus side, the counting device is confusing: The Swahili name for each number is printed in red, and the accompanying English sentence also contains a word printed in red—the name of the object to be counted. But in many of the illustrations, the objects are part of a larger scene and locating them may be difficult for the novice enumerator. . . . [This book] could be used in a story hour for all young children as a way of introducing the sights and sounds of eastern Africa." S. D. L.

Horn Bk 48:140 F '72 120w

"Primarily a Swahili counting book, [this] is also meant to be a gift of heritage, a glimpse at what is unique about East Africa. . . . For '1 moja (mo-jah), there is the statement, 'Snowy Kilimanjaro is the highest mountain in Africa.' The beautiful, warm-looking picture, with its rounded shapes and subtle shading, accordingly shows a single lofty peak. Throughout, the pictures accurately detail life in East Africa: e.g., readers see the three stages of growth in a coffee tree, four mothers in various stages of wrapping a baby to carry, six different kinds of clothing, nine musical instruments, etc. A short introduction explaining the importance of Swahili and providing a map of the areas in which it is spoken expands the book's use beyond the preschool level of the text into the first three school grades." Vicki Merrill

Library J 96:4178 D 15 '71 180w

"A small child will need an adult's help with this counting book, as the word or words that identify the numbered objects are used in a sentence. For example, '3, nane' is followed by 'Busy market stalls [eight are shown] are stocked with . . . and the words 'market stalls' stand out in red. The book is addressed 'To all Black children living in the Western Hemisphere, hoping you will one day speak the language—in Africa.' Softly drawn black and white illustrations." Zena Sutherland

Sat M 55:46 Ja 15 '72 90w

FEELINGS, TOM. Black pilgrimage. 72p il col il $5.95; lib bdg $5.11 Lothrop

B or 92

LC 70-177328

This black "children's book illustrator describes his life and work, particularly his decision to leave the United States and live in Africa. Tom Feelings grew up in Bedford-Stuyvesant, served in the army, and went to art school. He drew and painted the life he knew, but it was not until he worked for a time in Ghana that Feelings saw how much the oppression suffered by his people was evident in his pictures. [His illustrations supplement the text throughout.] Age eleven and up." (Sat R)

"Feelings talks convincingly about his work, the responsibility of the black artist, and the strengths of African society. But his 'return to Africa' advice—if it is meant for all young blacks—is naive, as his own ouster from Ghana, when the Nkrumah government was overthrown, should have made clear. . . . Feelings cannot be faulted, however, on the strength of his handsome color and black-and-white illustrations. His Afro-Americans and Africans alike breathe the vigor and beauty of a diverse and dynamic people. . . . Ages eight to twelve." Ernest Dunbar

Book World p13 (children's issue)

My 7 '72 170w

Horn Bk 48:380 Ag '72 200w

"Tom Feelings nearly produced a great book. . . . Instead, he has written and illustrated a loose autobiography of a black artist (himself) whose historic and ethnic awareness is somewhat ahead of his critical sense. He fails to submit to the axiom he himself establishes, 'Black artists must rethink the whole idea of "art". Their work must be given back to the people it comes from.' He does, however, offer a stunning portfolio of art worth looking at." Fred and Lucille Clifton

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p30 My 7 '72 150w

"Feelings's candor and his bitterness about the stultifying treatment of the black artist in America (white publishers he says, have recently issued books by and about black people only for profit) give his book an application and implication broader than the experience of one man. The illustrations . . . are beautiful." Zena Sutherland

Sat M 55:82 My 20 '72 110w

FEIFER, GEORGE. The girl from Petrovka. 252p $6.95 Viking

SBN 670-34161-4 LC 70-158413

Half of this novel deals "with the American hero's love affair with Russia. The other half . . . [describes] his relationship with a young Russian girl. . . . Oktyabrina, the girl, is a sort of Russian Holly Golightly [in Breakfast at Tiffany's by T. Capote, BRD 1958] with a penchant for Western magazines and cosmetics and for . . . dramatizing . . . her dreary existence. The hero is a middle-aged correspondent for a Chicago newspaper, who befriends her (platonically, until the end of the book)." (Library J)

Reviewed by Sister M. Marguerite

Best Sell 32:103 Je 1 '72 410w

"[Feifer] writes comfortably and convincingly about daily life in Moscow during the late 1960s. The atmosphere of the book is almost tangible, and accomplished with a great deal of skill. But the frothy early-Capote style—I can't believe the Holly Golightly parallel is unintentional—somehow doesn't blend with the author's loftier intentions: to portray his heroine as a symbol of what he thinks most valuable and potentially great about the Soviet Union." Sara Blackburn

Book World p8 Ap 9 '72 330w

"Unfortunately, none of the main characters come alive, a failing emphasized by the wooden, stilted dialogue. When Feifer writes about Russia, however, he is highly readable; one wishes he had made this a travel book rather than a novel. To sum up, a better-than-average first novel for large collections." S. L. Silverman

Library J 96:3157 O 1 '71 130w

FEIFER, GEORGE—Continued

Reviewed by S. K. Oberbeck
Nat R 24:302 J1 21 '72 400w

"[This] is a respectable attempt to fill in newspaper gaps about the USSR. . . . Although the plot is thin and never emotionally binding, the detail is fascinating. The affection for Russia is clear-eyed, unsentimental and sensible."

Mary Borg

New Statesman 82:562 O 22 '71 80w

Reviewed by Josephine Hendin
N Y Times Bk ■ p42 Ap 23 '72 470w

Reviewed by L. E. Sissman
New Yorker 48:78 Ag 5 '72 1100w
TLS p1541 D 10 '71 260w

FEIN, ALBERT. Frederick Law Olmsted and the American environmental tradition. 180p il $10; pa $3.95 Braziller

712 Olmsted, Frederick Law. Architecture. City planning
SBN 8076-0650-2; 8076-0649-9 (pa)
LC 72-75831

Olmsted was an early leader of environmental design and conservation. "Among his . . . works described here, are . . . the landscape design of New York City's Central Park (1858); that of the Chicago World's Fair (1893), 'a miniature of the ideal city'; the campuses of Stanford University, University of Maine, Amherst, and Gallaudet College; the park systems of Boston, Bridgeport, Louisville, Detroit, and Rochester. One of his chief contributions to planning was the concept that shape and materials must meet the ecological requirements of a given site." (Best Sell) Chronology. Chronological Selection of Frederick Law Olmsted's Works. Bibliography. Index. Selected List of the Writings of Frederick Law Olmsted.

"This interesting biography will have a special appeal to the growing numbers concerned about the social, ecological, and aesthetic problems of America and of the world. It is an enthusiastic tribute, long overdue, to a heretofore relatively obscure but giant champion of ecological foresight and restraint, of social justice and intelligent urban planning, on the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of his birth. . . . This informative and inspiring biography should be in every school and every public library in the land." Brother Berchmans Downey

Best Sell 32:254 S 1 '72 470w

"The 81 pages of plans, cross sections, and photographs tell [Olmsted's] story clearly. . . . Although the prefatory text of 69 pages is somewhat stiff and ungainly, the illustration-essay flows evenly and has continuity." N. D. McReel

Library J 97:2717 S 1 '72 250w

FEINBERG, HILDA, jt. comp. Book catalogs. See Tauber, M. F.FEINSTEIN, SHERMAN C., ed. Adolescent psychiatry; v 1, Developmental and clinical studies; ed. by Sherman C. Feinstein, Peter L. Giovacchini [and] Arthur A. Miller. (Annals of the Am soc. for adolescent psychiatry) 552p $15 Basic bks.

616.8 Adolescent psychiatry
SBN 465-00061-4 LC 70-147017

This is the first "of a projected multivolume series on . . . adolescent psychiatry. . . . Topics include drug usage, the generation gap, rebellion, developmental tasks, and the 'doldrums' of adolescence. One section is devoted to the subsequent personality effects of early mother-child interaction with particular emphasis on the disruptive maternal relationship. . . . A section on adolescent psychotherapy offers suggestions for helping, such as developing empathy, tolerating mistrust, providing an ego ideal, being dependable, providing reasonable authority controls involving the family, and using group work." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"The Society for Adolescent Psychiatry has sponsored this mixed bag of reprints, lectures, and original contributions. The articles range from an analysis of Bonnie and Clyde as a model for some universal adolescent processes to Bettelheim's pot-boiler on the obsolescence of adolescence. Many of the chapters are case histories and as such offer all the fascinations and vagaries of the genre. The authors are notable in the field of psychology tending to take the viewpoint of the infallibility of psychoanalysis, with due recognition given to the importance of biological and constitutional factors."

Choice 9:437 My '72 160w

"This definitive anthology is highly recommended for all academic and larger public libraries." B. J. Kalisch

Library J 96:2523 Ag '71 140w

FELDKAMP, FRED, jt. auth. The good life . . . or what's left of it. See Feldman, P.FELDKAMP, PHYLLIS. The good life . . . or what's left of it; being a recounting of the pleasures of the senses that contribute to the enjoyment of life in France [by] Phyllis & Fred Feldkamp. 231p pl $8.95 Harper's mag. press

914.4 France—Social life and customs
SBN 06-122480-4 LC 72-73714

This book "delves in depth into several aspects of French culture, and particularly into those which compose what the authors consider the good life. They describe . . . a typical De Gaulle reception, the society life at Deauville, . . . [wines and] fine cheeses, the importance of truffles, and horse racing at Longchamp and Chantilly." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by John J. McAleer
Best Sell 32:304 O 1 '72 750w

"Francophiles will delight in this book. . . . Some chapters include more detail than most readers need or want; but in spite of this, they offer an extremely good insight into some of the values of French society. The topics covered are indeed selective and not intended to give a well-rounded picture of French life. Recommended only for large public libraries." K. A. Cassell

Library J 97:3327 O 15 '72 100w

"For Phyllis and Fred Feldkamp, France seems to have meant a delightfully frothy hippity-hop. . . . Actually, the Feldkamps, in effect, dismiss themselves with a misleadingly sybaritic title. They do not seem to realize that they have not written a guide to the good life for like-minded consumers. In fact, they have assembled a gallery of sharp vignettes of producers, of highly skilled French artisans and craftsmen who practice their professions with high seriousness. . . . [They] relate all this information with great charm. Sometimes, however, they slip into naive judgments. What does it mean to say that a certain desk is the greatest piece of furniture ever made? And they too often use a French word where an English one would do." R. A. Sokolov

■ Y Times Bk R p16 S ■ '72 900w
New Yorker 48:134 S 23 '72 80w

FELDSTEIN, STANLEY, ed. The poisoned tongue; a documentary history of American racism and prejudice. 330p $10; pa $3.95 Morrow

301.45 Discrimination. Prejudices and anti-pathies. U.S.—Race relations
LC 76-166349

This anthology documents Americans' "racism and prejudice against people with different-colored skin, different religions, different nationalities. . . . [It] moves from the slave-trade voyages of John Hawkins in the sixteenth century through to [the] present-day . . . [discussing] Americans vs. the Indians, the Blacks, the Orientals, the Jews, the Catholics, and so on. The documents are arranged chronologically." (Publisher's note)

"[This book] aims for general and secondary school audiences rather than the university and scholarly community. . . . Each document is prefaced by a short general background statement in which the author seeks to provide perspective for the material to follow. Feldstein might have enriched these remarks by including bibliographical and historiographical data, as well as by giving proper credit to scholars whose interpretations he employs. The documents included in the work are not as predictable as might be expected. While traditional Southern antebellum defenses of slavery find their place. Feldstein includes contemporary Northern anti-Negro tirades to give an overall view of white racism in pre-Civil War America. . . . The only significant target excluded is the Mexican-American."

Choice 9:274 Ap '72 170w

"Throughout the book . . . [Feldstein] strives to document his contention that prejudice and racism have been linked to nativism and, despite valiant efforts to eliminate them, remain central domestic issues. Although Feldstein's thesis is not in question, the necessary limitation of size forced him to omit some important materials and to oversimplify very complex issues. Consequently, the book is useful primarily as an introduction to the subject." E. K. Welsch
Library J 97:680 F 15 '72 200w

FELLOWES-GORDON, IAN. The magic war; the battle for North Burma [Eng title: The battle for Naw Seng's kingdom]. 180p il $6.95 Scribner

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—Campaigns and battles—Burma. Kachins (Tribe)
SBN 684-12750-4 LC 75-37177

The author "writes of the campaign to free North Burma from the grip of the Japanese (1942-1944). During the campaign, he was attached to a unit of native Kachin tribesmen as a company commander, and . . . [his book reveals] how these irregulars worked with American, Chinese, and British units to defeat the Japanese." (Library J)

"Overall command for the Burma campaign belonged to Sir William Slim and 'Vinegar Joe' Stilwell, but they appear only as peripheral figures in this account. [It] is an interesting addition to the literature on the North Burma campaign, but hardly an indispensable one." M. E. Nunn

Library J 97:1711 My 1 '72 220w

"The World War II buff will find this an off-beat and little known action, very well told." N Y Times Bk R p28 Ap 30 '72 70w

"Fellowes-Gordon has written an excellent account of the irregular war fought out among the remote hills and valleys of Upper Burma culminating in the capture of Myitkyina in the Japanese rear area. . . . Fellowes-Gordon paints an unusually sympathetic picture of Stilwell." TLS p1540 D 10 '71 240w

FELSTINER, JOHN. The lies of art; Max Beerbohm's parody and caricature. 283p il $8.95 Knopf

827 Beerbohm, Sir Max
ISBN 0-394-47227-6 LC 76-171162

The author "traces how and why Beerbohm flourished in the journalistic culture of the eighteen-nineties and how he developed his parody both of figure and of literary form as a medium through which art might hope to survive in the modern world." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. F. Grady

Best Sell 32:211 Ag 1 '72 500w

"Everyone calls Max Beerbohm incomparable, but it is not customary to move beyond that formula to a serious consideration of his delightful art. . . . In succeeding so well in investigating the sources and techniques of Beerbohm's particular achievement, Felstiner almost by necessity presents a challenging interpretation of the nature of parody itself. The book begins by placing Beerbohm in the stylistic context of the 1890's and then proceeds gracefully through the essays, parodies, caricatures (abundantly illustrated), and Zuleika Dobson, [BRD 1911] often making use of unpublished materials. . . . [It] provides the most persuasive account of what incomparability is all about that I have seen." Keith Cushman

Library J 97:1717 My 1 '72 160w

"[Felstiner] wants to stick to the art, not get distracted by the life; and though he does well by the life incidentally, he is extremely referential and off hand about it. . . . [The] book is full of the drawings, which are a delight, and [the author] does a thorough job of pointing up their properties in detail. . . . [However, he] has labored thesis—one that Beerbohm might have enjoyed parodying—to the effect that parody rather than caricature was Beerbohm's greatest strength, being the medium or genre in which he could express himself most fully and complexly. This may have been so, but the strength of the Felstiner book seems to me to be in its coverage of the lesser art." Reed Whitemore

New Repub 167:26 J1 22 '72 1700w

FENN, CHARLES. Journal of a voyage to nowhere. 194p $5.95 Norton

910 Survival (after airplane accidents, shipwrecks, etc.)
ISBN 0-393-07329-7 LC 72-1807

The author "set off from Ceylon with a friend to sail to the Maldive Islands. . . . His friend was drowned during a storm and he himself marooned on a remote atoll. Fenn had little but a few tins of food, . . . a pencil stub, and enough paper to keep a diary. In this diary, he chronicles the . . . struggle to stay alive, alternating his accounts of hunger and thirst, of fishing and fire-lighting, of improvisation and experiment, with his notes for a book he was planning on the New Veda. The resulting soliloquies cover a . . . range of subjects from Chinese culture to the life of beetles, marriage, sex, and death." (Publisher's note)

"In a strictly literary sense, the musings in the journal (which cover a wide variety of subjects, with apparently little plan or pattern) are the best-written part of the story. . . . The quality of the philosophizing, however, is good only in relation to the rest of the story. The contemplations of Charles Fenn, as written in his book, do not inform (except for collectors of trivia), do not stimulate, do not even rouse anger." J. J. Gustainis
Best Sell 32:372 N 15 '72 250w

"The account of [Fenn's] harrowing struggle to survive is interspersed with ruminations on his personal credo. In the epilogue, the author admits that the adventure actually took place early during World War II (presumably when Fenn was 30 or so), giving the journal entries a rather spurious cast since there are references to plastic bags and nuclear bombing, neither of which would have been possible at that time. This curious rearrangement of his own history leaves one disappointed, all the more because Fenn is an accomplished writer with a gripping tale. But it still deserves to be read." R. R. Gambee
Library J 97:3313 O 15 '72 170w

"Fenn has command of a graceful style that doesn't get out of hand even when he writes of shock and terror. If he is no match for Defoe as a storyteller, he is at least more sensitive to moral issues than Defoe and Crusoe together. . . . Despite a taste for quoting, he is the self-tutored sage rather than the bookman. It is the collaboration of the sage and the adventurer that gives his Journal its rare charm and pungency." James Walt
New Repub 167:28 D 9 '72 950w

"The day-to-day narrative is uniformly interesting. But the letters to his family appear strange. Would a man really, one wonders, write to his daughter on the occasion of her birthday when there was no prospect of her receiving the letter? . . . Credulity [is] increasingly strained as the journal proceeds, but also the injection of philosophy becomes too large. . . . The reader is subjected to an unwilling suspension of belief. Things did not, could not, have happened just in the way the writer claims. But then what on earth, one asks, is he up to? The secret is revealed (or rather half-revealed) on the last page, which should not be read in advance by anyone who wishes to enjoy this philosophical thriller." TLS p1217 O 8 '71 550w

FERGUSON, ALFRED R., ed. The collected works of Ralph Waldo Emerson, v 1. See Emerson, R. W.

FERGUSON, CHARLES A. Language structure and language use; essays by Charles A. Ferguson sel. and introduced by Anwar S. Dil. 327p $8.95 Stanford univ. press

410 Language and languages
ISBN 0-8047-0780-4 LC 79-150322

The author deals with linguistics as a "tool for dealing with the problems of developing countries. . . . Half the essays have a direct bearing on practical language problems. In Linguistic Diversity in South Asia, the concept of variety forms the basis for a definition of language that ties in linguistics with the analysis of social structure. Two essays describe new methods for taking stock of a country's linguistic resources; four others discuss how those resources can be developed. The remaining two essays in this group display the author's acquaintance with such countries as Pakistan and Ethiopia, in which variety of languages and dialects compete for dominance. The other nine essays are contributions to the discipline of linguistics as such." (Publisher's note) Bibliography of Charles A. Ferguson's works.

FERGUSON, CHARLES—Continued

"Anthropologists will find Ferguson's treatment of the term 'language' provocative and insightful. . . . [He] demonstrates that language can only be defined within its social setting and meaning." Joan Rubin

Am Anthropol 74:1477 D '72 900w

"This is a readable book (nice big print) that anyone interested in linguistics ought to enjoy. Especially recommended for teachers who subscribe to notions of 'correct' English, German, French, etc., or who have been seduced by Chomsky's notion of languages as 'well-defined' systems."

Choice 8:1327 D '71 170w

"These 18 essays, written . . . between 1959 and 1970, were prepared for audiences of varied interests and are consequently diverse in their appeal. The author is a socio-linguist interested in the problems and conflicts, particularly educational, that arise in nations in which many different 'codes' compete for superiority, including types that linguists have often tended to neglect: the so-called pidgins and creoles. . . . The first essay, 'Diglossia,' is a classic discussion of bilingualism, a subject he takes up again and again in the book. . . . Although his style is loose Ferguson is conversant in so many languages that his pronouncements on language universals and linguistic theory are worth serious consideration." E. R. Maxwell

Library J 96:3326 O 15 '71 160w

FERGUSON, JOHN. Libraries in France. 120p $6 Archon bks.

021 Libraries—France

ISBN 0-208-01058-0 LC 70-19798

The author surveys "the French library scene, from the structure of the national library board to the operation of mobile bibliobuses in remote areas. . . . Details concerning the history, development, and purpose of various types of French libraries are summarized [including] municipal, general, university, and children's and school libraries. . . . Space is devoted to a . . . discussion of phono record libraries [and there is a] section dealing with professional organizations and the status of education for librarianship." (Col & Res Lib) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Considering the paucity of materials on French libraries that have been published in English, this book is a useful entry into a rather embarrassing void. Written in a concise, factual style, Ferguson's book is a sort of Guide Bleu to the world of librarianship in France. . . . Of particular interest is a chapter devoted to La Lecture Publique. Issued in 1968 under the auspices of a governmental committee, [this] was a study of the state of French library service. . . . The chapters on university and public libraries contain particularly handy tabular summaries of statistics regarding library building programs. Libraries in France is a compact statistical survey of the subject and should prove most useful as a ready reference tool." Cathleen Flanagan

Col & Res Lib 32:484 N '71 390w

"[The author has brought] together a large amount of detailed information from scattered sources, most of them in French. . . . This is a useful publication and can be recommended to anyone wishing an overview of French libraries and librarianship." J. P. Danton

Library J 96:2606 S 1 '71 870w

"Although the information is remarkably up-to-date with references to happenings in early 1970, there is unfortunately almost nothing about automation. . . . The text would have benefited greatly from an opening chapter giving a short historical background.

. . . The book is far less effective than it might be due to its deficiencies of style and organization and to the great number of errors in spelling, capitalization, and use of italics in the French terms and titles cited. . . . The lists of Further Reading furnish examples of careless editing. . . . These criticisms may indeed seem carping, but unfortunately they cumulatively harm a good little book and prevent it from being an excellent one. In any case, this is a work that should be read by every American librarian who thinks that modern libraries do not exist in France." R. K. Gardner

Library Q 41:349 O '71 800w

FERGUSON, OTIS. The film criticism of Otis Ferguson; ed. and with a pref. by Robert Wilson; foreword by Andrew Sarris. 475p $12.50 Temple univ. press

791.43 Moving picture plays—History and criticism

ISBN 0-87722-005-0 LC 72-174660

This book contains "Ferguson's motion picture criticism from The New Republic of the period from 1934 through 1941. . . . In addition to the preface by Wilson and foreword by Sarris, the volume contains a . . . list of the films reviewed." (Nation) Index.

Choice 9:520 Je '72 160w

"Although Ferguson had no pretensions to a great literary style, he nevertheless could write, on occasion with poetic feeling. This is clearly evident in the reviews of Frank Lloyd's Mutiny on the Bounty and John Ford's The Grapes of Wrath. His discussion of Welles's Citizen Kane has yet to be matched for range and incisiveness. My one complaint about this book is its length; Wilson should have eliminated about 20 percent of the reviews which are too lightweight to add very much to their author's reputation." Henry Halpern

Library J 96:4105 D 15 '71 190w

"Of special interest are Ferguson's impressions of Hollywood, 'To the Promissory Land' which he visited in the last six months of 1941. . . . A valuable view of Hollywood before the advent of television." Carey McWilliams

Nation 213:700 D 27 '71 120w

FERGUSON, SUZANNE. The poetry of Randall Jarrell. (Southern lit. stud.) 247p il $8.95 La. state univ. press

811 Jarrell, Randall

ISBN 0-8071-0941-X LC 78-166971

In this study of Jarrell's poetry, the author furnishes "a chronological introduction to the major poems . . . offers a guide to the evolving themes (the dehumanizing effects of power politics in the 1930's; the war and psychological avenues of escape in the 1940's; loneliness, death, mutability, and the compensatory force of the imagination in the 1950's and 1960's) and discusses the function of Jarrell's peculiar 'poetic rhetoric.'" (Library J)

Reviewed by Sister M. B. Quinn

Am Lit 44:515 N '72 550w

"Period by period, with analyses which are dutiful and valuable by degrees, Ferguson has placed and gathered her subject. . . . Though dealing only indirectly with Jarrell's learned brilliance as novelist and critic, other facets of his vision, this volume is welcome. . . . Aptly illustrated . . . with a fairly satisfactory selected bibliography. Recommended."

Choice 9:806 S '72 250w

"In presenting the poet's vision, Ferguson provides significant biographical data and evaluates the critical and intellectual milieu in which the poet wrote. Though one may quibble that she omits mention of many poems (indeed, she does not use for documentation Mrs. Jarrell's edition of the Complete Poems [BRD 1969]), the selection is judicious and representative." B. C. Bach

Library J 97:1016 Mr 15 '72 140w

"Miss Ferguson's reading of the poems . . . is generous, sensitive and often enlightening. She is especially good in the matters of folk-lore and literary influence, and she is impeccable in her judgments of which poems deserve notice. Anyone starting out to read the poet would be well advised to refer to her volume. At times, however, it lacks the venturesomeness needed to pursue the wit and jokes of the poems. It is a pity, too, that she has not chosen to correlate more of Jarrell's prose with his verse, but as it stands, The Poetry of Randall Jarrell provides an excellent background for a serious reevaluation of a difficult but always rewarding writer." Jerome Mazzaro

Nation 214:474 Ap 10 '72 1100w

"[This] is the first full critical work on Jarrell and certainly profits from interviews with Jarrell's widow and such of his friends as John Crowe Ransom. And it is by no means a bad or offensive book; in fact, it opens with an excellent over-view of the poetry, and ranges through the collected poems with some of Jarrell's own discriminating accuracy. But like 'Jerome' [BRD 1972] it revives that old nervous anxiety about Jarrell and ends in very dull reading." Robert Weisberg

N Y Times Bk R p46 S 17 '72 420w

Va Q R 48:cxix autumn '72 120w

FERNEA, ELIZABETH WARNOCK. A view of the Nile. 320p $6.95 Doubleday 916.2 Egypt—Description and travel
LC 71-89130

"This book is an account of the author's six-year sojourn in Egypt from 1959 to 1965. Mrs. Fernea resided most of the time in the Garden City district of Cairo, with a few months spent in a Nubian village. Her book, written in narrative sequence, starts with her first impressions of Cairo, her efforts to find a place to live, her apprehensions about the birth of her first child in a strange land. Interwoven with these personal reminiscences are miscellaneous facts about Egypt and modern Cairo." (Am Anthropol)

"Over half of the book is devoted to [the author's] brief stay in Nubia, while awaiting the birth of her third child, and indeed it is the best part of the book. There are some charming vignettes of Nubian daily life, descriptions of their mud-built houses, layout of the village, and teaparties with the Nubian women; even a wedding and death are described. A main theme running through Mrs. Fernea's book concerns the birth and raising of her three children in Egypt, and she makes some interesting comparisons between western and oriental childcare in manners, morals, and health." Betty Gray

Am Anthropol 74:160 F/Ap '72 550w

"Mrs. Fernea came to Egypt with her husband in 1959 when he took up his teaching post in anthropology at the American University of Cairo. In the six years of their stay, she viewed the Nile region from three vastly different settings: their comfortable apartment in the exotic, cosmopolitan city; a primitive mud-brick house in a Nubian village near Abu Simbel, where he was directing a Ford Foundation study of the inhabitants; and the Delta farm of a cultured Egyptian family, where the Ferneas were guests. . . . Women especially will enjoy reading [this account]. Recommended for school and public libraries as a fresh, thoughtful look at a land with a fascinating blend of ancient and modern ways." R. R. Gambee

Library J 95:1832 My 15 '70 160w

FERRAR, NICHOLAS. Conversations at Little Gidding. See Conversations at Little Gidding

FERRIS, PAUL. The house of Northcliffe; a biography of an empire. 340p il $10 World pub.

B or 92 Northcliffe, Alfred Charles William Harmsworth, 1st Viscount. Harmsworth family
ISBN 0-529-04553-2 LC 76-149420

This is an account of the personal life and journalistic career of Alfred Harmsworth, Lord Northcliffe, and is also a portrayal of the Harmsworth family. . . . The book depicts Northcliffe as "proprietor of the Daily Mail, the Times, and a host of magazines . . . [deals with] his private and family affairs . . . [and presents] insights into the society and politics of his times." (Library J) Bibliography, Index.

Reviewed by E. J. Linehan

Best Sell 32:12 Ap 1 '72 410w

Reviewed by Kenneth Rose

Book World p13 Ap 2 '72 1250w

"This lively round-up of the familiar tale of Alfred Harmsworth and his kin avoids the pot-boiler category by being well done in a Howard Spring kind of way, with a lot of homework."

Economist 241:66 D 4 '71 140w

"[This] fine biography, based upon all the available extant family and corporate archives, is both critical and appreciative of Northcliffe's manic genius, candid and honest concerning his private and family affairs. . . . [It] will delight a broad spectrum of readers." R. R. Rea

Library J 97:1006 Mr 15 '72 140w

"Ferris has chosen to give us a family group—a colourful, well-observed group . . . but too crowded with minor nonentities and superficial detail to reveal much more of the dominating central figure, Alfred Harmsworth, . . . than we already knew. Ferris is an able journalist and he has dug hard for the facts behind the legend and pub hearsay. But what emerges is a fascinating read for the layman that leaves a lot of questions unanswered for us masochists in the trade." Tom Baistow

New Statesman 82:742 N 26 '71 1000w
New Yorker 48:142 Ap 29 '72 150w

Reviewed by Curtis Prendergast

Time 99:80 Ap 10 '72 750w

"Fortunes in the world of press, publishing and the media are not built up by sweetness and light. In The House of Northcliffe it is with the sombre side of Northcliffe that Paul Ferris is chiefly concerned. . . . If he foreshortens the public part [of Northcliffe's life] it is because this has already been so fully treated by others. . . . The political situations surrounding his subject's career are truthfully if briefly recounted. . . . Questions will be raised about the credibility of the account of Northcliffe's sex-life given in this book. Since Mr Ferris has had access to the Harmsworth papers, it must presumably be accurate. . . . To the general reader this book will be a pleasure to read. Students of Northcliffiana seeking to verify facts will be frustrated by the lack of references in the text especially when new and controversial statements are being made."

TLS p1504 D 3 '71 1250w

FERRO, MARC. The Russian revolution of February 1917; tr. by J. L. Richards. 392p $9.95 Prentice-Hall

947.084 Russia—History—Revolution, 1917-1921

ISBN 0-13-784579-0 LC 75-162355

"The author, director of studies at l'Ecole Pratique des Hautes Etudes, director of seminars at l'Ecole Polytechnique, and co-director of Annales, attempts to depict the relationship between popular aspirations and the several political voices seeking to give expression to those desires. He deals with the period between February and June of 1917, from the shaky establishment of 'Dual Authority' to the inauguration of a coalition regime of Soviet and bourgeois representatives and the crises which immediately followed." (Library J)

"[Ferro] gives major emphasis to the actions and programs of the various political groups following the revolution and to the reactions of the workers, peasants, soldiers, and various subject nationalities. He is, on the whole, critical of the actions of the liberals in the Provisional Government—particularly Paul Milukov. Nevertheless, his discussion of the period and its issues is without doubt the most detailed and comprehensive to date, although the book as a whole is rather too detailed for general use by undergraduate students or the casual reader and the graduate student or professional historian will be uneasy about the absence of documentation and the confused treatment of the 19th-century Russian revolutionary movement."

Choice 9:867 S '72 170w

"The best parts of the book are those dealing with the nationalities and the peasantry: all too often one tends to overlook the fact, that there was a revolution boiling outside of Petrograd, as well as inside. A most impressive aspect of the book is the wealth of archival and secondary material on which it is based. This includes material from the major depositories in the U.S.S.R., as well as in Amsterdam and Paris, and even film archives. There is a 52-page section of documents, but no bibliography." R. H. Johnston

Library J 97:1711 My 1 '72 160w

FETSCHER, IRING. Marx and Marxism. 354p $12.50 Herder & Herder

335.4 Marx, Karl. Communism
LC 77-150299

It is Fetscher's theme "that the early ('Hegelian') writings of Marx were in fact indicative of his major concerns throughout his life's work, and that Marxism was corrupted . . . along bureaucratic, technocratic lines in Communist parties and societies, especially in the U.S.S.R. and the Soviet bloc." (Library J)

"Fetscher, wisely, follows the fortunes of Marxism at the hands of the master's disciples, an aspect of Marxism still relatively undocumented. . . . Familiar ground is gone over in reconstructing young Marx's philosophical ruminations and assessing their relevance for his mature work. . . . Of genuine interest and value is the excellent survey, and evaluation, of Soviet and other 20th-century

FETSCHER, IRING—Continued

Marxist political regimes in their interpretation and application of Marx's doctrine. . . . Fetscher's penetrating examination of the genuine Fascist state exposes the shallowness and basic dishonesty of the Soviet Marxist concept and its polemical intent. . . . [In the appendix] an exchange between Fetscher and a party theoretician on the problem of alienation in Soviet society reveals facets of Marxism in the light of which it is possible to assess the future of Communist commitment to the original thought of Marx-Engels." J. P. Reid
America 126:328 Mr 25 '72 450w

"[Fetscher] attempts to recapture the original philosophical ideas of Marx and the intellectual climate in which they germinated. First he discusses the problem of whether there is contradiction between the ideas of the young and the old Marx. . . . Finally, there is a sharp criticism of Soviet views. Other writers, e.g. Erich Fromm's Marx's concept of man and Robert Tucker's Philosophy and myth in Karl Marx [both in BRD 1962], have addressed themselves to the same problem, and there is even a certain affinity between Fromm's and Tucker's approach and that of Fetscher. The latter's book is, however, more substantial, better documented, and shows a more thorough acquaintance with the philosophy of both Marx and his contemporaries. Unfortunately, the volume contains neither bibliography nor index. The translation is expert."

Choice 9:434 My '72 180w

"The best papers are those which contain a detailed scholarly critique of what may by now be called 'the Marx question' and which include a close analysis of the writings of a host of Marx scholars on all sides of the issues. These chapters, however, will be of interest mainly to specialists. . . . There are several essays . . . that will serve as an illuminating introduction . . . to the controversial terrain. Fetscher is at his weakest in his criticism of Communist-led societies and the practices of Communist parties. . . . [where] the absence of solid social-scientific . . . approaches shows to his disadvantage. . . . On balance [this is] a worthwhile addition to the growing collection of recent studies on Marxism. Recommended for university and central public libraries." L. S. Kaplan
Library J 96:2777 S 15 '72 290w

FEUERLICHT, ROBERTA STRAUSS. Joe McCarthy and McCarthyism; the hate that haunts America. 160p pl $5.95 McGraw 973.918 McCarthy, Joseph Raymond. Communism—U.S. Internal security. Governmental investigations
SBN 07-020644-9 LC 74-38991

"The author portrays Senator Joseph McCarthy as having exploited the issue of Communism in government in a five-year rampage of political smear attacks, unsupported allegations, and personal vilification. His victims included senators, the State Department, the Army, and the laws. . . . Mrs. Feuerlicht finds roots of McCarthyism in attitudes of the Cold War period. She further contends that American political leaders of both parties, including many of McCarthy's most vigorous opponents, shared responsibility for the climate of opinion that made McCarthy and McCarthyism possible. . . . [She] warns . . . that McCarthyism did not die with McCarthy and points to evidence of its survival in the campaign tactics of both parties in recent elections." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Mrs. Feuerlicht's book may offer nothing that has not been said before, but it does provide a concise documentary, immensely readable, of an illness which must continuously be kept before the public mind lest it should rise again to insane proportions." Barbara Harte

Best Sell 32:229 Ag 15 '72 600w

"[The author] draws a devastating picture of the time and the man—and the hate that lives on as his legacy. She emphasizes the witch-hunting role that 'the accursed group' syndrome has repeatedly played in periods of hysteria and tension. . . . [and] demonstrates that the press, with its fetish for 'objectivity,' became McCarthy's helpmate because it quoted him uncritically in everything he said. . . . Her book should be widely read by a younger generation, for whom this disgraceful era in our history has been largely swept under the rug." F. J. Cook
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p5 My 7 '72 440w

FEYDEAU, GEORGES LEON JULES MARIE. Four farces; tr. and with an introd. by Norman R. Shapiro. 346p il $12 Univ. of Chicago press

842.9
ISBN 0-226-24476-8 LC 78-125164

These four farces, Wooded and Viewed, On the Merry-Go-Wrong, Not by Bed Alone, and Going to Pot, "are concerned with the absurdities of everyday, middle-class life." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The solution to the numerous problems presented by the French text for the translator is always ingenious, elegant, and convincing. Shapiro is faithful to Feydeau's lively sense of the absurd whenever he cannot be literal. The choice of plays is good, and they represent the major stages in Feydeau's career. The 40-page introduction is informative, interesting and well written. Highly recommended."

Choice 8:234 Ap '71 70w

Reviewed by Martin Esslin
Encounter 37:74 Jl '71 300w

"Too few readable and enjoyable translations of French playwright Georges Feydeau's frothy comedies have appeared in English. . . . Unfortunately, he is little known to British and American audiences. Shapiro's lively and accurate translation . . . admirably fills the gap."

B. L. Knapp
Library J 95:3485 O 15 '70 90w

"[These farces are] somewhat in the Iris Murdoch manner but offhand and even slapstick. Getting Feydeau's puns and idiomatic humor across is no light task, but these translations are as light as air."

N Y Times Bk R p41 Ap 18 '71 70w

"[Shapiro] rightly warns intending performers of the immense difficulty of playing [Feydeau's] pieces, and one's heart sinks at the thought of the flounderings to come on many an amateur stage. But Feydeau, as if his own professionals were not entirely to be trusted, provided copious stage directions. He not only details the precise position of every property and piece of furniture; he gives us running commentary on the state of mind of every character. . . . Shapiro seems admirably fitted to write the book for which his introduction here is an appetizer: the biography of a writer of farces for whom life was a miserable business and the farcical view of it the only hope of sanity."

TLS p689 Je 18 '71 1950w

FICK, CARL. The Danziger transcript. 295p $6.95 Putnam

LC 75-174634

"Peter Danziger, a veteran American journalist, has come under suspicion of dealing in some undefined way—possibly as a spy—with an unknown foreign power. Fired by his news agency under pressure from Washington, and understandably outraged, he goes to the capital to be interrogated by a military officer. The interrogation—a hostile, meandering affair—is transcribed in this novel, together with Danziger's solitary reminiscences during breaks in the proceedings." (New Yorker)

"Through scripts of this examination, memoranda to superior officers, letters, and Danziger's own narrative splices, Mr Fick's novel proceeds to the question of guilt which, like original sin, is pervasive, and it suggests that, knowingly or not, we are all guilty. It is the psychological application of this knowledge, in the hands of the unscrupulous with their frightening powers, that can be a terrifying weapon for human oppression. . . . 'The Danziger Transcript' is engrossing reading, always interesting. . . . Unfortunately, Peter Danziger is cardboard, cut from the Hollywood image of the hardbitten, hard-drinking, hard-loving journalist. And the other people are shadowy stereotypes. A provocative book . . . [which] merits a reading only for its fascinating theme." N. J. Loprete

Best Sell 31:475 F 1 '72 260w

"The suspense is built up and maintained as who, when, what, why, etc. are slowly revealed. This is a well-written story on a disquieting subject—a competent piece of work for a first novel. The second is anticipated with pleasure." R. L. Middleton
Library J 96:4107 D 15 '71 110w

"[The interrogation] is an unusual form for a novel, but, regrettably, it is not very interesting. As romance—as a review of Danziger's somewhat Bogartish life all over the world since the Second World War—the book is too fragmentary and sketchy. As political comment, it is too artificial—too loaded against the government. And as drama it is anticlimactic; despite all the bluster, the interrogation turns out not to have any effect on Danziger's case."

New Yorker 47:64 Ja 1 '72 130w

Reviewed by Haskel Frankel
Sat R 65:73 Ja 29 '72 90w

FIEDEL, ROSLYN. Wild flowers; photographed by Ray Kellman. 64p $4.95; lib bdg $4.23 Houghton

793.3 Dancing—Pictorial works—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-395-13726-8; 0-395-13727-6 (lib bdg)
LC 71-185434

Using a "combination of dance and photography, the author presents the story of wild flowers blown to a mountaintop that was 'alive with witches.'" (Horn Bk) "Grade three and up." (Library J)

"The story is merely a choreographic tool and not nearly as important as the rhythm and movement of the dancers captured in the photographs. An innovative and interesting book for those interested in creative dancing or dramatics."

Horn Bk 48:482 O '72 70w

"Designated for 'all ages,' this 'simple allegory of life' (according to the jacket copy) in picture-book format won't be taken up by any age group. . . . The illustrations—full-page black-and-white photographs of the author's dance students portraying the flowers (in white leotards) and witches (in black)—include some overhead shots and multiple images, but most are level, medium-distance shots that give a standard audience view of the proceedings. Unfortunately, these still photos fail to capture the action that undoubtedly would be appreciated by a live audience. Large libraries might wish to include this in the dance collections, but neither text nor pictures offer much to most children." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 97:2483 J1 '72 160w

FIEDLER, LESLIE A. The stranger in Shakespeare. 263p $7.95 Stein & Day

822.3 Shakespeare, William—Criticism, interpretation, etc.
ISBN 0-8128-1454-1 LC 70-186219

"Fiedler is concerned with Shakespeare's portraits of, and feelings about, strangers: women, Jews, Negroes—all of them people who were excluded from power in Renaissance Europe and were regarded uneasily, even fearfully, by white males. Mr. Fiedler expounds the manner in which Shakespeare met the challenge that strangers (even including American Indians) presented—sometimes with scorn or hatred, sometimes with laughter, turning dangerous villains into buffoons or butts and so making them less frightening—and he also notices changes in Shakespeare's attitudes from one play to the next." (New Yorker)

Choice 9:1291 D '72 200w

"Fiedler glances at most of Shakespeare's heroines in the course of his concentrated analysis of the stranger in Henry VI, Part 1, The Merchant of Venice, Othello, and The Tempest; and few if any escape the sexual shadow of the dark lady of the sonnets. What is missing is a sense of the nobility of women found in a dozen matchless heroines from Beatrice and Viola to Hermione and Perdita."

W. H. Magee

Library J 97:2096 Je 1 '72 150w

"Coming as it does after his two-volume Collected Essays (BRD 1971), Leslie Fiedler's book on Shakespeare can be read in two quite distinct ways. The book may be regarded as epiphenomenal, an outgrowth of his previous theories, assumptions and fixations about American literature, extended back into the Elizabethan past. In other words, it might serve as little more than a rag with which to wipe the ankles of our greatest literary monument. On the other hand, it could be read as the author's most important critical statement, a bold book about the boldest of artists, in which everything the critic holds most dear is thrown into the battle, tried by fire." Charles Molesworth

Nation 215:183 S 11 '72 1900w

"Fiedler is dealing with those 'strangers' (witches, Moors, Jews) to whom he thinks Shakespeare does not give a welcome. And he is doing it in terms of his own dreadfully familiar 'archetypes'—the castrating woman, the menacing dark man, the savage. These become less convincing the more they are made to explain. When they seemed tailored to American literature, they had some suasive power; but when we find them imposed just as easily on Shakespeare, the whole scheme becomes suspect." Garry Wills

Nat R 24:959 S 1 '72 1100w

Reviewed by Frank Kernode

N Y Times Bk R p35 D 10 '72 500w

"[The author] does not pretend that Shakespeare solved the problems presented by his own feelings but, rather, shows him affected by, and finding ways to express, the anxieties that confront us, too, when we confront aliens."

New Yorker 48:83 Ag 5 '72 140w

FIELD, GEORGE WALLIS. Hermann Hesse. 198p $5.50 Twayne

833 Hesse, Hermann
LC 78-99536

This is a "survey of Hesse's life and works . . . [as well as a survey of] Hesse criticism." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[This is a] concise and comprehensive [study] . . . for the general reader. . . . The selected bibliography conveniently classifies the criticism by language. The recent substantial effort to get Hesse's works printed in English renders that section prematurely dated, unfortunately. There is also a useful index. Field's critical perspective is appropriate for such a work. . . . Necessary for libraries."

Choice 8:888 S '71 110w

"[This study includes] a few interesting critical insights for the specialist. . . . A very brief Conclusion tries to disabuse the reader not only of Hugo Ball's misunderstood description of Hesse as 'the last knight of Romanticism,' but also of the Hippie generation's adoption of Hesse as the nonconformist rebel and outsider. Field sees the author as a continuer of tradition and an innovator whose 'final vision is one of harmony between centrifugal outsider forces and centripetal forces of cohesion'. . . . Field's book is a well-organized, well-written, and well-documented account. . . . [He] is very familiar with the extant Hesse scholarship and when questioning contentions by his predecessors offers his own very perceptive interpretations. . . . [His] translations of quotations throughout the text are adequate. . . . A most welcome and valuable contribution." I. D. Halpert

Mod Lang J 56:260 Ap '72 1300w

FIELDING, GABRIEL. New queens for old; a novella and nine stories. 224p $6.95 Morrow
LC 73-182951

Six of the stories in this collection have appeared previously in such publications as Vogue and The Critic.

"The novella of the title is at the same time the most profound and the most puzzling piece of this collection. Its profundity indeed is in marked contrast to the graceful, genteel superficiality of almost all the other stories. It is a tale of frightening implications. . . . In this very serious story as in the shorter, lighter ones, Fielding must be praised for his style above all else. He is deft, urbane, subtle, muted. He shares with many Englishmen a charm which makes this brilliant anthology of short pieces, like his earlier novels, a delightful and stimulating, if at times disturbing, reading experience." Daniel Coogan
America 127:215 S 23 '72 600w

"With the exception of the title-piece [none of the stories here] . . . can be regarded as 'major' or 'important,' but each is written with integrity and enormous vitality. . . . [The novella] 'New Queens for Old,' set in present-day Egypt, is closely observed and moves with subtle grace which all but conceals some genuine viciousness. . . . The actions appear motiveless and random at first, but the journey has an imperial languor; the jeep holds an entire society. The trouble is that Maude is no pharaoh, only a tycoon; Pixie is 'queenly' for a short time, in the shifting desert light, and the story closes with Maude's attempt at an explanation which must prove futile. Still, it is a fascinating idea, and it succeeds because Mr Fielding's portrayal of the 'progressive' Arab, Kahn, is such an accurate and patient one." Paul Theroux

FIELDING, GABRIEL—Continued

Encounter 39:74 S '72 750w

"The novella from which [this] collection of stories takes its title seems to me the most pretentious and least successful piece in the book. . . . The collection also contains some real gems: pinpricks of observation, flashes of ideas beautifully rendered. There are several stories about the sudden agonies of youthful love and sharp twinges of self-knowledge. . . . In another vein and equally diverting are the three cocktail-belt comedy pieces, the Kentish Triptych which tread wittily on the horns of the kind of close community of would-be emancipated sub-trendies which has previously been Updike territory. Their experimental break-outs, sexually and socially, inevitably end in boredom, recrimination or farce. Their silliness is pinned down ruthlessly and Fielding never lets them off the hook for an instant." Mary Borg

New Statesman 84:27 J1 7 '72 350w

TLS p1013 S 1 '72 600w

FIELDING, RAYMOND. The American newsreel, 1911-1967. 392p il $9.95 Univ. of Okla. press

791.43 Moving pictures—History
ISBN 0-8061-1004-X LC 73-177334

This is a "history of the American newsreel from its inception in Europe and the United States to its demise in the late 1960's, when it was supplanted by TV news. The newsreel cameras were present at every major event during those years, from General 'Black Jack' Pershing's sortie into Mexico after Pancho Villa in 1916 to the Korean War of the 1950's and the Middle Eastern conflict of the 1960's." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is a] thorough, insightful history of a hitherto sorely neglected aspect of the film industry. [It] is not merely a history of the celluloid news strip nor the film industry. It is also a very human history of America from the beginning of the film industry until 1967. It is devoid of the classical dryness so often associated with works of this type. By implication, at least, the book deals with the philosophies, sensitivities, and emotional temperament of more than half century of changes. . . . [This book] is a significant step towards a deeper understanding of this complex art and, as such, should be required reading for the serious student of the cinema." D. F. Gerrity

Best Sell 32:349 N 1 '72 700w

"Fielding has well researched his book, which tediously traces the history of newsreels. His writing, however, is boring. What he seems to have done can best be described as the art of skillful paraphrase. The book is a collection of profuse quotations (from eclectic sources) loosely strung together. The information about newsreels is so haphazardly presented that even a film scholar's patience would be pressed. One plus for the book is its multitude of photographs. The newsreel was a shortlived phenomenon and has yet to be pithily explained and interpreted in the context of 20th-century social and cultural history." M. S. Lasky

Library J 97:2748 S 1 '72 130w

"In this first truly satisfactory history of the American newsreel, Fielding has done both historians and film buffs a notable service. His diligent research all goes to show that the newsreel, for many years a primary source of information to a nation addicted to the movies, failed in its responsibilities. . . . One of [the author's] services is to guide the reader through the baroque couplings and uncouplings of the major newsreel companies as they grew in size and influence. . . . [Fielding] has reminded historians that film and its effect on the public is a legitimate, and barely touched, field of study. He has neatly balanced the academic paraphernalia (the book is well footnoted) with a prose that doesn't weigh heavily on the reader." M. A. Jackson

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ag ■ '72 1150w

FIELDS, W. C. Fields for president; commentary and phot. selection by Michael M. Taylor. 163p il $5.95 Dodd

817 Wit and humor
ISBN 0-396-06419-1 LC 70-173456

The American comedian and comedy writer's only book is now republished. The "book reads like a protracted variety performance, cast in the form of an electoral address, but embracing the whole of [Fields'] philosophy, his views on marriage, income tax, babies, health, and success in business. Interleaved with his presidential address are biographical notes by Michael M. Taylor, who has also chosen stills from his films [to coordinate with the text]." (TLS) For the original edition see BRD 1940.

Best Sell 31:442 Ja 1 '72 50w

"For those who remember Fields's magical appearances, the jokes are doubled. For those who don't, hard luck. His appreciation of children and women was limited. When asked how he liked babies, his famous reply was 'medium rare, with onions'. . . . Other delights include innumerable excellent photographs. 'What to See and Do at Alcatraz', how to behave if on 1 May the Russian Ambassador gives you a large cake which emits a curious ticking noise, and a true story about a studio dispute." Arthur Marshall

New Statesman 83:680 My 19 '72 300w

"[Fields'] book cannot be appreciated by anybody who has not heard that unforgettable voice, as melodious as nutmeg on a grater, as smooth as a sharkskin cornparer. Fields wrote as he spoke, building climaxes from which, after a deliberate pause, to ascend to dizzying anticlimaxes. . . . [He] had a flair for surrealist humour. . . . [This book] will make no new afeldsionados. Michael M. Taylor's compering could be subtler."

TLS p600 My 26 '72 850w

FIFOOT, C. H. S. Frederic William Maitland; a life. 313p $10 Harvard univ. press

B or 92 Maitland, Frederic William
ISBN 0-674-31825-0 LC 73-145892

This is an account of the life and career of Frederic W. Maitland the "scholar-teacher and legal historian who . . . [studied] the origins of the early English institutions [and] was able to resolve many of the problems and confusions of English constitutional history; Fifoot . . . [also] analyzes Maitland's works." (Library J)

"[This is] the best life of Maitland we could ever have." D. M. Stenton

Am Hist R 77:791 Je '72 950w

"A relatively brief biography which forms a companion volume to Maitland's Letters [BRD 1965] edited by Fifoot. Together the two volumes present a sympathetic and appreciative picture of this attractive Englishman who . . . became one of the most able editors of English medieval legal materials to serve the Selden Society. . . . In addition to reviewing Maitland's professional contribution, Fifoot adds the intimate touch. . . . For students of legal history as well as for those interested in university life at Cambridge in the late 19th century, this is a fascinating study. Should be useful for the general as well as the specialist library."

Choice 8:1501 Ja '72 130w

"[Fifoot] has written his biography with care and devotion [and] in a simple, expressive style. . . . [He] reveals the man and the strength of his intellect. The biography, well documented with published as well as unpublished letters, private papers, manuscripts and recollections of personal events, also preserves invaluable source material." R. M. Mersky

Library J 97:676 F 15 '72 100w

"This book explains, through [Maitland's] example, something of what real learning is; of how a learned man can live and work and die. . . . We are not taken through many of the legal or historical tangles which [Maitland] unravelled, though enough is said to explain where the professional importance of his work lay and lies."

TLS p627 Je 2 '72 700w

FIFOOT, RICHARD. A bibliography of Edith, Osbert and Sacheverell Sitwell. (Soho bibliographies, 11) 2d rev ed 432p $15 Archon bks.

016. Sitwell, Dame Edith—Bibliography. Sitwell, Sir Osbert, 5th Bart.—Bibliography. Sitwell, Sacheverell—Bibliography
ISBN 0-208-01233-8 LC 75-31654

The "first edition of this bibliography appeared in 1963. . . . Seventeen items have been added for Edith, six for Osbert and 33 for Sacheverell." (Choice)

"Since Edith died in 1964 and Osbert in 1969, the compilation of a definitive list of works by those two writers (especially Dame Edith) was indeed necessary. . . . No academic library should be without the definitive list of Osbert's work and the expanded list of Sacheverell's are bonuses. Furthermore, one might realistically believe that what remains for Sacheverell, the lesser member of the famous trio, to publish (he is now 75) will not much affect the value of this new edition."

Choice 9:490 Je '72 60w

"[Fifoot] has corrected several entries, and has made some changes, for better or worse, in bibliographical presentation. The substitution of measurements by millimetres for inches, foreign to the established Soho formula, accords better with international practice; the total rejection of signature collection is less likely to win approval. More regrettable, however, though understandable as a publisher's economy, is the removal of the running heads that made the first edition easier to refer to."

TLS p188 F 18 '72 130w

The FIHRIST of al-Nadim; a tenth century survey of Muslim culture; ed. & tr. by Bayard Dodge. (Columbia univ. Records of civilization: sources and studies) 2v il $40 Columbia univ. press

909 Arabic literature—Bio-bibliography. Civilization, Islamic
ISBN 0-231-02925-X LC 68-8874

"This is a catalogue of the books of all peoples, Arab and foreign, existing in the language of the Arabs, as well as of their scripts, dealing with various sciences, with accounts of those who composed them and the categories of their authors, together with their relationships and records of their times of birth, length of life, and times of death, and also of the localities of their cities, their virtues and faults, from the beginning of the formation of each science to this our own time, which is the year three hundred and seventy-seven after the Hijrah [A.D. 987/88]." (Summary of book) Bibliography. Biographical index. General index. Glossary.

"[This book] is richly interspersed with the author's own historical and critical comments. The Western tradition knows no other book to compare with this until the introduction of printing. The Fihrist is peculiarly the product of the sophisticated skills and interests of the tenth-century capital of Islam. . . . Many of the Fihrist's citations are of names and titles transliterated from a variety of foreign languages. The chore of determining or even deciphering some of the manuscript readings must have been difficult indeed, but it probably accounted for only a fraction of the translator's apparently inexhaustible energies. Dodge has also undertaken to identify all the authors cited by al-Nadim and to give some explanation of the text itself in footnotes, a glossary, and a two-hundred-page biographical index."

F. E. Peters

Am Hist R 76:1531 D '71 1200w

"For centuries now, The fihrist has been serving as a compendium of knowledge, a bibliography, and an indispensable reference work for medieval Christian, Jewish, and Muslim savants and, in modern times, for Orientalists who specialize in medieval and classical thought and letters. Written in Arabic, this valuable . . . encyclopedia served only those who could read that classical tongue. Today, thanks to the meticulous efforts of Dodge (President emeritus and professor, American [University of Beirut], this important work is available to English speaking teachers, scholars, researchers, and students of the Middle Ages and the classical periods. [The translated version] renders the Arabic text faithfully. . . . Highly recommended; no public or research library should be without it."

Choice 7:1729 F '71 150w

"Since Flügel published his critical edition [of The Fihrist] in 1871, new manuscripts have been found. . . . [Dodge] has made use of these in preparing this translation. Scholars will therefore need to consult this version as well as Flügel. . . . [However] it is not obvious what kind of reader Dr Dodge had in mind when he undertook the tedious task of translating a catalogue. His notes on historical events often refer the reader to an elementary and superficial compilation, those on place-names to Yaqut's great geographical dictionary, almost all of which is inaccessible to anyone who cannot read Arabic. Nor do the notes always provide the help we are entitled to expect. . . . Some notes are misleading or even inaccurate. . . . The book is handsomely produced and the standard of proofreading is high."

TLS p46 Ja 14 '72 550w

FILMUS, ANATOL. Tully Filmus; selected drawings; with an essay by Isaac Bashevis Singer; introd. by George Albert Perret. 76p il $12.50 Jewish pub.

741.9 Hasidism
LC 70-151314

Filmus "has recorded in this book of drawings his impressions of Hasidic Jews as they live and work in their isolated world of religious reverence and ecstasy." (Library J)

"The book has little interest for the art section of a library, but may be of some use to Jewish studies."

Choice 8:1442 Ja '72 70w

"[Filmus] has drawn upon his experiences as a very young boy in Bessarabia, but mostly upon his many years of observation living in the midst of New York's Williamsburg Hasidim. There is great simplicity and directness to Filmus' art. Each scene shows his great compassion and concern for the woes of man. The manner in which he handles his subject reminds one, to some extent, of those memorable portraits Rembrandt painted of Dutch Jews. Isaac Bashevis Singer's brief but excellent introductory essay describes Hasidism and its origins and at the same time whets the reader's appetite for the engaging drawings which follow. This book is a fine contribution to our understanding of the small-town Jewish culture which war and time have almost destroyed."

Henry Halpern

Library J 96:2486 Ag '71 160w

FINN, R. WELLDON. The Norman conquest and its effects on the economy: 1066-86. 322p il $16.50 Archon bks.

330.942 Great Britain—Economic conditions. Great Britain—History—Norman period, 1066-1154
ISBN 0-208-01151-4 LC 71-22648

In this study Finn "has attempted to calculate the changes in regional and local prosperity [in England] by using the three principal features of Domesday Book, namely, 'the values of holdings, the extent to which agricultural capacity was being exploited, and the social and economic standing of small tenants and villagers.'" (Am Hist R)

"This book is a statistical study in prose, which is by nature an uncongenial mating, but it is also a volume of absorbing interest and is written, as we would expect, with consummate care." F. J. Pegues

Am Hist R 77:497 Ap '72 470w

"[This is an] erudite and technical monograph. . . . The evidence [the Domesday Book] offers is . . . particularly relevant to this inquiry. On the other hand, the figures of Domesday Book are very difficult to interpret, and it would be dangerous to generalize too freely from them. In such matters Mr. Finn is of course a reliable guide, and specialized students will be as interested in his methods as in his results. For others, there is a danger that attention may be distracted from the main theme by the mass of miscellaneous information which is here so laboriously set out."

TLS p612 My 28 '71 310w

FINNEGAN, RUTH. Oral literature in Africa. 558p $16 Oxford

896 African literature—History and criticism
ISBN 19-815131-4

"After surveying the social, linguistic, and literary background [of oral literature, the author] distinguishes between the content, themes, form, style, and delivery of the two main types—panegyric, elegiac, religious, lyric, topical, political, and children's poetry and song, on the one hand, and narratives, proverbs, riddles, oratory, and other types of prose, on the other. She also examines the principles of drum language and the various kinds of drama performed." (Library J)

"[The author] writes in a conversational style, easy to read and without jargon covering all geographic areas [and] . . . spanning the time spectrum from traditional to modern. The necessary book will be extremely useful to undergraduate students and is for all libraries. In its comprehensive coverage, there is no comparable publication in the African literary field."

FINNEGAN, RUTH—Continued

Choice 8:396 My '71 90w

"[Finnegan] believes that African oral literature is relevant for comparative literature generally and for the analysis of contemporary African society—for the nonliterate or technologically simple African societies contain elaborate artistic forms, complex symbolisms, scope for the individual to express his own artistry and insights, and 'an awareness of the depths and subtleties of the world and of human life.' A basic guide to further research in this field."

Louis Barron

Library J 96:1270 Ap 1 '71 150w

"Ruth Finnegan ends this important and original work with the modest words: 'the present book can provide only an introduction'. No, Oral Literature in Africa is not a mere introduction, but a book certain to establish itself as a classic in the field of oral literature, distinguished alike for the range of its reference, the weight of its judgments and the quality of its discriminations. Future scholars are likely to find it not so much a gateway . . . as a vast web from which their innumerable lines of inquiry will radiate and to which they will all ultimately return. . . . [The author] has recognized the full depth, richness and complexity of the field into which she has ventured."

TLS p468 Ap 23 '71 1750w

FIRE, JOHN. See Lame Deer, J. F.

FIRESIDE, HARVEY. Icon and swastika; the Russian Orthodox church under Nazi and Soviet control. (Harvard Univ. Russian res. center. Studies, 62) 242p $8 Harvard Univ. press

940.53 World War, 1939-1945—Russia. Russia—Religion. Russia—History—German occupation, 1940-1945

ISBN 0-674-44160-5 LC 70-123567

This is an account of "the Nazi and the Soviet efforts at manipulating the religious aspirations of the Soviet population during World War II. After sketching Soviet religious policy prior to the war, Fireside discusses the nature of Nazi relations with the Russian Orthodox Church, the conflicting policies of German military and civilian authorities and the popular reactions to them, and the official Soviet response which culminated in the 'new religious flowering' permitted by the regime in its effort to arouse popular support for the struggle against Nazi Germany. Bibliography. Index." (Choice)

"The author has been quite successful . . . in bringing to light the complex pattern of institutional, factional, and personal interests that shaped the Nazi church policy in the occupied territories. This, alas, appears to be the only merit of this book. Otherwise, it shows weak orientation both in the genesis and evolution of Soviet church policy and in the complexities of national and ecclesiastical problems of the area, especially the Ukraine." B. R. Bociurkiw

Ann Am Acad 401:175 My '72 700w

"Recommended for advanced undergraduates and graduate students. Footnotes and a listing of Orthodox Church prelates."

Choice 8:408 My '71 150w

"The story of how the Russian Church behaved in the Nazi-occupied territories is competently told. . . . Toward the end of his account Mr. Fireside . . . apologizes, unnecessarily it might be thought, for the 'anti-totalitarian bias' of his study. He should have apologized instead for burdening it, for no good reason, with methodological references to parameters, social controls and experimental groups. Political scientists seem unable to resist the urge to display their tools, or at least their mastery of professional mumbo-jumbo." Walter Laqueur

N Y Times Bk R p4 F 28 '71 450w

"[This book] brings an entirely fresh perspective to the period of the Second World War. By basing his work on original documents, Dr Fireside has made a major contribution to scholarship on the Russian Orthodox Church. He has skillfully assembled the central chapters from a wealth of German primary materials, which are in general too little known to writers of Soviet history. Handling them with great assurance, he has clarified the major influences on the making of German policy towards the Russian Church. . . . While admiring [this] major achievement . . . one cannot help being disappointed at the number of questions the book leaves unanswered. It would be churlish, while praising the author's representation of chaos, to complain that no clear picture of Russian religious life under the Germans emerges. Yet one needs to know what it was like for the individual who had suffered twenty years of insult to his religious feelings suddenly to be able to start some sort of open religious observance again in the wake of the invading forces."

TLS p1360 O 29 '71 550w

FIRTH, RAYMOND. Families and their relatives; kinship in a middle-class sector of London: an anthropological study [by] Raymond Firth, Jane Hubert, Anthony Forge, and the team of the "London Kinship Project." (Int. lib. of social & social reconstruction) 476p ill $10 Humanities press

301.42 Family. Human relations

LC 70-12806

This "is a study of kinship among selected middle-class families in the North London communities of Highgate Village and Greenbanks Estate. . . . The book is divided into two parts. Part I discusses the conceptual and methodological background of the study and the historical and socio-cultural background of the two communities. Part II presents the research findings in chapters on kinship ideology, factors in kin knowledge, a structure of the kin universe, contact with kin, kin gatherings, kin sets and kin groups, kin terms and status relations, kinship situations and concepts, and the quality of kin relations. A final chapter attempts to summarize the findings. . . . Index." (Am Anthropol)

"All of the data were collected in unstructured interviews; no questionnaires were used. . . . The primary data collected from each informant was a genealogy that included all known relatives, dead and alive, complete with relevant social placement data. . . . The interviews were done at the informant's house and recorded in notebooks 'anthropological fashion'. . . . Even for a highly motivated reader, the book is difficult to read. It is written in ponderous prose. . . . Reading it one feels, perhaps unjustly, that the authors have managed to sandwich in every scrap of their data but with little concern for sorting the trivial and tangential from the germane. . . . The volume is generally well produced and the figures and maps are especially clear and helpful. . . . [The book] is not a methodological success but it is an explicit and honest experiment." W. E. Mitchell

Am Anthropol 74:20 F/Ad '72 1800w

"This report has been some ten years in the making, but the decade has certainly been used for reflection and careful analysis of the findings. Those reflections are a large part of its value; without them one would be compelled to conclude that there was too much generalization on the basis of too small and too limited a sample. But the probing way in which data are used gives this book a quality which makes it stand as a valuable contribution in the ongoing analysis of the western family." J. A. Peterson

Contemp Sociol 1:349 Jl '72 500w

"Some of the information gathered is interesting; some of it will, no doubt, be incidentally useful in time to come; but the underlying obtuseness of conception seems great, and is certainly a reason why the survey has yielded few conclusions for the moment, even in its own diffuse terms. It is perhaps not for the layman to criticize specialists—but ultimately the value of specialist surveys must be assessed on their meaningfulness in general terms and the contribution they can make to our overall understanding of our social context." Gillian Tindall

New Statesman 79:262 F 20 '70 1000w

"The authors are convincing in their final chapter, where they draw together their conclusions. The main finding is that, though there are enough recognized conventions about kinship behaviour for anthropologists to talk about a kinship 'system' among such informants as these, none the less its main feature compared with kinship in simpler societies is its relative 'open-ness'. There is a high degree of choice about which relatives to see and who to help. There are no clear-cut and binding rules. The system, in the authors' words, is 'permissive' rather than 'authoritarian'. . . . The non-technical reader is not however likely to get much more out of the book than such fairly obvious interpretations, plus a series of kinship statistics and some detailed illustrations."

TLS p451 Ap 23 '70 800w

FIRTH, RAYMOND. Rank and religion in Tikopia; a study in Polynesian paganism and conversion to Christianity. 424p pl $15 Beacon press

390.0966 Tikopians. Rites and ceremonies. Polynesia—Religion
ISBN 0-8070-4666-3 LC 71-112710

This "third and final volume of Firth's 'Studies in Tikopia Religion' series . . . [provides an] account of the pagan religion of the Tikopia, and traces the course of its decline and eventual collapse under the weight of Christianizing influences. It is the author's stated intention to provide a Tikopia model of their religious system . . . and to outline some of his views concerning religion in general." (Pacific Affairs) For volume one, 'The Work of the Gods, second edition, and volume two, Tikopia Ritual and Belief, see BRD 1968.

Reviewed by W. A. Lessa

Am Anthropol 74:27 F/Ap '72 700w

"The general comments made by the author about religion are both stimulating and valuable. . . . But perhaps the most important contribution made by this study is its detailed account of the decline of the pagan religion and the complexities of this decline in relation to the increasing adoption of Christianity. Especially valuable to any scholar interested in the impact of Christianity on traditional religion in small-scale societies are the sections in Chapter II that outline parallels and contrasts between paganism and Christianity, the definition of a Tikopia Christian, and the sociology of conversion." Robert Tonkinson

Pacific Affairs 44:475 fall '71 950w

"One feels that Professor Firth, a Tikopia by adoption with a New Zealand and, intellectually, a Maori background, . . . sees the conversion of the last pagans as a deliberate and dignified act taken to maintain the integrity of the social fabric, involving considerable moral dilemmas for those concerned. . . . Other anthropologists might take a less romantic and more cynical view. . . . [This book] tells us much about Tikopia religion through the medium of one man who, to the debt of colleagues in many parts of the world, has devoted years to the study of a small island people now renowned in anthropological literature. One is left wondering to what extent Professor Firth's sensitive and comprehensive investigations have affected the Tikopia themselves."

TLS p7 Ja 7 '72 850w

FISCH, HAROLD. The dual image; the figure of the Jew in English and American literature. 149p $6.95 Ktav

820 Jews in literature. English literature—History and criticism. American literature—History and criticism
LC 75-99207

In this revision and expansion of his 1959 edition, the author "shows most English writers to have been content to set the noble biblical [Jewish] figure alongside the contemptible modern one, without exploring the possible link between them. Fisch argues that from the medieval state, where veneration for Noah, Moses, and the Prophets coexists with loathing for the distinctly Jewish Devils, Vices, and Judases, to the poems of T. S. Eliot, . . . images of the Jew as pristinely good and radiantly evil, as sublime and contemptible, as divine and less than human, have simultaneously inhabited the minds of writers who made no attempt to harmonize them." (Commentary)

"Attempting too much in too little space, Fisch is reasonably successful at tracing the Jewish image in British and American literature."

Christian Century 88:1142 S 29 '71 20w

"[This] provocative and wide-ranging survey of the 'dual image' of the Jew in literature includes Jewish as well as Gentile writers. . . . [In] Fisch's concluding chapter, 'The Israeli Catharsis' . . . we are told that the writers of the 'American Jewish Renaissance' (and their British contemporaries) have failed to register the Israeli experience . . . and that it is only in Israel that the ambiguities and dualities of Jewish life and literature can be resolved. In other words, Fisch is asking us to judge the literature in question by an extra-literary standard, and that standard is a Zionist one." Edward Alexander

Commentary 53:85 Je '72 1000w

FISCHER, GEORGE, ed. The revival of American socialism; selected papers of the Socialist scholars conference; associated eds: Alan Block, John M. Cammett [and] Richard Friedman. 330p $10.50 Oxford 335 Socialism—U.S.

ISBN 0-19-501412-X LC 74-141845

"This volume is a collection of 16 papers selected from those presented to the annual meetings of the Socialist Scholars Conference since 1965. Scholars representing many points of view within the political Left (Christopher Lasch, Irving Howe, Ernest Mandel, etc.) cover a . . . range of theoretical questions exercising the fragmented socialist movement in America: race, class, revolution, culture." (Library J)

"[This anthology] shows the organizational vigor of a movement that continuously gave birth to new journals and scholarly bodies, belying the notion that anti-intellectualism characterized the entire New Left. . . . [It] also presents many of the substantive ideas and interests current in contemporary socialist circles in Western countries. . . . Other papers from the Socialist Scholars Conference have appeared in [J.] Weinstein and [D.] Eakins' For a new America [BRD 1970], which nicely complements this volume. Readers interested in the New Left, and libraries, will want to acquire both books."

Choice 8:1509 Ja '72 210w

"The growing atmosphere of dissent in this country and the consequent revival of interest in socialist theory make this an important source book for students in several disciplines. Several of the papers are published here for the first time." F. M. Blake

Library J 96:3618 N 1 '71 90w

FISCHER, HENRY G., jr. auth. Treasures of the Cairo museum. See Terrace, E. L. B.

FISCHER, JOSEPH, ed. The social sciences and the comparative study of educational systems. See The social sciences and the comparative study of educational systems

FISCHER, LOUIS. The road to Yalta; Soviet foreign relations, 1941-1945. 238p $8.95 Harper 940.53 Russia—Foreign relations. World War, 1939-1945—Diplomatic history
ISBN 06-011262-X LC 72-185899

Fischer "surveys the relations between the Soviet Union and its wartime allies, the United States and Britain, and sees the fate of Poland as the key to Stalin's control of Europe. He is critical of Roosevelt's generosity toward Stalin and believes that the President was too intent on a 'Pax Soviet-Americana,' believing that 'the two superpowers would guard the globe.' The author argues that Roosevelt and Churchill should have opposed the decision to dismember Germany and insisted on a four-power government for the entire country. He ends the book on the eve of the Yalta Conference because the important decisions had already been made." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"In this highly readable work [the author has] successfully combined a scholarly and well-documented exposition of the subject with journalistic personal observations of the men who played a crucial role in shaping the post-war world. . . . The volume contributes not only to a keener understanding of the causes of the Cold War but it also clarifies the motivating forces which operate behind the Soviet expansionist policy." N. D. Roodkowsky

America 127:211 S 23 '72 350w

"[This is a] concise and absorbing study. . . . Considerable space is devoted to Poland which was the subject of the most heated debate among the three principal Allied powers. The book is based on a wide variety of Russian and Western primary and secondary sources. It should be of great interest for the general reader and of a value to the scholar. Highly recommended for all library collections."

FISCHER, LOUIS—Continued

Choice 9:1189 N '72 130w

"At the time of his death in January 1970, Fischer left an unfinished manuscript which he had planned as a second volume in his history of Soviet foreign relations. (The first was Russia's Road from Peace to War: Soviet Foreign Relations, 1917-1941 [BRD 1969]). The book was left in various stages of revision, and it has been published as he left it. That is indeed a pity, because had he lived to make full revisions it would have been a better book. Fischer had not yet fully refined his interpretations of some of the events detailed. . . . Although Fischer was an authority in the field of Soviet foreign policy, this is a disappointing book because there is little here that is really new." Keith Eubank

Library J 96:3607 N 1 '71 300w

FISH, ROBERT L. The tricks of the trade; a Kek Huuygens novel. 190p $4.95 Putnam
LC 70-179026

Señor Sanchez "from Barcelona calls on Kek to propose a . . . smuggling scheme, but declines to say what is being smuggled. Kek, reinforced by an old friend, Martins, refuses, but is forced to acquiesce when a girl friend is kidnapped." (Library J)

"A touch-and-go adventure that works out brilliantly."

Best Sell 32:70 My 1 '72 50w

Reviewed by Henry Veit

Library J 97:904 Mr 1 '72 80w

"Fish has not attempted to write anything but an entertaining caper, and that he has done. His characters are stereotypes, his writing tends toward cliché, but he knows how to tell a story. The result is a fast-moving divertissement that should please all but the more demanding readers." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk ■ p40 Mr 12 '72 120w

"Kek Huuygens, master smuggler, returns. Kek's problem this time is to transport from Buenos Aires to Barcelona a highly explosive suitcase containing valuable contents of a sort that offends even our unscrupulous hero. The plot is slight, but it is entertaining to see how much a master craftsman like Mr. Fish can do with so little. How a smuggler known to every customs agent in the world manages to move a suitcase—unopened—from country to country is in itself worth the price of [this book]." Haskel Frankel

Sat R 55:104 Mr 25 '72 70w

FISHER, ART. Garden of innocents, by Art Fisher and Neal Marshall with Charles Einstein. 186p $5.95 Dutton 796.8 Boxing. Frazier, Joe. Muhammad Ali.

SBN 0-525-11185-9 LC 72-78379

This is an "account of the behind-the-scenes wheeling and dealing that preceded the Ali-Frazier fight: the financial arrangements, the . . . promotion buildup, the bickering among promoters, the harassment from minority groups who felt that ticket prices blacked them out." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The detail-laden first half of the book almost convinced me that this was a book that did not need to be written. Having finished the book, however, I can recommend it, but only for people interested in television techniques or the inside story on this particular fight. . . . By the time the last chapter, 'You Don't Mess with God,' is read, the reader does get caught up in the excitement of telecasting 'The Fight.'" J. A. Phillips

Best Sell 32:269 S 15 '72 320w

"The alternate passages by Fisher and Marshall are witty and often fascinating, with only occasional lapses into unnecessary technical detail. The result, like the actual fight and telecast, is a lively, entertaining venture." Charles Farley

Library J 97:2582 Ag '72 220w

"[The account is] all covered with slick, sports-announcer commentary, Fisher and Marshall alternately serving up their anecdotal spels. A fast-paced, gossipy rundown on the show biz tactics that made 'the greatest fight of the century.'"

N Y Times Bk R p52 S 24 '72 180w

FISHER, EUGENE M. Storm over the Arab world; a people in revolution [by] Eugene M. Fisher and M. Cherif Bassiouni; with a foreword by Arnold Toynbee. 429p maps $8.95 Follett

320.962 Arab countries—Politics
ISBN 0-695-80037-X LC 70-183181

"There are eight chapters of historical background, then one chapter each (a total of twelve) for the principal Arab countries, and a chapter each for the area's outstanding problems and important events of recent history—the Suez affair, the Arab-Israel wars, oil, the problem of water. Finally, there are two chapters of conclusions, the first of which . . . [argues] that there is such a thing as an 'Arab revolution,' and the second of which is an essay on how the United States is now 'engaged in a fierce campaign to block this revolutionary principle.'" (Nat R) Bibliography. Index.

"Though marred by the uncritical repetition of Arab nationalist myths and a few glaring typographical errors, [this] is a useful exposition of a relatively underrepresented point of view. Organized conveniently by both countries and key issues, it includes [an atlas]."

Choice 9:1033 O '72 120w

"The main theme is the accelerating socioeconomic, political, and ideological change which eventually will affect every Arab country in unpredictable ways. The U.S., the authors show at length, has constantly opposed this revolution in order to maintain its oil and strategic interests in the area. They maintain that this policy is bankrupt, and its continuance will result in our total expulsion from the area and the destruction of Israel. . . . As a result of reading this work, the uninitiated reader will understand better today's events in the area, while the knowledgeable reader will find the author's interpretations and observations interesting. The bibliography is helpful. For large general collections." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 97:2612 Ag '72 140w

"[This volume] is a complete and logically organized catalog of all there is to say, true and false, about the Arab world. Its range of content is as wide as its authors are naïve and superficial. . . . The authors are Eugene M. Fisher, who has apparently spent a bit of time in the area and who has tremendous enthusiasm for it, and M. Cherif Bassiouni, a professor of law at De Paul University who was born in Egypt but left it before the events which he and his partner have written about. They are relatively uncontaminated by any first-hand knowledge of their subject." Miles Copeland

Nat ■ 24:1066 S 29 '72 1900w

FISHER, H. E. S. The Portugal trade; a study of Anglo-Portuguese commerce, 1700-1770. 171p il $9.50 Barnes & Noble

382.0942 Great Britain—Commerce. Portugal—Commerce
SBN 416-17650-X LC [74-568690]

The author describes the "growth of English trade with Portugal to 1760 and its subsequent decline in the 1760s. He then analyzes in turn the four commodity trades that together accounted for an overwhelming proportion of all Anglo-Portuguese commercial transactions. These were the trade in English textiles to Portugal, . . . the shipment of English and North American foodstuffs (chiefly food grains and codfish) to Portugal; the import of Portuguese wine into England; the transfer of Brazilian gold from Portugal to England. . . . concluding chapter discusses the relationship between the Portugal trade and the development of the English economy in the eighteenth century." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

"It can be said at once that this book is likely to remain the standard work on its subject. [It is] based on a wide range of archival and primary printed sources in England and Portugal. . . . The value of this carefully researched book is enhanced by a number of statistical tables and appendixes, and it is well illustrated, printed, and produced." C. R. Boxer

Am Hist R 76:1518 D '71 420w

"Dr Fisher's concise monograph . . . makes a valuable contribution to our understanding of the factors influencing the English economy during the period of the 'commercial revolution.'"

TLS p375 Ap 2 '71 600w

FISHER, JOHN. John Fisher's magic book; il. by Tomie de Paola. 128p $4.95 Prentice-Hall

793.8 Magic—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-13-510206-5 LC 70-146962

"Containing 75 magic tricks, this book stresses the elements of a magician's trade that mystify an audience, such as showmanship, daring, and sleight-of-hand. . . . Grades five to nine." (Library J) First published in 1968 in England.

"None of the tricks require unusual or expensive equipment; in fact, most of the magic items are readily available to readers at home. The tricks are clearly explained and the black-and-white illustrations accented with red elucidate the text." E. J. Canarie
Library J 97:2483 J1 '72 60w

"My first impression of [this] book was that it is an excellent collection, amusingly presented, of the tricks magicians call 'self-working.' These are routines that demand no manual skill, that 'work' because of underlying mathematical or scientific principles. . . . A more careful examination . . . disclosed why I liked it. More than three-fourths of its 75 stunts and puzzles are cribbed from three sources: 'Mathematics, Magic, and Mystery' (Dover, 1956), 'Science Puzzlers' [by M. Gardner, BRD 1961], and the Mathematical Games Department of Scientific American. False modesty prevents me from naming the author. In many cases there is only a light rewriting of text and redrawing of illustrations. Inventors who are credited in the sources are mentioned on Fisher's acknowledgment page as persons to whom he is indebted. In one instance, a magician is listed who never existed. Fisher's 'Hopscotch Hocus' . . . is described in 'New Mathematical Diversions from Scientific American' [by Martin Gardner, BRD 1967], where it is credited to Victor Eigen. The name is a play on the phrase 'eigen vector.' Actually, the trick was invented by you-know-who—but there is Victor Eigen's name, among all the other wand-wavers on Fisher's list. . . . But no matter. The book is filled with fun for readers of all ages. And if you want more of the same, Fisher's sources are recommended." Martin Gardner
N Y Times Bk R p8 Ag 20 '72 380w

FISHER, NORMAN. Walk at a steady pace. 265p $4.95 Walker & co.

ISBN 0-8027-5237-3 LC 75-161114

This is a "novel about the loss of an experimental device from a Russian satellite that mysteriously crashes in Italy. The plot centers around various espionage outfits' attempts to recover the plans for the device which were ingeniously recorded by a pro-Western scientist. An English bookseller is called in to carry the plans back to England; but he gets involved in the intrigue and, using his wartime intelligence background, deftly unveils the schemes to recover the plans." (Library J)

"[This] is a top-flight British suspense novel, with plenty of action, a nice romance, and much confusion in clues, at least in the mind of the bewildered Morrison. The Italian background is excellently drawn, as are most of the major characters, including Lieutenant Aurelia of the Italian police, who is also a member of Interpol."

Best Sell 31:363 N 1 '71 180w

Reviewed by J. E. Buck

Library J 96:4107 D 15 '71 100w

"For a civilized, cat-and-mouse story of espionage wheeling and dealing, take a look at [this novel]. . . . Plots do not come much more complicated than this one, but Fisher clears everything up in a believable manner." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p50 N 14 '71 70w

"Versatile Norman Fisher, once Brains-Trust Questionmaster, Coal-Board-College Principal and much else, now becomes a thriller writer, and proves, as we should expect, an intelligent one. . . . [He has contrived a] story, so complicated and so steadily, so unclimatically paced (vide the title, from Bae-deker) that it is hard to maintain a properly involved interest in the antiquarian-bookseller hero, the girl he meets in Venice, and just what it is he is presumably carrying from and to whom in one or other copy of the exceptionally rare book. Moreover, the introduction is much too long."

TLS p857 J1 31 '70 130w

FITE, GILBERT C., jr. auth. The credit union movement. See Moody, J. C.

FITZGERALD, A. ERNEST. The high priests of waste. 398p pl $8.95 Norton

355.6 U.S. Department of Defense
ISBN 0-393-05359-8 LC 70-152661

The thesis "is that waste is the policy of the Pentagon. The author, a former arms-buying expert for the Air Force, describes in detail his personal experience with the military spending complex in the Pentagon. . . . [He] concludes that the real dupes of the Pentagon's policy of waste are the masses of American taxpayers who have become exploited victims of their own trust in the U.S. military." (Library J) Index.

"Mr. Fitzgerald is that civilian engineer employed by the Pentagon, the man who reported to Congress on the military's extravagant mismanagement of money, and was briskly sacked. His book naturally includes his own experience, but is less a personal complaint than a careful explanation of where the taxpayer's money goes, why more and more money produces less and less efficient returns, and who profits by the situation. It is not easy reading, but the information it contains is worth digging for." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:131 N '72 90w

"The thesis [is] described in numerous other books and articles. . . . [The author] demonstrates the waste and inefficiency of [the Pentagon] and documents the incompetency of the often unscrupulous or weak men who occupy powerful positions in the military establishment. . . . Recommended for larger collections." W. W. MacDonald

Library J 97:3569 N 1 '72 100w

"[Fitzgerald's] book is an overwritten, undercredited but nonetheless quite readable insider's account. . . . It is a damning indictment and, even if overstated by half, a scandalous situation crying for reform. But how? . . . The Defense budget, [Fitzgerald] insists, should be arbitrarily cut 10 per cent a year for at least three or four years. . . . What would this do to the nation's ability to deter, or cope with, conflict in Europe, the Middle East or Asia? Such questions he dismisses with jibes at 'knee-jerk anti-communism' and simplistic assertions that we possess 'overkill' already. Perhaps. But Fitzgerald does not inspire confidence that he knows as much about the interrelationship between foreign policy and the military forces . . . as he unmistakably knows about breakdowns in the weapons contracting process. . . . As he progresses through his account, his tone becomes increasingly strident." William Beecher
N Y Times Bk R p[54] N 10 '72 700w

FITZGERALD, F. SCOTT. As ever, Scott Fitz—; letters between F. Scott Fitzgerald and his literary agent Harold Ober, 1919-1940; ed. by Matthew J. Bruccoli; with the assistance of Jennifer McCabe Atkinson; foreword by Scottie Fitzgerald Smith. 441p pl $15 Lippincott

E or 92 Letters

ISBN 0-397-00732-9 LC 71-156367

These "letters—500 from the novelist and 300 from his agent— . . . [span] Fitzgerald's career from the time he sold his first novel to his death at age 44." (Library J) Index.

"Of the many writers [Ober] served, the one who tried him most was Scott Fitzgerald, and these letters are a monument to Ober's patience and integrity. . . . The correspondence is for business and without literary flavor, enlivened by an affectionate sketch of Ober by Fitzgerald's daughter and by a touching note of gratitude from Zelda at the end." Edward Weeks

Atlantic 229:110 My '72 300w

"The Fitzgerald of these letters is perhaps less attractive personally than he ever was before. . . . Bruccoli has fashioned an admirable edition that illuminates heretofore unrevealed aspects of Fitzgerald's career and provides much needed biographical data, especially about Fitzgerald's career as a screenwriter in Hollywood. This is a welcome and deeply rewarding book."

Best Sell 32:266 S 15 '72 650w

Choice 9:128 N '72 180w

"[This exchange of letters] is by turns absorbing, fascinating, and painful. . . . [It] is a pathetic and human tale involving a major

FITZGERALD, F. S.—Continued

American writer. Essential for every large city and college library." William White
Library J 97:2604 Ag '72 160w

"[One can] admire the diligence of Matthew J. Bruccoli in arranging these letters with such evident tender, loving care; at the same time, though, one can only question whether the letters represent more than pedantry—whether they add substantially to the body of knowledge about Fitzgerald already available in less discursive form. . . . The majority of the letters have to do with money. The question, 'Can you deposit one thousand dollars?' (the sum varies, naturally) keeps recurring. . . . Devoted Fitzgeraldites will, of course, count this book a necessity. Those less fond of every detail of his life, and I confess myself one of these, will find the book interesting to skip and skim through, but not indispensable to their intellectual armoire." Alden Whitman
Sat R 55:60 J1 8 '72 500w
Va Q R 48:cxxxvii autumn '72 70w

FITZGERALD, FRANCES. Fire in the lake; the Vietnamese and the Americans in Vietnam. (An Atlantic monthly press bk) 491p maps $12.50 Little 320.9597 Vietnam—Politics and government.

Vietnamese Conflict, 1961-
LC 72-186966

Fire in the lake is the image for revolution in the Chinese Book of Changes, the I Ching. This book "is about the nature of the Vietnamese character and its encounter with the West. . . . A protégée of Yale's Southeast Asia scholar, the late Paul Mus, [the author] worked under his direction for two years, and on two visits spent 16 months in Viet Nam." (Time) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Rev. Stephen McKenna
Best Sell 32:269 S 15 '72 550w

"The great mistakes that flowed from the basic American misunderstanding of the nature of the conflict are set forth with stunning clarity. A labor of reading is still necessary for those unused to the bookish approach to public affairs. [The author] constructs her case by a narrative of intricate facts which sharply cuts through the typical self-deceptions about the war that have been built up by official righteousness. . . . She looks at the subject from the standpoint of Vietnamese studies, which can lead an American away from the common experience of countries in the throes of revolution, and into the misnamed 'inscrutable' quality of the East. . . . She does not fully understand the Washington end of the story. . . . But these are minor reservations. With the great benefit of the Pentagon papers and a devotedly critical intelligence, Miss Fitzgerald has caught the sweep of the subject as well as the context." S. R. Davis
Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 23 '72 600w

"One of the best descriptions and analyses of Vietnam ever published in English. . . . Fitzgerald has read extensively in scholarly works about Chinese and Vietnamese society, and she uses this material to give substance to her own excellent observations made as a reporter in Vietnam. She has been able to combine a basic understanding of the nature of peasant society, Confucianism, French colonial rule, and the impact of modernization to produce an exceptionally clear account of the problems of southern Vietnam. The treatment of American operations is also excellent." D. D. Buck
Library J 97:2169 Je 15 '72 200w

"[This book] will become gospel for the antiwar movement. The sheer weight of Miss Fitzgerald's documentation and the undeniable effectiveness of her remarkably persuasive style cannot but commend her book to those who've told us all along that our cause in Vietnam was and is hopeless. . . . [Miss Fitzgerald] gives short shrift to the notion that the Vietnam war is a theater in the general conflict. She limns the struggle in clear configurations with most striking colors, confining that picture to Southeast Asia. . . . It is precisely the partial inaccuracy of her general premise, and the omissions from her picture—she categorically denies, for instance, the domino theory and suspicion of legitimacy—that make her book at once such a fabulous statement of her Weltansicht and such a suspect evaluation of the world as it is." David Brudnoy

Nat 24:1068 S 29 '72 1650w

Reviewed by Tom Geoghegan
New Repub 167:28 S 16 '72 1300w

Reviewed by Martin Bernal
N Y Rev of Books 19:24 O 5 '72 6600w

"Perhaps the most horrifying part of Miss Fitzgerald's analysis is her account of American pacification policy. Instead of working toward the development of South Vietnam, as many American social scientists have deceived themselves into believing, pacification has principally meant the pouring of huge sums into the sponge of a faction-ridden army and government bureaucracy. Miss Fitzgerald documents how this sudden wealth has exaggerated traditional class differences, making South Vietnamese officials even less attentive to the peasants than ever. . . . The most brilliant part of her analysis . . . [reveals] a new type of colonial relationship. For this she makes good use of the scholarship of the great French sociologist of Buddhism and of Vietnam, the late Paul Mus . . . and she also takes advantage of the profound psychological insights of two important students of colonialism, Frantz Fanon and above all, O. Mannoni." Stanley Hoffmann

N Y Times Bk R p1 Ag 27 '72 1800w

Reviewed by Jonathan Mirsky
Sat R 55:54 Ag 19 '72 800w

"In one form or other, scholars, journalists and Government officials have said most of what Frances Fitzgerald has to say. But she may succeed better than they simply because she delves into culture, history and politics with so fresh a blend of compassion and intelligence. . . . Despite its use of terrorism and reprisals, the N.L.F. has enjoyed success, she argues, because it operates from the villages and engages the peasants on their own home ground—digging the tunnels, making land mines and small weaponry. By contrast, American programs, except in the most secure areas, have involved uprooting people who feel that they are literally leaving their souls in their native hamlet. . . . The last part of Fire in the Lake describes the effect of uprooting on Vietnamese society." Martha Duffy
Time 100:1581 Ag 28 '72 1000w

FITZGERALD, FRANCIS SCOTT KEY. Dear Scott/Dear Max: the Fitzgerald-Perkins correspondence; ed. by John Kuehl and Jackson R. Bryer. 282p $7.95 Scribner

B or 92 Letters
SBN 684-12373-8 LC 76-143940

"The friendship between . . . Fitzgerald and [Maxwell] Perkins [his editor at Scribner's, was] . . . dependent upon their letters. . . . [Their correspondence] deals with dollars and cents, since from 1920 on Fitzgerald had embraced a way of living which . . . he could not afford. . . . [The editors] have cut and edited the letters as a running narrative . . . [which shows] the intimacy and insight with which the two men judge the literary renaissance of which they are a part . . . [and reveals] how Max encouraged and strengthened a major writer whose aspiration was matched by bouts of depression." (Atlantic) Index.

Reviewed by Joseph Schwartz
America 126:72 Ja 22 '72 750w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 229:95 Ja '72 550w

Reviewed by Bernard Weinstein
Best Sell 31:504 F 15 '72 900w

"Most of the people who read this correspondence . . . will probably do so because of Fitzgerald, but it is really Perkins's book. After all, the letters by Fitzgerald to Perkins have almost all been published before in The Letters of F. Scott Fitzgerald [BRD 1963, 1964]. But most of the Perkins letters are new. . . . [However] Perkins is not particularly self-assertive. Spliced between Fitzgerald's rhetorical binges, Perkins's letters are a kind of Scotch-and-soda gone flat. . . . Still it is good to hear from this important, reserved maker of American literature. . . . [The editors] have made what seem serious errors of omission. . . . They have left out many letters, deleted phrases, sentences, often whole paragraphs, leaving only ellipses behind as clues to what has been lost. In a volume which will surely serve as a reference more often than as a 'good read,' this seems inexcusable." Aaron Latham

Book World p4 D 19 '71 650w

Choice 9:212 Ap '72 160w

"A correspondence of some 21 years, . . . [this] illumines a seminal era of American literature. . . . The letters show Fitzgerald's progression from a callow young man . . . to a best-selling author. . . . There is, of course, much on contemporary authors—especially Tom Wolfe and . . . Ernest Hemingway . . . as well as Edmund Wilson, Ring Lardner, Edna Ferber, Carl Van Vechten, Thomas and James Boyd, E.M. Forster, Raymond Radiguet, Cocteau, Willa Cather, Edith Wharton, Frank Norris, Mencken, Nathan [and] Cummings. . . . For all collections of modern literary history." L. W. Griffin

Library J 96:2509 Ag '71 290w

Reviewed by Jeffrey Hart

Nat R 24:228 Mr 3 '72 800w

New Repub 166:28 Ja 22 '72 390w

"The Fitzgerald letters . . . [are] rather mixed bag. When he was in the right mood, Fitzgerald was a delightful correspondent, fanciful and funny. But he was also capable of whining and complaining at inordinate length; his letters to Perkins contain as much of this material as anyone would want, in addition to the predictable business details about marketing, percentages, dust jackets, advertising, advances, arrears, and the competition. Perkins's replies are the more impressive when one recalls that he had a lot of other writers to deal with, some of them in just as much need of tender loving care as Fitzgerald." R. M. Adams

N Y Rev of Books 18:26 Ja 27 '72 600w

N Y Times Bk R p10 Ap 23 '72 100w

"In their introduction, . . . [the editors write] 'we have included only letters between the two men and only those that sustain the interest and continuity of their story.' Unfortunately, this idea turns out to be a gimmick unjustified either by the content or the tone of the correspondence. Thus, while one is led to assume that the novelist and his editor were the closest of friends, the letters point to a professional relationship—one by no means devoid of loyalty and fondness, yet one whose practical nature is always clear both to writer and editor. Moreover, the letters reveal that Fitzgerald was deeply private about the pain and trouble in his personal life. . . . [If the editors] had read the Fitzgerald-Perkins correspondence with more discernment, I doubt that they would have indulged the fancy that these letters constitute a compelling narrative." J. F. Callahan

Sat R 54:57 D 11 '71 550w

FITZGERALD, ROBERT. Spring shade; poems, 1931-1970. 192p $6.50 New directions

811

LC 74-145931

"Fitzgerald has brought together all of his previous poetry collections, along with twenty-two more recent poems and selections from his [translations]." (Best Sell)

"In looking over forty years of Fitzgerald's poetry, one is immediately impressed by two prominent characteristics: a continuity of style and tone, and a subtle process of refinement. His voice, while lyric, has a controlled, meditative tone that often becomes prayerlike; and, even in his free verse, one can feel his concern with form. . . . In comparing the book's first poem . . . with one of his most recent works . . . it becomes evident that Fitzgerald's years have been assiduously spent on refinement rather than change. . . . The book also offers a generous sampling of [his] translations (Greek, Latin, and Modern French), giving an indication of his scope and facility in this rather demanding branch of poetry. . . . The excerpts are well-chosen and indicate the poet's excellence in this precarious art." Paul Kameen

Best Sell 31:54 My 1 '71 450w

"The poetry of the distinguished translator . . . combines the mournful cadence of the classics-loving nineteenth century with the Southern New Criticism's quirky exactitudes. Bad lines may make one say Tennyson, or Tate; but the many good lines bear the mark of an original craftsman. Spring Shade is a good title for Fitzgerald's collected poems; his work tends to linger in freshness, avoiding heat and struggle, delivering all things through a glassy, dew-laden light. . . . The concluding section of translations, and especially the Chorus from Oedipus Rex, are magnificent, and one is grateful that Fitzgerald decided to include them." Alan Williamson

Poetry 119:296 F '72 400w

FITZGERALD, STEPHEN. China and the overseas Chinese; a study of Peking's changing policy, 1949-1970. 268p $19.50 Cambridge

327.51 China (People's Republic of China)—Foreign relations. Chinese in Asia, South-eastern

ISBN 0-521-08410-5 LC 77-177938

This is an "examination of the policy of the People's Republic of China towards the overseas Chinese—those people of Chinese origin living outside China, mostly in Southeast Asia. . . . These overseas Chinese have often been regarded as a kind of fifth column used by the Chinese Communist Party to stir up revolution in their host countries. Dr Fitzgerald . . . demonstrates the falseness of this view. . . . [He] traces the development of overseas Chinese policy by the CCP after its accession to power in 1949, through a decline in interest after 1954, down to vanishing point during the Cultural Revolution." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] has researched a long list of communist publications, and has been to China, but still does not escape the debt for materials, incurred by most writers, to the American consulate-general in Hongkong. . . . This book is not a survey of available knowledge on its subject, but rather a student's thesis on limited if reliable sources. It lacks maturity of presentation and judgment. Yet its grand format is modelled on the Harvard East Asian Series from the other Cambridge." Economist 244:48 J1 29 '72 450w

"[This is] an interesting and useful book, although somewhat specialized for smaller collections." G. W. Hayford

Library J 97:2848 S 15 '72 170w

"[This is a] factually detailed and impeccable study."

TLS p1386 N 17 '72 750w

FITZGIBBON, CONSTANTINE. Red hand: the Ulster Colony. 367p il maps $7.95 Doubleday

941.6 Northern Ireland—History

LC 70-150892

The author of Out of the Lion's Paw (BRD 1970) traces Northern Ireland's 'religious, political and economic history from the time of William of Orange through more than three centuries of political infighting, religious hatred and famine to the establishment of the Irish Free State and . . . [her] current troubles.' (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography. Index.

"The subtitle of this work is: 'The Historical Context of Northern Ireland's Present Crisis,' and that really is the theme of the book. . . . [It] is a well-written and lengthy narrative of the countless battles fought along the streets and highways of the Emerald Isle. . . . The blurb on the jacket says the book captures the drama and the color and the tragedy of Ulster, placing it all in 'an illuminating new perspective,' but an American reader may be pardoned if he finishes the book with confusing ideas about the whole situation. . . . A reader will wonder when he finishes this book (really, it is long and tedious) whether the author is a Southern or a Northern Irishman. . . . He seems . . . to tilt the table a bit toward Ulster. Not too much, to be sure. Just a little tilt." B. A. Dooley

Best Sell 31:552 Mr 15 '72 550w

Reviewed by Patrick Brogan

Book World p11 Ap 23 '72 900w

Choice 9:1340 D '72 100w

"This book makes no effort either to understand or explain the tragedy of Ulster. Mr Fitzgibbon has written a derivative and episodic tirade of the centuries of Anglo-Saxon perfidy towards the Roman Catholics of Ireland. It reads with all the detachment of a public prosecutor's brief before a war crimes tribunal, not as a serious history. . . . [It] is bulging with errors of fact that would embarrass a schoolboy. . . . Is it enough to dismiss Protestant fears in Ulster with the suggestion that they are the mere fabrication of unscrupulous demagogues?"

FITZGIBBON, CONSTANTINE—Continued

Economist 241:65 O 23 '71 230w

"[This book] is written by a Protestant with strong sympathies for the Catholics in Northern Ireland. . . . [It] is frequently brightened by comparisons to other historical times and places, but unfortunately it is just as frequently marred by those analogies when they are incongruent and 'loaded.' It is, nonetheless, a readable if not very distinguished popular history." M. M. Reik

Library J 97:1429 Ap 15 '72 180w

Reviewed by O. D. Edwards

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ap 9 '72 600w

"A rather easy-going informal discussion of the historical roots of Northern Ireland. Many people are likely to find it readable and informative. Others will find it rather difficult reading because of [the author's] tendency to skip from period to period, with very little notice; and his frequent and rather strange comparisons with outside phenomena. Very little of this book deals with contemporary Northern Ireland, and Mr FitzGibbon is not at his best in this section: 'It would seem that the Red IRA being now under the control of International Communism as directed from Moscow, has been ordered to hold its hand for the time being. . . . This is the equivalent of the theory that the men of 1916 were in the pay of Berlin. In reality, Irish rebels have responded to Irish situations in their own way.'"

TLS p298 Mr 17 '72 250w

FITZGIBBON, LOUIS. Katyn; introd. by Constantine FitzGibbon 285p il map $10 Scribner

940.54 Katyn Forest Massacre, 1940. World War, 1939-1945—Poland
SBN 684-12612-5 LC 78-163499

"In early 1940 over 4200 gagged and shackled Polish prisoners of war were forced to lie down in mass graves on top of their dead comrades and were shot in the back of the head by their captors. Advancing German troops discovered the graves and accused the Soviets of genocide. The Soviets immediately reversed the charges and pointed at the Germans as the culprits. . . . The story of the events leading up to the act are accompanied by . . . photographs of the scene and the victims." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Z. J. Gasiorowski

Am Hist R 77:1486 D '72 460w

"[This] book on Polish-Russian relations . . . generates more heat than light. . . . Though relatively calm in tone [it] is essentially a scissors-and-paste brief. . . . The vital political questions—what the Soviet motivations were, and why the London Poles reacted as they did—receive no attention whatever. . . . Not recommended."

Choice 8:1501 Ja '72 200w

"[This is an] extremely serious and well-documented . . . [study]. Unfortunately, its somewhat flamboyant and at times hysterical presentation mars the otherwise excellent factual material in it."

Economist 239:58 Ap 17 '71 440w

"This book is the fullest account to date based on the available evidence. . . . One appendix lists the names of over 4100 victims identified up to June 7th, 1943. One of the reasons the author gives for writing the book is to inspire a sovereign state to initiate a re-examination of the Katyn atrocities at the highest international level. Even if the book fails to achieve this objective, it will undoubtedly move all readers to condemn atrocities of war—of any war." I. L. Kaldor

Library J 96:4006 D 1 '71 250w

"[This] account was written 'to clear once for all the obscurity which has shrouded for over thirty years the worst crime against prisoners-of-war ever committed'. Clearly the obscurity applied only to those who had not read Professor [J.K.] Zawodny's book [Death in the Forest, BRD 1963] in the nine years since its publication. Indeed Mr. FitzGibbon adds very little to our knowledge of the crime."

TLS p701 Je 18 '71 500w

FITZPATRICK, JOSEPH P. Puerto Rican Americans; the meaning of migration to the mainland. 192p $6.95; pa $3.50 Prentice-Hall

301.453 Puerto Ricans in New York (City)
SBN 13-740118-3; 13-740100-0 (pa)
LC 74-150712

Fitzpatrick writes "about the Puerto Ricans in mainland United States, with a special focus on those in New York City. . . . He seeks to examine the meaning of the migration . . . for the newcomers as well as the residents of the cities and neighborhoods to which the Puerto Ricans come. . . . [His purpose is to] enable Puerto Ricans and other mainland Americans to live together by helping them understand the difficult process of adjustment they both must face." (Pref) Index.

Reviewed by P. B. Glick

Am Anthropol 74:872 Ag '72 800w

"On the basis of identity and community as major variables in assimilation, [this book] . . . focuses upon the interrelated consequences of cultural origin, the New York environment, family, color, religion, education, welfare, mental illness and drug abuse upon community, identity, power, and assimilation. Its chief merit is that [the author] develops insights from a central and valid theme. . . . It contains an obvious, selective optimism toward the value and success of some kind of Puerto Rican assimilation in the U.S. Highly recommended. [This] is certainly a contribution to the minority literature in general and to an understanding of the Puerto Ricans in particular. . . . Excellent range of references."

Choice 9:140 Mr '72 130w

"The reader with a general interest in ethnic groups or a particular interest in the life of the Puerto Ricans in the mainland will welcome [this] book. It is a compact, sensitive, and intelligent statement, and it is good sociology, too. . . . The book is at the same time a theoretically organized examination of the Puerto Ricans' experience in the mainland, an introduction to the Puerto Ricans based upon a careful use of the relevant literature, and an understanding effort to assess the meaning of the migration." L. H. Rogler

Commonweal 96:485 S 8 '72 370w

FITZSIMMONS, THOMAS, comp. Japanese poetry now; remade into English by Thomas Fitzsimmons. 134p $5.50 Schocken

895 Japanese poetry—Collections
LC 70-181882

This book contains "one hundred poems by 42 contemporary poets." (Library J)

"No original Japanese is given with which to make a comparison, but it seems evident from the title page ('remade'), from the preface, and from the poems themselves that the transfer from Japanese to English is quite free. It obviously had to be. An occasional Britishism slips in ('nappy,' 'bum,' 'pylon'), but the loss of sense is not crucial. . . . A useful and representative collection." D. J. Pearce

Library J 97:2404 Jl '72 120w

"This small volume of . . . poems gives a very fair idea of the way in which Japan has repudiated the linguistic heritage represented by the tanka and the haiku. Now it is the poetic theme that dominates, frequently amid a spatter-work of syllables. Much of it is simply derivative; some of it is impressive. Since these are not, in the proper sense, 'translations,' one cannot complain that the writer has failed to include the original Japanese versions, though one often wonders."

Va Q R 48:cii summer '72 110w

FITZSIMONS, LOUISE. The Kennedy doctrine. 275p $7.95 Random house

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations. U.S.—Politics and government—1961-. Kennedy, John Fitzgerald, President U.S.
ISBN 0-394-46241-6 LC 75-159343

The author "takes the position that the great tragedy of President Kennedy lay . . . in his failure to understand and to use his own unprecedented potential for leadership. [She argues that] Kennedy came to power in an America bound to cold war thinking. Yet he never questioned the cold war's basic ideology. . . . This book describes how John Kennedy tried to manage Castro at the Bay of Pigs; Khrushchev at Vienna and in Berlin; the challenge of Soviet missiles in Cuba; upheaval in Vietnam; the nuclear arms race." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. L. Delaney
America 126:435 Ap 22 '72 280w

"Generally speaking, FitzSimons too narrowly ascribes to the Kennedy administration alone an 'untenable globalism'. . . . Aside from exaggerations about how Kennedy exacerbated the cold war single-handedly, FitzSimons . . . generally makes judicious use of all the published secondary accounts of the Kennedy years plus congressional documents, the oral history collection at the JFK Library, and the one-volume Bantam edition of the Pentagon Papers." J. H. Wilson

Am Hist R 77:1521 D '72 440w

"There is no imposing new information or analysis in this unimaginative exercise in intellectual overkill. FitzSimons shows skill only in burying undistinguished ideas in turgid prose. She sees no real development in the Kennedy outlook, believing that Johnson's decisions in world affairs were essentially determined by his predecessor. She manages to dismiss events that do not fit into her simplistic views by ignoring them or dismissing them with briefest mention, e.g. the test-ban treaty of 1963 or the Laos neutralization. Libraries with limited budgets can well afford to pass up this volume."

Choice 9:571 Je '72 160w

Reviewed by Stanley Hoffman
Commonweal 96:436 Ag 11 '72 370w

"This book, like Richard J. Walton's Cold War and Counter-revolution: the Foreign Policy of John F. Kennedy [BRD 1972], tends to have the 20-20 vision that comes from hindsight. Both books are very critical and raise important questions. Both Walton and FitzSimons cover some of the same ground and often agree. FitzSimons has used more original sources (for example, the JFK Library oral history collection), and with significant variation in interpretation and emphasis. . . . Although this very readable book has merit and should be considered in any study of JFK's foreign policy, one has the feeling that it is one of many works that will be written before a reasonably definitive study emerges." Hubert Humphreys

Library J 97:1321 Ap 1 '72 160w

Reviewed by Ronald Steel
N Y Rev of Books 19:43 O 19 '72 800w

"The similarity of [this volume and Richard Walton's Cold War and Counterrevolution] is so close that a reviewer can recommend that the essential can be found in either. As for myself, I found that Walton's book was more thoroughly documented, was less flawed in that it had more references to the responsibility of those who came before and after Kennedy. . . . [Still, both] these books will make very disturbing reading for most Americans and will chill Democratic leaders already facing an uphill electoral campaign against incumbent Nixon. Placing all blame on Kennedy, the authors virtually ignore the fact that Republicans were much more hawkish and pushed Kennedy even harder down these paths than he was going by himself. . . . Despite these distortions and oversights, these books are valuable for correcting the even more distorted memoirs and apologies of Kennedy's close associates, Theodore Sorensen, Arthur Schlesinger Jr. and others." David Schoenbrun

N Y Times Bk R p6 Mr 19 '72 500w

Reviewed by Stephen Schlesinger
Sat R 55:56 Jl 15 '72 750w

FLAHERTY, ROBERT. Nanook of the North; ed. from the film by Robert Kraus. unsp il $4.95 Windmill bks.

970.1 Eskimos—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-87807-024-9 LC 70-148400

A collection of stills and subtitles from the documentary film Nanook of the North. This story of Eskimo life is set in Labrador in north-east Canada. It follows "Nanook and his family as they build an igloo and hunt for seal and walrus, summoning all their courage and ingenuity to survive. . . . Grades two to five." (Library J)

Reviewed by Marilyn McCulloch
Library J 96:3458 O 15 '71 90w

"Filmed in 1920, 'Nanook' was the first great documentary by a man with a unique capacity to make us sense our kinship with all men and all cultures. . . . [However] this book is nothing more than a series of blurred frame enlargements from the film. In several cases you cannot tell what you're looking at. Adding to the confusion, the pictures are too few and too small, and sparsely captioned so what appears on the pages amounts to nothing more than an idiotic photo album of Nanook and friends disporting themselves among walrus and icebergs."

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ja ■ '72 130w

FLAMANT, MAURICE. Modern economic crisis and recessions, by Maurice Flamant and Jeanne Singer-Kérel; tr. from the French by Pat Wardroper. 125p il $5; pa $1.75 Harper

338.5 Business cycles. Depressions
LC 78-18985

This book "consists of brief summaries of the events involved in every important economic downturn experienced in England, France, Germany, and the U.S. between 1815 and 1967." (Choice)

"[This work] presents no explicit theory of business cycles. Since there is a good deal of talk about the causes of various events, however, some implicit theory or theories must have been used. It seems that the authors have simply relied on the conventional historical interpretation of these various recessions. . . . Unfortunately, the extremely weak bibliography seriously impairs its usefulness."

Choice 8:876 S '71 160w

"To a large extent this is more a reference work, of use to historians, political scientists, and economists, than a book of general interest. . . . The facts have been thoroughly researched from statistical data from the countries involved. The graphs are well thought out and aid one's understanding of the crises they represent. This book would serve as a highly useful tool in research libraries with large economics collections." R. W. Haseltine
Library J 96:472 F 1 '71 110w

FLAMMONDE, PARIS. The age of flying saucers; notes on a projected history of unidentified flying objects. 288p il $3.95 Hawthorne bks.

629.13 Flying saucers
LC 74-115903

This account "of the Flying Saucer Age . . . covers personalities as well as sightings." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[The book] makes interesting reading, but attempts no scientific explanations. The author . . . has had close contact with persons who sighted UFO's, and access to many records. His selection of sightings is good, and his accounts of these sightings are reasonable. There are 25 photographs of the best known and most active UFO personalities, from the ultra-conservatives, Condon and Menzel, to Keyhoe and Adamski at the other extreme. His eight illustrations of UFO photographs are less complete, omitting at least five controversial cases. The index is good, and numerous references are given. Valuable appendices list Air Force organizations, panels, and reports, UFO organizations and clubs in the U.S., Britain, and four other countries, UFO periodicals, movies, and TV shows, and a fairly complete bibliography."

Choice 8:1468 Ja '72 160w

"Flammonde presents a fine selection of saucer lore. All serious saucer collections will acquire this title; but it is recommended to most libraries because, in addition to the standard fare, . . . there is quite a bit about contactees and mystics which, being generally published by obscure organizations, is rarely found on library shelves." R. G. Schipf
Library J 95:2817 S 1 '70 100w

FLANNER, JANET. Paris was yesterday. 1925-1939 [by] Janet Flanner (Genêt); ed. by Irving Drutman. 232p $8.50 Viking

944.081 Paris—History. Paris—Intellectual life
ISBN 670-53953-8 LC 70-185384

The material in this volume has been selected mainly from the author's fortnightly Letter from Paris which appeared in The New

FLANNER, JANET—Continued

Yorker. Several chapters from An American in Paris (BRD 1940) have also been included. Index.

America 127:242 S 30 '72 500w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 230:133 O '72 500w

Reviewed by Edward Gannon
Best Sell 32:183 JI 15 '72 500w

Reviewed by Kathleen Cannell
Christian Science Monitor p9 JI 26 '72 650w

"These excerpts . . . re-create the city quite beautifully. Humorous at times, captivating and interesting always, these notes are of value to scholars and students because they provide background information on various literary, artistic, social, and political events, as well as on individuals who dominated or exemplified grand society in France. Flanner's literary style makes history breathe, a quality which makes it possible for her to relate facts in an epistolary manner which never tires. With her two previous volumes of Paris Journals [for v 1, 1944-1965 see BRD 1965, for v2, 1965-1971 see BRD 1971], Paris Was Yesterday forms a fascinating trilogy on modern French life." Ed SantaVicca

Library J 97:2184 Je 15 '72 130w

"[These selections] epitomize the [prewar] period in a moment, a gesture or a glimpse. Janet Flanner has the knack of singling out the significant trifle. Her camera eye usually focuses on details rather than panoramic vistas, but her candid snapshots tell more than full-length documentaries. Her understated art is all in economy and contrasts, her style terse and epigrammatic. . . . The art of Janet Flanner is all the more remarkable when the frequent gloom of her subject matter is taken into account . . . though in fairness it should be said that she also celebrates the lyric, and has an unsnobbish zest for all the animation of that period when Paris was proverbially gay." George Wickes

New Repub 166:24 JI 15 '72 1450w

Reviewed by Jean Stafford
N Y Rev of Books 19:22 Ag 10 '72 600w

Reviewed by Walter Clemons
Newsweek 80:79A Ag 21 '72 90w

"When the cultural history of Americans Abroad in the twentieth century is sorted out . . . Janet Flanner . . . may well be appreciated as the Mme. de Sévigné of her time. [They both] defined manners and mores by dramatizing moments in the midst of which they existed and navigated. . . . [In] her earlier pieces she was saltier, more openly cruel, somewhat malicious when the occasion seemed to warrant it, less sure of herself . . . yet at all times mixing a rare Maugham-like gift for anecdote and a Rex Reed-like talent for the nonchalant ironic pinprick. . . . [She] gave us Paris as she chose to see it, a precious legacy filtered through her prescient obituaries of illustrious but imperfect people. She forged a heavily perfumed myth of one of the great cultural centers of modern man at one of its richest moments." Alex Szogvi

Sat R 55:56 JI 29 '72 1050w

FLANZ, GIBERT H., jt. ed. Constitutions of the countries of the world, v1. See Blau-stein, A. P.

FLEIG, KARL, ed. Alvar Aalto, 1963-1970. See Aalto, A.

FLEISCHER, NAT. Jack Dempsey. 256p Il $8.95
Arlington house

B or 92 Dempsey, Jack. Boxing—History
ISBN 0-87000-151-5 LC 72-78480

This is a biography of the boxing heavyweight "from his lean childhood in Manassa, Colorado, in the late 1890's through his championship years to his successful restaurant business in Manhattan today." (Publisher's note) Index.

"That [the author] lacks a little in polished prose and objectivity will not be held against him by readers of this biography. Even the frequent repetitions, often in the same words, detract but little from the chronicle of one of the most popular of all heavy weight champs. Over all, this biography has value because it is a history of heavyweight boxing during Dempsey's active career, 1914-1927, and into recent times. . . . Followers of boxing will find interesting the last twenty pages of facts and tables (Dempsey's fight record, receipts and attendance for Dempsey's major championship fights, measurements of heavyweight champions, the author's rating of the champs, etc.)." J. A. Phillips

Best Sell 32:350 N 1 '72 450w

"There have probably been more words written about Dempsey than about any other boxer. . . . But Fleischer, one of the foremost authorities on the sport and a longtime friend of Dempsey's, expands the lore considerably in this loose-knit collection of tall tales and yarns about the flamboyant champ of the Twenties. Most of the drama, however, is in the rehashing of Dempsey's major battles. . . . The remainder—anecdotes of Dempsey's career as a boxer, referee, actor, Coast Guard officer, and restaurateur—is cliché ridden and overly admiring, and will likely be appreciated only by ardent Dempsey worshipers and insatiable fight freaks." Charles Farley

Library J 97:2635 Ag '72 160w

FLEISCHMAN, SID. Jingo Django: il. by Eric von Schmidt. (An Atlantic monthly press bk) 172p $4.95 Little

LC 75-140481

In 1854 "Jingo Hawkes, of Mrs. Daggatt's Benevolent Orphan House in Boston, is hired out to General Dirty-Face Jim Scurlock as a chimney sweep. A mysterious Mr. Peacock 'buys' Jingo and, financed by Peacock's highly saleable artistic talent, they set out on a treasure hunt [from Boston to Mexico] pursued by Daggatt and Scurlock. . . . Reader's are clued in early to the fact that Mr. Peacock is really Jingo's father and that his mother was a beautiful gypsy girl who died when Jingo (Django is his gypsy name) was little. . . . Grades five to six." (Library J)

"Jingo is in the best independent tradition of Jaimie Macpheeters and Huck Finn, while Mr. Peacock-Hemlock-Jones is a more fully developed version of the Grand Rascal from [the author's] Chancy and the Grand Rascal [BRD 1966]. And while not always Bible-Belt blest, the 'good guys' are always decent and fairly gallant; the villains are all thorough-going rotters; and the story is a vitally told, just-plain-fun tale to read. The broadly farcical caricaturing of the line drawings perfectly complements the burlesque mood of the story." S. B. A.

Horn Bk 47:383 Ag '71 200w

Reviewed by Katherine Heylman
Library J 96:2916 S 15 '71 160w

"Despite the journey down the length of the continent there is no real sense of place, and for all the trappings of the mid-19th century there is almost no sense of time—or of the times, from which a book might draw some meaning. There is, however, a vast amount of color—not local color; colorful color—personal idiosyncrasies without individual character, intrigue without involvement, excitements without risk. Each short chapter moves predictably to a mechanical surprise in the last line or two, and the effect is of a nervously manipulative energy rather than of a care for the complications and discoveries of real story telling. Strangely enough the book gets worse as it goes along." Roger Greenspun

N Y Times Bk R p8 O 17 '71 350w

"[The story] revels in the trenchant quality of the gypsy boy's actions and speech. Narrative is a tremendous aid to immediacy and so is colloquialism. . . . When Jingo speaks of anyone fingle-fangling or of being buffle-brained, when a fellow chimney squirrel advises him to make a straight shirt tail out of there, one knows instantly and exactly where one is. And make a straight and exciting shirt tail out of all the fingle-fangling Jingo and Mr Peacock-Hemlock-Jones do, traveling . . . in near-Münchhausen style by coach, flat-bottomed boat and caravan. But there is much more than mere Münchhausen in this story, for as they travel an ever-growing warmth of feeling goes along with them. Convincingly understated, but all the stronger for that, it resolves itself into one of the most satisfactory father and son reunions of all time."

TLS p1509 D 3 '71 360w

FLEISCHMAN, SID. McBroom's ghost; II. by Robert Frankenberg. (A W. W. Norton bk) unp $3.95 Grosset

ISBN 0-448-21423-7; 0-448-26193-6 (lib bdg)
LC 72-153928

A tall "tale about a one-acre farm with prodigious growing potential (e.g., a lost baby tooth grows so big in the remarkable soil that a block and tackle are needed to extract it), which appears to be haunted by a 'drybones.' The ghost first appears as an echo of the rooster, Silibub, who had frozen stiff earlier that severely cold winter, and then enters Josh McBroom's own voice and calls all of his eleven children in one breath. . . . Grades two to four." (Library J)

Book World p15 (children's issue)
N 7 '71 60w

"A rollicking piece of drollery for telling or reading aloud. The cartoon-like illustrations add to the fun." M. M. B.
Horn Bk 47:605 D '71 120w

"The broad exaggerated humor of the story is matched by the pen-and-ink caricatures, with bright red, blue, green and yellow washes, alternating with drawings in black and white with touches of blue." E. T. McDonald

Library J 96:3458 O 15 '71 170w

"It was so cold that winter the flame froze when you lit a match, and you had to wait for it to thaw out. So McBroom says, and all his fans know McBroom tells the truth. At least, he keeps saying so. Plagued by a ghost that imitates sounds, McBroom finally realizes that there is nothing supernatural going on. The imitations of his voice, a Sousa march, and howling wolves were simply frozen sounds that had thawed. It's the usual McBroom tall-tale nonsense, blandly delivered." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 54:49 S 18 '71 90w

FLEMING, THOMAS, ed. Benjamin Franklin: a biography in his own words. See Franklin, B.

FLEMING, THOMAS J. Thomas Jefferson. 182p il $4.95 Grosset

B or 92 Jefferson, Thomas—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-448-21413-X LC 77-153921

This biography of the third president of the United States "begins with Jefferson's marriage to Martha Wayles Skelton in 1772. . . . Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"This book, highly recommended, is loaded with personal detail—an exhilarating way to start studying Jefferson." Mrs. J. G. Gray
Best Sell 31:522 F 15 '72 240w

"[This] laudatory biography . . . is readable, generally accurate and attractively illustrated with photographs and reproductions, but it suffers from editorializing and over writing, especially in the flowery description of Jefferson's affair with Mary Cosway. Jefferson's views on slavery are omitted." M. N. Coughlan

Library J 97:280 Ja 15 '72 150w

FLEMMING, NICHOLAS C. Cities in the sea. 222p il col pl maps $10 Doubleday

913.03 Cities and towns, Ruined, extinct, etc. Underwater exploration. Mediterranean region—Antiquities
LC 75-157590

A British "marine archaeologist who has investigated the ruins of a number of sunken cities here combines literary and historical background information with his own experiences and those of fellow marine archaeologists to provide a . . . survey of the available knowledge about the [many] cities and ships, dating from prehistoric to Roman times, which lie under the water of the Mediterranean. Sites which the author has explored personally, such as Elaphonisos and Apollonia, are described in detail." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] bundles together sunken-city legends (for which he has a practical, if cautious, respect), Atlantean mythomongers (for whom he has no respect at all), actual underwater explorations and discoveries, and beguiling descriptions of Mediterranean scenery. The mixture should delight any reader interested in this new and still romantic form of rum-maging in the tribal attic. Maps, photographs, . . . and a short course in submarine geology and equipment." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 228:135 D '71 60w

"Though the price seems a bit steep for the cheap paper and the poor photos, [the book] is a fairly interesting and informative once-over." J. F. Husband

Library J 97:499 F 1 '72 90w

FLEXNER, ABRAHAM. The Gary schools. See Bourne, R. S.

FLEXNER, ELEANOR. Mary Wollstonecraft; a biography. 307p il $8.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

B or 92 Godwin, Mary (Wollstonecraft)
SBN 638-10447-1 LC 72-76664

Drawing on letters, memoirs and on "previous biographies, the author traces Wollstonecraft's life from genteel poverty as a governess and teacher, to literary success in London, residence in France during the Terror, marriage to political philosopher William Godwin, and finally, death in childbirth at the age of 38. . . . Special attention is given Wollstonecraft's varied literary output." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by J. J. McAleer

Best Sell 32:351 N 1 '72 600w

Christian Century 89:1021 O 11 '72 50w

"[This biography is] something of a disappointment: a solid, scrupulous, rather plodding work of research almost never touched by fire or radiance. Worse, it is afflicted with that occupational disease which threatens the work of the more susceptible biographers—tabloid psychologizing across the centuries. In this instance, it takes a particularly virulent form in which something called 'modern psychiatry' (as if it were monolithic and omniscient) is forever explaining—so simply, chattily and with such arrogant confidence—the inexplicable; and thereby inevitably diminishing and vulgarizing it. Mary Wollstonecraft was far more complex, luminous, tangled than pop analysis can possibly make her." D. L. Parker
Christian Science Monitor p13 S 13 '72 900w

"A carefully documented critical biography of an extraordinary woman, notable in late 18th-Century London intellectual circles for her unconventional life style and radical ideas. Her major work, A Vindication of the Rights of Women, published in 1792, was one of the earliest and most influential statements of feminist thought. . . . [Flexner] succeeds admirably in revealing an emotionally and intellectually complex woman. Distinguished in its scholarship and in its interpretation of the relationship between the circumstances of Wollstonecraft's life and the development of her advanced ideas on education and human equality, this book is highly recommended for public and academic libraries, and for collections serving women's studies programs." Barbara Abrash

Library J 97:2720 S 1 '72 270w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett

N Y Rev of Books 19:8 N 2 '72 2500w

"[The author] devotes considerable space . . . to a minute dissection of Wollstonecraft's thinking. This kind of analysis is valuable, but the pages, I must admit, do not make easy reading. . . . [Flexner adopts a] cool rationality toward Wollstonecraft's turbulence, but I get the feeling she is more than a little embarrassed by the Imlay crisis. She tells us that Mary's letters to Imlay are 'almost too painful to read.' Unbridled emotion is foreign to Flexner's style. . . . I would have preferred a biography that did not seek to avoid the pain. Flexner is more approving of William Godwin, the bachelor philosopher and free-thinker Mary took up with on the rebound." Susan Brownmiller

N Y Times Bk R p4 O 8 '72 1700w

Reviewed by J. A. Seligmann

Newsweek 80:105A O 23 '72 750w

FLINN, WILLIAM L., Jr. ed. Internal colonialism and structural change in Colombia. See Havens, A. E.

FLOOD, CHARLES BRACELEN. Trouble at the top. 272p $6.95 McGraw

SBN 07-021332-1 LC 76-178924

A future "President of the United States . . . is faced with a growing civil war in Mexico, which threatens to turn into another Vietnam of 'protective involvement.' [His] eighteen-year-old daughter is smoking pot and having a . . . love affair with a negro major, who is one of the President's most capable and trusted aides. . . . He himself falls in love with the young wife of his fiercest senatorial opponent, and begins an affair with her." (Best Sell)

"Although this book at first seems rather full of stock or pseudo-characters, situations, and solutions, it finally stands as an intriguing, altogether engaging narrative of believable characters and realistic events. The author obviously has brought to his work a complete and well-researched knowledge of politics, history, and socio-psychological experience with people. Mr. Flood's novel is indeed a timely and very well-written narrative which reads easily and entertains. It is highly recommended for readers like myself who enjoy a good, believable story told well, if only as a relief from heavier, 'more worthy' literature." B. P. J. Przekop

Best Sell 31:563 Mr 15 '72 300w

"Reading the novel is fun, if you don't have anything else to do. . . . I read [it] on a train to Richmond, Va. If you are ever on a train to there, I think this is a good book to have. It is pleasant, undemanding, and the bad guys turn out to be the villains. It is hard to ask for more." L. J. Davis

Book World p12 Ap 23 '72 550w

"[This book is] written in commercial-novel English and designed to pass the time." R. H. Donahugh

Library J 97:84 Ja 1 '72 90w

Reviewed by D. K. Mano
Nat R 24:647 Je 9 '72 80w

FOAKES, R. A., ed. Coleridge on Shakespeare.
See Coleridge, S. T.

FOAKES, R. A. Shakespeare; the dark comedies to the last plays: from satire to celebration. 186p $5.75 Univ. press of Va.

822.3 Shakespeare, William—Criticism, interpretation, etc.
SBN 8139-0327-0 LC 70-146536

In this study, the author "seeks to understand and explain the last plays of Shakespeare as dramatic structures. The argument starts from the dark comedies, and Professor Foakes describes the ways in which Shakespeare was affected by the new techniques and possibilities for drama opened up by the innovations of the years after 1600, notably by the rise in children's companies. The main line of development of Shakespeare's dramatic skills is shown as leading from the dark comedies, through the late tragedies like Coriolanus, to the last plays. A major part of the book is devoted to analyses of Cymbeline, The Winter's Tale, The Tempest, and King Henry VIII." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Foakes is an established editor and critic, and his newest book does not diminish his reputation. But it does not greatly increase it either. . . . There is little that is excitingly new, but it all makes good sense; one is glad to have this intelligent and readable short survey of Shakespeare's later works, and it probably should be included among those critical studies of Shakespeare suitable for undergraduate and graduate students. . . . It has commendable breadth and sanity."

Choice 9:58 Mr '72 120w

"In his approach to the tonality of Shakespeare's later comedies and tragedies, R. A. Foakes has chosen to explore one of the most elusive aspects of the theatrical text: as it appears in cold print. While variations in tone between solemnity and pastiche, and between ironic detachment and sympathetic involvement can be immediately established in performance, they are very difficult to detect in a reading of the texts, particularly the Problem Plays and the Last Plays. Professor Foakes argues that critics concerned only with thematic interpretation have tended to flatten out the shifting register of tone in these plays, or at best are puzzled by what they regard as uncertainties and inconsistencies in characterization and motivation."

TLS p739 Je 30 '72 240w

FOGARTY, MICHAEL P. Sex, career and family; including an international review of women's roles; [by] Michael P. Fogarty, Rhona Rapoport [and] Robert N. Rapoport [pub. in cooperation with] P.E.P. (Political and economic planning). 581p $17.50 Sage publications

331.4 Woman—Employment. Family
ISBN 0-8039-0121-6 LC 70-158823

This volume considers the problem of finding "patterns of employment and family living which will leave top qualified women free to follow a life cycle different from men's yet recognize that they, like men, are now life-time workers. . . . The authors show from first-hand studies of family and working life (and with evidence from many countries, including the socialist societies of Eastern Europe) the nature of the problem, and how various family and employment patterns might contribute to solving it." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Subject index. Name index.

"A study of three groups of British men and women at different life stages, carried out in the 1960's. While the focus is on the attitude toward and the pursuit of careers—dual-career families, career structures and occupational environments, as they relate to this question, are also considered in depth. The value of this book is enhanced by the excellent review it contains of the literature on working women in Eastern and Western European nations, as well as in the U.S. This study . . . has a place in all libraries whose patrons are concerned with the problems and prospects of working women."

Choice 9:541 Je '72 180w

"[This] solid but readable volume [is] likely to rank as a more effective contribution to the cause of first-class citizenship for women than a whole shelf of shriller pleading. Everything is taken into account, from sex-typing to the insufficiency of nursery schools, from pension rules in the Civil Service to the need for 'toughening up to the nice mice' who, in many instances, have succeeded the dragons of yesterday. All this and statistics too."

TLS p669 Je 11 '71 600w

FOGELSON, ROBERT M. Violence as protest; a study of riots and ghettos. 265p $6.95 Doubleday

301.18 Riots. U.S.—Race relations. U.S.—Social conditions
LC 72-121579

This book analyzes the 1960 riots in black communities. The "looting, arson, and assault that were the riots, Fogelson says, were functions of racial discrimination, economic deprivation, consumer exploitation, and involuntary residential segregation. . . . [He contends that] unless the blacks' grievances are alleviated, 'they will protest nonviolently, when appropriate, and violently, if need be.' . . . [He also] attacks the McCone Commission report on the Watts riot." (Library J) Index.

"[This] is an important volume, though much of it will not be new to those familiar with the author's prior work. In presenting the riots as protest, he means that these were attempts to communicate legitimate black grievances. . . . One of the book's strongest points is its careful elaboration of how the violence affected both white liberals and the development of the black movement. . . . [But the author] should make more explicit and defend his conceptualization of protest. . . . [He] is never very clear about whether rioters actually saw themselves as engaging in protest. . . . This still is a fine book. Written well, it will be particularly useful to those not already conversant with the relevant literature. In addition, it would be an excellent undergraduate course supplement." Barry Skura

Am J Soc 77:1270 My '72 230w

"[This is] a highly readable, although in its emphases somewhat selective, review of studies bearing on these urban disorders. . . . I would like to see the book widely read—for the myths it dispels about these riots. . . . [But] I have to question the completeness of Fogelson's causal analysis. His contention that the riots were 'articulate protests against genuine grievances' is based primarily on the restraint and selectivity typically shown by the rioters. . . . In his sympathy for the blacks . . . he apparently believes it demeans these people to see the riots as expressive reactions to frustration rather than deliberate protests, and the participants only as victims rather than active demonstrators. . . . Nonetheless, the author's feelings are shaky foundations for a precise analysis of the urban disorders." Leonard Berkowitz

Ann Am Acad 399:227 Ja '72 600w

"Considering the realities of ghetto life, the restraints operative in white middle class families against the use of violence are not present. Fear for personal safety and police records are not agents of social control. . . . The moderates in CORE, Urban League and the NAACP were both residentially and ideologically apart from the ghetto dwellers. The leaders reflected their own middle-class interests and training. . . . During the riot situations the moderates were proven useless. . . . [The author's] explanations of the grievances in the ghetto and their specific manifestation during conflict situations are most provocative, however speculative at times they may be. [His book] will be a valuable pedagogical tool in race relations and collective behavior courses, particularly as a starting point for further discussion." R. S. Denisoff

Contemp Sociol 1:345 Jl '72 1150w

"This thoughtful sociological study cuts through cliché to reach some realistic conclusions about what happened in Newark, Detroit, and Harlem—and why. . . . Fogelson discusses such topics as characteristics of the rioters, root cause of the riots, and the nature of ghetto-police confrontations. He documents his contention that the riots were 'articulate protests against genuine grievances in the black ghettos' on the part of a significant minority by drawing on his own work at Columbia University, national polls, surveys, studies, and impressionistic accounts from reporters and ghetto residents." S. G. Sawyer

Library J 96:181 Ja 15 '71 250w

FOLSOM, FRANKLIN. America's ancient treasures; guide to archeological sites and museums. 202p il $4.95; pa $2.95 Rand McNally

970 Excavations (Archeology)—North America. North America—Galleries and museums. Indians of North America—Antiquities
LC 70-141564

This volume brings together information on "the prehistoric sites north of Mexico open to the public and on the museum collections featuring prehistoric exhibits. Interlarded among the listings of sights demonstrative of Indian life prior to contact with the white man are photos, drawings, charts, etc. depicting examples of Indian culture. The book is divided according to regions, with each section prefaced by [an] . . . overview of the culture(s) of the area. For each entry standard tourist information such as location, hours, fees, and campsites is given along with more specialized information on the origin and pronunciation of names; outstanding or special features; and scope of exhibit." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[There are] no major omissions. . . . While approximately 90 percent of the entries are included in standard travel guides (Mobil and AAA), this book can be recommended to laymen and amateur archaeologists for its special slant and scope." J. W. Stevenson

Library J 96:2504 Ag '71 130w

"Around these listings, which give exact locations and a description of the place in a few clear sentences, are placed some 40 engaging little essays comprising an introduction to American archaeology. There are many photographs and drawings (the latter by Rachel, the author's daughter). . . . One unusual photograph (among many) shows a limestone outcrop in the tawny landscape of the California mother lode, where the women of the Miwok tarried long at the acorn-grinding; some 1,200 mortar cups are worn into the flat bedrock. . . . [This] is an indispensable reference work for anyone who cares about the American past." Philip and Phylis Morrison

Sci Am 225:108 D '71 200w

FONER, PHILIP S., ed. The voice of black America; major speeches by Negroes in the United States, 1797-1971; ed. and with commentary by Philip S. Foner. 1215p $19.95; pa $5.95 Simon & Schuster 301.45 Negroes. Speeches, addresses, etc.

ISBN 671-20824 LC 74-139621

"The speeches are presented mostly in excerpted form, with explanatory prefaces by Foner placing them . . . in the context of the times. Almost 200 speeches are included, and they are divided chronologically into sections covering the ante-bellum period, the Civil War and Reconstruction, post-Reconstruction to World War I, the period between the wars, and post-World War II America." (Library J) Index.

"Foner's notes are directed by his well known partisan viewpoint. Thus, he notes that a New York slave, Jupiter Hammon, in 1787 prepared an address but fails to note that it was a proslavery address. Similarly, he abstracts speeches by the distinguished Negroes Archibald H. and Francis H. Grimké. But, in writing of them, he shows no awareness of the services of the Grimké sisters in advancing their careers: one of the nobler stories in American race relations. However, Foner's expert and energetic labors make available a wide spectrum of Negro responses to American circumstances over the decades, and serve many academic purposes as well as make interesting and enjoyable reading. For general and professional collections."

Choice 9:1196 N '72 150w

"This compilation, obviously a labor of love, is of fundamental importance in Afro-American historiography. The editor has searched long and diligently to bring together basic statements by American blacks on virtually every major issue in U.S. history affecting their welfare. . . . The speeches of every black leader of note find a place in this collection, and students of Afro-American history will discover that it will be indispensable for years to come." Norman Lederer

Library J 97:2184 Je 15 '72 150w

FORTEIN, JAN. Zen painting & calligraphy; an exhibition of works of art lent by temples, private collectors, and public and private museums in Japan; organized in collaboration with the Agency for cultural affairs of the Japanese government [by] Jan Fontein & Money L. Hickman. 173p $18.50 N.Y. graphic

755 Zen Buddhism

ISBN 0-87846-000-4 LC 76-127853

This is the catalogue of an "exhibition of Zen painting and calligraphy, borrowed from collections in Japan and formed by the Boston Museum of Fine Arts in celebration of its 100th anniversary. The text of the catalogue is in the form of an introduction which surveys . . . the history of meditative Buddhism in East Asia and of the arts of calligraphy and monochrome ink-painting which are . . . associated with it." (Choice) Index.

"Seventy-one catalogue entries present the bibliographical and bibliographical data relevant to each work as well as renderings into English of the texts, colophons, and encomiums which are incorporated into some of them. A black-and-white photograph accompanies each entry and there are a small number of color illustrations as well. A glossary of terms; chronological chart; useful index. As a handbook to Zen and the arts and as a concrete reminder of an unprecedented exhibition in this country, this volume will be invaluable to scholars and the general reader as well."

Choice 8:816 S '71 130w

"[The] introduction (29 pages, double-column) is comprehensive and pleasantly written. However, in the course of much historical material, it dwells strangely on the surface aspects of Zen, and sometimes makes strikingly simple—occasionally contradictory—statements about its philosophy and events in the history of its art."

The long individual catalog entries describing each of the 71 works . . . show a scholarly range of historical, legendary, aesthetic, and bibliographical comments. . . . Because of the importance of the pieces reproduced, and the value of the catalog descriptions, [this volume is] recommended as a specialized work in the area." Andrew Robison

Library J 96:1600 My 1 '71 120w

FORBES, BRYAN. The distant laughter. 287p $6.95 Harper

ISBN 06-011308-1 LC 72-79708

This "is the first-person story of a film director in London to do a major production. His star-actress wife, a Teutonic leading lady and her Nazi husband, and the several production and business talents involved in the film comprise the leading characters." (Library J)

Reviewed by C. P. Collier

Best Sell 32:296 O 1 '72 600w

FORBES, BRYAN—Continued

"Forbes's films have been almost wholly successful, and one can talk about his novel in almost exactly those terms: it is no masterpiece, but it will give widespread pleasure. One has to put up with lapses and longueurs—notably the didactically adjectival opening and the failure of the central characters ever to come properly into focus—but there is plenty of good story-telling and some bitchy splendours." Economist 243:75 My 13 '72 150w

"From his extensive experience as a screen-writer and actor, Forbes has written a first novel about the film industry. . . . [His] insights into the . . . industry are most amusing; I would have preferred more, with less emphasis on the personal foibles and infidelities of the characters. This, however, is a matter of personal taste, and [the book] will be enjoyed by all who relish the look-behind-the-scenes novel of show business." Paul Myers Library J 97:2642 Ag '72 170w

Reviewed by Mary Borg
New Statesman 83:571 Ap 28 '72 180w

"Things get off in typical style when Richard Warren returns to London to make a film, and suspects that his actress wife Susan has been two-timing him. On pure whim, he decides to two-time Susan. Meanwhile Paul Raven, the vile American producer, is trying to jettison the picture ('just because it wasn't entirely his') and New York is about to squeeze out Raven via a proxy free-for-all. Where does this leave . . . the private lives of Dick and Susan and their co-respondents? Shrouded in a thick mist of futility that gives a monotonous sameness to all of the action in Mr. Forbes's novel." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p42 S 17 '72 220w
TLS p565 My 19 '72 600w

FORBIS, WILLIAM H., ed. John Gunther's Inside Australia. See Gunther, J.

FORCE, MARYANNE, jt. auth. The Fuller collection of Pacific artifacts. See Force, R. W.

FORCE, ROLAND W. The Fuller collection of Pacific artifacts [by] Roland W. Force and Maryanne Force. 360p il $35 Praeger

709.9 Art, Oceanian. Art objects. Fuller, A. W. F., collection
LC 75-131354

"Following two introductory sections, the volume is devoted to photographs of individual objects, classified according to the major regions of the Pacific: Polynesia, Melanesia including New Guinea, and Australia. Micronesian specimens in the collection are few, and none is figured. These major regions are sub-divided into their main island groups, each prefaced by a short account of its characteristics, a brief appraisal of its craftsmanship and notes on the objects illustrated. With the single exception of Fuller's portrait, all the illustrations are in black and white." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"The Forces have chosen an excellent sample of the collection for publication. Less than 10 percent of the collection is portrayed, but the excellent black-and-white photographs and descriptions of the artifacts are true to the spirit of Fuller's collecting eye and are representative of the range and depth of the collection itself. Documentation is adequate for most specimens. . . . While [the] geographical range is representative of the collection as a whole, it results in some areas being less well covered than is desirable. Recommended to students of primitive and Oceanic art, the archaeologist interested in the range of Oceanic material culture at European contact, and finally, to the matron's coffee table (this last for the excellence of production)." Choice 9:634 JI/Ag '72 180w

"The A. W. F. Fuller collection of Pacific artifacts, now owned by the Field Museum of Natural History of Chicago, is one of the most outstanding in the world. This book . . . is not a catalog of the collection; it does not cover all of the Pacific; it is not a comprehensive review of Oceanian artifacts. It does provide an excellent sample of some of the more characteristic artifact types from Polynesia, Melanesia, and Australia. The text accompanying the high-quality photographs is descriptive of the particular object more than of the artifact type. This feature makes the book useful to the ethnologist and art historian but of little value to a general reader." G. E. Evans

Library J 97:62 Ja 1 '72 140w

"All [the photographs] are excellent, and many can fittingly be described as superb. The authors stress that what is offered is a sample of their own choosing, and that the choice was made partly with a view to photographic possibilities, certain categories, such as bark-cloth, being omitted as needing colour to make an effective picture. No selection with the compass of a review could give an adequate idea of the variety, interest and artistry of the objects shown. . . . Ethnologists and museum workers will find this book useful in many ways, not least in providing information on their undocumented specimens. It should appeal also to artists in search of motifs, and to all lovers of good craftsmanship and good photography." TLS p582 My 19 '72 410w

FORMAN, DENIS. Mozart's concerto form; the first movements of the piano concertos. 303p $15 Praeger

786.8 Concerto. Mozart, Johann Chrysostom Wolfgang Amadeus
LC 77-165529

"The beginning of the book, devoted to the evolution of Mozart's concertos, provides a discussion of the search by North German composers (including members of the Bach family) for a concerto form that would give more prominence to solo instruments. . . . Against this background, the author then discusses the evolution of Mozart's concertos in terms of the six early works based on Johann Christian Bach's London Galant form, the innovative principles and methods present in the seven 'Melodic' concertos, and the departure from both Galant and Melodic works evident in the last four concertos, which are truly symphonic. . . . The second section of the book . . . discusses Mozart's compositional technique and his conception of the purpose of concerto composition." (Publisher's note) General index. Index to the piano concertos.

"Borrowing few thoughts from other scholars . . . [Forman] proceeds on an original course of action which clears away the dust and cobwebs from Mozart's most personal achievement. . . . This marvelous book contains a thematic index, construction tables, charts, musical examples and references. . . . Every musician, especially pianists, should own this book. Most enthusiastically recommended." Choice 9:655 JI/Ag '72 170w

"In evaluating the work of his predecessors in Mozart concerto analysis—Tovey, Girdlestone, and Hutchings—Forman has noted some grave weaknesses and has come to a valid conclusion: 'The truth is that to base any analytical approach to Mozart's first movements on Sonata Form is a mistake.' For this, the book can be recommended, though with reservation." Dika Newlin

Library J 97:878 Mr 1 '72 120w

"Forman, though a self-styled amateur, is thoroughly professional in his tabulated analyses. . . . He replaces the old sonata form labels with ones of his own: for example, for 'solo exposition' read 'First Concerto,' which may confuse the casual reader who has not studied the list of symbols printed inside both covers of the book. Some of his terms, like 'Cadentials,' 'piano second subject,' 'piano climax,' are particularly happy; and the use of capital letters for orchestral passages and lower case for solo ones helps to underline the 'even spread' of initiative that makes Mozart's mature concertos unique. Those who find such detailed analysis mathematical and off-putting . . . will still be stimulated by the earlier chapters." TLS p36 Ja 14 '72 450w

FORMAN, JAMES. The making of black revolutionaries: a personal account. 568p $12.50 Macmillan (N Y)

B or 92 Negroes—Civil rights
LC 72-158163

Forman "describes encounters with racism as manifested in [American] . . . educational, political, and social institutions. He continues with a description of his work in the South during the early 1960's, when he suffered harassment and imprisonment [as a] . . . civil rights worker. Further, he supplements his account not only with his own previously unpublished diary and notes, but with documents of other participants. In conclusion, he discusses ideological and other conflicts which marked the period of the late 1960's as SNCC, the Black Panthers, and other groups joined in the freedom struggle." (Library J)

"An important documentary autobiography by a man who became one of the most important black leaders in the struggle for civil rights and freedom, this volume is moving, dramatic, at times almost overwhelming. . . . Forman promises that he will continue to fight for the liberation of all nonwhite peoples, a promise which all, in view of the record of courage and determination recorded here, must take seriously." E. K. Welsh

Library J 97:57 Ja 1 '72 140w

Reviewed by Benjamin DeMott
N Y Times Bk ■ p32 S 17 '72 1300w

FORMAN, WERNER, phot. The travels of Captain Cook. See Syme, R.

FORMENTON, FABIO. Oriental rugs and carpets [tr. by Pauline L. Phillips]. 251p il col il $12.95 McGraw

746.7 Rugs, Oriental
SBN 07-021540-5 LC 71-179881

The first third of this book provides an "Introduction to the field, including accounts of historic rugs and the techniques of manufacture. The remainder describes 66 of the better known types of rugs arranged by place of manufacture. . . . An additional 22 types are listed alphabetically." (Library J) Bibliography. Index. Originally published under the title Il libro del tappeto.

"The book is well organized, and the descriptions are accompanied by numerous beautiful color plates. . . . [There are] well-illustrated sections on carpetmaking techniques. . . . The bulk of the book highlights the distinguishing features and evaluates the quality of carpets from five geographic areas: Turkey, the Caucasus, Iran, Turkestan and Afghanistan, and China. . . . The book concludes with practical advice on the buying and maintenance of Oriental carpets, a section too often omitted from similar books but one that is especially valuable to the potential owner. A good reference book is needed by every Oriental carpet enthusiast, and this volume would be an excellent choice." B. K. Nordquist

J Home Econ 64:62 N '72 400w

"This book would be sufficient for someone already familiar with Oriental rugs, but it is too brief for someone who has only casual knowledge. . . . [However] the quality of Formenton's color reproductions is justification for recommending his book." Paul von Khrum

Library J 97:2178 Je 15 '72 150w

FORMISANO, RONALD P. The birth of mass political parties; Michigan, 1827-1861. 356p $12.50 Princeton univ. press

329 Political parties. Michigan—Politics and government
ISBN 0-691-04605-0 LC 73-154995

"The scope of this state political study . . . includes both the Jacksonian Democrat-Whig era and the later Republican period. The thesis is that neither economic issues nor issues related to slavery were fundamental to Michigan politics, but rather the parties reflected polarities over government's proper role in regulating individual behavior. Democrats advocated a laissez-faire approach, while Whigs and Republicans the 'evangelical' parties, favoured governmental enforcement of their values. These values were 'evangelical' and are best exemplified by belief in liquor prohibition, rigid Sabbath keeping, and religious instruction in public schools." (Choice) Index.

"In directing his attention to Michigan, Professor Formisano has provided a valuable case study of party formation. . . . [He] devotes the major portion of his study to a detailed analysis of the sources of party support in the electorate. Demonstrating exhaustive research, examining demographic and voting data, and employing quantitative methods extensively, the author probes deeply into the bases of Whig and Democratic votes in the 1830s and 1840s, explores the political realignments of the 1850s, and carefully analyzes the support of the new Republican party." N. E. Cunningham

Ann Am Acad 401:189 My '72 490w

"Formisano's book joins those which reject the consensus interpretation fashionable in Jacksonian studies during the early 1960's. Although the conflict Formisano sees is not economic, it is a conflict between freedom and order; and since the Democrats have the side of freedom, the interpretation is strongly reminiscent of A. Schlesinger, Jr.'s The Age of Jackson [BRD 1945]. This important state study should be in all scholarly libraries."

Choice 9:275 Ap '72 180w

FORNARA, CHARLES W. Herodotus: an interpretive essay. 98p $5.75 Oxford

938 Herodotus
ISBN 0-19-814293-3 LC [71-577168]

This is a "study of Herodotus' intellectual development . . . [which] offers a description of [his] growth from an ethnographer in the Ionic tradition to . . . [an] artist who employed the techniques of the drama and epic to convey important truths to his contemporaries." (Choice)

"[This study] is worth reading, and Fornara makes a good case. He has read the literature, although he keeps documentation to a minimum. He is at his weakest in his references to the Athenian empire, for he suffers from the contemporary uncritical attitude to imperialism." M. F. McGregor

Am Hist R 77:1096 O '72 400w

"[This is a brief but important [study]. . . . Although details may be open to question, the characterization rings true. Perhaps most important, Fornara brings into sharp focus the originality of Herodotus' decision to organize his material into an account of Persian expansion instead of merely presenting it to the public as his predecessors had done. Almost equally important, he effectively puts to rest such common misconceptions as that Herodotus was a propagandist for Athenian democracy or that he was a simple story teller whose supposed shortcomings can be explained by impugning his intelligence or excused by pointing to his charm and lack of prejudice. . . . Recommended for purchase by all college libraries."

Choice 8:886 S '71 200w

"The first two chapters set forth [Fornara's] own modified analyst position as to Herodotus's form and method. . . . In the first part Fornara's worthy aim is to draw a dividing line between Herodotean analysts and unitarians. But except for Pohlenz's he discusses only analyst accounts, decriing recent unitarian efforts as a 'serious methodological step backwards.' Much of the second and more independent part of his work is suggestive—one might even build a good unitarian argument on it, except for the late date of composition. . . . Like Homeric analysts Fornara in the end rests on arguments fundamentally literary and aesthetic. His discussions both of the structure of Book II and of the Gelon-Pericles aphorism would have profited from a study of more purely literary critics." F. R. Bliss

Class World 65:205 F '72 300w

FORRESTER, JAY W. World dynamics. 142p il maps $9.75 Wright-Allen press

300.2 Economic conditions. Simulation methods
LC 70-157752

"This book was undertaken as one step toward showing how the behavior of the world system results from mutual interplay between its demographic, industrial, and agricultural subsystems. . . . [The author seeks to identify] a suitable methodology . . . to deal with the broad sweep of human affairs and the ways in which major elements of the world ecology interact with each other. . . . The dynamic model of world interactions described in this book . . . must be considered a preliminary effort." (Pref) Index.

"[Forrester] constructs a computer model of a world system, taking as the principal variables population, natural resources, pollution, capital investment, and the fraction of capital devoted to agriculture. Although the model, as Forrester notes is tentative and leaves out important variables, it enables him to test hypotheses about the interaction of its parts. The results are troubling and provocative. . . . This work will be eagerly read in certain professional circles, but its charts, terminology, and technical-report style will deny it a wide audience. The latter is unfortunate, for Forrester's ideas and their implications need to be made part of a continuing public, discussion of the alternatives for mankind." Harold Fruchtbaum

FORRESTER, J. W.—Continued

Library J 97:1029 Mr 15 '72 270w

"It would be a tragedy if persons in policy-making positions were to take seriously the results of the computer studies . . . [described] in this book. . . . Unfortunately, there will be people who will confuse these calculations with the real world, or believe that just, because they have come out of a computer they have application to the real world. Apparently the Club of Rome thinks so. . . . This book has the trappings of professionalism: there are flow diagrams, computer programs and more. Even the graphs are plotted by the computer. Unfortunately, Forrester's model is constructed without benefit of valid data, without reference to economics, and even without demography or sociology. This is not a very good way to make useful predictions about future population trends, or about anything else." S. F. Singer

Nation 214:345 Mr 13 '72 1100w

"[This book by] Professor Forrester, of the Department of Management at MIT, and one of the originators of computer modeling, . . . is an attack on economic growth, based on irrefutable evidence. His computer says it's so. . . . Copies of the book have been sent to thousands of 'decision makers' across the face of the planet. In it, the conclusions are presented as graphs, flow diagrams and equations, then explained again in words. Will being addressed in their own jargon make the less brain-damaged of our rulers think a moment before reaching for this month's investment figures? I doubt it, but the effort is commendable. . . . Dr. Forrester admits that his study has holes, but he seems to think that the fault lies in too small a programme. (The last had 45 equations, his new improved model will have hundreds. Onwards and upwards . . .)." Francis Arnold

New Statesman 82:275 Ag 27 '71 750w

Reviewed by Peter Passell, Marc Roberts and Leonard Ross

N Y Times Bk R p1 Ap 2 '72 800w

"This book has one important message to deliver and delivers it excellently in five lines of page 123: 'From this book the reader should glimpse the nature of multi-loop, non-linear feedback systems, a class to which all our social systems belong. The book has shown how these systems can mislead us because our intuition and judgment have been formed to expect behavior different from that actually possessed by such systems.' Beyond that one perceptive statement, the book is blatant and insensitive advocacy for unsubstantiated model building on a very large scale. . . . [The book itself] is mercifully short. . . . [Forrester] has demonstrated how to approach the understanding of human affairs in an energetic, simplistic, and superficially attractive but, nonetheless dangerously wrong manner." Martin Shubik

Science 174:1014 D 3 '71 1050w

FORSTER, E. M. Albergo Empedocle, and other writings; ed. with introd. and notes by George H. Thomson. 273p $7.95 Liveright

828

ISBN 0-87140-540-7

LC 79-162435

This "collection contains Forster's short stories, satirical sketches and parodies, and reviews written between 1900 and 1915 and heretofore unpublished in book form." (Publisher's note) There is also a chronology of Forster's publications 1900-1915.

"[This book contains] mostly inconsequential short pieces—though one called 'Pessimism in Literature' is an exception." Paul Theroux

Book World p1 O 3 '71 600w

Choice 9:212 Ap '72 140w

"The title story (1903) has all the hallmarks of the later stories. In fact knowledgeable Forster readers will need this collection, even as it is, to complete their knowledge of him." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p7 O 21 '71 290w

Reviewed by Keith Cushman

Library J 96:3759 N 15 '71 170w

"[This] is a mixed bag. . . . Some of the pieces are for addicts only and none—unless it is the talk on Dante to the Working Men's College in London or the piece on Inspiration—can really be said to give us much of Forster that has not hitherto been revealed. The title story is a sketch rather than a fully worked achievement, but it is interesting as a preview of the Maurice [BRD 1971] homosexual theme, with the young hero discovering love in Sicily." Arnold Kettle

New Repub 165:25 O 9 '71 550w

"Perhaps one should be thankful that the undergraduate parodies and sketches [in this collection] do not startle us and are never facetious. Lectures to the Working Men's College will add nothing to . . . [Forster's] reputation though they tell us something of his ease in addressing those he considered his social equals. . . . The best pieces are those about India. But Forster has been lucky in his editor, Mr. George Thomson. He has done the job with tact, taste, and a complete absence of egoism or pomposity. The print is particularly handsome." Noel Annan

N Y Rev of Books 17:12 O 21 '71 2750w

New Yorker 47:136 D 18 '71 160w

Reviewed by A. Alvarez

Sat R 54:39 O 16 '71 1050w

Va Q R 48:111 spring '72 70w

FORSYTH, FREDERICK. The Odessa file. 337p $7.95 Viking

ISBN 670-52042-X LC 72-81252

"ODESSA is an acronym for an organization established to shield former Nazi SS officers now living under new identities. After reading a diary recounting a Jew's experiences in the Riga extermination camp during the war, Peter Miller, a young German reporter, attempts to penetrate ODESSA in search of Eduard Roschmann, the former commandant of the Riga Camp. . . . Roschmann is not only alive and well and living in Germany under a new identity, but he is also a main cog in ODESSA and a vital supplier of parts and technology to the Arab missile program. It is therefore essential to ODESSA that Miller be stopped." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:144 D '72 140w

Reviewed by Fred Rotondaro

Best Sell 32:343 N 1 '72 340w

Economist 245:[book survey p2] N 11 '72 250w

"[The plot becomes] a thrilling cat-and-mouse game involving an ODESSA assassin, Israeli intelligence agents, Miller, and the shadowy figure of Roschmann himself. . . . Forsyth skillfully blends fact and fiction into a suspenseful and detailed story which is often downright chilling in its credibility. A sure candidate for the best-seller list." Mark Neyman

Library J 97:3180 O 1 '72 200w

"Movie rights have been sold prior to publication. . . . Jews, Nazis, victims, secret files, death rays abound in this bonanza of a 'novel.' The major book clubs have chosen it for distribution, and the Reader's Digest has picked it for Winter condensation. Nor is that all. It seems that the Miller-Forsyth saga will be with us for yet a while. In the end the horrendous Captain Roschmann made good his escape, despite Peter's heroic efforts, and is now living 'in South America,' the publishers assure us, incidentally assuring themselves sequel upon sequel, if not a whole TV series titled (probably) Leaves from the Odessa File." Max Geltman

Nat R 24:1311 N 24 '72 850w

"Although The Odessa File is as thorough as its predecessor [The Day of the Jackal, BRD 1971] in the ways of factual and political authenticity, it turns out to be a much more vulnerable book. Not only because you will have to stumble this time over exposed wires of plot and, again, the dialogue's lumber, but also because the book's absorbing facts, made livelier for a while by their moral urgency, will probably sour in your mouth as the moral urgency becomes discolored. . . . One Forsyth shows two areas of strength. . . . One is the substance of his historical narration. The second is in his knowledge and use of mechanics. Whatever equipment he describes, you know he is describing it authoritatively—thus his burglaries, bombs, murders and forgeries are arresting. . . . [But this book] leaves one feeling that Forsyth has borrowed painful, live history in order to spring a few quick thrills." R. P. Truickner

N Y Times Bk R p5 N 5 '72 1200w

Reviewed by Michael Crichton
Sat R 55:68 D 9 '72 900w

Reviewed by Timothy Foote
Time 100:121 D 11 '72 380w

FORSYTH, W. D. Governor Arthur's convict system; Van Diemen's land 1824-36; a study in colonization. 2d ed Int. scholarly bk. services 223p $6.75

994.02 Arthur, Sir George, Bart. Great Britain—Colonies. Penal colonies. Tasmania ISBN 0-424-06110-4 LC [72-135111]

This is a study of a "period in the history of Australian colonization when the attempt was made in Van Diemen's Land to construct a system which would punish and reform transported convicts and at the same time apply their labour to economic development. Governor Arthur . . . was entrusted with the task of bringing efficient organization into the colony, which was separated from New South Wales at the outset of his term. Arthur succeeded to a large degree in turning the island into an efficient prison, and to some degree in making his system of 'assignment' of convict labour to settlers contribute to development, but at the cost not only of much human misery but of retarding the development of free political institutions." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index. For the original edition see BRD 1935.

"Appearing initially as Number 10 in the Royal Empire (Commonwealth) Society's Imperial Studies . . . [this] book has been viewed as a major contribution to understanding Britain's colonization of Australia. . . . [The author has] provided a penetrating narrative of both a man and a system. The reprinted volume contains an appendix listing works dealing with Arthur and the convict system published since 1935."

Choice 9:118 Mr '72 170w

"The reissuing of [this book is] . . . a welcome event. It was the work of a man who was taught by those professors in Australian universities who thought of Australian history and culture as a branch of British Colonial History—and a rather scruffy, twiggy, sapless branch at that. Forsyth had the strength to reach back into a time when men first sensed a parting of the ways between the transplanted Britons and the native-born Australians. . . . [His] book is a monument to English-influenced academic scholarship, tinged, and indeed redeemed, by a man who saw that all that Arthur wanted to fasten on men in Australia would belong in time to the dustbin of history."

TLS p153 F 11 '72 400w

FORSYTH, WILLIAM H. The entombment of Christ: French sculptures of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries [by] William H. Forsyth, pub. for the Metropolitan mus. of art. 216p il $17.50 Harvard univ. press

730 Sculpture, French. Jesus Christ—Art ISBN 0-674-25775-8 LC 70-99523

In this "compendium of sculptural groups representing the subject of the entombment of Christ as it appeared in 15th- and 16th-century France . . . attention is given to regional variations of the entombment form in France and its stylistic development." (Choice)

"Although the text tends to drone in list-like fashion, the volume is indispensable for its photographs, for its catalogue of known entombment monuments (both existing and destroyed), and for its appendix of documentary sources. This book is not purely an iconographic study. . . . Forsyth briefly mentions analogous iconographic types in the Germanic countries and Italy. He also indicates fascinating possibilities for connecting virtually unknown 16th-century examples with the work of the leading sculptors of the period such as Pilon and Goujon. It is here that his contribution may be the most significant for future scholarship."

Choice 7:1652 F '71 150w

"[This is] a valuable survey of the existing representations of this subject, grouping them according to districts, to provide at least tentative definitions of the characteristics of sculpture in the different areas. . . . The author's geographical survey reveals that the sculptured Entombments of the period under consideration are concentrated to an extraordinary degree in the eastern provinces, Lorraine, Champagne, Picardy and Flanders, and Mr. Forsyth draws the conclusion that the fashion was to a considerable extent due to influence from Germany. . . . One point which emerges immediately . . . is the difficulty of defining a precise line of demarcation between late Gothic and Renaissance in French sculpture."

TLS p668 Je 11 '71 850w

FORTUNE, NIGEL, jt. ed. Beethoven reader. See Arnold, D.

FOSKETT, DAPHNE. A dictionary of British miniature painters. 2v pl col pl $135 Praeger 759.2 Miniature painting—Dictionaries. Painters, British. Painting, British LC 72-112634

"Volume 1 is the dictionary itself, listing nearly 4500 miniaturists who were born or worked in Great Britain and Ireland from 1520 to 1910; it also contains color reproductions of 100 miniatures. Volume 2 contains 399 pages of monochrome plates with 967 miniatures arranged alphabetically by artists." (Library J) Bibliography.

"There can be no doubt that the bulk of the new dictionary rests directly on the scholarship embodied in Long's book. In fairness to Foskett it must be admitted that in dictionaries there is inevitably a great deal of duplication of information from earlier publications. In a brief biographical sketch of an artist there is, after all, only a certain number of basic facts to be rehearsed. If the job has already been done in a reasonably satisfactory way, then another entry covering the same ground must say essentially the same things. It is very much to Foskett's credit that she proceeds with a good editorial eye, generally producing a more readable account, correcting errors in detail, and adding new bits of information. . . . The new dictionary is well produced as a book, although with one very curious feature: the list of black-and-white reproductions is given complete in both volumes, although all the plates appear in Volume Two. As the list occupies a full 97 pages and it serves no useful purpose in Volume One, the duplication seems an inexcusable extravagance in a book that is really outrageously expensive." Robert Wark

Art Bul 54:555 D '72 1800w

Choice 9:634 J1/Ag '72 120w

"Some of the miniatures have been reduced, but most of the illustrations approximate the true size. . . . The reproductions, both in color and black-and-white, are superior. Foskett's earlier British Portrait Miniatures: a History was undoubtedly the spur toward compiling this dictionary, which has twice as many entries as Basil Long's British Miniaturists, 1520-1860, the accepted authority since its publication in 1929. . . . Foskett's additions, besides the names of those working in the extended period after 1860, include names not recorded in Long's work, information from recent research, and corrections, many from Long's own annotated copy. The great number of illustrations accounts for the high price of this set; however, it will be a long time before it is superseded." Paul von Khrum

Library J 97:2171 Je 15 '72 150w

"[The author] has been able to add a great deal from her own research and that of other recent writers. . . . Naturally, Mrs Foskett has not discovered any major new artists; this was hardly to be expected. Some, but by no means all, of her additions are exceedingly shadowy. . . . [Her] book is likely to remain a standard work of reference for many years to come."

TLS p338 Mr 24 '72 600w

FOSS, MICHAEL. The age of patronage; the arts of England, 1660-1750. 234p il $8.50 Cornell univ. press

942.06 The arts. Art and society. Great Britain—Social life and customs ISBN 0-8014-0684-6 LC 74-172507

The author describes "the dispensers of patronage—first the Royal Court, next the great lords of the Revolutionary period, and finally businessmen, lawyers, and country gentry. He shows how the state of the arts fluctuated as it was affected by the waning influence of the King and Court, the rise of political parties, and a new sense of middle-class decorum and responsibility. He examines the shift these developments caused in literature, architecture, painting, and music, and discusses the patron-client relationship and its effect on the artists' work. Addison, Congreve, Dryden, Handel, Johnson, Inigo Jones, Sir Peter Lely, Pope, Swift, Horace Walpole, and Sir Christopher Wren are some of the creative figures he deals with." (Publisher's note) Index.

FOSS, MICHAEL—Continued

Choice 9:796 S '72 190w

"[Foss] does not write sensitively about the most characteristic works of art produced by Augustan England . . . [but] he has a good ear for anecdotes and has brought together much of the wage-price information that a book on patronage requires. His main point—that responsible patronage declined through the period in spite of the efforts of some enlightened noblemen—is familiar. Perfunctory descriptions make the attractive plates disappointing." F. M. Keener

Library J 97:2184 Je 15 '72 120w

"Foss has done a thoughtful book. It contains learning and anecdote happily intermingled. . . . The only complaint I have about [the] book is that it is not long enough. A more cogent period, as far as we are concerned, lies after 1750 when first aristocracy and mercantile wealth, and then in the 19th century the profits of commerce and the market, became the sources of the artist's living. But 1750 is an apt date, particularly for literature." V. S. Pritchett

New Statesman 83:178 F 11 '72 2050w

"The subject is vast, and the author presents an enormous amount of relevant detail, which he lightens with gossip. In the long run, however, the reader may wish that he were not forced to hop, skip, and jump over the 'huge heaps of littleness around,' to quote a phrase of Pope's that Mr Foss uses in discussing Blenheim Palace."

New Yorker 47:116 F 19 '72 90w

TLS p282 Mr 10 '72 1050w

FOSTER, CATHARINE OSGOOD. The organic gardener; drawings by Karl W. Stuecklen. 234p $7.95 Knopf

635 Organiculture
ISBN 0-394-47210-1 LC 71-171142

This book includes information about planning an organic garden, mulching, soil chemistry, composting, companion planting, insect traps, seed catalogs, herbs, wild plants and other related topics. Bibliography. Index.

"Organic gardeners use no poisons to kill pests or weeds and no premixed chemical fertilizers, depending instead on natural cycles of control and natural fertilizer from decomposition of organic materials. . . . Foster has produced one of the best of the current crop [of books on the subject]. . . . There is a detailed and lengthy section devoted to individual types of vegetables, and an excellent subject bibliography. The author also cites various works and theories of gardening within the text of the work, making this almost a bibliographic essay. My only criticism might be that Foster is, at times, unnecessarily complex in her advice, especially to beginning gardeners." Andy Armitage

Library J 97:2414 J1 '72 200w

"Even though I am a professional plant physiologist and supposedly antiorganic, I want to start this review by saying that [this] is really a pretty good book and should be read by anyone who is thinking of using the so-called organic method. . . . The text has many useful recommendations, there is a wealth of information. . . . plus a few intriguing recipes. The plant physiological explanations are a bit simplistic and occasionally in conflict with present knowledge. Some of the home brew formulas for organic sprays are probably worth the time to test. Most important, one gets the impression of a warm and intelligent person talking to you—a delightful style of writing that is seldom presented in expository courses. The illustrations, however, aren't worth the paper or ink." R. M. Klein

Natur Hist 81:104 O '72 900w

FOSTER, GEORGE MURPHY. See Foster, P.

FOSTER, JOSEPH. D. H. Lawrence in Taos. 344p il $8.95 Univ. of N.Mex. press

B or 92 Lawrence, David Herbert
ISBN 0-8263-0216-5 LC 76-175504

Foster lived in Taos when the Lawrences arrived there in the 1920's. He still lives there. This book contains his memories of the English born author and his friends. There are "portraits of Frieda Lawrence, Mabel and Tony Luhan, Dorothy Brett, Witter Bynner, and Spud Johnson, as well as . . . others who were a part of Lawrence's circle in Taos." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"Delightful and interesting book which details some information about D. H. Lawrence's life in Taos, New Mexico, in the 1920's. Foster seems to be the last of Lawrence's personal friends to write about his recollections, giving us penetrating insights and caustic comments on the Lawrence circle. . . . There seems no reason to doubt the factual information Foster provides about Lawrence's daily activities in the New Mexico farm. Recommended for most college libraries and also for public libraries. The book reads more like a novel than a critical study (though it is not meant to be the latter). Contains a useful bibliography and many documentary notes that may be useful also to the scholar and critic."

Choice 9:813 S '72 160w

"Foster and Lawrence were with each other at any length only four or five times. The book leans quite heavily on other people's Lawrence memoirs, which doesn't seem quite cricket somehow; and many of the remembered conversations turn out to be paraphrased from Lawrence's fiction, essays, and letters. . . . This portrait of Lawrence has very little new to offer, and the whole enterprise seems somewhat questionable." Keith Cushman

Library J 97:1326 Ap 1 '72 160w

"[Mr Foster's book is] at least as much about his marriage to his obviously adored first wife (who remains a very dim figure) and their lyrical responses to the landscape they inhabited as it is about the Lawrences or even the Taos art colony in those years. If Mr Foster could both perceive and write, his story of that marriage might have made a much more interesting document than what he has given us, which is largely a rehash of the reminiscences of others and stale gossip. . . . Foster has written a book so vague that it is useless even as gossip." Mark Schorer

N Y Times Bk R p36 Ja 16 '72 2250w

"[Foster's] memories of the Lawrences . . . [add little to] previous chronicles. Newcomers may find it useful to have one conflated, meticulously referenced narrative. Unfortunately the style of [the book] is naive and gushing."

TLS p280 Mr 10 '72 60w

FOSTER, PHILIP, ed. Ghana and the Ivory Coast: perspectives on modernization; ed. by Philip Foster and Aristide R. Zolberg. 303p $11.50 Univ. of Chicago press

966 Ghana. Ivory Coast
ISBN 0-266-25752-5 LC 70-159784

These "eleven essays compare politics, economics, law, and education in contemporary Ghana and the Ivory Coast." (Choice)

"Like the curate's egg . . . this book is ecumenical only in parts. There is a neat pairing of contributions on the Ivory Coast and Ghana, respectively—by Zolberg and Jon Kraus on political development at a national level, by Richard Stryker and Martin Kilson on grass roots politics, and by Alain Levasseur and Dorothy Velenga on changes in family law. But such comparisons as these contributors make are largely implicit and the reader is left to draw his own conclusions." Robin Luckham

Ann Am Acad 402:172 J1 '72 420w

"The essays are somewhat uneven in quality, but the best chapters do add insight about the processes of development in both of these states and simultaneously show the advantage of analyzing and comparing the two states. Useful both to students of the Ivory Coast and Ghana and to anyone interested in the utility of comparison for learning more about the processes of change in the less developed countries."

Choice 9:541 Je '72 100w

FOSTER, POPS. Pops Foster; the autobiography of a New Orleans jazzman, as told to Tom Stoddard; introd. by Bertram Turetzky; interchapters by Ross Russell; discography by Brian Rust. 208p il $8.95 Univ. of Calif. press

B or 92 Jazz music
ISBN 0-520-01826-5 LC 75-132414

In this account of the life and career of Pops Foster, the bass player, Pops tells "of the horror of life along the Mississippi, of the . . . fight that blacks had to wage to stay alive, both in and out of the jazzworld. He . . . relates anecdotes, . . . names names, . . . offers criticism, and . . . praises many . . . jazz players." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Chronology of musical groups, 1899-1969. Discography. Pops Foster discography 1924-1940, by Brian Rust. Index.

"Pops Foster told the story of his up-and-down career to Tom Stoddard. . . . A pertinent introduction was written by Bertram Turetzky and Ross Russell set the inner chapters into shapely entertainment. Tom Stoddard concludes the work with a revealing and critical epilogue. . . . This life story is not a sentimental romance about jazz and nostalgia, that exaggerated longing for 'the good old days' of the early twentieth century." L. D. Mitchell

Best Sell 31:442 Ja 1 '72 750w

"This autobiography is a valuable addition to the history of jazz which has been so very poorly documented. Foster, who lived to be 77, appears to have had an excellent memory for names, dates, and events. Like all jazz autobiographies, there is hardly anything other than memory to draw upon. This story covers jazz from the turn of the century on and is filled with its share of contradictions. . . . Foster has made a literary as well as a musical contribution with this book."

Choice 9:222 Ap '72 180w

"Pops's own story had not been told before Stoddard sat him down with a tape recorder and then skillfully edited the reminiscences into a narrative that is both entertaining reading and valuable jazz source material."

Library J 96:3138 O 1 '71 180w

"Over half of Pops Foster's autobiography is devoted to New Orleans. . . . Apart from settling a few old scores—Armstrong, Sidney Bechet and Jelly Roll Morton come in for some knocks—Foster . . . hands out fascinating information." Charles Fox

New Statesman 83:118 Ja 28 '72 200w

FOSTER, STEPHEN. Their solitary way; the Puritan social ethic in the first century of settlement in New England. 214p $7.50 Yale univ. press

917.4 Puritans. Social ethics. New England
ISBN 0-300-01408-2 LC 76-151573

This study is "an attempt to discover and evaluate the standards of behavior to which early New Englanders subscribed." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[This work] offers fresh revelations and its conclusions contain little in the way of fresh insight. Still, the book is an example of careful investigation. The annotation is done according to the highest standards of accuracy, the bibliography is more than adequate, and there are several appendices that will be of use to the scholars for whom this book is intended."

Choice 9:711 JI/Ag '72 150w

"[This book] is not bound together by a single ruling conception. It has no thesis to propound and defend. It offers instead an informed and sensitive reading of Puritan literature on social values. . . . It is the Puritan conscience [Foster] interprets in the two chapters on the fundamentals—order and love—and the three chapters on what he calls details—government, wealth, and poverty. . . . Much of the interest of the [author's] commentary comes from the correction of common misconceptions. . . . Anyone studying the life of Puritans in America is well-advised to consult Their Solitary Way." R. L. Bushman

New Eng Q 45:457 S '72 950w

FOTHERGILL, JOHN. Chain of friendship; selected letters of Dr. John Fothergill of London, 1735-1780; with introd. and notes by Betsy C. Corner & Christopher C. Booth. 538p il $20 Belknap press of Harvard univ. press

B or 92
ISBN 0-674-10660-1 LC 75-127877

This work contains some "two hundred letters . . . written by the Quaker physician and philanthropist. . . . [The majority] were written to members of the Fothergill family. Some were addressed to professional colleagues and scientists—among these Linnaeus. . . . Recipients connected with Pennsylvania included the Bartrams, Benjamin Franklin, James and William Logan, Humphrey Marshall, John Morgan, Israel and James Pemberton, Richard Peters, Benjamin Rush, William Shippen, and Benjamin Waterhouse. Fothergill also wrote to Lionel Chalmers of South Carolina and Cadwallader Colden of New York. . . . Many topics besides politics fill the pages." (Am Hist R) Bibliography.

"Many [letters] appear for the first time, others from surviving copies or published texts, corrected where necessary. A brief biographical introduction, a map of contemporary London, illustrations, useful notes at the end of each letter, an appended genealogy . . . and an index including subjects and persons mentioned make this volume a welcome addition to the available documents of eighteenth-century life and thought. . . . This is a delightful and valuable book, recommended for students and for browsers." Caroline Robbins

Am Hist R 77:137 F '72 400w

"[This collection of letters] constitutes an informal autobiography that is well worth reading. . . . [It shows Fothergill] was deeply involved with what his fellow Friends were doing in England and in Pennsylvania before and during the American Revolution. . . . What the editors supply concerning medicine or botany is . . . excellent, and in this volume these are the matters that are of the first importance. As might be expected from a benevolent Quaker, the letters for the most part seem to be 'breathing love,' the author 'unloosing his heart in the simplest manner.' This does not mean that Fothergill is mealy-mouthed. . . . [He] found life well worth living. He was a happy man, and he could be a pleasant companion. This is a book that will not be a best seller, but it will bring pleasure to discriminating readers, an audience fit though few." F. W. Hilles

Yale R 61:109 O '71 750w

FOUCAULT, MICHEL. The archaeology of knowledge: tr. from the French by A. M. Sheridan Smith. 245p $10 Pantheon bks.

001.2 Knowledge, Theory of. Learning and scholarship
ISBN 0-394-47118-0 LC 72-1135

This work deals with "the nature of change and the object of historical inquiry. [Foucault] wants to articulate the history of the unconscious, to decenter history away from human subjects and their projects, to expose the discontinuity of change, the polydimensionality of historical regions." (Library J) Index.

"Next to [J.P.] Sartre's Search for a Method [BRD 1963] and in direct opposition to it, Foucault's work is the most noteworthy effort at a theory of history of the last 50 years. . . . While Sartre shows the human intention behind the most alienated institution, Foucault reveals anonymity in the most intimate, personal expression of the individual. At bottom, the import of his 'archaeology' is to radically deny the transcendental nature of reason. This is truly a work of great magnitude." Mark Poster

Library J 97:2736 S 1 '72 130w

"Unfortunately, as the subject-matter of Foucault's writing has become more diffuse its style has become more intricate, not to say contorted. Never a man to use one word where five will do . . . Foucault has, confronted with the genuinely difficult task he has set himself in [this book] produced an extravagantly and self-indulgently rhetorical text, full of asides on his own development, other people's reactions to his work and so on, many of which I found downright embarrassing. . . . His most baroque formulations are brought over inflexibly into English, and matters are even worse by two tendencies of the translation: on the one hand to resort to awkward or archaic or recondite equivalents instead of plain circumlocutions, and on the other to make outright mistakes about the sense of what is said. The result is often bewildering." Peter Caws

FOUCAULT, MICHEL—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p6 O 22 '72 1550w

"[This book] is a 'theoretical purification of procedures used empirically in Foucault's previous books', and is thus a necessary guide to Foucault's often difficult ideas. . . . The translation is very presentable. Mr. Sheridan Smith has done the job as well as it could be done. . . . His fault is to settle for limp and commonplace words where Foucault's French is more intricate."

TLS p663 Je ■ '72 130w

"This is a purely methodological work, not to be tackled without prior acquaintance of Les Mots et les choses (The Order of Things), [by M. Foucault, BRD 1971] but it deals directly with the objections of those who seek to preserve history as a refuge from structuralism."

Jonathan Culler

Yale R 62:290 D '72 1300w

FOUCAULT, MICHEL. The discourse on language. See Foucault, M. The archaeology of knowledge

FOUQUET, JEAN. The hours of Etienne Chevalier; pref. by Charles Sterling; introd. and legends by Claude Schaefer [tr. by Marianne Sinclair]. 128p col pl $20 Braziller

096 Hours, Books of. Illumination of books and manuscripts
SBN 0-8076-0618-9 LC 78-160131

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 8:1442 Ja '72 160w

Reviewed by Jacqueline Sisson
Library J 97:672 F 15 '72 120w
TLS p452 Ap 21 '72 950w

FOWLER, ARLEN L. The black infantry in the West, 1869-1891; foreword by William H. Leckie. 167p il $9.50 Negro univs. press; Greenwood press

356 U.S.—Armed Forces—Negroes. U.S. Army—History
ISBN 0-8371-3313-0 LC 78-105985

The author "tells the story of the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Infantry which, with two cavalry regiments, comprised the extent of the Negro soldiery provided in the army legislation passed by Congress after the Civil War. Both regiments were stationed in Texas during the 1870s. But in the next decade, the Twenty-fifth was moved to the Dakotas and Montana, while the Twenty-fourth saw service in the Southwest." (J Am Hist) Bibliography.

"[As a] contribution to a historical field—the Negro in the West—in which until recently little has been done . . . [this volume] will prove highly useful." K. W. Porter

Am Hist R 77:837 Je '72 250w

"There have been around two dozen books written concerning blacks in the U.S. military. Two of the best have been written within the past five years: [W.] Leckie's Buffalo soldiers [BRD 1967] and [D.] Cornish's The sable arm [BRD 1956], both classics in their field. . . . It is unfortunate that this book lacks the scholarly objectivity of Buffalo soldiers, a requirement so necessary when touching on matters of race. It also lacks the well written and often moving qualities of Sable arm. Though heavily fortified with footnotes and a good bibliography it is too brief for the task undertaken. A more complete and objective book needs to be written to honor the accomplishments of these two pioneer black regiments."

Choice 8:1082 O '71 140w

"The title of . . . [this] book accurately describes its scope. . . . The author uses mainly official sources, and, in keeping with the limits set by his title, he does not stray into the more general area of public attitudes toward the black soldier; nor does he make use of the Negro press. Thus this study—especially in comparison with Jack Foner's recent The United States Soldier Between Two Wars [BRD 1971]—is in large part a regimental, or at least, a narrowly conceived, institutional history." A. A. Ekirch

J Am Hist 58:762 D '71 450w

FOWLER, DON D., ed. "Photographed all the best scenery." See Hillers, J.

FOWLER, ELAINE W., jt. ed. West and by north. See Wright, L. B.

FOWLER, ROGER. The languages of literature: some linguistic contributions to criticism; with an essay written in collaboration with Peter Mercer, and two papers by F. W. Bateson. 256p $11.25 Barnes & Noble

801 Criticism. Language and languages
ISBN 0-389-04157-2 LC 73-31281

"These essays deal with the relationship of modern linguistics to literary criticism. [Gathering together previously published articles] Fowler broaches the central theoretical issues (the role of the language material in the act of literary perception, the possibility of a linguistic criticism, the relationship between lower and higher level patterns and regularities) and proposes . . . answers to them." (Library J) Bibliography. Index of names.

"The collection suffers from a common problem in writing journal articles: there is not enough space to expound on theory and give examples in the same article. Fowler touches on theories of Chomsky as well as I. A. Richards, but none of his comments proves that phonetics, stress, transformational techniques are essential to evaluate artistic techniques. As he says in the introduction, the critic should know 'about language in a profound, general, but perhaps unspecific way.' Except for discussions of Sermo lupi and stress in lines of Pope, the collection does not put linguistics to the test. Expansive bibliography. For students of modern criticism."

Choice 9:602 Je '72 100w

"[Fowler] proposes intelligent, provocative and profitable answers to [his questions]. . . . This important book should be read by anyone interested in the problems involved." W. L. Ballard

Library J 97:875 Mr 1 '72 130w

FOX, EDWARD WHITING. History in geographic perspective; the other France. 190p il maps $6.95 Norton

330.944 France—Economic conditions
ISBN 0-393-05433-0 LC 79-140754

"The author is concerned with explaining the existence of 'a second France.' The explanation of this duality is to be sought in geographic factors, but with emphasis upon spatial rather than environmental considerations. Thus, the author notes that: 'if the two societies had developed in France along two different systems of communication, presumably their structures would coincide with patterns, travel and transport, following lines of geographical resistance.' The thesis revolves around two basic points: (1) units of economic organization can be no longer than the radius of practical transport; (2) the economic radius circumscribes the radius of social contact." (Choice)

"I am not fully convinced that [Fox's] explanation of modern French politics takes care of all objections; it is well documented and sounds plausible, but every effect has many causes, and there usually is no single key to any complicated safe. Here and there, one senses a certain effort in correlating every quirk to the same leitmotif. Still the leitmotif rings clearly, and it was important to attract attention to it. What is more, the geographical dimension has been properly introduced in a pattern of behavior that is French because human, and human because French." R. S. Lopez

Am Hist R 77:1086 O '72 600w

"My overall evaluation is that Fox has set himself a fascinating task. But he has failed both halves of it, by not showing that the peasantry of France was mostly commercially isolated, and by not showing that people from different geographically determined economies behaved differently in politics." A. L. Stinchcombe

Am Pol Sci R 66:640 Je '72 1500w

"A book with a message, but a message that may elude many readers. . . . In the author's mind [his thesis] explains the existence of the two separate societies in one unified nation-state: agrarian and commercial. Fox's approach is to present the conceptual models of France's historical development in the first three chapters of the book and to relate them to France in the following four chapters. The conclusion suggests that this approach might also be a worthwhile exercise for other nation-states. This book cannot be compared with any other work, is of but marginal use to the serious historian or geographer, and may be too obscure for the general reader."

Choice 9:422 My '72 210w

"There is obviously much truth in [Fox's] thesis, though a good deal to the same effect has been said before. . . . [However,] he supposes that within the space of 183 pages he can use [his thesis] to explain the fall of the Roman Empire and the rise of feudalism, the growth of absolute monarchy . . . the reasons for the Restoration and indeed for all the other major events in French history up to the present. The consequences of such an attempt are predictable. Even when Professor Fox does not become confused in his argument he gets caught out by the facts. . . . Professor Fox, one suspects, is less happy in the twentieth century than he would have been in the eighteenth, which would have looked on his ambitious projects with a more favorable eye. . . . His work, however, is testimony to the enduring nature of the problems that . . . now as then, are incapable of definitive answers."

C. B. A. Behrens

N Y Rev of Books 18:30 Ja 27 '72 1500w

Reviewed by Leslie Derfler

Social Studies 63:292 N '72 340w

FOX, PAULA. The Western coast. 333p $7.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-195750-9 LC 72-78452

"There was much poverty in pre-World War II California, but people trekked there nonetheless. Young Annie Gianfala went too, but hers was a quest for self. She drifted through a bad marriage, one-night stands and affairs, and horrible jobs, remaining always the passive observer of events, the victim in relationships. But during the war she began to make a decent living, and also to get her head together. At last inured to the neglect of her alcoholic/artist father, no longer easily dominated by or a pushover for lovers and employers. Annie returned to New York after the war. There, the death of the uncle who'd raised her severed her last link with childhood, and she set her sights on England and 'a new start.'" (Library J)

Reviewed by Carolyn Riley

Best Sell 32:296 O 1 '72 650w

"This long, ambitious, skillfully structured novel features effective flashbacks and much fine, evocative description. The why and how of Annie's maturation are entirely believable. But the story sometimes palls, partially due to artificial-sounding dialogue, but primarily because Annie and her minutely detailed odyssey just aren't always that interesting. Other characters may sense 'the ineluctable forces of her strangeness,' her 'mystery,' her 'pure intelligence' and 'observational force,' but readers won't. And many of the supporting characters are stereotypes: pretentious Freudians, dogmatic Communists (certainly less realistic than notably similar character types in Doris Lessing's books), coarse workers, and weird movie people." Diane Gersoni-Stavn

Library J 97:2642 Ag '72 280w

New Repub 167:30 N 11 '72 170w

Reviewed by T. R. Edwards

N Y Rev of Books 19:21 O 5 '72 600w

"[This] is a fine, strong book whose idiomatic rendering of the blind passage of life through loss and confusion onto the cliff edge of experience and awareness is profoundly American. . . . The brilliance of Paula Fox is that she creates protagonists whose significance lies in the womanhood of their beings. . . . [This] is a haunting novel. Spare, stripped, alive with the calm of dread: even as our lives are."

Vivian Gornick

N Y Times Bk R p5 O 8 '72 1400w

New Yorker 48:158 O 28 '72 150w

"There is almost no plot. . . . no story line strong enough to sustain suspense or even to indicate an inexorable direction; the novel instead consists of a series of events, some quite dramatic, which involve a large but continually changing group of characters. . . . The story so scrupulously re-creates a particular place in a particular time, and kinds of people who have often been written about badly before, that the novel serves as a kind of social history, convincing us that this is the way it must have been." P. S. P.

Newsweek 80:120 S 25 '72 700w

FOX, RICHARD G. Kin, clan, raja, and rule: state-hinterland relations in preindustrial India. (Calif. Univ. Center for South and Southeast Asia studies. Publication) 187p $8
Univ. of Calif. press

301.44 India—Social conditions

ISBN 0-520-01807-9 LC 76-129614

An "essay on the dynamics of lineage growth and the relationships over time between local-level, kin-defined landholding groups and superordinate political entities in 'North India'—actually eastern Uttar Pradesh. Fox poses . . . questions on the developmental cycles of Rajput lineage groups, the relationship of North Indian kinship to the definition of caste groupings, and the extension of anthropological research to more inclusive sociocultural levels in complex societies." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Fox's second monograph probes yet more boldly and more speculatively the kinds of social interrelationships he pioneered for small-town India in his earlier From Zamindar to Ballot Box [BRD 1970]. . . . A major new theory of Indian social structure results—a theory which will prove fruitful for some time to come. . . . Fox proposes a model 'developmental cycle of the Rajput lineage.' Each of the cycle's five stages is produced by changes in the balance of four variables: the availability of land; the population, cohesiveness, and military success of the lineage; the strength of the lineage; and the power of the state. . . . Tests of Fox's model will doubtless follow. [It will be used by] historians, . . . geographers [and] political scientists." Howard Spodek

Ann Am Acad 400:158 Mr '72 470w

"This book offers a theoretical model derived from the interpretation of documentary materials rather than from empirical field research, with correspondingly less depth. Directed to a specialist audience of political anthropologists and South Asian scholars, but of interest to advanced undergraduates."

Choice 9:140 Mr '72 180w

FOX, ROBERT. The caloric theory of gases: from Lavoisier to Regnault. 378p il pl $16 Oxford

530 Heat. Gases

ISBN 0-19-858131-9 LC [76-598184]

The author gives an "account of the evolution of the calorist theories and pays . . . attention to the zenith of their strength and popularity in the works of such giants of Continental physics and chemistry as Laplace, Carnot, and Avogadro." (Science)

"This book would have been immeasurably improved by a fuller treatment of what Fox terms 'Laplacian physics,' the decline of which plays so important a part at the dénouement. But Fox has written an engaging book, demonstrating in it that he is neither daunted by the 'big issues' nor fearful of touching upon problems which can be dealt with in an only partially satisfactory way. One of these larger issues, however, is raised only obliquely. Fox maintains that the caloric theory went out with a whimper and not with a bang. . . . [This] is a readable and often compelling book, one in which historians of science will find considerable matter to debate and scientists may discover much that is stimulating and surprising." R. H. Kargon

Science 174:1016 D 11 '71 500w

"The caloric theory was very much a French creation, and one which seems to have obliged Robert Fox to live up to the Duhemian conception of the Gallic intellect, one of narrowness combined with depth. As an essay—a university thesis, in fact—written for a select band of cognoscenti versed in the historical background to the appropriate realm of physical science, his is an admirable piece of work. . . . Caloric, for all its ad hoc complexity, seems to have been incapable in the last resort of explaining those phenomena to which it was addressed. Some of the most challenging aspects of Dr Fox's book are in fact where asides are made on the reasons for the downfall of caloric. The account of Laplacian physics is one of the best parts of the book, and the argument that its decline is partly to blame for the demise of caloric is convincing."

TLS p133 F 4 '72 460w

FOX, ROBIN, Jr. auth. The Imperial animal. See Tiger, L.

FOX, WILLIAM PRICE. Ruby Red. 368p
$6.95 Lippincott
LC 75-146686

This "is the story of a girl's search for success as a country and western singer in Columbia and, later in Nashville. She gets financial help from her lover, Spider Hornsby, who is twice her age; and from Jimmy Lee Rideout she gets a theme song for the act she and a girl friend have put together at the Honkytonk Angels. . . . Trying to save her soul is Preacher Roebuck Alexander." (Best Sell)

"At the heart of 'Ruby Red' is the American scramble for fame and fortune. Fox's talent for depicting the values of Ruby and what she stands for is remarkable. . . . This is the first significant novel to explore the world of the country and western singer which we have come to know through Elvis Presley in the 50's and more recently through Johnny Cash. The inner workings of this world are handled deftly by a man who knows it at first hand and writes about it with vigor. The novel provides us a special glimpse into a world we all know, or have heard about, but have not yet quite found a way to smile at." W. A. C. Francis

Best Sell 31:171 J1 1 '71 390w
Choice 8:1451 Ja '72 130w

"Fox includes liberal doses of sex, moon-shining, and gospel singing. . . . He is obviously at home and comfortable with his characters and this small-town Southern world. His description of the behind-the-scenes music world of Nashville is reminiscent of some of the most scurrilous recent exposés of Hollywood. This is a strong book and it will be a very likely candidate for an X-rated movie." Jerrold Orne

Library 96:1387 Ap 15 '71 130w

"[Fox] charts a sleazy itinerary for Ruby Red Jamison, who heads from her job with the Southern Bell Telephone Company for a career as a yokel troubador. Trading her favors for a new repertoire composed by a gifted songsmith, Ruby might be said to go from bed to verse. . . . [Her] adventures tend to be diffuse. Her story is held together, somewhat, by [the author's] sympathy for his large cast of disreputable characters, and by his warm humor." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p42 N 1 '71 160w

FRAKES, GEORGE EDWARD. Laboratory for liberty; the South Carolina legislative committee system, 1719-1776. 200p $12.50 Univ. press of Ky.

973.2 U.S.—History—Colonial period. South Carolina—Politics and government
ISBN 0-8131-1219-2 LC 74-94066

The "author purports to show that in eighteenth-century South Carolina growing opposition to British rule and the concurrent desire for independence arose from the colony's 'legislative committee system,' its 'laboratory for liberty.' These committees 'provided workshops for ideas that were to bring about legislative supremacy and, finally, independence.'" (J Am Hist) Bibliography.

"[The author's] thesis is probably correct, certainly not new, but definitely not substantiated in this study. The exhaustive institutional study of the committee system which is indicated here is not accomplished largely because supporting detail is lacking. . . . One quarter of the book is comprised of appendixes listing members of the Commons House and their committee assignments. These tables are mostly of limited worth. . . . By describing the evolving role which committees played in the lower and popularly elected branch of the legislature. . . . however, the author has accomplished a considerable task. . . . Nonetheless, more evidence must be accumulated and evaluated before the legislative committees may be pinpointed as the source of a growing spirit of liberty in colonial South Carolina." C. D. Clowse

J Am Hist 58:716 D '71 370w

"[Frakes] has thoroughly dissected one colony's lower house into its legislative committees. . . . [His] thesis is straight-forward and convincing. The work is well-documented (including two detailed appendixes outlining committee memberships). It reads better than most institutional history, but is unfortunately overpriced."

Va Q R 47:c1xxvi autumn '71 180w

FRAME, JANET. Daughter buffalo; a novel. 212p $5.95 Braziller

ISBN 0-8076-0657-X LC 72-80014

"Two narrators come together: Talbot Edelman, young student of death studies who has so mutilated and performed surgery on his pet dog that she dies a 'human' death; and Turnlung, a dying old homosexual who comes to New York to live in the midst of funeral parlors. When Talbot takes Turnlung as a lover, it is, Frame tells us, like trying on his father's suit and becoming momentarily, an old man. They enter each other's living death until finally each narrator seems in turn to have been a manifestation of the other's madness." (Library J)

Reviewed by Barbara Harte
Best Sell 32:297 O 1 '72 650w

"[This] is a strange, visionary work, as much a poem as a novel, with images of insanity, mutation, and death, and perceptions of how language changes reality, presented in a ritualistic sort of way that is almost austere. . . . [The book] is fascinating in the way it puts narrative within narrative within narrative; and Frame's horror, expressed in a sustained rich flow of prose, filters through many layers of consciousness before it reaches the reader. The book doesn't coalesce (a big failure is that the buffalo, a zoo animal whom Turnlung makes the symbolic issue of the men's relationship, isn't the unifying thread that Frame probably intends); but such strong and beautiful fiction is too rarely encountered to be dismissed because of major flaws." J. A. Avant

Library J 97:2642 Ag '72 200w

"Miss Frame is obsessed with the moment of recoil—the time of turning, for Edelman, from embryology to abortion, for Turnlung, from breathing to not breathing, for the buffalo, that moment when she chose death. Each turn amounts to an abandonment of living. . . . Miss Frame sees turning as a tender act, a reaching out, as Edelman does for Turnlung, across the recognition of one's own paucity. Her novel is a poem to the union of the living dead. . . . Pathetic and ugly, sad and destructive, it has the grim power of life drawn up as a suicide pact. . . . [Miss Frame] writes with a lyrical brilliance, with a genius for the narrowest, the darkest corners of human need. In this novel, her vision is no wider than a coffin, no deeper than a grave. But she writes with a beauty that confers a morbid grandeur, that makes poetry of the particular, the private, the enclosed." Josephine Hendin

N Y Times Bk R p5 Ag 27 '72 850w

"The book has the quality of very difficult poetry; it often explores areas visible only to the mind's eye. The opening words (which, like much of the book, are in verse) may serve as a sample: 'I am Turnlung/Soon I shall give up the first and second-hand furniture of memory/I shall live in a hollow house listening to the glint of the sun.' Miss Frame can write beautifully, but she sometimes seems to defy sense for the sake of a phrase. . . . One resists a book that can be so clear in presenting its theme and yet so obscure in developing it."

New Yorker 48:125 S 30 '72 180w

FRANCIS, DICK. Bonecrack. 201p $5.95 Harper
SBN 06-011319-7 LC 79-181670

"A sort of madman puts pressure on the stable to see that his son races the favorite in a major handicap." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 229:112 Je '72 30w
Best Sell 32:152 Je 15 '72 100w

Reviewed by Richard Freedman
Book World p6 Ap 30 '72 550w

Reviewed by H. C. Veit
Library J 97:2439 J1 '72 100w

"[This book] contains a good deal about the operations of a training stable and the way young jockeys are brought along. . . . It is not up to Francis at his best, and the ending is much too pat, not to say sentimental, but the man writes so agreeably and knowledgeably that 'Bonecrack' is a pleasant way to pass a few hours." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p30 My 21 '72 90w

New Yorker 48:30 J1 22 '72 80w

"Before becoming a writer in 1962, Francis was for some years the best steeplechaser in England, eventually becoming jockey to the Queen Mother. . . . He has used his experiences to produce ten more or less equestrian suspense stories that are also novels of métier and manners. His best books [include] . . . Nerve [BRD 1964], For Kicks [BRD 1965], Odds Against [BRD 1966] and Forfeit [BRD 1969]. At that level he belongs in the company of writers like John Buchan. . . . Francis' plots customarily run briskly over ■ fast, dry track, and his latest is no exception." Timothy Foote

Time 99:96 My 22 '72 600w

"The book has, like most of Dick Francis's, a sweet moral tone, as much in its only moderate sexual content as in its attitude to father-son relationships and especially the one the book ends with."
TLS p1633 D 31 '71 140w

FRANCIS, ROBERT. The trouble with Francis; an autobiography. 246p il maps $7.50 Univ. of Mass. press

B or 92
LC 75-150313

The author of the Satirical Rogue in Poetry (BRD 1968) begins his autobiography in the middle of his life. He recounts how, in 1940, he decided to live alone in the country in his house "Fort Juniper" near Amherst, Massachusetts. Writing his own book jacket blurb, he says "Here is the story of a poet who has gone his own way, and whose way has led to poetry of sanity, clarity, and unabashed art. . . . His life demonstrates that aloneness need not be loneliness, nor poverty impoverishment. . . . One chapter tells the extent to which the poet manages to live on his poetry. . . . Here are notable friendships: Robert Frost, the legendary Mrs. Hopkins, the Homeric Lord Wilbur." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Donald Jenkins
Harper 245:128 O '72 1050w

"Who is Robert Francis? He is ■ New England poet, just turned 70, who has lived most of his life in an elected and comparatively contented obscurity. . . . The life and the work, as the autobiography reveals, make a curious fit, the obscurity of the one contributing to the neglect of the other, and the excellence of the poetry, it now appears, deriving in part from the originality, economy, and harmony of the life. . . . [My mission is] to recommend The Trouble With Francis unreservedly, and to point out that its natural companion volume is his new and selected poems, Come Out Into the Sun. . . . I submit that the reader who undertakes either or both of them will have no trouble with Francis." David Young
New Repub 165:28 Ag 7 '71 1400w

"[The book] is attractive enough in itself—worthy, in its modest way, to be set beside the autobiographies of Yeats and Edwin Muir. But I hope that its immediate effect will be to spur people to read or re-read Francis's poems, which have never received the attention they deserve. . . . The Trouble With Francis can be enjoyed by anyone with an interest in human character and a liking for quietly eloquent prose. It will have a special relevance, however, for young poets wondering how to order their lives so as to write the strongest poems they are capable of writing." R. B. Shaw Poetry 121:102 N '72 1700w

"[Francis is] a unique American literary figure who deserves to be better known. . . . [This book] is a celebration of a way of life that has helped one man to know himself. The title for this autobiography comes from a review of Francis's The Orb Weaver [BRD 1960]. Writing in the Chicago Review, Norman Friedman (ungrammatically) summed up his reactions by asserting that 'The trouble with Francis is not that he's too happy as that his happiness seems to lack weight.' The poet, who characterizes himself as 'a happy pessimist,' is the first to admit that he has his troubles. And—at least as described in his autobiography—his joys do not ring hollow. . . . He is a rare man who has put his philosophy to a prolonged test at Fort Juniper, where he has successfully reconciled his ethics and aesthetics." A. C. Lunn
Sat R 54:65 D 4 '71 850w

FRANCIS, SIMON, ed. Libraries in the USSR. See Libraries in the USSR

FRANCISCONO, MARCEL. Walter Gropius and the creation of the Bauhaus in Weimar: the ideals and artistic theories of its founding years. 336p il $11.95 Univ. of Ill. press

707 Gropius, Walter. Bauhaus. Art—Philosophy
SBN 252-00128-1 LC 73-126519

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Ise Gropius
Arch Forum 136:16 Ja '72 3500w
Choice 8:1324 D '71 180w

Reviewed by A. C. Birnholz
J Aesthetics 30:552 summer '72 500w

FRANCK, THOMAS M. Word politics; verbal strategy among the superpowers [by] Thomas M. Franck [and] Edward Weisband [prepared under the auspices of the Center for int. studies, New York university]. 176p $5.95 Oxford

327 U.S.—Foreign relations. Russia—Foreign relations. International relations
ISBN 0-19-501460-X LC 70-1611886

The authors maintain that "the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. have employed the same rhetoric and justifications in excusing their respective interventions in states caught within their opposing spheres of influence. . . . To the authors, this fact is strategically disadvantageous to the U.S., since it detracts from America's presumed desire for a more variegated world order and its claimed moral superiority over the Soviet Union." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by R. B. Finnegan
Am Pol Sci R 66:1080 S '72 1000w

"A fascinating book. . . . The major thesis is that U.S. verbal strategy in the cases of Guatemala (1954), Cuba (1962), and the Dominican Republic (1965) was confirmed by the Soviet Union in Czechoslovakia (1968) 'as an applied doctrine of world order.' The Johnson doctrine begat the Brezhnev doctrine. 'By our verbal behavior, we enunciated principles of a world in which superpowers are licensed to operate ghettos of subservient states.' However suggestive, this book is not a definitive treatment. The authors' conclusions could well serve as hypotheses for further investigation." Choice 9:280 Ap '72 110w

"In brief and pleasant prose, two members of New York University's Center for International Studies put in global perspective what semanticists have been saying for some time: that there is a substantive relationship between words and actions. Apparently surprised by their own findings, the authors . . . urge Washington's national security managers to pay greater heed to verbal strategy and to the value that it possesses in shaping a negotiating environment friendlier to American interests. It is a fair request; and its presentation might interest concerned citizens as well as scholars." Charles DeBenedetti
Library J 97:880 Mr 1 '72 120w

FRANCOEUR, ROBERT T. Eve's new rib; twenty faces of sex, marriage, and family. 253p $6.50 Harcourt

301.42 Marriage. Sex. Family
ISBN 0-15-125384-8 LC 78-182328

The author examines the impact of "contraceptive and reproductive technologies on . . . patterns of marriage and family life. The manipulation of human sexuality and reproduction with frozen sperm, embryo transplants, surrogate mothers, and transsexual operations is related to . . . customs of the past. . . . Dr. Francoeur examines the pros and cons of . . . different patterns of marriage and parenthood, drawing on modern theology, psychology, and sociology. He then offers a . . . new approach to education in human sexuality." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Evidently the main purpose of Francoeur's inquiry is to reassure today's responsible people that through the years there have been precedents for some experiments with 'alternative life styles' to the beleaguered institution of marriage, and that some of these should be re-explored in the midst of today's biogenetic and cultural revolutions." Christian Century 89:552 My 10 '72 60w

"[I found] nothing much [in this book] beyond what one can read nowadays in Family Circle or Modern Romance on artificial insemination, embryo transplants, cloning, and the like. . . . Francoeur reviews favorably such alternatives [to monogamous marriage] as marriages à trois, contractual marriages for a fixed time limit, homosexual marriages, . . . etc. It is all laid out in some detail for those who care to read it: some of it new, some not. . . . [What] concerns this reviewer is Dr. Francoeur's ethic. He has none. He has absolutely no judgment save a favorable one for any sexual or communal arrangement that is physically possible or socially tolerated, nor any discriminating principle whereby to make such a judgment." J. T. Burtchaeil

FRANCOEUR, R. T.—Continued

Critic 31:81 N/D '72 1200w

FRANDA, MARCUS F. Radical politics in West Bengal. (Mass. inst. of technology. Center for int. stud. Stud. in communism, revisionism, and revolution, 16) 287p $12.50 MIT press

329.954 Communism—West Bengal. West Bengal—Politics and government
ISBN 0-262-06040-X LC 76-138839

The author presents an "analysis of Bengali Communism, analyzing the sources of party leadership, factional conflicts, the impact of the Sino-Soviet split, electoral and insurrectionary policies and actions, work among peasants and industrial workers, and Bengal's role in the national Communist movement. In a postscript he discusses the nature and effects of events in 1970-1971 in East Bengal (now Bangladesh)." (Library J) Index.

"This is a valuable book both to the historian for the rigorous way the author depicts the stages of communist growth in Bengal from 1920 to 1970 as an acculturation process, and to the political scientist for the way the wealth of data is tabulated elaborately from quantitative analysis. The author should be especially commended for his analysis of communism in a Bengali environment which constitutes his final chapter and conclusions." David Kopf

Ann Am Acad 402:145 J1 '72 500w

"A 'must' not only for the professional specialist on South Asian politics, but for all those who wish to understand the radical forces at work in the entire eastern region of the Indian subcontinent. Excellent and useful index."

Choice 9:716 J1/Ag '72 170w

"[Franda] raises three questions: what are the sources of communism in Bengal, what are its objectives, and what is its impact on regional and national politics? To a very large extent he answers them adequately. He writes with authority and lucidity and his work is based on extensive field experience. However, most of the sources quoted are from the English-language press, and one wishes the author had used Bengali materials to a greater extent. Still, the work will be of great value to students of Indian politics." B. G. Gokhale

Library J 97:669 F 15 '72 160w

FRANK, GEROLD. An American death; the true story of the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and the greatest man-hunt of our time. 467p il $10 Doubleday

364.1 Ray, James Earl. King, Martin Luther
LC 70-171288

The author "writes with the assumption that [James Earl] Ray is guilty, and attempts to provide as complete a documentation of the crime as the confused circumstances allow. His research . . . includes interviews and talks with people connected with both the accused and King (including families, friends, and enemies) and government agencies such as police and legal institutions. The author has worked through documents, police records, periodicals and newspapers, letters, diaries, and private writings." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by G. W. Johnson

Book World p4 Ap 16 '72 800w

"King's assassination has prompted a number of reports, among them Harold Weisberg's Frame-Up [BRD 1972]. William Bradford Huie's He Slew the Dreamer [BRD 1970], and now the volume under review. Of all of these Frank's book is probably the most thorough.

. . . In contrast to Weisberg, Frank is generally careful and reliable, and thus his well-written presentation only rarely leaves an impression of doubt." H. H. Bernt

Library J 97:1321 Ap 1 '72 120w

New Yorker 48:143 Ap 22 '72 160w

"Frank's legwork is commendable, his prose tolerable. But his gumshoe work succeeds in imposing a logical framework on an irrational act. . . . Frank's narrative is convincing indeed, even if we prefer not to be convinced that lonely ciphers can cancel out great figures." Arthur Cooper

Newsweek 79:90 Ap 10 '72 900w

"[The story] is told with the sweep and excitement of a novel. The weakness of [the book] comes later, when Frank takes up the vital question: Was the murder the work of a psychotic loner or the product of a conspiracy? Frank handles this issue much like a detective story writer who gives the reader a number of clues which lead to only one conclusion, then in the final chapter knocks the props out from under all of them. . . . To arrive at such a verdict one must resort to a host of rationalizations. . . . Frank's book, then, while a fascinatingly written tale, is something less than the whole 'true story' about the murder of Dr. King." F. J. Cook

Sat R 55:62 Ap 8 '72 1100w

"Delving into all the details and mysteries that still surround King's murder, Frank presents evidence conflicting reports, false leads, rumors, opinions and untruths in more or less the order in which a dispassionate insider—had one existed—might have come upon them himself. . . . Frank's picture of Ray, though, is remarkable, far more than a collection of macabre bits. It will not satisfy anyone who feels compelled to believe in conspiracy. But it will delight those who think that life is meaningless and random."

Time 99:[78] Ap 10 '72 550w

FRANK, HARRY THOMAS. Bible, archaeology, and faith. 352p il $12.50 Abingdon press

220.9 Bible—History. Bible—Antiquities
ISBN 0-687-03111-7 LC 75-158677

"After a brief examination of the history and provenance of archaeology in reconstructing and bringing to life the course of ancient history and culture, Frank . . . carries the reader through the whole course of biblical history." (Library J)

"[Frank makes] a useful distinction between the religion of the Bible as a historical religion and as a religion with a history . . . [and] affirms that knowledge of biblical archaeology can illuminate the latter aspect. Scholarship alone, however, cannot suffice to create faith. . . . [Many of the photographs] are poorly reproduced. The general reader as well as the advanced student will find here a well-written and accurate guide to the background of the Bible. A notable and welcome feature is the extent of New Testament coverage. Fully one third of the book is devoted to this usually neglected area." R. J. Clifford

America 127:447 N 25 '72 230w

"This [is a] popular history of the Bible beginning with Abraham and ending with Paul. . . . The author has done a remarkable job with the material, but the work is marred with misleading statements, omission of important material, e.g. papyrus documents in reference to the New Testament, fuzzy illustrations and questionable methodological development."

Choice 9:70 Mr '72 110w

"Although one is strongly tempted to write a rave review, nothing could be more inappropriate for a book that is in itself such a model of critical restraint in its examination and exposition of what might well be spectacular. . . . [The author] fleshes out [his] story with the material now available from archaeological research, putting it together piece by piece with discrimination, accuracy, and meticulous care, yet with an informed and judicious imagination. He writes with eloquence and color, and under the magic of his very sure touch the Bible comes to life. A dispassionate and critical evaluation of evidence characterizes the presentation from start to finish. . . . The book's value is enhanced by numerous appropriate photographs and maps and good indexing. This excellent survey is a most useful tool for the study of biblical archaeology." R. V. Ritter

Library J 97:884 Mr 1 '72 230w

FRANKE, DAVID. Safe places [by] David and Holly Franke; drawings and maps by Dexter C. McDonald. 932p $13.95 Arlington house 917.3 U.S.—Description and travel—Guide books
ISBN 0-87000-134-5 LC 79-154419

"The authors spent three and one-half months touring the U.S. and visited 35 states. (Pennsylvania, for example, is omitted because they wished to follow the westward pattern of population mobility.) 'Safe places' are determined by the crime rates, by the incidence of racial disturbances, and by observations and interviews in the towns themselves. More than half of the towns included have populations of 10 thousand or less. Data on housing, taxes, educational facilities, etc. are given along with sources for further information." (Library J)

"This resembles a chamber of commerce guidebook. . . . The major objection is that only 47 cities are covered. . . . Further, one might contend that the feeling that a place is 'safe' is a relative condition of the mind rather than a judgment based upon such evidence as crime reports." B. F. Vavrek
Library J 97:693 F 15 '72 140w

"The problem with a book like this is that, if successful in showing refugees from the turmoil of big cities where to go, the safe places may no longer be free from the very problems one sought to escape in the first place. . . . Exhaustive and amazingly accurate in its descriptions of the several towns I am familiar with, its greatest value will lie in providing the incipient refugee with a logical set of parameters to apply when choosing a new place to settle. . . . Fortunately, the authors came no closer than fifty miles to my haven." D. B. Duval Nat R 24:909 Ag 18 '72 170w

"Thanks to the Frankes the criminal element has a useful guide to 50 new markets with tremendous potential. . . . They tell you the best way to get in and out of town (highway numbers, bus, train and plane connections). They even tell the exact number of stores in town by type (jewelry stores, radio-TV shops, appliance stores, gift shops, etc.) and the special days and weeks when the place will be crowded with rubes from the countryside (like the annual 'June Moonlight Sale'), all of which is very useful stuff for dips, footpads and second-story Charlies. In the long run, this guidebook may do more for safety in the big cities than in the small towns by reversing the flow of urban-rural emigration." Marvin Kitman
N Y Times Bk R p6 Je 4 '72 1950w

"[The authors] take into account climate, . . . shopping [and] recreation. . . . Don't make a move without consulting this chatty guide." D. M. Glixon
Sat R 55:70 My 6 '72 100w

FRANKE, HERBERT W. Computer graphics—computer art [tr. by Gustav Metzger]. 133p il pl col pl $13.50 Phaidon; for sale by Praeger 760 Graphic arts. Computers. Art and science
ISBN 0-7148-1503-9 LC 72-162314

"Franke includes an introduction to the hardware, a history of the role of computers in the arts, and a discussion of the aesthetics of computer art." (Library J) Bibliography. Index. Originally published in Germany in 1971.

"Assembles information . . . which previously has been available only in journals and catalogues, into an excellent introduction to . . . computer art. The focus of the book is on computer graphics, but some discussion of computer sculpture, film, poetry, music, and multi-media is also provided. The 100 diagrams and illustrations give a good picture of how computers are programmed to produce images, and of the range of computer art. . . . [This book] should be of interest to students of aesthetics, art criticism, and futurology as well as to students of modern art." Choice 9:204 Ap '72 100w

"Computer art, with its implications and challenges for traditional aesthetics, has been a recognized development for only about five years, and until now most literature on it has been slanted toward the computer specialist with an incidental or secondary interest in the artistic potential of his technology. This survey, however, is aimed at the artist who wants to try his hand with computers. It is simple and basic, but adequately detailed to provide a foundation for practical application. . . . Completing the work is a biographical dictionary of computer artists. . . . Not the last word, but certainly a highly commendable beginning." E. B. Bailey

Library J 97:1800 My 15 '72 120w

FRANKE, HOLLY, jt. auth. Safe places. See Franke, D.

FRANKEL, CHARLES. The pleasures of philosophy. 341p $8.95 Norton
108 Philosophy
SBN 393-01089-9 LC 76-158085

This "anthology is made up of a selection of texts from classical, medieval and modern philosophers, from Plato and St. Augustine to George Santayana and Bertrand Russell. . . . [Included are] comments and explanations given by the compiler. . . . The book is divided into five parts, presenting problems related to 1) religion, 2) politics, 3) the ideal of reason, 4) metaphysics (which the professor calls 'the irrational') and 5) the significance of philosophy." (America)

"As soon as the novice reader has read the foreword, he realizes the relevance of philosophical problems and anticipates the intellectual delights promised by Professor Frankel. . . . Most of [these] texts are already familiar to the advanced student of philosophy. They will prove of extreme interest to the beginner by the unexpected perspectives they open to his imagination. They are also easy to understand. It was indeed Professor Frankel's aim . . . to do the average reader a real service by making his initiation into philosophy eminently pleasurable. In his comments, Professor Frankel invites the reader to discover the spell of problems in philosophy that have been recurrent throughout the ages. As the novice is being initiated, he soon discovers new motives for a kind of enjoyment that might easily turn into the exclusive passion of his life." Henry Peissson
America 126:213 F 26 '72 440w

"The selections are of sufficient length to provide a 'feel' for the thinker's style and point of view. This book can be used profitably by, and enjoyed by, both the philosophical novice and the seasoned student. It has more warmth than the usual anthology, it is less technical than an ordinary textbook, and yet it is not at all unscholarly in its presentation of great issues, great thinkers, and great selections." Choice 9:658 Jl/Ag '72 160w

Christian Century 89:150 F 2 '72 20w

"If there is still a place for introductory samplers in philosophy, this collection might be given an edge over most of the others. Without excerpting too many bits and pieces from the history of philosophy (18 selections from 16 authors), Frankel manages to be fairly representative. . . . In an effort to show how pleasantly engaging philosophical reflection can be, the author includes a lightly toned introduction, organizes his samples thematically, and then summarizes to make sure the interesting questions come into prominence. More important though, he chooses passages which are not too distorted out of context or overly technical and which have a literary flair." J. H. Whittaker
Library J 97:1328 Ap 1 '72 130w

"[Frankel has edited] an outstanding book: a fascinating, though relatively brief, anthology . . . explicitly directed to current concerns and attitudes. His comments on the authors represented are exemplary—brilliant, incisive, and illuminating." Martin Lebowitz
Nation 214:762 Je 12 '72 1150w

FRANKEL, CHARLES. A stubborn case; a novel. 251p $6.95 Norton

ISBN 0-393-08472-8 LC 72-3426

This first novel concerns John Burgess "an English professor who returns after three years to his New England campus from teaching and then being held captive by guerrillas in Uruguay. He finds conditions on the campus more difficult to understand than the South American revolution. While he has liberal sympathies, he is appalled by many student demands, the students' tactics in achieving them, and the reactions of his colleagues. The only student with whom he is able to communicate . . . is killed in a confrontation during a sit-in." (Library J)

FRANKEL, CHARLES—Continued

"We follow [Burgess] as he is simultaneously hounded by the administrators, who want to pacify the students, by fellow professors who want to teach, and by the students, who . . . have twisted the issue to greater scope than necessary. . . . Frankel has created a very plausible situation here and a very likeable character. Burgess is witty, often sarcastic, and most resourceful. . . . The other characters embody just about every sort to be found on campuses today. . . . The book is lucidly written, with few excess incidentals to bog it down—everything seems to fit. In many places it is very comic, but it is also very realistic. Frankel has succeeded in writing a critical appraisal of people involved in the workings of the university." Anthony Sialuls

Best Sell 32:344 N 1 '72 400w

Reviewed by Mark Taylor

Commonweal 97:143 N 10 '72 160w

"Frankel, a professor at Columbia University, is well known for his many books on philosophy. . . . Obviously this novel is more an expression of [his] dismay than a story, in spite of the mild romance Burgess has with the college president's secretary. The book is readable, however, and should be available where novels of the academic life are in demand." C. E. Wadsworth

Library J 97:2751 S 1 '72 160w

Reviewed by P. C. Simonds

Nat R 24:1258 N 10 '72 90w

"Here is an investigative novel, to coin a genre, holding up to scrutiny the 1968 Troubles at Columbia. . . . [It] distills brilliantly the quintessential madness that swept Morningside Heights that spring. . . . [Frankel describes events] with satiric precision. Faculty meetings absurd enough to have been plotted by Ionesco. Students playing mini-roles from Madame Lefarge to Trotsky. Trustees ineffectual, alumni befuddled—it all hangs out. . . . [And he] approaches his villains with a nice balance of reason and contempt." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p42 O 1 '72 250w

FRANKEL, FRANCINE R. India's green revolution; economic gains and political costs. 232p $7.50 Princeton univ. press

338.1 Agriculture—Economic aspects. India

—Politics and government

ISBN 0-691-07536-0 LC 74-132237

The author "examines the extent of the success (often called 'green revolution') of the new strategy and its impact on the social, economic, and political structure of the rural communities. The work is based on intensive study of five districts in different parts of India." (Choice) Glossary. Index.

"As a preliminary assessment of the impact of the green revolution on patterns of income distribution in the rural areas, the study is excellent. . . . Not unexpectedly, the weakest chapter . . . is the last—'Conclusion.' The recommendations assume the possibility of a rational trade-off between economic gains and political costs, of striking an appropriate balance between the goals of production and distribution. . . . Even if all the suggested remedial measures were to be implemented, they would amount to little more than symbolic manipulations, transitory and ineffectual." Kusum Nair

Ann Am Acad 401:169 My '72 450w

"Well written, well documented, specialized study of the impact of new strategy, based on intensive application of modern inputs (fertilizers, new seeds, etc., in selected areas) applied by the Indian government to develop agriculture. . . . Whereas the gains in output have been impressive, the new strategy has accentuated disparities in villages. In this way, the study provides an interesting insight into the impact of the modernization process on a rural society. Will be useful for students in general interested in economic development and social change in underdeveloped economies."

Choice 9:102 Mr '72 120w

Reviewed by Neville Maxwell

N Y Rev of Books 18:8 Mr 23 '72 700w

"[The author's] economic facts are interesting and reliable . . . [but] her political conclusion that there must be more land reform or there will be trouble is more doubtful." Maurice Zinkin

Pacific Affairs 45:299 summer '72 600w

FRANKEL, SANDOR. Beyond ■ reasonable doubt. 239p $7.95 Stein & Day

345 Murder. Trials

ISBN 0-8128-1403-7 LC 73-163452

"In December, 1968, the manager and two employees of a Washington, D.C., car wash were found . . . murdered. This is an account of the investigation into those murders and the subsequent trial of two former employees of the car wash." (Library J)

"The scientific aspects of the initial police work, the dogged investigation of item after item, the tracking down of one false lead after another, all of these are presented in a manner that almost involves the reader in the search. . . . The trial itself is so engrossing that the conclusion and final verdict seem to some too fast. The contrast between the conduct and procedures of a real trial and those seen in movies or on television is something that may surprise readers who are not conversant with trial procedures. Many questions arise, concerning the American system of justice, but one must realize that the safeguards against an unwarranted conviction must necessarily be quite strong. . . . Verdict: read the book." Edward Bartley

Best Sell 32:13 Ap 1 '72 380w

Choice 9:388 S '72 80w

"[This book] differs from many true-crime accounts in that the author recounts the facts with almost stark objectivity. There is no comment on or criticism of the investigation or the conduct of the trial, nor of the verdict reached. The result is an interesting story from which the reader can not only draw his own conclusions as to the rightness of the verdict, but also ponder the difficulties involved in establishing guilt or innocence. Recommended for true-crime collections." D. W. Harrison

Library J 96:4026 D 1 '71 110w

"No one who has ever been involved for long in the investigation or trial of criminal cases will fail to recognize that Mr. Frankel knows what he is talking about and knows how to tell what he knows. The book contains not a single false note. . . . The problems of big-city prosecutors are realistically described. . . . There seems no need, in reviewing a rare find such as 'Beyond a Reasonable Doubt,' to relate the details of the prosecution's case, the nature of the defense or even the verdict. It is enough to say that no one who reads it will leave it without a better appreciation of both the failures and the glories of our system of criminal justice." Patrick Wall

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ja 23 '72 370w

"[The author has] a literary skill that makes his narrative amazingly suspenseful. . . . A great yarn and, as Mr. Frankel intended, ■ very useful book, too."

New Yorker 48:126 Mr 11 '72 100w

FRANKEL, VIRGINIA. What your house tells about you; il. by Loretta Trezzo. 156p $5.95 Trident press

747 Interior decoration—Psychological aspects

ISBN 671-27089-3 LC 78-182265

The author "pleads the cause of home decorating as therapy . . . [and states that] 'our houses reflect our inner selves' and give some very real 'clues about our emotional needs, or aspirations, or aversions and fear.'" (Best Sell)

"From her acquaintance with psychoanalysts as patient, as friends, and as clients, . . . [the author] has developed what she calls her 'third ear.' . . . [Her book] reflects the benefits of her psychological orientation on her work as a decorator. . . . Mrs. Frankel gives many examples of how homes reflect peoples' inner selves." Jane Oppenheim

Best Sell 32:212 Ag 1 '72 290w

"[The author treats her] subject lightly and digresses often in an attempt to be clever. Her book ends up being a hodgepodge of decorators' woes, and a too personal glimpse of [her] own varied career. The central themes (character traits are reflected in decor and status symbols are important in decorating) might have made an amusing article in a chic magazine, but they fail completely when extended into a book." M. L. Blackwell

Library J 97:2178 Je 15 '72 80w

FRANKFURT, HARRY G. Demons, dreamers, and madmen; the defense of reason in Descartes's Meditations. 193p $7.95 Bobbs 110 Descartes, René—Meditations
LC 70-75142

This is an "interpretation of Descartes's Meditations (drawing upon other writings of Descartes) that generally defends the argument up to but not including the arguments for the existence of God and for the role of God as guarantor of the validity of reason." (Choice)

"The most interesting part of the book is the author's interpretation of Descartes's use of clarity and distinctness as criteria for belief and truth. Primarily for graduate students." Choice 8:78 Mr '71 90w

"Frankfurt is completely successful in giving an exegesis of the First Meditation and of the epistemological aspects of the Second and Third which is thorough, clear, and philosophically interesting. The book is an important contribution to the discussion of skepticism, independently of whether his interpretation of Descartes is correct." Charles Parsons
J Philos 69:38 Ja 27 '72 4000w

FRANKLIN, BENJAMIN. Benjamin Franklin: a biography in his own words; ed. by Thomas Fleming; with an introd. by Whitfield J. Bell, Jr.; Joan Paterson Kerr; picture editor. 416p $15 Newsweek; for sale by Harper

B or 92 U.S.—History
ISBN 06-011286-7 LC 72-75999

"From the published volumes of The Papers of Benjamin Franklin [BRD 1971] and from the much greater mass of papers remaining to be edited, Thomas Fleming has selected and extracted materials for this biography. These selections, explained and annotated by the editor, present Benjamin Franklin largely in his own words. They show him in the many facets of his busy life, public and private." (Introd) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"Both the choice of Benjamin Franklin as the subject for the first volume [in a new series of biographies devoted to the "Founding Fathers"] and the format adopted for the book are highly appropriate. Fleming, a noted specialist in the Revolutionary period, has expertly selected the extracts. . . . [His] commentary is a model of clarity and compactness. While the price of the book may cause some readers to hesitate before purchasing it, they can be assured that they will receive full value for their money. The volume is handsomely printed and lavishly illustrated. . . . These are over 250 reproductions of contemporary portraits, woodcuts, cartoons, and sketches spread throughout the text." F. X. J. Homer
Best Sell 32:350 N 1 '72 500w

"[This volume offers a diplomatic, legislative, scientific, and social panorama of our nation's birth; a view of contemporary British and French attitudes; and more. Displaying Franklin's trenchant, often humorous style, the excerpts document the originality, energy, and humanity of this remarkable American. . . . The book is copiously illustrated with two fine color folios and hundreds of one-column gravures, unfortunately, frequently of official and personal documents too small to read. But this is quibbling; Franklin, after all, is a national treasure." Alfred Stern
Library J 97:2838 S 15 '72 130w

FRANZ, MARIE-LOUISE VON, jt. auth. Grail legend. See Jung, E.

FRASER, ANTONIA. King Arthur and the knights of the Round Table; il. by Rebecca Fraser. 192p lib bdg $5.51 Knopf 398.2 Arthur, King—Juvenile literature.

Folklore—England—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-394-92156-9 (lib bdg) LC 73-141597

A retelling of the Arthurian stories arranged in seventeen episodes. "Grades five to nine." (Library J)

"[There is] a pageant of characters briefly but effectively developed, and emphasis on action. The life of Arthur, from birth to his death at the hands of Mordred in the greatest of all chivalric battles, unifies the tales, with Morgan Le Fay's plotting running through as a sub-thread. Lancelot's adventures—minus his adultery with Guenevere—are prominent. Fraser has scrubbed out the archaic and technical elements which mar most retellings of medieval stories; the dozens of simply drawn characters always speak in modern diction. Line drawings and color paintings by the author's 13-year-old daughter are childish and sometimes do not correlate with the accompanying text. Still, this lively volume is likely to hold the interest of young readers and listeners." D. K. Fry

Library J 97:2237 Je 15 '72 130w

"[This] looks and reads like many versions current in the first half of this century. The stories are told in the gossipy and colourful style that has made this author a best seller in the field of adult books. Her version of the stories depends, she herself says, on 'Malory and memory'. Is this quite good enough? . . . The use of Caxton black-letter for the chapter headings is painfully Victorian. What is new and refreshing is Rebecca's contribution; the real pleasure of this book lies in her pictures. Being presumably left-handed herself, she rather endearingly places her knights' swords and lances in their left hands. Little does she know what a complication this would have caused in battlefield or tourney."

TLS p1448 D 11 '70 400w

FRASER, ANTONIA. Robin Hood; il. by Rebecca Fraser. 207p lib bdg $5.51 Knopf 398.2 Robin Hood—Juvenile literature.

Folklore—England—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-394-92157-7 (lib bdg) LC 77-141598

A retelling of the Robin Hood legends. "Grades five to nine." (Library J)

"The usual Robin Hood adventures . . . presented with scant attention to scenery and the visual aspects of 12th-Century England. The speeches, full of Renaissance vocabulary like 'zounds!' and 'dastardly,' may seem quaint, but young readers will likely be puzzled by such words as 'podgy,' 'moble,' 'sennight' and 'palliasse.' The characters, polarized into heroes and debased villains, include all the standard personalities. . . . The swift narrative adds adventure to adventure in authentic medieval style. Rebecca Fraser's paintings and line drawings contribute to the atmosphere of the story although they are not well correlated with the text." D. K. Fry

Library J 97:2949 S 15 '72 200w

"Fraser's melodramatic remoulding of the Robin Hood legends, with the swashbuckling eighteenth-century flavour of earlier historical films and romantic novelettes, serves to show how far her approach to her sources has developed since she wrote this, at the age of twenty-two, for sale in a national chain store. Its speed and vigour will appeal . . . but it will merely confuse those who have read or are likely to read more authentic retellings. Moreover, the heavy emphasis on the Normans' unremitting villainy, contrasted, with the chivalrous Saxons, might be held to foster racial discrimination!"

TLS p1509 D 3 '71 170w

FRASER, DOUGLAS, ed. African art & leadership; ed. by Douglas Fraser and Herbert M. Cole. 332p il maps $17.50 Univ. of Wis. press

709.6 Art, African. Leadership
ISBN 0-299-05820-4 LC 72-157391

"Much of Africa's art . . . plays a . . . part in the sphere of political leadership, that is, in the governing of the people. This book deals primarily with such art forms—figures, masks, carved seats, terracottas, etc.—and with various items of regalia ranging from crowns and staffs to ornamental swords, all of which are intimately involved in the exercise of leadership in Africa." (Introd) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[The] comparative approach, justified in a terminal essay by the editors, is productive in itself, and especially so because the contributors (seven art historians, four anthropologists, a historian, and a physician) speak with the authority that comes from extensive field research in Africa. Black-and-white field photographs, . . . [help] complete this eminently readable presentation of the meanings behind Africa's great sculptural traditions." Choice 9:800 S '72 180w

FRASER, DOUGLAS—Continued

"There is surprisingly little fresh material [in this book]. Nor have the editors done much to integrate the disparate articles. Yet they have posed a challenging set of questions and have assembled a rich array of information and interpretations. The tentativeness and diffuseness of the conclusions are, as the editors are aware, testimony to the complexity of the topic and the need for additional research." David Northrup

Library J 97:2176 Je 15 '72 150w

"This book is further evidence that the study of African art has come of age. Instead of the usual survey into tribal style groups, it offers a number of serious specialized studies. . . . The term 'leadership' is taken in its widest possible sense and refers not only to the divine kingships of societies like Ife and Benin, but also to the political role played by masked societies among the Afikpo Ibos or Chokwe. . . . At the end of this book the editors have compiled what they call an 'overview' on art and leadership. This somewhat neutralizes the gains made by the specific studies, because the authors are here compelled to generalize again, which forces them into some misleading statements."

TLS p634 Je 16 '72 590w

FRASER, GEORGE MACDONALD. Flash for freedom! 287p $6.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-47947-5 LC 70-071139

"In this, the third installment of his maculate memoirs, Harry Flashman comes to the United States (circa 1848). As usual it is all a terrible mistake. . . . In this case, fate's banana peel is a game of vingt et un with (among others) Benjamin Disraeli. Flashy is precipitated through a few more dead waters of Victorian history and into a series of [adventures]." (Time) For volumes one and two see BRD 1969 and 1970.

"If one doesn't read the Flashman saga for its comedy (which is a delight), at least one must read it for its history. The settings and details are masterly, from the fetid swamps of Dahomey where Flashman ogles the half-naked females of the royal regiment, to the New Orleans courthouse where he welsches on his usual half-promise. George Fraser not only keeps you amused, but has done a flattering amount of scrupulous homework. . . . If you haven't read [Flashman's] two earlier escapades, please do so. He is the richest strike in comedy for years, and sure to keep producing pure nuggets." Timothy Severin

Book World p3 My 14 '72 950w

Choice 9:644 JI/Ag '72 130w

Economist 241:vii N 6 '71 170w

"Likely to be in demand in those libraries whose readers are enjoying the series. Other libraries could well stock up on all three titles." Norman Horrocks

Library J 97:1825 My 15 '72 100w

Reviewed by Charles Elliott

Time 99:82 My 1 '72 310w

"In relating the life and pretty continuous lechery of Flashman, Tom Hughes's Rugbyian villain in Tom Brown's Schooldays, George MacDonald Fraser has hit on a formula that works to perfection. His whole enterprise reeks of authenticity, and when he throws out hints, as he frequently does, of a Dumasian avalanche of Flashy adventures to come, even a hardened reviewer's mouth cannot fail to water. . . . Mr Fraser captivates his reader with the liveliness of his descriptions—of the town of St Louis at the mid-century, for example. And the wealth of period detail he supplies is as astonishing as it is delightful. Flashman is the best kind of scoundrel to read about: the kind who never deceives himself about himself."

TLS p1221 O 8 '71 320w

FRASER, GEORGE MACDONALD. The steel bonnets. 395p $8.95 Knopf

942 Scotland—Relations (general) with England. England—Relations (general) with Scotland
ISBN 0-394-47049-4 LC 73-136477

This book provides an "account of borderland troubles from Roman times until the act of Union paying attention to such matters as Henry VIII's 'rough wooing' of Scotland; the roles played by Wallace and Bruce; [by] Mary, Queen of Scots, and Bothwell; . . . and much more." (Library J) Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"Alas for Sir Walter Scott's fiction and the romantic tales in prose and poetry lauding the heroes of the Border. Nobles and peasants alike, they were all a pack of knaves, says Fraser. . . . Fraser is one of the wittiest of writers, the most clearheaded of historians, and an impeccable scholar. He has here produced more order out of the chaos of Border history than any warden of the Marches was ever able to do—or any other historian. If there are faults to be found in this delightful and informative book they are perhaps as much the result of the reader's ignorance and the nature of the material as of the author's negligence." Byron Farwell

Book World p1 Ap 23 '72 1600w

"[Fraser is] very seriously interested in the history of the Borders, and he has put his reading and his knowledge of the ground into a serious work. . . . So here we have the Bold Buccleuch, Ill Will Armstrong, Fire the Braes Archie Elliot, Nebless Clem Croser and such-like riding for dear life—or cheap—up hill and down dale. The best chapters are the analytical ones: the recital of sixteenth-century Scottish history lapses into the superficial."

Economist 241:vii N 6 '71 170w

"The abrasiveness of Anglo-Scottish relations has never been more apparent than it was during the four centuries of feuding that took place along the Scottish borders. As the author indicates, much romantic nonsense has been spoken of the foraying back and forth. However, it is his contention—one supported amply—that chivalry in the Kenilworth tradition was a rare commodity during the 'high night' of the border reivers; and as might be expected of the author of that curious novel, Flashman [BRD 1969], he says that in chivalry's place was found an early version of Mafia-like terrorism and racketeering." Peter Gellatly

Library J 97:68 Ja 1 '72 180w

New Yorker 48:75 JI 1 '72 130w

"This is a remarkably successful book on a fascinating subject, well organized and well written. . . . Mr Fraser is no romantic. He shows this brutal culture as it was. He destroys the legend that the borderers were sparing of blood; murder was commonplace in the course of reiving and still more as the result of constant feuds. [This] is an extraordinary story, quite unlike that of the rest of lowland Scotland or of England. However, Mr Fraser, who has a witty hand with modern parallels, occasionally overplays the contrast, strong as it was, with the rest of Scotland."

TLS p396 Ap 7 '72 900w

FRASER, RONALD. In hiding; the life of Manuel Cortes. 238p $6.95 Pantheon bks.

B or 92 Cortes, Manuel. Spain—History—

Civil War, 1936-1939

ISBN 0-394-47941-6 LC 75-33628

This "is the story of . . . the mayor of a village near Malaga before its fall to Franco's forces during the Spanish Civil War. In 1969, following an amnesty declaration by the government, [Cortes] came out of hiding—thirty years' incarceration in his own home, time often passed literally in nooks and crannies of a wall. . . . [This is an account of his and his wife's and daughter's everyday toil to earn their livelihood, to keep up the outward appearance of normal lives, to withstand searches, interrogations, fire and sickness without giving away their mortal secret." (Publisher's note) Chronology.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:92 Ag '72 80w

Reviewed by W. P. Murphy

Best Sell 32:184 JI 15 '72 390w

"[This is an] illuminating account of the courage, persistence, patience and faith of a simple couple who persevered with [a] dangerous plot through much hardship, poverty and fear."

Economist 244:67 JI 8 '72 250w

"This account of a foe of the Franco regime . . . is surely one of the most interesting, and on the human level, most moving. With great sympathy and understanding, Fraser presents Manuel Cortes, his wife, and their daughter in their own words through the use of extensive taped interviews. . . . With remarkable clarity, sharpened by his years of solitary existence and his natural bent as an educator, Cortes describes every detail of prewar life and politics in the setting of agrarian Spain. The book represents a unique combination of half a century's personal and historical narrative."

A. F. Peterson

Library J 97:1803 My 15 '72 200w

Reviewed by Edward Blisshen

New Statesman 84:131 JI 28 '72 400w

Reviewed by Gerald Brenan

N Y Rev of Books 19:21 Ag 10 '72
1750w

"Fraser, the English writer who took down and edited the testimony of the family, makes no overt claim to having created a novel, but it reads like one because its focus is always the human character of the participants. By alternating their testimony he has created a novelistic density, a Rashomon-like illumination as we approach the same events through three autonomous viewpoints. In the mountain of books about that war there cannot be another so brief and yet so complete, so unguarded and yet so subtle, so movingly human as this. . . . One puts down this book not so much in despair as with a certain awe. Maybe it is simply that one has been given a central truth which, like Manuel's spirit, will not die." Arthur Miller

N Y Times Bk R p1 J1 9 '72 1200w
New Yorker 48:79 J1 29 '72 280w

"[This] is a fascinating piece of social history: Manuel's memory, Fraser observes, 'has preserved, in the amber of thirty years' enforced withdrawal from active participation in the world, almost every detail of prewar life and politics.' But, 'In Hiding' is even more absorbing as a personal document, a revelation of character under bizarre stress." Walter Clemons

Newsweek 80:95 J1 10 '72 650w

Reviewed by Stanley Koven
Sat R 55:52 S 2 '72 1100w
TLS p1390 N 17 '72 220w

FREDERICA, Queen of the Hellenes. A measure of understanding. 270p pl $10.95 St Martins

B or 92
LC 74-183288

This is a personal memoir of the life of Queen Frederika, who was "born in Germany, educated in England, [and who] . . . met her husband, King Paul, in Italy. Much of the narrative is devoted to this relationship. . . . When the second world war forced the royal family out of Greece, Queen Frederika went to live in South Africa while her husband devoted his time to the allied war efforts. . . . Following the war, shortly after the king and queen returned to Greece, the communist war erupted. . . . The extent of her people's suffering, says Queen Frederika, caused her to lose faith in herself and in God. She began at this time to pose questions about the meaning of life which her religious training could not answer. To this end, her book is written. (Best Sell) Index.

"[The Queen's] life's account reads more like a chatty letter than the memoir of a queen driven from her country by war and dethroned not long after her return. The narrative races along, covering one episode in the queen's life after another, giving each a minimum of attention. . . . It was quite obviously the queen's intent to write a deeply personal memoir. In this she succeeded, although the result is less interesting than one would hope." Lael Pritchard

Best Sell 32:255 S 1 '72 350w

"[The Queen] provides glimpses of high politics, a sketch of General Smuts of South Africa, and a set of correspondence with American Secretary of State George C. Marshall. But the book reads like the private family memoir it is." A. F. Peterson

Library J 97:2831 S 15 '72 180w

"This is no customary royal memoir. It is a direct personal apologia, disingenuous and not particularly well-written, but at some points surprisingly moving. As a subjective account of monarchy in the modern world it may be quite a valuable social document."

TLS p1145 S 24 '71 900w

FREDERICKS, PIERCE G. The Sepoy and the Cossack. (A Nal bk) 274p il maps $7.50 World pub.

958.1 Afghan Wars
LC 74-115808

This is the story of the nineteenth century military efforts waged by England to protect India, a part of the British empire, against the possible seizure of Afghanistan by the Russians. "When the two enemies finally met face to face at Penjdeh . . . each retreated—leaving Afghanistan more or less to fend for herself, while they joined forces against Bismarck in Germany." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The men who march through these pages were chivalrous, valorous. For the most part, they were also nincompoops who reached high military rank by seniority rather than through competence. The wars they engaged in, like most wars, began by accident rather than by design. . . . This is not a work of formal scholarship—I take it that Mr. Fredericks did not intend it to be. The result of [his] indiscipline, however, is that a number of irritating mannerisms crop up in his writing—for instance, one never knows exactly who is being quoted. Even so, a volume which tells about such rulers as the Thun of Hunza, the Akhund of Swat, and the Mehtar of Chitral, or what life was like along the Khyber Pass and behind the forbidding Pamirs a century ago, may be forgiven much." Arnold Beichman

Christian Science Monitor p9 My 18 '71 650w

"The Cossack of this book's title seldom appears in its pages. What Fredericks has written, in fact, is not so much an account of 'Anglo-Russian confrontation' as a lively, entertaining and well-informed summary of the campaigns fought by the British in 19th-century India. He can be repetitive. . . . His index is inadequate. And, considering that [he] is Sunday picture editor of the New York Times, his illustrations are an extraordinarily unentprising collection. But the vigor of the text provides ample compensation for these disadvantages. Even those familiar with his theme will enjoy the remarkable characters who march through each chapter. . . . Fredericks, sensitive to both the comic and the tragic aspects of his story, has clearly enjoyed relating the adventures of such uncommon personalities. . . . His pleasure is infectious." Christopher Hibbert

N Y Times Bk R p12 D 26 '71 950w

FREDERIKA LOUISE, consort of Paul I, King of the Hellenes. See Frederica, Queen of the Hellenes

FREDRICKSON, OLIVE A. The silence of the North, by Olive A. Fredrickson with Ben East. 209p il $5.95 Crown

B or 92 Northwest, Canadian—Description and travel
LC 73-185089

Now in her seventies the author tells the story of her life: of growing up in the wilderness of northwestern Canada, her marriage to a trapper, and as a young widow with three children, of her struggle for survival in the woods and eventually in her later years of her remarriage.

"It is good to have this sincere, simple account of a pioneer woman. . . . There is a somewhat wry humor in the midst of the unbelievable hardships and deprivations. . . . Though more careful editing could have corrected some of her awkward sentences, the straightforward sincerity of the narrator portrays a woman of resilience and self-reliance. There are some interesting illustrations, but a map might have helped: one would like to locate Athabasca, Martin Mountains, Swan Hills, Lesser Slave Lake, Atnarko River, and others places where many of her adventures took place." Sr. M. Marguerite

Best Sell 32:213 Ag 1 '72 340w

"Narrated in a terse style, this tale of northern survival misses the mark and becomes one more tedious saga of the out of doors. While occasionally moving, it does not compare favorably with Eric Collier's Three Against the Wilderness [BRD 1960] or some of Bradford Angier's books." Andy Armitage

Library J 97:1423 Ap 15 '72 80w

FREEDBERG, S. J. Painting in Italy, 1500 to 1600. 554p il col il pl maps $29.50 Penguin 759.5 Painting, Italian. Painting, Renaissance. Mannerism (Art)
ISBN 0-14-056035-1 LC 75-874742

In this account of the works of art and artists of sixteenth century Italy, the author also is concerned with "the schema of ideas on which [the artists] operated, and [explains] the inter-penetration of their styles." (TLS)

"[This is a] masterly account of an astonishingly rich period, including all the schools,

FREEDBERG, S. J.—Continued

even those in Lombardy, Genoa and Emilia. Obviously the tale is much condensed; even the big names get only a dozen pages or so. But the book provides a clear summary of the extraordinary interaction of genius in Italy in the sixteenth century and is well supported by black-and-white illustrations."

Economist 240:53 Ag 7 '71 70w

"Frederberg conveys a remarkable amount of information including very rich bibliographical references (up to 1968), but the information is unobtrusive because it is subservient to a powerfully controlled scheme. Frederberg very seldom describes explicitly the methods he uses; they are like an elaborate intellectual scaffolding removed after a construction is finished. . . . [He] is careful to take account of variations in different regions, and his general scheme is an effective one to present the unprecedented production of sixteenth-century painting in a comprehensible order."

Henri Zerner

N Y Rev of Books 19:25 Ag 31 '72 2000w

"[This is a] distinguished and highly original book . . . planned with feeling and written with great concentration, and it demands a corresponding degree of response from the reader, not because it is in any sense imperfectly articulate but because virtually every sentence in it results from the act of thought. There is no rhetoric and almost no loose thinking, and it presents a clearer and truer picture of the development of High Renaissance style and of the intentions and accomplishments of the great High Renaissance artists than any previous book. One of its supreme merits is that it is visual, that it is based on, and by and large is successful in communicating, the impression made in the original by the works of art that are discussed. It is as well that this is so, since the volume is abominably illustrated."

TLS D1304 O 22 '71 1450w

FREEDMAN, RUSSELL. The brains of animals and man [by] Russell Freedman & James E. Morriss. 160p il $4.95 Holiday house

591.1 Brain

ISBN 0-8234-0205-3 LC 71-151754

This book covers such areas as "perception, personality, electroencephalograms, sleep and the potential and social implications of regulating the behavior of man. . . . [It] introduces new concepts pertaining to the brain and its regulation." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"I greatly enjoyed [this work]. . . . I am not qualified to pick any holes in the factual statements of this book; they all seem reasonable to me and seem well-backed by experimental evidence. Other statements are frankly announced to be hypothesis or speculation. . . . I may occasionally lend [the book] to selected students, but I want to keep it where I can get my hands on it at a moment's notice. It is a fine piece of work."

H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 48:490 O '72 110w

"An excellent, current exploration of the biological basis of behavior by the authors of the very clear and readable How Animals Learn [BRD 1970] and Animal Instincts [BRD 1971]. . . . The section on memory is especially well done. . . . As in the authors' previous books, an excellent bibliography and easily conducted experiments are included for young investigators. In all, this is a distinguished addition to all libraries and of special interest to schools."

A. C. Haman

Library J 97:3460 O 15 '72 110w [YA]

FREELAND, RICHARD M. The Truman doctrine and the origins of McCarthyism; foreign policy, domestic politics, and internal security, 1946-1948. 419p $10 Knopf

973.918 Truman, Harry S. U.S.—Politics and government—1945-1953

ISBN 0-394-46597-0 LC 71-142958

The author "takes the position that an anti-Communist sentiment was deliberately developed by the Truman Administration in an attempt to mobilize public support for the economic aid program proposed for Western Europe under the Marshall Plan. Freeland stresses particularly the propaganda and police activities used to center American attention on Soviet obstructionism and Communist subversion. . . . [He considers] the conditions of the times and traces . . . the events that occurred from the enunciation of the Truman Doctrine in 1947 to the approval of the Marshall Plan in 1948." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by V. A. Lapomarda

America 126:546 My 20 '72 120w

Reviewed by Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 31:538 Mr 1 '72 500w

Reviewed by S. E. Ambrose

Book World p5 Ja 30 '72 1150w

"Another addition to the revisionist literature on the Truman Presidency. . . . Freeland's well written book is a real contribution and should be read by all concerned with post-World War II America. All libraries will benefit by having it on their shelves."

Choice 9:126 Mr '72 130w

Reviewed by Athan Theoharis

J Am Hist 59:218 Je '72 420w

"Freeland seeks to discover the origins of the excessive anti-Communist emotion that characterized the 1950's. He does not challenge previous studies concerning the activities of Joseph McCarthy, but rather attempts to analyze minutely the conditions and events that brought forth the fears and hostilities associated with his investigations. He . . . presents a strong case for his thesis. His work will increase our understanding of McCarthyism and will be of value to those working in the areas of recent history, political science, and foreign affairs." H. M. Burns

Library J 96:3322 O 15 '71 160w

"Freeland builds much of his case with circumstantial evidence and inferential argument . . . ambiguities are compounded by [his] propensity . . . to claim more in enthusiastic narrative passages than in carefully written summations. At the very least, however, we must accept Freeland's major thesis that the administration often deliberately exaggerated the Communist threat." L. P. Ribuffo

Nation 214:694 My 29 '72 2250w

"The book suggests that anti-Communist sentiment was dormant except when the Truman Administration conjured it up for political purposes. In the same unctuous and misleading terms which fellow-travelers used in those far-off days—nobody here but us Progressives, boss—the author describes the American Communist party as 'building bridges to all segments of American liberal opinion.' Building bridges? To David Dubinsky, the I.L.G.W.U. and the Liberal party? To Reinhold Niebuhr and Americans for Democratic Action? Mr. Freeland writes as if these leaders and others of the anti-Communist left never existed." W. V. Shannon

N Y Times Bk ■ p3 Ja 16 '72 1400w

"[Freeland's study] which sharply challenges conventional explanations of America's second great Red Scare, is the result of careful research and disciplined analysis. . . . [One of his] themes is that the Truman administration embarked upon a militantly repressive course at home in order to sustain support for its foreign policies. . . . [However, the author] tends to overstate [his] case—in [his] haste to condemn Truman [he] underestimates the power of conservative forces in American politics and exaggerates the influence of Presidential rhetoric. Freeland, moreover, overreaches his evidence in several instances. . . . A more plausible analysis [would] . . . suggest that the Truman administration was perhaps less dishonest and calculating than Freeland implies, although the results have not therefore been less pernicious." Robert Griffith

Sat R 55:75 Ap 22 '72 600w

FREELING, NICOLAS. Auprès de ma blonde [Eng title: A long silence]. (A Joan Kahn-Harper novel of suspense) 228p $5.95 Harper

ISBN 06-011351-0 LC 71-184382

Inspector Van der Valk has been "kicked upstairs to a quiet desk job to work out his days until retirement. But he's still the maverick of the Amsterdam police force, and his mind is too restless for paper work alone. A seemingly minor incident sets him off on a personal investigation that becomes—yes, he is killed in the middle of it—his last case. . . .

[The inspector's] wife, Arlette, . . . is determined to investigate her husband's death and bring those responsible to justice—which she does." (Sat R)

Best Sell 32:222 Ag 1 '72 90w

"[The author] has made an entirely new and happily successful departure in his new van der Valk mystery. . . . Freeling's style, deliberate rather than slow, is charmingly idiosyncratic, and his occasional English clumsinesses only add to his charm." Henry Veit

Library J 97:12652 Ag '72 80w

"The book is more than a detective story. Freeling always has concentrated on character and ambience, and 'Auprès de Ma Blonde' ends up a study of a woman's character. Purists might find the last part of the book just a shade too pat, with everything falling into place too easily. No matter. Freeling is one of the masters of the genre. . . . [He has] created a plot that for the most part runs in tangents and oblique lines, and he nevertheless simply roots the reader in his chair. The air of civilized urbanity that runs through the book is to most detective novels what Henry James is to Zane Grey." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p24 Ag 6 '72 190w

New Yorker 48:72 S 2 '72 140w

"While the tenth in the Van der Valk series may not be Freeling's best, [this story] . . . is destined to be the most memorable: it is Van der Valk's swan song. . . . If this is your introduction to Van der Valk, Auprès de Ma Blonde will make you want to read the previous nine; and if you are an old friend, you will want to reread them." O. L. Bailey

Sat R 55:61 Ag 26 '72 380w

Reviewed by Timothy Foote
Time 100:59 J1 31 '72 900w

FREEMAN, ARTHUR. Assays of bias. 50p $7.50; pa $3.50 Godine

811
LC 70-143384

"Freeman's poems, including some of those in the volume under review, have appeared in the American Scholar, Antioch Review, and the New Yorker." (Library J)

"Here is a poet of nice insight and humor that can occasionally verge on pathos. . . . Although sometimes too lost in the literary allusions of the pedagogue. . . . Freeman offers a collection of well-formed and beautifully languaged verses whose craftsmanship is unobtrusive and whose content delights one in the rereading." K. C. Rosenberg

Library J 96:3329 O 15 '71 100w

"Freeman writes as if academic formalism were still at flood tide in American poetry. I am far from wishing to discredit formalism. . . . But if I do not want my poets anti-formalist for the sake of fashion, I want even less to have them frigid for the sake of formalism. Too frequently Freeman's traditional forms muffle what he has to say. . . . I would not ask [him] to abandon his craftsmanship; I wish only that he would employ it more strenuously and daringly, to mine a richer vein of feeling. A few poems in the present volume suggest that he is quite capable of this. After Confinement touches real bitterness; the final poem Muse expresses real humility." R. B. Shaw

Poetry 119:350 Mr '72 550w

FREEMAN, E. The theatre of Albert Camus: a critical study. 178p $7.25 Barnes & Noble

842 Camus, Albert
ISBN 0-416-12940-4 LC [78-860195]

Freeman "follows a general introduction with a chapter on Camus's apprentice years (1935 to 1939) at the Théâtre du Travail and the Théâtre de l'Équipe in Algiers; a chapter on each of his plays [and] a chapter on his work as a stage director of plays translated and adapted from foreign drama or from novels. . . . Finally, the 'Conclusion and synthesis' attempts a judgment of Camus as a dramatist." (TLS) Bibliography Index.

"[The author] has written a perceptive and critically astute study of all of Camus' plays—original, translated, or adapted. . . . A knowledge of French is necessary since no passage from Camus is translated. . . . Excellent for the more advanced student."

Choice 9:384 My '72 160w

"This volume is welcome. The author carefully and critically analyzes each play (including translations and adaptations) in terms of Camus's work as a whole and then compares the plays with others of the period. An examination of the structure and dramatic conventions to which he adhered is included. . . . Freeman's concise discussion of Camus's split with such personalities as Poulet and Sartre for political and artistic reasons gives the reader a better understanding of the difficulties between leftists and liberals." B. L. Knapp

Library J 97:72 Ja 1 '72 140w

"After some initial ritual sparring about the neglect of Camus's plays by previous critics (though the bibliography contains two book-length studies devoted solely to the subject and a whole clutch of articles and essays dealing with individual plays), Mr. Freeman proceeds to give us a sensible, thorough, rather pedestrian account of Camus as a dramatist, marred by some slipshod and graceless writing. . . . His study is clearly and helpfully arranged. . . . [And it] is marked by a kind of temperateness and honesty which prevent Mr Freeman from making exaggerated claims for Camus's gifts as a playwright, though he is sometimes tempted into claiming too much for particular facets of his work. . . . Certainly he has useful and persuasive things to say about the plays. . . . It is hard not to share [his] regret for the absence of human warmth and density in the theatre of a man who had so much of both."

TLS D1107 S 17 '71 750w

FREEMAN, ERIKA. Insights; conversations with Theodor Reik. 244p il $7.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 Freud, Sigmund. Psychoanalysis
ISBN 0-13-467563-0 LC 77-155768

This book is based on an interview with one of Freud's pupils. Reik (1888-1969) "remained a loyal disciple, practicing lay analysis and writing many books for the layman on the subject of psychoanalysis. . . . [There are chapters] covering the analytic process and what the analyst thinks, says, and does; reminiscences about Freud's personal relationships; gossip and anecdotes about Freud and Reik's contemporaries, historical and literary greats of the time; and distinctions between masculinity and femininity." (Library J)

"Freeman, a psychoanalyst, . . . is obviously a student and disciple of Reik's. One of the major flaws is that she is not a good interviewer. The book is interesting in that the late Reik was a talented student of Freud, and gives some anecdotes about those early, far-away days in Vienna. However, it adds very little new about psychoanalysis. . . . The major problem, however, is that the book sorely needs a good editor. Errors abound. . . . Nothing new here for the sophisticated student; perhaps the layman will get a few chuckles."

Choice 9:580 Je '72 130w

"Much of the material presented in this volume has been covered in Reik's own books, particularly Listening with the Third Ear [BRD 1948]. Freeman considered Reik her father surrogate; her admiration for him prompted her to question him in a series of structured interviews which she then arranged into chapters by subject matter. Its contents is far ranging. . . . No matter what subject is under discussion, Reik manages to interject something about Jewishness. His comments on creativity include such fatuous statements as 'the great task of a woman is to bring a child into the world.' The book might be considered controversial if it were substantial enough to be taken as anything more than an amusing personal account wherein Freeman pays tribute to her beloved teacher."

Annette Hirsch

Library J 97:1447 Ap 15 '72 180w

FREEMAN, HOWARD E. Social research and social policy [by] Howard E. Freeman [and] Clarence C. Sherwood. 159p $5.95; pa $2.50 Prentice-Hall

300.1 Social sciences—Research
SBN 13-818104-7; 13-818096-2 (pa)
LC 77-107960

"In Chapter 1 ('The Social Policy Perspective') we learn about the three basic tasks of policy making: planning (setting goals, assessing existing conditions); program development and implementation (developing an 'impact model,' selecting a 'target population'; and evaluation. . . . Chapter 3 on 'Planning' [contains] . . . such topics as 'choosing relevant measures, the degree of aggregation in data, social indicators, and incidence vs. prevalence measures. . . . Chapters 6 and 7 devoted to data collection and data analysis . . . offer such topics as 'types of data collection' (experiments, surveys, etc.), matching, casual analysis, covariance, and . . . path analysis. . . . The final chapter ('The Dynamics of the Social Research Task') concerns administration, support for research, and ethics." (Am Soc R) Bibliography.

FREEMAN, H. E.—Continued

"There is a very great overlap between the general area of research methods and researchers' behavior and such sub-areas as 'evaluation research.' Methodology introductions and texts abound. Is there, then, sufficient cause for yet another methodology book? A different audience, maybe? The authors are aiming for a 'broad audience,' including 'both graduate and undergraduate students in the social sciences,' students, 'researchers and practitioners in the health, education and welfare fields.' It is a book for that audience, all right, but to no avail. It is too often insubstantial, dull, and at times in error." R. P. Althausen

Am Soc R 36:1116 D '71 600w

"Neither a research nor a social policy book, and evaluated as either would be considered less than successful. However, as an effort to relate scientific and research process to the complexity and difficulty of social policy, it is an excellent beginning effort. Freeman and Sherwood present a useful model of social policy in process and relate this with some effectiveness to various aspects of the research process. . . . This material, taken in conjunction with supportive research work, should be of value to students at both the undergraduate and the graduate level in social welfare and social work programs. Good index; excellent bibliography."

Choice 7:1584 Ja '71 130w

FREEMAN, JAMES DILLET. The case for optimism. 152p $4.95 Harper

901.94 Civilization, Modern
LC 79-163160

The thesis of this book is that "there is much in American life today that is in need of repair and responsible action, but there is even more which gives cause for optimism, especially when today's life styles are compared with those of our parents and grandparents. The author has documented his study with . . . information and statistics which lead us to appreciate the state we are in and to improve further our society and environment. . . . He is the Director of Ministerial Training and Religious Research for the Unity Movement." (Publisher's note)

"The mood of the book disturbs me, perhaps because the victorious outcome of all our battles seems to be assured. Not immediately, not easily, but certainly, we shall conquer in the future as we have in the past. . . . The liberal, humanistic belief in illimitable progress is no longer acceptable to most of us. There are indeed solid grounds for faith and hope. . . . A hope that is grounded in innate human decency, however, is not enough, even when allied with a justifiable admiration for human intelligence. As a testimony of faith, Freeman's case for optimism is infectious; as an argument, it is for the most part unconvincing." M. M. Shideler

Christian Century 88:1392 N 24 '71 270w

"[The author] examines such headline topics as pollution, campus unrest, drug use, immorality, and crime and concludes that the world is really better off today than it was 40, 200, or 2000 years ago. We live longer, travel faster farther, live more varied lives, respond to the needs and wants of others on a greater scale, have cleaner cities, and spawn fewer epidemics than in earlier times. . . . He cites biographical, historical, and statistical data in support of his consistently optimistic deductions, so his theses do not depend entirely on his ebullient style to sustain the message. A natural for consideration by the Reader's Digest, and for popular collections seeking a compendium of 'positive thinking.'" J. M. Carroll

Library J 96:3623 N 1 '71 150w

FREEMAN, LUCY. The dream. 215p $6.50
Arbor house

ISBN 0-87795-020-2 LC 79-167746

In this novel "an analyst turns detective. . . . [He listens] to each suspect and then [tries] to interpret the sessions in terms of the victim's dream of his own death." (Sat R)

Reviewed by John Thompson
Harper 243:120 O '71 250w

"Unfortunately, readers of mysteries will not like this book, while the natural audience may not realize from the publisher's promotion copy that it is for them. Fundamentally, this is a good cozy weepy read, just what the shrink ordered." Henri Veit

Library J 96:3158 O 1 '71 100w

"The Dream,' unfortunately, fails to come off—principally because Miss Freeman never quite manages to convince the reader that what she is offering is a novel. Some of the material reads like sexual case histories, slowing up the narrative. And it's all pretty elementary. This is an example of an idea taking precedence over the execution." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p33 Ja 9 '72 110w

"[This book] is a static but somewhat different novel of crime, which introduces ■ detective with decided possibilities for ■ new series. However, it is hoped that in subsequent volumes Miss Freeman gives us more crime than couch." Haskel Frankel

Sat R 54:56 O 30 '71 100w

FREEMAN, RICHARD. Repentance and revolt; a psychological approach to history. 247p $7.50
Fairleigh Dickinson univ. press

901 History—Philosophy
ISBN 0-8386-7471-2 LC 73-104381

In his "attempt to find common patterns in the histories of civilizations, whether ancient or modern, oriental or western . . . Freeman classifies civilized societies into three categories: [migratory, interactive and expansive]. . . . The psychological consequences of belonging to each type [are examined]. The author finds that expansionist societies] . . . are not merely warlike but sadistically cruel, because the 'restriction and regimentation' imposed upon their people, 'contrary to normal human inclination,' produce aggression. The only escape from this cycle, Freeman suggests, lies in the recent emergence of 'neo migratory societies.'" (Am Hist R)

"There is no need here to attack Freeman's schema of world history. The difficulties of classifying civilizations and of tracing cyclical patterns in their development are familiar to anyone who has studied the criticisms of Toynbee. Moreover, psychology is not such ■ precise science as to enable Freeman to establish a one-to-one ratio between social organization and personality structure. But for the working historian the main deficiency of Freeman's book is that it has no relevance to any particular historical investigation. If all Freeman's generalizations were true, it is hard to see that they would help a scholar write a better biography of, say, Philip the Fair. . . . Taxonomy is doubtless a useful, if rudimentary, scientific tool, but it is rarely of much use in the process of explanation, which is the historian's central business." D. H. Donald

Am Hist ■ 77:445 Ap '72 600w

"Another effort to explain world history in 300 pages or less, this time using a psychological-religious interpretation. . . . The [author's] purpose is, of course, didactic. Freeman wants to see tensions (self-denial, self-punishment, guilt) reduced in order to prevent 'revolt.' Neither concept nor suggestions offer anything new. . . . The publication of one more such work would occasion no dismay did it not so patently disregard rules for evidence in historical argument. The scheme is so simplistic as to be worthless, if not downright harmful. . . . Footnotes; index. Not recommended."

Choice 8:125 Mr '71 150w

FREEMAN, SUSAN TAX. Neighbors: the social contract in a Castilian hamlet. 233p 11 pl maps $10 Univ. of Chicago press

309.1 Valdemora, Spain—Social conditions
ISBN 0-226-26169-2 LC 70-125548

This is an "analysis of the social structure and cultural values of a rural community numbering between eighty and ninety people and treats the interrelations of this hamlet with the handful of slightly larger communities that make up a small geographically, and perhaps ecologically, differentiated region in the northeast of Spain." (Am J Soc) Bibliography.

"[The author] presents us with a solid ethnography that has ramifications for much further research. . . . Given the nuclear family as paramount, Freeman devotes considerable analysis to an understanding of inter- and intra-familial roles. The values of Valdemoran life bespeak of a family which is autonomous and independent of obligations to others. Another ideal is the physical proximity of one household to another. To enjoy both ideals, many Valdemorans realize that the large city rather than the hamlet is where such lifeways can be achieved. This is the ultimate irony of Freeman's excellent work." L. W. Moss

Am Anthropol 74:84 Ag '72 1150w

"The author has produced a gracefully written and clearly focused account of an enduring rural community that is a valuable addition to the ethnographic literature on Spain. She has been fortunate in having access to archival and other historical material going back to the sixteenth century. . . . [She] also uses these records along with her own genealogical and other field data to analyze changing patterns of emigration and intermarriage and thus to indicate the varying networks of social interaction that have linked Valdemora with neighboring villages and with the larger towns of the region. . . . The author has succeeded in what she set out to do. The book (handsomely produced, by the way) will not only interest those concerned with Spanish ethnography—social anthropologists generally should read it with profit." M. J. Meggitt

Am J Soc 77:332 S '71 600w

"One might argue that Freeman's work would have had greater general interest had she chosen to study one of the larger villages in which the overwhelming majority of Spain's rural population lives, but there can be no question that within the framework selected she has done her job well. Of special note is her use of historical data to provide a background for more recent developments. . . . Charming photographs; brief bibliography." Choice 8:919 S '71 140w

"This is an excellent study, whose importance comes partly from the fact that Mrs Freeman has studied a well-integrated community, where 'the absence of social and economic stratification dominates the whole texture of village social life'. . . . [Having shown] that it is the inhabitants themselves who, in their común de vecinos (literally, community of neighbours), deliberate on their own fate with care and mutual respect, the author concludes on a somewhat lyrical note. The many Valdemoras in Spain are not Arcadias, and Mrs Freeman does in fact show precisely their built-in tensions and problems." TLS p580 My 19 '72 430w

FREER, COBURN. Music for a king; George Herbert's style and the metrical psalms. 252p $10 Johns Hopkins univ. press

821 Herbert, George. Bible. O.T. Psalms —Criticism, interpretation, etc. English poetry—History and criticism ISBN 0-8018-1290-9 LC 76-179136

This study "traces the religious themes and poetic styles of the metrical psalms and shows how they were assimilated in the poetry of George Herbert. . . . The author first studies the evidence linking Herbert with the metrical psalm, then traces the history of psalm translation in England from its origins to Herbert's death in 1633. . . . After discussing the relationship between theme and style in the metrical psalms, Mr. Freer shows Herbert's use of the genre in The Temple. Through readings of individual poems, the author demonstrates how Herbert uses the themes and forms of the psalms to enhance or counter the surface statement of his poems. In the process the author also suggests the relation of the psalms to Herbert's imagery and his reading of Augustine." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"A good book of criticism should help us see a work more clearly, particularly to see what is there; this book, in attempting to make us see what is not there, nonetheless sheds some light on individual poems. . . . What is lost in [the author's] analysis is the sense of Herbert's fine restraint and control, his characteristic 'grave liveliness.' The quality of bathos Freer purports to find here is never really satisfactorily explained. In a disproportionately large section of the book, a detailed study of metrical psalms is given before Herbert's poems are considered at all, though in the process comes a useful examination of some of the Psalms translated by Sir Philip Sidney and his sister into a great variety of English forms. Some valid critical insights for some of the poems." Choice 9:1123 N '72 250w

Choice 9:1123 N '72 250w

"In an age when church attendance was mandatory, few Englishmen can have escaped being exposed to the metrical version of the psalms prepared for congregational singing by Sternhold and Hopkins. . . . It is important to Professor Freer's argument that Sternhold and Hopkins, however badly they may have said it, had something very much worth saying, and something which had a particular emotional appeal for Herbert and his contemporaries. . . . Professor Freer's fine ear is alert to every metrical and stylistic nuance. He begins by suggesting Sternhold and Hopkins as a source of many of Herbert's poetic effects and ends by an analysis in depth of his poetic style. It demands close study from the reader and a willingness to accept that a twentieth-century sensibility can align itself with the greatest precision with that of a writer in the seventeenth century." TLS p1099 S 22 '72 400w

TLS p1099 S 22 '72 400w

FREIDIN, SEYMOUR K. A sense of the Senate. 342p $8.95 Dodd

328.73 U.S. Congress. Senate ISBN 0-396-06537-6 LC 72-873

In this account of one house of the U.S. Congress, Freidin criticizes "its shortcomings, its inadequacies [and] its lethargy." (Christian Science Monitor)

"[Freidin] has been a European correspondent and foreign editor of the late New York Herald Tribune, and for several years worked as an aide on Capitol Hill. He does not write with any reverence for the U.S. Senate. . . . [His book] makes an honest, useful, antiestablishment portrait of a body which hasn't been doing its job well for many years. Most senators will consider it outrageously undignified and unfair. They can't all be right." Roscoe Drummond

Christian Science Monitor p11 J1 19 '72 90w

"In this rather formless book, Freidin centers his attention on the Senate, but also treats a wide range of men and events from the Nixon years. Meandering from one subject to another, then back again, he occasionally retells a story in the process. While he mentions the need for 'rejuvenation, restructuring, and reform' of Senate procedures, he avoids any serious discussion of the subject. But his account is not without interest; he vents his antagonisms freely against persons ranging from Prince Rainier to Senator Fulbright and the Kennedys. On the whole, however, the book lacks a central focus or purpose, and even in an election year should have only a limited appeal." B. S. Vialit

Library J 97:2406 J1 '72 100w

"The bilious attacks of men like Mr. Freidin only serve to heighten public contempt for the Senate without providing any important guidelines for workable reform. . . . [He] is equally enraged at major and minor abuses. Much too much space is wasted in angry snorts about 'free parking space in an underground garage,' and similar petty perquisites. . . . The whole ends up reading like an unedited marathon gossip column. . . . The fact that a real need exists for a cogent, well-organized critical study of the Senate makes the faults in Mr. Freidin's book all the more annoying. He knows something is wrong but time after time, he misses the main point. . . . In short, despite its title, it is a rather senseless, shoddy book. Still, I enjoyed reading it, as will most Washingtonians." Aram Bakshian

Nat R 24:1018 S 15 '72 1100w

New Yorker 48:78 Ag 12 '72 130w

FREIMARCK, VINCENT. Race and the American romantics; ed. by Vincent Freimarck & Bernard Rosenthal. 328p $12.50 Schocken

818 Slavery in the U.S. ISBN 0-8052-3417-9 LC 73-163330

This is a "collection of excerpts from the writings of Poe, Whitman, Melville, Hawthorne.

FREIMARCK, VINCENT—Continued

Cooper, Emerson, Thoreau, Whittier, Bryant, and Lowell exhibiting their attitudes on race in the three decades preceding the Civil War." (Choice) Annotated bibliography.

"Because the writings of the American romanticists were generally so internal and their views on the racial question so often embodied in obscure writings, coming to an understanding of individual beliefs has always been difficult. This collection makes the task all the easier because it includes, in addition to interesting introductions to authors, an engaging, first-rate general introduction. Of particular interest to the scholar should be the reassessment of Whitman's democratic persona. This book addresses itself to a popular question, one that students frequently ask, in a popular area of study; and it is good to know that there is now a work to which they can turn. Recommended for undergraduate and graduate libraries."

Choice 9:813 S '72 170w

Christian Century 89:340 Mr 22 '72 30w

FREMLIN, CELIA. Appointment with yesterday. 192p $5.50 Lippincott

ISBN 0-397-00873-2 LC 77-39761

This novel "begins with a distracted woman riding round and round on the Inner Circle line of the London Underground, running in fear from someone or some thing. On impulse she buys a ticket for Seacliffe and arrives there on a blustery January night, with practically no money and no place to stay. She adopts the name of Milly Barnes and takes jobs as a Daily Help. . . . [She] begins to feel safe until a man begins . . . phoning the various places she works. Piecemeal we learn what her yesterday was." (Best Sell)

"The plot is contrived and the final resolution is hardly credible, but, by George there is much suspense all through."

Best Sell 32:223 Ag 1 '72 130w

"[This] can only be described as a very English, very domestic, and very lady-like little novel. The suspense, which is not easy to follow, is breathless and heartwarming in the worst sense. A mousy ex-nurse is divorced, . . . starts life anew, takes up housework, and lives happily ever after. On second thought, this book is mostly about cleaning dirty dishes, dirty kitchens, and dirty houses." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:2758 S 1 '72 80w

Reviewed by Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p43 O 1 '72 90w

"Not less horrible than illicit deaths are the horrors that lurk in female domesticity, and Celia Fremlin has long been the mistress of their fictional presentation. Here, in the best so far of her always good books, she has fused both, in an excellent terror novel that is at once a study of near-mindless persecution and flight and a series of beautifully funny observations on the comparatively rich seeking the fashionable appearances of poverty. Miss Fremlin knows, as too many nowadays do not, just when to loosen the screws, and how far."

TLS p500 Ap 28 '72 90w

FRENCH, PETER J. John Dee: the world of an Elizabethan magus. 243p il $12.50 Routledge

B or 92 Dee, John

ISBN 0-7100-7158-2 LC [72-178131]

This is an account of the life and career of Dr. John Dee who "was a prime mover in such developing fields as applied science and mathematics, navigation, geography, and antiquarian studies; he also had a major influence on the Sidney circle and the revival of measured verse. He amassed the greatest library in England; and French's book [presents] glimpses into that collection." (Library J) Bibliography.

"As its author intends, [this book] presents 'an overall picture of Dee that may induce others to study him and his thoughts.' Excellent bibliography and documentation."

Choice 9:956 O '72 100w

"The importance of Dee as an intellectual force during the English Renaissance has been neglected, largely due to the eccentricity of some of his interests. French, in this philosophical biography, attempts to set the record straight. His impressive and lengthy research has revealed a scholar who not only was skilled in the hermetic arts (for which he was much maligned), but also provided a link with Renaissance in Europe. . . . French has done a service to scholarship by bringing research on Dee up-to-date and into prominence." J. D. Suleiman

Library J 97:2082 Je 1 '72 160w

"French has conducted a learned and illuminating reconnaissance into Dee's life and works, summarising a great deal of earlier research, but adding much of his own. He shows convincingly that it is impossible to separate Dee's true scientific work (as we would term it) from his mysticism. Both were part of his impatient, almost frantic, quest for knowledge." Paul Johnson

New Statesman 84:277 Mr 3 '72 460w

"[The author] has tended to endow Dee's image with respectability, if only by the sobriety of his presentation. . . . He makes no claim to have written a full and detailed biography, but considers rather Dee's extraordinary tastes and talents in an Elizabethan setting. . . . In considering his exposure to different sorts of religious Hermeticism, Dr French uses well-balanced historical arguments and insights. This central chapter is strewn with problems which historians will find pleasure in attempting to solve, problems less awesome than those set by the book as a whole."

TLS p599 My 19 '72 900w

FREUD, ANNA. The writings of Anna Freud; v7. Problems of psychoanalytic training, diagnosis, and the technique of therapy, 1966-1970. 312p $12.50 Int. univ. press

618.9 Child study. Psychoanalysis
ISBN 0-8236-6876-2 LC 75-31201

These writings "deal with practical and theoretical topics in analysis, as well as the application of analytic child psychology to such diverse areas as custody decisions and other issues in family law; nursery school education; the psychologically informed pediatric care of children who are physically ill; the special problems of the underprivileged and of handicapped children and their parents; [and] a plan for day care centers based on the emotional needs of the child. . . . [The author also makes a] . . . plea for reforming the training of all those who deal with the child. . . . [Included is a paper] on the termination of child analysis." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. For volume five in this series see BRD 1971; for volume six see BRD 1966.

"As with other volumes in the collection, . . . the reader is afforded a look at the thinking of one of the especially creative minds in psychology. . . . [The author's] paper on symptomatology recommends a classification system that is developmental rather than labeling. Throughout the volume the seminal role of Anna Freud is evident whether talking about psychological films, legal issues of child custody, or a foreword to a book. No library in child psychology, psychoanalysis, or psychotherapy can be without this volume and the series of which it is a part."

Choice 9:1207 N '72 170w

"If this book has a theme, it is the author's effort to keep psychoanalysis a lively, open-minded discipline. . . . Throughout her long and dedicated life, Anna Freud has never wanted to be far away from children. They have puzzled her, moved her to have second thoughts, obtained from her an astonishing degree of curiosity, attention, and concern. They have been the ones who have carried her back and forth, from the world of the mind to the world of the engaged heart. Maybe all this is responsible for the luminous coherence of her writing; maybe the saving grace that even troubled children can radiate has been communicated to this long-time friend of theirs." Robert Coles

New Yorker 48:124 S 23 '72 2900w

FRIEDMAN, ALAN. Hermaphrodite: the autobiography of a poet. 426p $7.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-47291-8 LC 77-154910

Millie/Wille "Niemann. Nobel Prize-winning poet, tells the story. Raised as a girl, she discovers that she possesses the male equipment as well. Most of his/her life is spent as a woman; . . . in time, she even produces a baby by herself. The child, in traditional my-thic fashion, is whisked off to mature in ignorance of its parent. Meanwhile, Millie Nie-mann pursues archaeology, poetry and big business. . . . After a short period as a man, she reverts to femininity." (Newsweek)

Reviewed by L. J. Davis
Book World p10 Mr 12 '72 480w

"A fable about the poet in society. . . . Friedman uses social and sexual materials of every variety to satirize the notion of the poet as a receptor cross-fertilized by madly confusing influences. The novel is nearly strangled by its ideas before it ingeniously ends, but it rings several funny changes on hermaphroditism as the symbol of a condition of precivilized wholeness to which we all blindly struggle to return. Though the book is too long, you won't notice until after Friedman has you seduced. Don't miss this one." Bruce Allen

Library J 97:898 Mr 1 '72 170w

Reviewed by Kenn Stitt
New Statesman 84:135 J1 28 '72 130w

"When Friedman stops transforming Millie's sex, as he does after a hundred pages and makes Millie a woman once and for all, he tends to give in to the old alliance between the fabulous idea and satire, but not in any way that makes the alliance seem anything but old. But . . . I am not sure about the final episodes. Hermaphroditism is a book that many will reject right off, and on predictable and understandable grounds. Others will read it through with unbroken delight; to do this is to accept the work for the deed, the idea for the imagined action. But still others may agree that it begins well, then falls off, and really does come back at the end. They are the ones to listen to." Roger Sale

N Y Rev of Books 18:3 My 4 '72 1150w

"The style of the book is not poetic, yet the language is so graceful and at times intricate that the reader has no difficulty believing it to be the work of a poet, perhaps an important one. . . . Best of all, the book is extremely funny. . . . The manner is rich and comic, the language elegant, and if many of the characters are larger than life, they nonetheless assume a reality in proportion to the book. . . . Also, it is refreshing to come across an author who, in spite of the current fashion toward the sneer and the giggle, can write of sexual experience both comically and lyrically within the same work." William Hjortsberg

N Y Times Bk R p4 Mr 19 '72 700w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 79:100 Ap 17 '72 460w
TLS p909 Ag 4 '72 200w

FRIEDMAN, B. H. Jackson Pollock; energy made visible. 293p pl $8.95 McGraw

B or 92 Pollock, Jackson
ISBN 0-07-022421-8 LC 76-39411

"Friedman discusses Pollock's personal relationships; his handling of critics, dealers, and colleagues; the psychological implications of his losing battle with alcohol; his vulnerability to criticism; and the duality of gentleness and violence that hovered over his personality." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This biography, which successfully recreates the atmosphere surrounding both Pollock's career and the beginnings of the New York school of Abstract Expressionism, is moving and wholly engaging. . . . Since previous Pollock literature has too often smacked of glossy mythmaking, it is to Friedman's credit that Pollock often comes across as brutal, obstinate, and demanding. The development of the relationship between the artist and the critic Clement Greenberg is of particular interest and is well documented by the author. Recommended." Phyllis Andersen
Library J 97:1422 Ap 15 '72 140w

Reviewed by Kenneth Evett
New Repub 167:25 N 18 '72 900w

"[The author] is a collector and former business executive who has also contributed to the art journals and written two novels. He is not a very penetrating critic of the art of painting, and the bits of potted art history that are sprinkled throughout his chronicle do not inspire confidence. . . . What is finally unsatisfactory about Mr. Friedman's 'Life' is that it offers no terms by which Pollock's catastrophic personality can be accounted for. There isn't the slightest attempt made to place Pollock's art in some kind of meaningful relation to his personal history. . . . What is valuable in [this] book is the chronology of Pollock's career that it provides—the (sometimes lengthy) quotations from letters, reviews, memoirs, and articles, the facts about contracts and exhibitions and commissions." Hilton Kramer

N Y Times Bk R p7 O 8 '72 1550w

"[The author has] given us a good workmanlike book that includes 1) a factual sketch of the shape of Pollock's life, with an emphasis on psychology that at times threatens to treat the paintings as therapeutic tools, 2) a sturdy, middlebrow discussion of the paintings . . . and, finally, 3) an altogether interesting account of the world he and Pollock shared—the art world of the Fifties, as it existed in New York and East Hampton . . . [but] even this part of his narrative is marred by his tact. . . . Granting the value of [Friedman's] discussion of the paintings, I have to note that the people it would most serve are going to be at sea because of the unforgivable absence of any reproductions of the paintings themselves." Dave Hickey
Sat R 55:80 S 9 '72 1000w

FRIEDMAN, MAURICE. Touchstones of reality: existential trust and the community of peace. 314p $10 Dutton

291 Religions. Existentialism
ISBN 0-525-22160-3 LC 74-165598

This is "an autobiographical account of Friedman's spiritual odyssey. It is also a defense of Hasidism—particularly as interpreted by Martin Buber, an existential philosophy of religion, and an examination of Hinduism, early Buddhism and Zen, Judaism, Christianity, and the Jewish-Christian dialogue. . . . It includes an examination of religious psychology." (Library J)

Christian Century 89:150 F 2 '72 20w

"There are many wonderful passages which are rich in insight into human nature, into experience, and into the philosophy of religion and the logic of the religious experience. However, because the author strives to cover so much ground under the canopy of 'autobiography,' the book is diffuse and somewhat confusing in places. . . . (Part 1 is poorly written; all the rest is well-written, except for scholarly positions.) . . . Highly recommended." T. M. Young

Library J 97:1026 Mr 15 '72 200w

FRIEDMAN, MURRAY, ed. Overcoming middle class rage [foreword by Hubert H. Humphrey]. 333p $7.95; pa $3.95 Westminster press 301.44 Middle classes. U.S.—Social policy.

U.S.—Social conditions
ISBN 0-664-20920-3; 0-66424937-X (pa)
LC 71-161219

These essays by various authors, mostly sociologists, are intended to illustrate the nature and emergence of those "working Americans sandwiched between wealth and welfare. [They seek to portray] . . . the workingman, his values, needs, grievances, life-style, and goals." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Fred Rotondaro
Best Sell 31:443 Ja 1 '72 400w

"Here is a collection of over 20 essays on Middle America written by Spiro Agnew, Eric Hoffer, Hubert Humphrey, Daniel Moynihan, Michael Lerner, Edmund Muskie, and others, including academicians . . . journalists and editors. The anthology does much to clarify the feelings of hard hats, white minorities, and 'average' people toward contemporary America. Lerner's 'Respectable Bigotry' examines liberals' prejudice against such groups; Friedman's 'Kensington, U.S.A.' describes a white ghetto. Another chapter looks at a worker who took part in the New York City hard hat riot of 1970. For anyone who fails to understand the appeal of Wallace or Agnew (or Archie Bunker) this is required reading." H. T. Armistead

Library J 97:2072 Je 1 '72 130w

FRIEDMANN, WOLFGANG G. Joint international business ventures in developing countries; case studies and analysis of recent trends [by] Wolfgang G. Friedmann & Jean-Pierre Bèguin; with the collaboration of James Peterson and Alain Pellet. 448p $15 Columbia Univ. press

338.91 Corporations, International. Underdeveloped areas
ISBN 0-231-03495-14 LC 71-142282

"The cases included cover various types of joint ventures—multipartite, bipartite, association between private partners and between private companies, and governments or government corporations. The cases deal with investors from the United States, Britain, Canada, the Netherlands, France, Germany, Italy, Sweden, and Switzerland. The developing countries included are from the Middle East, Africa, Asia, and Latin America. Both consumer and industrial products are discussed. . . . Typically, the case studies offer a general description of the companies participating in a joint venture, the terms of agreement, the organization and decision-making structure, especially at the most senior levels of the company, and a brief background of the country and its laws and regulations on foreign private investments." (Ann Am Acad) Bibliography. Index.

"[This study] offers a review of a critical subject which will gain in importance over the coming years. . . . The chapters on general observations and control problems in joint ventures offer clear and informative discussion of the major issues characterizing this form of international business. An important theme highlighted by the authors . . . [is that] a company's success in developing countries will be largely determined by its ability to get along with the host governments. . . . [However,] the case studies are often weak . . . [and] the authors tend to make sweeping statements such as 'In most developing countries there is no hostility toward foreign enterprise.' On balance, the book offers some information which might be of assistance to the international businessman. Students of political science and international relations are likely to gain a better understanding of one form of international business operations." Ashok Kapoor

Ann Am Acad 399:245 Ja '72 1000w

"The case studies cover such diverse industries as mining, textiles, drugs, office machines, and food products. Extensive general bibliography, consisting largely of documents and periodical articles. A fine text."

Choice 8:876 S '71 140w

FRIEDRICH, OTTO. Before the deluge; a portrait of Berlin in the 1920's. 418p 11 maps $10 Harper

914.3 Berlin
SBN 06-011372-3 LC 70-156522

In 16 chapters, the author "tells of characteristic happenings in Berlin from Wilhelm II's abdication in 1918 to Hitler's advent to power. Not limiting himself to political events, Friedrich also covers the cultural and social scenes, introducing many of the great artists, musicians, actors, writers, and scientists of the day." (Library J) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:112 Je '72 70w

"There are good maps but not enough illustrations. If this excellent book suffers any imbalance it could, depending on point of view, be the disproportionate attention given to theatre. . . . Though the author labors no parallels between Berlin (of the twenties) and the U.S. today, arresting parallels throughout the book are nevertheless too spontaneous, too obvious to be missed by any reader." W. H. Archer

Best Sell 32:79 My 15 '72 470w

Choice 9:1029 O '72 180w

Christian Century 89:523 My 3 '72 20w

"This is a fascinating and powerfully told tale. Even if it does not do what may be the impossible (give us a definitive key to Hitlerhood), it is nonetheless one of the finest evocations of a still important period that we have had in some time. Excellent as history, superb as pure reading." J. G. Harrison

Christian Science Monitor pB6 My 4 '72 500w

"Friedrich, a journalist of note . . . has written a lively book, based on wide readings and on interviews with prominent figures of that era. . . . He has a keen eye for the unusual and knows how to tell a story. This reviewer, a native of Berlin who spent most of the 1920's there as an editor, was impressed by the author's colorful report, but would have set some accents differently in order to do full justice to the many faceted life of those days. As a first introduction to Berlin in the Twenties, [this book] is warmly recommended." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 97:1712 My 1 '72 200w

New Yorker 48:80 Ag 12 '72 80w

"Friedrich bungles this promising subject by trying to encompass everything that was happening, not only in Berlin but in all Germany during this period. . . . His narrative is punctuated with interviews with survivors of the era, but Friedrich is the world's unluckiest interviewer. 'What was Nabokov like in those days? Very handsome. And very nice. . . . Have you tried to see him?' is all he gleans from a typical informant. He then recounts a trip to Montreux, where he saw tulips and mountains and Nabokov's hotel, but not Nabokov, who was absent in Sicily. Never mind: 'the phantom novelist can always be found in his books,' and we're treated instead to a three-page synopsis of 'King, Queen, Knave.' . . . This book will simply have to be written again by somebody else. It serves meanwhile only as a reminder, a shapeless heap of partial information about a fascinating period." Walter Clemons

Newsweek 79:105 My 8 '72 700w

Reviewed by Sam Halper
Time 99:83 My 15 '72 800w

FRIEDRICH, OTTO. The rose garden. 78p $3.95 Lippincott

635.9 Roses
ISBN 0-397-00854-6 LC 70-37926

The author describes his experiences in creating a rose garden, "memories of the roses his father grew, and his wife's response to his enterprise. Interspersed with these personal reflections are brief horticultural histories of some of the roses he chose to grow and accounts of his successes and failures in cultivation." (Library J) The material in this book was originally published in shorter form in McCall's under the title I Promised Myself ■ Rose Garden.

"This is a simple, unpretentious, delightful little book. It is not much more than an hour's reading on—well, not on horticulture . . . but on just about anything. The very brief little essays are quite literate—an interesting gift book."

Best Sell 32:167 Jl 1 '72 50w

"As I read this book, I began to wonder, 'What's its point?' Friedrich conveys no sense of the pleasure gained from working with and learning about plants. He does not give any pragmatic information about growing roses. In fact, he seems to have simply stuck the plants in the ground and then waited to see if they lived or not, nodding judiciously if they died." M. L. Porter

Library J 97:1451 Ap 15 '72 200w

"Anyone who feels that books about raising roses are customarily too much of a mulch-ness should try this one. The author takes his roses seriously enough, but frequently uses them as an excuse for provocative digressions. . . . Friedrich never assumes that the care and feeding of roses must be either a sweaty or a holy subject. Especially recommended for those who cannot tell a Strawberry Blonde from a creeping President Herbert Hoover."

Time 99:94 Ap 17 '72 100w

FRIEDRICH, PAUL. Agrarian revolt in ■ Mexican village. (Anthropology of modern soc. ser) 158p 11 maps $5.95; pa $3.25 Prentice-Hall

301.24 Farm tenancy. Mexico—Politics and government. Government. Resistance to. Naranja, Mexico. Social change
SBN 13-018697-X; 13-018689-9 (pa)
LC 76-110089

"The author first reconstructs the economic, socio-political and religious life of Naranja, a Tarascan village in Southwestern Mexico. He then examines the economic and socio-political changes that took place within Naranja between 1885 and 1920 which led to agrarian unrest. [He] demonstrates the . . . consequences of a land seizure by Spanish entrepreneurs and the subsequent creation of large estates to produce cash crops for the national economy. . . . [discusses] the militant Indian leader Primo Tapia . . . [and] analyzes the initiation and successful completion of a . . . revolt in Naranja between 1920 and 1926. (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Chronology.

"The ethnological history is too much of a chronicle of events in which at times one loses track of the broader social scene, while the preconditions, although they help to understand the existence of the agrarian movement and a number of its features, do not sufficiently explain the course of the movement which constitutes the core of the book. But anthropologists are new at this type of analysis and it would be unfair to expect perfection. Friedrich has nonetheless made an invaluable contribution and his point is justifiable that further investigation can follow 'when we have cleared up the history' of other agrarian revolts." Pedro Carrasco
Am Anthropol 74:53 F/Ap '72 550w

"Professor Friedrich's work is surely innovative among anthropological studies of Mexico. Departing from the tradition of community studies (engendered decades ago by the Chicago school of urban sociology) he explores the making of a revolutionary, Primo Tapia. In the process he calls attention to the peculiar importance of living in the United States for the returned Mexican immigrant and the exigencies of race and class conflict in the making of a revolution. . . . This book should prove useful to those who seek to learn more (and to convey to their students) a better sense of the relationship between the U.S. and Mexicans." W. P. McGreevey
Am Hist R 77:850 Je '72 230w

"This book and five published articles . . . are the direct result of two 18-month field projects (1955-56; 1966-68). . . . The writing style is clear, easy to read and comprehend. The research was based on archival study, interviews with older villagers, and ethnological reconstruction. This work is of particular interest to those who desire both a local-level inside to the historical and economic causes and actions of peasant revolt, anarchist theory, and similar pressing issues as well as some understanding of the application of analytical tools and methods of a recognized anthropologist on a particular society of the modern world. Unfortunately the bibliography includes sources published only until 1966. . . . Three appendices provide information on Tarascan language, economic statistics for the Ejido, and the Naranja diet; no index."
Choice 8:104 Mr '71 230w

FRIENDS, SOCIETY OF. American friends service committee. Search for peace in the Middle East. See Search for peace in the Middle East

FRISCH, OTTO R. The nature of matter. (World of science lib) 216p il col il $7.95 Dutton

539 Atoms. Atomic theory. Matter
SBN 0-525-16427-8 LC 70-180712

The author "describes the atomic theory of matter, showing how far the classical idea of elementary atoms holds good in the attempt to explain physical processes and at what point modern theories of sub-atomic structure need to be introduced. He goes on to describe how in recent years the experimental analysis of the structure of atomic nuclei has revealed a whole new world of hitherto unknown particles." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"[This book] is by no means limited to youthful readers although the interested budding scientist will get from it a solid grounding in basic physics." F. J. MacEntee
Best Sell 32:151 Je 15 '72 50w

"This [is a] highly readable book. . . . Containing no mathematical or chemical equations, [it] can be read by non-specialists, but will yield profit and pleasure to any high school or college student of physics or chemistry. . . . Should be in every high school and college science library."
Choice 9:1318 D '72 140w

"The book is unusually attractive even to the professional physicist, because of the excellent illustrations (170 in all), several of which come from Professor Frisch's own collection. It is also interesting to see an author writing lucidly, simply, and at the same time avoiding the pitfalls of slapdash explanation to which the average popularizer is all too prone. . . . Almost everyone who has to teach physics to university students or to school pupils will have something to learn from the book's clarifying presentation of the intellectually difficult steps in modern physics, and of the human background against which these steps were taken. And it is outstanding as a survey for the general reader who wants to know what modern physics is about."

TLS p798 Jl 14 '72 1100w

FRITH, MICHAEL. Some of us walk . . . some fly . . . some swim. 65p il $3.50 Beginner bks.

591 Animals—Pictures, illustrations, etc.—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-394-82325-7 LC 73-158391

Using rhyming techniques, the author introduces "beginning readers or nonreaders to . . . 246 animals." (Christian Science Monitor)

"While the author's choice is not always obvious (e.g., he introduces some species like the numbat, the saiga, and the uakari, and wholly neglects others), the variety of animals' patterns of eating, locomotion, ornamentation, size, shape, etc., is well brought out—all as compared with a blond-haired, blue-eye American boy. The book fails only in details: At times pictures are too small or indistinct, and while some obvious species are identified by genus alone, others are needlessly overspecialized in the labeling. Relative size of animals is also confusing—at times the illustrations are based on absolute size and at times on perspective. However, the grouping of animals by functional similarities and differences rather than by class and family is a happy idea in a book for this age group." Barry Ivker

Christian Science Monitor pB4 N 11 '71 140w

"How frustrated young readers will be here depends on how effectively they have learned to use unfamiliar combinations of reading symbols to figure out the names of the animals shown. Concepts of large, small, fast, and tall are well communicated by the brightly colored but authentically shaped animals. . . . This title may have a long span of usefulness from picture-book through early independent reader stage, depending on the patience of parents, grandparents, or primary teachers; best of all, it's a fun take-home book." E. C. Trimble
Library J 96:4194 D 15 '71 100w

FRIZELL, BERNARD. The grand defiance; a novel. 309p $6.95 Morrow
LC 76-181593

"France's leading general is captured by Germans in early World War II. In an 'in-escapable' German fortress he decides he must escape to France." (Library J)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
America 126:550 My 20 '72 70w

Reviewed by V. J. Colimore
Best Sell 31:563 Mr 15 '72 250w

"An almost unbelievable plot, with skill, is made believable and gripping in this excellent suspense-adventure novel. Characterization is well handled. A crusty, seemingly cold-hearted officer and a violence-hating, at-loose-ends civilian become warm people to the reader—understanding of each other. This is by far the best of Frizell's novels." Ed Murphy
Library J 97:698 F 15 '72 140w

Reviewed by Terri Hirt
Library J 97:2494 Jl '72 230w [YA]

"The half of the book that transpires within the prison sags a bit, since Mr. Frizell inclines to wordy statements of the common-place. But once its hero is over the wall, the novel hots up into a classic wartime chase through Germany and occupied France—and the bouquet of terror and pursuit is authentic." Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p43 Mr 26 '72 120w

FROM, FRANZ. Perception of other people; tr. by Erik Kvan and Brendan Maher. 179p $8 Columbia univ. press

153.7 Perception. Psychology
ISBN 0-231-03402-4 LC 76-138295

This is an "investigation of how subjects perceive animate objects, namely other humans engaged in a variety of tasks. [From] . . . asks his observers to describe how others appear and what they believe are the thoughts, intentions, and feelings of his actors. [He] interprets their reports within a theoretical framework based on past experience, cognitive factors, and personality variables." (Choice) Bibliography. Index. Originally published in Danish.

FROM, FRANZ—Continued

"It is helpful in understanding this book to know that Franz From (University of Copenhagen) was a colleague of the Gestalt psychologist Edgar Rubin. . . . The book is distinguished by a fine translation. . . . [There is] an excellent foreword by Henry A. Murray. Since From relies heavily on introspective reports and demonstrations, [the book] falls outside the realm of most North American psychology. It is an interesting and provocative work, however, and may appeal to psychologists concerned with personality, interpersonal relations, and recent phenomenological developments, but it is too limited in scope to be useful for undergraduate libraries."

Choice 8:1251 N '71 180w

"From's approach is not experimental in the sense of controlled manipulation and measurement of variables, but rather is one of description and analysis. He attempts to describe without reliance on theory, but theory is always operative at some level in all scientific investigations. The conclusions that we arrive at from observing the behavior of others is an important topic for study. From's work will be of interest only to the professional who is not wed to either behaviorism or psychoanalysis." Robert Cancro

Library J 96:1377 Ap 15 '71 120w

FROMAN, ROBERT. Rubber bands, baseballs and doughnuts: a book about topology; il. by Harvey Weiss. 33p $3.75 Crowell

514 Topology—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-690-71353-3 LC 74-158690

"By experimenting with rubber bands, pencil, paper, balloons, and a ruler, the young mathematician discovers for himself the new branch of mathematics called topology. Topology is a kind of geometry that is concerned with the most permanent properties of an object or form. These are the properties that will survive distortion such as stretching." (Publisher's note) "Grades two to four." (Library J)

"[This book] reaps all the advantages that come from being the first to explain an extremely complex subject to a layman. In some cases—and this is one—no amount of erudite exposition can beat a little playing around with rubber bands, balloons, and a teacup or two. . . . Froman manages to convey with intelligence some basic principles of topology."

Helen Andrejevic

Book World p14 (children's issue) My 7 '72 160w

"[The book is] amusingly and thoughtfully illustrated. . . . [It does] an excellent job of conveying specific aspects of the fields [it] represents." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 48:490 O '72 110w

"[This is] a clear introduction to topology for primary school children. . . . Weiss's yellow and orange cartoon-like illustrations are appealing and help develop the concepts. Although the topic of topology is peripheral to most elementary curriculums, this would provide enjoyable recreational reading for young math buffs." Sandra Weir

Library J 97:2933 S 15 '72 150w

FRUMAN, NORMAN. Coleridge; the damaged archangel. 607p $12.50 Braziller

821 Coleridge, Samuel Taylor
ISBN 0-8076-0607-3 LC 71-148734

"Fruman presents a . . . revaluation of Coleridge's personality and reputation. He examines the question of Coleridge's honesty and finds special pleading in the case for his spotless integrity. . . . [He] demonstrates that Coleridge, throughout his prose works, not only appropriated central arguments from the Germans, but often plagiarized verbatim. And he finds Coleridge's literary theory to be of slight value as a basis for the practice of criticism. . . . In the second half of the book, Fruman attempts to account for Coleridge's poems and personality by submitting them to psychoanalytic interpretation." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by P. C. Rule
America 126:323 Mr 25 '72 700w

Reviewed by Hugh Ormsby-Lennon
Am Scholar 41:468 summer '72 1850w

Reviewed by Anthony Sialuys
Best Sell 32:184 Jl 15 '72 330w

"Fruman delivers a definitive account [of Coleridge's poetry] marshaling all the evidence without neglecting his own finely tuned responses, and achieves judicious thoroughness with the minimum of pomp. He seems to be that rare bird, the scholar-enthusiast who, independent-minded without being obtuse, always makes the right decision about what to put into the text and what into the footnotes, and writes readably as a man from among men. In his quiet, almost forensic way, he irreversibly upsets a good many received notions, both major and minor, about Coleridge, and no student will be able to neglect The Damaged Archangel without looking woefully off the ball. The notes prove how hard and relevantly Fruman has worked, and the index is a model of what such a thing should be."

Paul West

Book World p4 D 26 '71 1000w

"An essential new study of Coleridge's life and art that will be widely discussed and permanently valuable. With grace and clarity, it examines attitudes toward Coleridge that have swirled around his personality and writings for over 150 years. The approach combines impressive historical scholarship that reinterprets available material and draws on manuscript sources with critical and psychological explication. The comprehensive and detailed exploration of almost all relevant Coleridgeana provides a solid base upon which Fruman makes fascinating speculations on the reasons for Coleridge's obsessive anxieties as man and poet. In its importance to Coleridge studies, the book should be compared to [J.] Lowes' The road to Xanadu [BRD 1927]. For all general and academic libraries. . . . Extensive documentation, a chronology, and a full index."

Choice 8:1585 F '72 190w

Reviewed by J. A. Appleyard
Commonweal 96:244 My 12 '72 1400w

Reviewed by Gabriel Fielding
Critic 30:83 Mr '72 1400w

Economist 244:58 S 23 '72 600w

"[This is a] well-documented study. . . . As for Coleridge's claims to spontaneous poetic creation, Fruman takes up the Coleridge-Wordsworth debate (who was the more influential on whom) and concludes that the catalyst in Coleridge's annus mirabilis (1797-1798) was not opium or joy or love, but the poetic genius of Wordsworth. . . . Though perhaps dislodged as a profound original thinker, for example, Coleridge remains an incomparable mediator of ideas. Such revisions make this book a solid contribution to Coleridge studies." F. P. Riga

Library J 97:73 Ja 1 '72 220w

Reviewed by Owen Barfield
Nation 214:764 Je 12 '72 1800w

Reviewed by J. C. Lobdell
Nat R 24:414 Ap 14 '72 130w

Reviewed by Anthony West
New Statesman 84:566 O 20 '72 1100w

Reviewed by L. C. Knights
N Y Rev of Books 18:25 My 4 '72 2350w

Reviewed by G. H. Hartman
N Y Times Bk R pl Mr 12 '72 1900w

"[This] is a fascinating book about a fascinating man. That is not the same as saying that it is an exceptionally good book. For, while it deserves to be widely read and deeply thought about, the work is flawed in two important ways. First, the style is often overwrought, ostentatious, and at odds with itself. . . . Second (and relevant) Mr. Fruman's periternity, though intelligent, is not exactly that of a literary critic. He is strong on literary ethics and argumentation, but he is not particularly adept at noticing anything that others haven't already commented on concerning the subtle interplay of word within word in a great poem. So much of his imaginative energy goes, rightly, into insisting that certain matters mustn't be swept under the carpet that he hasn't much left for contemplating the intricate patterning of the carpet itself." Christopher Ricks

Sat R 55:31 Ja 15 '72 4000w

"This huge and highly contentious biographical study . . . [is] a work of considerable importance which present and future Coleridgeans cannot afford to ignore."

TLS 1463 D 1 '72 1700w

Reviewed by R. H. Fogle

Va Q R 48:477 summer '72 1200w

FRY, ALAN. Come a long journey; a novel. 249p $5.95 Doubleday

LC 74-103746

"A white man and an Indian canoe down the Yukon River to Dawson City, hunting and camping as they go. . . . The bulk of the narrative comprises two tales told by Dave, the Indian guide. The first, a . . . picture of an extinct culture, concerns K'Anta and how he attained the estate of manhood. The second is about two white men whom Dave reluctantly guided on a near-tragic wintertime search for silver." (Library J)

"This is the sort of book that should be recommended to young people. Reading it, they might well come to share [the author's] respect for the red man and his sense of human brotherhood. Vine Deloria's . . . 'We Talk, You Listen' [BRD 1970] . . . and Alan Fry's [novel] complement each other in giving us, through two points of view—Indian and white respectively—a better knowledge of a race too long neglected. The 'long journey' of the title is not entirely physical." J. S. Phillipson

Best Sell 31:412 D 15 '71 380w [YA]

"The nuances of man-to-man and man-to-environment confrontations are handled well. Fry is an authority on North American Indians and a former director of Indian affairs for the Yukon. His book should appeal to many readers." S. A. Haffner

Library J 97:84 Ja 1 '72 120w

Reviewed by Harry Malm

Library J 97:1180 Mr 15 '72 70w [YA]

"Into the account of a leisurely canoe trip down the Yukon River, Alan Fry weaves bits and pieces of the region's history and folklore. The canoeists are the narrator—an unnamed white man—and Dave, his Indian guide. As the two paddle downstream, hunting and fishing as they go, Dave fills his patron's ears with yarns and legends. . . . These anecdotes are drenched in the atmosphere of the outdoors, although tainted by a certain social unease between the white and the red man. How this impediment is dissolved is part of Mr. Fry's delightful natural history." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk II p80 N 21 '71 150w

FUERTES, LOUIS AGASSIZ. Louis Agassiz Fuertes & the singular beauty of birds: paintings, drawings, letters assembled and ed. by Frederick George Marcham; foreword by Dean Amadon; introd. by Roger Tory Peterson. 220p $35 Harper 598 Birds—Pictures, illustrations, etc.

SBN 06-012775-9

LC 76-156537

This "book consists of sixty paintings and some seventy-five wash drawings and pencil sketches. . . . There is also a selection of letters written by Fuertes to his parents and to his wife and children from the several expeditions he took part in—the United States Biological Survey Expedition to Texas in 1901, the American Museum of Natural History Expeditions to Colombia in 1911 and 1913, the Field Museum of Natural History Expedition to Abyssinia in 1926, and others." (New Yorker) Fuertes bibliography. Index.

"Any reader with a passing interest in art, natural history, or ornithology will find this a most desirable volume."

Choice 9:81 Mr '72 120w

Reviewed by Nelson Bryant

N Y Times Bk R p60 D 5 '71 160w

"Fuertes, who died in an automobile accident in 1927, at the age of fifty-three, was the leading American ornithological portraitist of his time, and his work—to judge from this selection—is still brilliantly alive. . . . The paintings are generously reproduced in good color, and some of them are truly stunning, but the drawings are equally interesting, both as drawings and as insights into the artist's methods. . . . The letters are a total surprise: Fuertes wrote as vividly, as precisely as he painted."

New Yorker 47:204 N 13 '71 210w

"Fuertes worked in water color in the first two decades of this century; his paintings are the kind that are both esthetically pleasing and precise enough to be useful to scientists. He . . . has managed, in these very formal pictures, to catch the spirit of the individual bird in a way that a camera never can. There is a force, a rush of personality here that I do not find in Audubon's work. . . . An exceptionally fine book." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 78:107 D 13 '71 210w

Va Q R 48:xxxiv winter '72 140w

FUJA, ABAYOMI. Fourteen hundred cowries and other African tales; with an introd. by Anne Pellowski; il. by Ademola Olugebefola. 256p $4.95; lib bdg $4.59 Lothrop

398.2 Folklore, Yoruban—Juvenile literature

LC 79-142811

"This collection of Yoruba folktales [concerns] . . . people and animals, nature and the gods. . . . The collector of these tales wrote: 'These stories are traditional, and are mostly connected with ancient beliefs. They were originally in verse, and were recited by initiates, and later told as folk stories by laymen.'" (Publisher's note) "Grades four to eight." (Library J)

"Telling of kings and princesses, gods and magic, jungle and domesticated animals, the stories are of high interest and present the variety of the possible relationships between men and animals. 'The Funeral of the Forest King' tells how the cat came to live with man. . . . 'The Orphan Boy and the Magic Twigs' how an orphan boy became the pet of the Town of the Animals. In their written form, the tales are noteworthy for authenticity, directness, and simplicity. . . . The many striking ink drawings are patterned with African motifs." V. H.

Horn Bk 47:379 Ag '71 190w

"Much humor and shrewd commentaries on people and customs mark these always entertaining [tales]. . . . Typical features of oral style—repeated songs and chants; proverbs at the end of the stories—and elements included in stories from other West African people are also found here, but the content and spirit of these and the many references to the Orisha, or gods, and other cults are distinctively Yoruban. Pen-and-ink drawings by a West Indian artist reflect motifs of Yoruban art." G. B. Herman

Library J 96:4184 D 15 '71 90w

FULD, JAMES J. The book of world-famous music; classical, popular and folk; foreword by William Lichtenwanger. rev & enl ed 688p il pl $15 Crown

016.78 Music—Bibliography. Music, Popular (Songs, etc.)—Bibliography

LC 70-147348

The book traces almost 1,000 "melodies back to their original printed sources. [It] draws from all types of musical works—classical music, spirituals, . . . popular songs, hymns, Christmas songs, theatre music. . . . Almost 100 new compositions have been added to the present edition. . . . The first line of the music and words of each work are also included in the original key. . . . [The book provides] biographical information, dates and places of first performances, original performing artists and dedications, the locations and publishers of first editions, revisions of music or words in subsequent editions, and an analysis of 200 years of American and European copyright law and currencies." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The first edition BRD 1966] provided detailed information about much familiar music—information that could not be obtained from standard references. There are thoroughgoing revisions and corrections in this new edition, which is enlarged by over 100 pages. . . . Highly useful bibliographical information has been added; orchestral parts for operas have been described; and in many cases first phonograph recordings are indicated. All this makes the second edition a significant improvement of what was already a quite valuable (and fascinating) scholarly work."

Choice 9:353 My '72 100w

FULD, J. J.—Continued

"Opening bars of all sorts—from Eine kleine Nachtmusik to 'Men of Harlech' to 'What's New Pussycat?'—are included, along with the facts about their composition and publication. If you can't remember how the Parsifal prelude begins, open to the P's—but don't look further, or you'll hum all day." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 55:75 My 6 '72 70w

FULLER, JEAN OVERTON. Swinburne: ■ biography. 317p pl $8 Schocken

B or 92 Swinburne, Algernon Charles
ISBN 0-8052-3388-1 LC 79-146790

The author contends that Swinburne's relations with his cousin Mary Leith 'started in their childhood on the Isle of Wight and developed to their climax during the subsequent periods that he spent with his family on the island. . . . Miss Fuller found in the British Museum a series of letters from her to Swinburne . . . [which she believes] make it practically certain that [Mary Leith] was the original Dolores or Faustine, the sadistic Swinburne woman who haunts all his verse.' (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. First published in England in 1968 as Swinburne: a critical biography.

"[Fuller's thesis is based on] a very one-sided argument marked by inconsistency, frequent gaps in logic, and an overly-literal reading of Swinburne's poetry—especially his early poetry—as elaborately autobiographical statement. She has a habit of treating startlingly arbitrary conjecture as fact, and she hastily passes over a good deal of literary writing both by Swinburne and his cousin that does not further her thesis of a shared perversion that bound them together all their lives."

Choice 9:58 Mr '72 150w

"[The author] has unearthed some fascinating evidence in support of [her] claim, but simply doesn't know when to stop. She is so zealous in her efforts to make this relationship the central experience of the poet's life and art that her book founders in a flood of speculation and overstatement. . . . The portrait that emerges overly reduces Swinburne to his sexual drives. The literary criticism that is regularly mixed in displays very little sensitivity to the poet's writings. The chatty style, redolent of literary gossip, does not help either. . . . [This book] presents some important new information, but now someone needs to make more careful use of it." Keith Cushman

Library J 96:4003 D 1 '71 180w

FULLER, R. BUCKMINSTER. Intuition. 190p $5.95 Doubleday

153.4 Intuition, Thought and thinking. Reason
LC 72-182837

This book is "an expression of one of [Fuller's] fundamental ideas: that humanity is suffering from a kind of cosmic near-sightedness, an inability to comprehend universal principles, due to concentration on special 'parts.' Only by using our whole minds—our intuition, as well as our reason—will we be able to fulfill our unique role in the universe." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by P. J. Kameen

Best Sell 32:213 Ag 1 '72 330w

"It is impossible to convey the density of illustration on the copiousness of Buckminster Fuller's thought in a brief synopsis. Nor is it possible to draw a hard line between those points in Fuller's thinking where description leaves off and prescription takes over. Science fact and science fiction blur, perhaps by design, in this collection of verse-essays in future-think. Written partially in English, partially in space-speak, the art of saying more with less words, Fuller's non-poems are a sort of physics refresher course cum brainstorm cum moral epistle." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p11 My 10 '72 550w

"The book argues that the future of mankind 'is dependent upon/Our continuing physical health and agility,/Metaphysical clarity and/ Spontaneous initiative.' The lucidity and logic of the discussion, as it leaps through a comprehensive landscape of the sciences, may not be enhanced by the scientific-poetic form that the book takes, but undoubtedly it is a stimulating and enlightening tour directed by this 'Universal Man's' far-ranging perception." C. J. Gray

Library J 97:2413 J1 '72 230w

"Fuller is ■ fascinating eccentric who may also be one of our great minds. He is himself convinced that this is so, and his new book is a sort of demonstration of what a great mind should do with itself on a good day. What should it do? It should generalize. . . . I felt slightly dizzy after finishing intuition, but at least I knew what I had read. Fuller has an orderly mind and goes one-two-three through his now aging acrobatics (he is 76)." Reed Whittemore

New Repub 166:25 Je 10 '72 500w

"Each of the long poems in Buckminster Fuller's new book is explicitly concerned with the philosophy of that 'cleaner' technology that we hope to substitute for the 'dark Satanic mills.' Despite this advantage the poems fail, and on the most elementary level. . . . One sees evidence throughout this book that Buckminster Fuller is indeed exquisitely sensitive to certain forms of beauty—the poem 'Intuition' is a kind of hymn composed for the launching of a sailing vessel. But framing seemly, shapely speech is not among his gifts. . . . Fuller is plainly a man who must be judged by his actions for his intuition fails him when he sets out to speak to his fellow men." Emile Capouya

Sat ■ 55:67 Je 24 '72 850w

FULLER, REGINALD H. The formation of the Resurrection narratives. 225p $6.95; pa $3.95 Macmillan (N Y)

232.97 Jesus Christ. Bible. N.T. Gospels—Criticism, interpretation, etc.
LC 77-123140

The author has expanded and rewritten material delivered in a course of lectures at Union Theological Seminary in 1967. Fuller's "plan is to start with the earliest record of the Easter traditions, in 1 Corinthians 15, and then to apply the tools of tradition and redaction criticism to the Easter narratives of the four Gospels. . . . In the process [he] seeks to lay bare the motivations behind the developments and shaping of the narratives into their final form. . . . [In the last chapter he] discusses what New Testament belief in the resurrection really involves . . . and how the Easter pericopes can be used in preaching today." (Introd) Indexes to biblical references; to ancient authors and anonymous ancient writings; and to modern authors.

"The New Testament evidence for the resurrection of Jesus, which is the natural starting point for any serious theological investigation, offers its own peculiar problems. The Gospel traditions are impossible to harmonize; they are separate expressions of the Easter faith, redacted according to the special viewpoint of each evangelist. Behind all these traditions, of course, is the conviction that Jesus of Nazareth lives, but his mode of living is differently conceived in the four Gospels. . . . Fuller's book shows that exegesis, no matter how judicious and sane, cannot by itself fully explain the meaning of the resurrection for today." R. J. Clifford

America 125:462 N 27 '71 140w

"Anything by Reginald Fuller is worthy of attention. Here he faces the problem of discrepancies in resurrection narratives, pushes back as far as one can into the traditions, and reconstructs the account with an eye to understanding the various theories that motivated the disparate accounts."

Christian Century 88:755 Je 16 '71 60w

TLS p1399 N 17 '72 280w

FULLER, ROY. Owls and artificers; Oxford lectures on poetry. 136p $6.95 Lib. press

821 English poetry—History and criticism. American poetry—History and criticism
ISBN 0-912050-06-3 LC 70-158611

In these six lectures delivered in 1969 and 1970 Fuller comments on such topics as the critics of poetry, poets, good and bad poetry and the work of Wallace Stevens and Marianne Moore. Index.

"Fuller (Oxford) is a non-nonsense British critic (and poet). . . . Sometimes he is interesting, sometimes he is provocative, but mostly he is tiresome. Furthermore, who would find this capriciously titled book in the library? The whimsical chapter headings ('The filthy aunt and the anonymous seabird,' 'Woodbine Willie' lives!', etc.) certainly offer no clue as to the contents, nor would Fuller's reputation here be enough to direct readers to the volume. Not recommended."

Choice 9:213 Ap '72 90w

"The first [of these lectures] harking back to Matthew Arnold, is full of shrewd comments on the cultural scene. Mr Fuller's strongly commonsensical bias also enables him to puncture the pretensions of glib critics or humourless literary expositors. He is genuinely knowledgeable about poetic techniques, and has some interesting things to say about Marianne Moore and Wallace Stevens. . . . But one does not feel, reading these disquisitions, that they spring from a powerfully creative mind, or even a powerfully critical one. To some extent, Mr Fuller's modesty, good sense and good humour are disarming; but these qualities are not sufficient to compensate for the absence of originality."

Economist 239:64 Je 19 '71 250w

Reviewed by William Walsh

Encounter 38:61 D '71 300w

Reviewed by Ian Hamilton

New Statesman 81:882 Je 25 '71 550w

TLS p721 Je 25 '71 3500w

FUNNELL, B. M., ed. Symposium on micropalaeontology of marine bottom sediments, Cambridge, England, 1967. See Symposium on micropalaeontology of marine bottom sediments, Cambridge, England, 1967

FURHAMMAR, LEIF. Politics and film [by] Leif Furhammar and Folke Isaksson; tr. by Kersti French. 257p il $12.50 Praeger

791.4 Moving pictures. Propaganda

LC 71-131353

"The first of the book's three sections deals with the history of politics and film, notably in the United States, Britain, Germany, and Russia. There are also chapters on Italian neorealism, the cinematic depiction of the Spanish Civil War, and the new Brazilian cinema. The second section [covers] . . . works of propaganda . . . [and] propagandistic entertainment films. . . . The final part of the book . . . [discusses] the aesthetics of propaganda, the depiction of political figures (including Lenin, Roosevelt, and Mao), the presentation of the home front and of the enemy, the use of indignation to justify aggression, and parallels between the mythology of the political cinema and European folk legends." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Bryan Barney

Canadian Forum 52:40 J1/Ag '72 1150w

"[The first section] suffers from several historical oversimplifications and many points are simply stated rather than proven. However, the final two sections are more than adequate. Part 3, in particular, contains quite a good analysis of movie stereotypes and the ways in which these images can be manipulated to achieve a given political end. In all sections, the authors draw on a large body of film examples. Useful for both public and academic libraries."

Choice 9:521 Je '72 130w

"The book pretends to be nothing more than a historical survey, and it seems to me quite useful in its rather unambitious way. There is a special sense of humor that goes along with the deadpan narrative manner: usually a simple plot summary is enough, as with 'Thomas Ince's Civilization, in which Christ allows himself to be reincarnated in the body of a dead submarine engineer so that he can rise again and preach his gospel of peace to the world.' That was during World War I. . . . [The authors] show how tenaciously large-studio propaganda has survived into our own day, though perhaps they go wrong in fretting so much about such pure exploitation pieces as The Green Berets and Che!" David Bromwich

Commentary 53:93 Ap '72 1050w

"This book is uneven for reasons other than the difficulty of the subject: Furhammar's essays risk ideas and are clearer and more consistent; Isaksson is pedestrian and sometimes contradictory. Yet, written from the perspective of Swedish neutrality, this book may be an important beginning."

J Aesthetics 30:568 summer '72 400w

"A penetrating, sometimes ponderous diagnosis of how film is employed in propaganda, this work supports empirical research which indicates the media reinforce rather than convert. Near the end of their world-wide study, the Swedish authors hesitatingly suggest that a cumulative effect of watching a number of propaganda films may be a subtle change in the viewer's attitude. . . . The book is well illustrated, with primary emphasis on European movies. . . . [This] is a major contribution to the study of communications, sociology, and film." Bill Katz

Library J 96:3633 N 1 '71 140w

FURLONG, WILLIAM B. GBS/GKC; Shaw and Chesterton, the metaphysical jesters. 206p $7.95 Pa. state univ. press

828 Shaw, George Bernard. Chesterton, Gilbert Keith

SBN 271-00110-0 LC 77-114616

The author examines the situation of the "two renowned writers, close personal friends despite diametrically opposed philosophies, who engaged in continuing public controversy on religious and political matters over a long span of years." (Choice). Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is a brilliantly beautiful and witty book. . . . Furlong well brings into focus many needed revisions in how most readers now tend to think of both Shaw and Chesterton. . . . 'Scholarly' lately has come often to mean 'boring,' 'pedantic,' 'fussy.' Furlong's book is none of these things. . . . A reviewer might even now be tolerated for calling it, much as Wallace Stevens once called poetry, a memorable example of 'the scholar's art.'" W. T. Noon

America 123:101 Ag 22 '70 600w

"As Furlong would be the first to declare, this subject should have been examined in depth years ago, when memories of the Shaw-Chesterton debates were still fresh and when valuable information had not yet withered on the vine. . . . Furlong has done an excellent job with the available materials. He is particularly skillful in making clear the respective strengths of G.B.S. and G.K.C. as debaters. . . . An important study and highly recommended."

Choice 7:1230 N '70 230w

Reviewed by J. W. Sprug

Library J 95:3473 O 15 '70 110w

FURNEAUX, RUPERT. The Roman siege of Jerusalem. 274p $6.95 McKay

933 Jerusalem—Siege, 70 A.D. Jews—History
LC 73-150062

The author reconstructs "the events preceding and during the Roman siege of Jerusalem. He sees the final revolt as the result of a consistent build up of irritations and minor incidents acted upon by a combination of Zealots, Messianists, and early followers of Christ, including, during his lifetime, Jesus himself. The description of the four-year battle for the Holy City takes up the major portion of the book." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Misprints and bad Latin abound. Much worse however, is Furneaux's historical method. One rarely sees 'may' and 'possibly' so heavily used or used to build so dogmatic a structure: Josephus and the New Testament are prejudiced; when they say something they 'may' have had unknown reasons for silence. The book deals far more with Christianity than the title suggests. Furneaux's fanciful approach to history 'might' explain the career of Jesus, but it makes the behavior of the fathers of Christianity totally inexplicable. Not recommended for anyone."

Choice 9:1182 N '72 150w

"[The author relies] heavily on the controversial histories of Josephus. . . . Furneaux liberally paraphrases Josephus, but always takes him with a grain of salt because of his subsequent 'defection' to the Romans after the Jewish defeat. The author does not mention using any new information in his writing. . . . This is, though, a complete one-volume treatment of the event." Deborah Halprin

Library J 97:1429 Ap 15 '72 190w

FURNISH, VICTOR PAUL. The love command in the New Testament. 240p $6.95 Abingdon

225.8 Love (Theology)
ISBN 0-687-22809-3 LC 75-172814

In this study, the author "seeks to trace and define the various ways [the] tradition of the love command that stems from the teachings of Jesus was received, interpreted and applied as manifested in the New Testament and certain other early Christian literature. To accomplish his purpose, Furnish closely examines the tradition as it surfaces. First he considers the Synoptic Gospels, then the writings of Paul, the Johannine corpus, the remainder of the New Testament and, lastly, a few selected writings from the Apostolic Fathers." (America)

FURNISH, V. P.—Continued

"This book is a good one by reason of the quality of the author's scholarly presentation and evaluation of the biblical data, his insights into the shifting interpretive contexts revealed in the shifting meaning of the tradition, and also his carefully drawn conclusions. The book, however, will sustain to its end only readers with a professional biblical interest (although the scriptural citations in the text are in English). Much of it—where the analyses and evaluation occur—makes for the dull reading characteristic of articles in biblical quarterlies. The conclusions . . . are, however, not only not dull but important for the life of each individual Christian and of every Christian community as the recipients of the command to love." Edward Glynn

America 126:300 Mr 18 '72 400w

"[This is] a thorough and clearly written study, the best features of which are the abandonment of a word study approach in favor of a contextual notion of meaning in the examination of the pertinent New Testament passages, and concluding section which offers concrete suggestions for Christian ethicists. . . . A most useful book for seminarians, and graduate students, and for undergraduates in advanced courses. Bibliographical information appears only in footnotes, which is slightly inconvenient."

Choice 9:984 O '72 160w

"[This is] a book of worthy New Testament scholarship which, we hope, will fall into the hands of parsons and laymen. It could even help change little corners of the world."

Christian Century 89:176 F 9 '72 80w

FURNISS, W. TODD, ed. Higher education for everybody? See Higher education for everybody?

FURTH, JOHN L., Jr. auth. Shaking the money tree. See Knowlton, W.

FUSS, PETER, ed. Nietzsche: ■ self-portrait from his letters. See Nietzsche, F. W.

FUSSELL, PAUL. Samuel Johnson and the life of writing. 303p $9.50 Harcourt

B or 92 Johnson, Samuel
ISBN 0-15-179266-6 LC 76-142087

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Economist 245:70 O 7 '72 150w

Reviewed by Douglas Dunn

New Statesman 84:167 Ag 4 '72 950w

TLS p1241 O 20 '72 470w

The FUTURE of American transportation [ed. by Ernest W. Williams, Jr.]. 211p $5.95; pa $2.45 Prentice-Hall

380.5 Transportation
SRN 13-345827-X; 13-345819-9 (pa)
LC 72-160529

These "papers presented by and to a group of transportation experts meeting in the Thirty Ninth American Assembly [an affiliate of Columbia University at] Arden House [Harri-man, N. Y.] in 1971, . . . focus on the present crisis in the American transportation system, both intercity and urban. . . . [The book deals] with present transportation goals, public policies and regulations, the extent to which they affect both the transportation of freight and the movement of passengers, and possible technological improvements in the transportation systems." (Choice) Index.

"Since the emphasis is on public policy, regulatory agencies, demand and supply of transportation, and financing and pricing policies, it would probably be of most interest to the more advanced student of transportation."

Choice 8:1617 F '72 100w

"[This work] tells more about the regulatory process than many people will care to know, yet the composite picture of how consumer protection got inverted—particularly at the

I.C.C.—gains something from all the overlapping detail. . . . For a book with such a sweeping title, there is little imagination or advocacy here. The remedies these authors offer are all modest manipulations of transport economics; perhaps wisely they discount technological cures. They concentrate, however, on railroad regulation, touching only lightly on auto and transit issues and not at all on the compelling case for deregulation of the airlines. There is an air throughout of resignation at the prospect that 'ours will be essentially a highway oriented society and economy regardless.'" Christopher Lydon

N Y Times Bk R p54 S 26 '71 330w

The FUTURE of general adult books and reading in America; ed. by Peter S. Jennison and Robert N. Sheridan; with an introd. by Daniel Bell. 160p $8.75 A.L.A.

028 Books and reading
ISBN 0-8389-3105-7 LC 73-122508

"These papers report a conference sponsored in 1969 by the Adult Services Division of the American Library Association with cooperation of the American Book Publishers Council and the assistance of the National Book Committee. . . . The papers appear in this order: (1) an introduction outlining the basic components of social change; (2) a prediction of the reading public in 1980 based on demographic, educational, and economic projections; (3) the media as taste makers; (4) the relative influence of the market in the publisher's decision; (5) the literate nonreader; (6) the generalist reader in ■ specialist society; and, . . . (7) prospects for the future." (Library Q)

"In general, the conference was optimistic about the future of the book in the United States and predicted that the quality and quantity of actual reading would increase. But there were also some differences of opinion. All of this makes for interesting and informative reading. This book should find a place on the shelves of every professional library collection and should be required reading for all librarians who are concerned with the kind of adult library service they will be providing in the next decade." G. S. Robinski

Library J 96:2281 Jl '71 490w

"[Most of these papers are] thoughtful, provocative, and well-written." H. W. Winger

Library Q 41:333 O '71 1050w

The FUTURE of our religious past; essays in honour of Rudolf Bultmann; ed. by James M. Robinson; tr. by Charles E. Carlston and Robert P. Scharlemann. 372p $18.95 Harper

200.9 Theology. Bultmann, Rudolf
LC 70-148440

These 15 "essays in English translation . . . are organized under two rubrics, 'exegesis' and 'theology and philosophy' and represent the work of such . . . Biblical scholars as N. Dahl, Kuemmel, Kaesmann, Koester, Thyen, Dinkler, G. Bornkamm, and Conzelmann, and of theologian-philosophers Ebeling, Fuchs, Krause, Gogarten, Heidegger, and Jonas." (Choice) Bibliography. Index of modern scholars. Index of references.

"In August 1964, the 'Old Marburgers' presented Rudolf Bultmann with a published collection of essays written in his honor and which, before and since, is probably unequalled as festschriften go, with respect to breadth of subject matter and distinction of contributor. . . . The value of the work is enhanced by the editor's trenchant observations concerning the significance of Bultmann's work. . . . English-speaking scholars will welcome the availability of these essays in good translation for their own use and that of their students."

Choice 9:518 Je '72 150w

Christian Century 88:1422 D 1 '71 70w

The FUTURE of the international legal order; ed. by Cyril E. Black and Richard A. Falk; 5v; v2. Wealth and resources; ed. by Richard A. Falk and Cyril E. Black; written under the auspices of the Center of int. studies, Princeton university. 343p $11 Princeton univ. press

341 International law. International relations
ISBN 0-691-09217-6 LC 68-20866

"This second in a series of five volumes planned by the editors focuses on the capacity of the international legal system to cope with international economic development heavily influenced by 'rapid and dramatic technological progress.' . . . [The first chapter] discusses 'The Relevance of International Law to the Processes of Economic and Social Development.' . . . The second and third chapters are frameworks for the analysis and formulation of law relating to 'The Deprivation of Foreign Wealth' and the use of the sea. . . . [The final chapter] is devoted to 'The Relevance of International Law to Emerging Trends in the Law of Outer Space.' (Ann Am Acad) Index. For volume one, Trends and Patterns, ed. by Richard A. Falk and Cyril E. Black, see BRD 1970.

"[This massive undertaking] is living testimony to the continuing renaissance of international law. . . . [The editors'] task is descriptive, projective, synthetic, and eminently normative. It aims at nothing less than a comprehensive legal-political-economic policy science for exploring the possibilities of attaining a more orderly world. . . . Quite apart from the unifying topical emphasis which the editors sought to provide, three of the contributions also share commitment to a well-developed methodological approach." E. B. Haas
Am Pol Sci R 65:584 Je '71 1700w

"[The first chapter] is a useful summary of the development of institutions and treaty arrangements which have brought increasingly important economic and social activities under the rule of law. . . . [The last chapter] gives a useful review of the major achievements to date in the legal regulation of space activities and 'a balanced assessment of future needs and prospects.' For the non-lawyer, the first and fourth chapters are the most useful. These, too, are the chapters in which the material is presented in the clearest and most readable form." L. M. Goodrich
Ann Am Acad 399:177 Ja '72 270w

G

GABOR, DENNIS. The mature society. 208p $7.50 Praeger 301.24 Science and civilization. Social change
LC 72-75690

The author of Inventing the Future (BRD 1964) "calls, first, for a replacement of economic growth with an improvement in the quality of life. He proposes a vigorous early education, greater use of psychological testing, and the building of an inner discipline in people in preparation for his version of a permissive society. He also believes that a new education . . . can transform human nature for the better; that everyone can be employed at his intellectual capacity, using a person's IQ and EQ (ethical quotient) to that end; and that computer simulation techniques can be used to help government plan for the future." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Economist 244:55 J1 15 '72 140w

"Interestingly, the latest attempt at forming a Utopia comes from a winner of the Nobel prize in science. Gabor, shocked by symptoms of malaise, believes that civilization needs drastic change. He offers, if not a blueprint, very specific suggestions on how to 'create a happy, smiling society.' . . . [His] ideas, which might have been dismissed as reactionary a few years ago, are now more likely to stir interest and controversy among educators, philosophers, and civil-rights as well as law-and-order advocates." Daniel La Rossa
Library J 97:2609 Ag '72 180w

"[Gabor's] concept of a mature society is one in which growth is abandoned as an ideal and in which everyone is content to find his natural IQ level in a binary system of either mass or elite education, but never the twain should be confused. . . . What selfish madness it has become to think that economic growth per se is the enemy of mankind rather than the so many wicked and divisive uses we put it to. I blush to think of this book in the hands of Asian and African readers. . . . It never seems to dawn on Professor Gabor, amid all the misuse he makes of economic and social data, that 'stability' in modern social systems can only be growth controlled and the end of social justice." Bernard Crick
New Statesman 84:57 J1 14 '72 900w

"There are two vast voids in [the author's] argument which leave me with a sense of unreality as I try to envisage his projected future as one possibility among others. First, he gives almost no attention either to the political processes, or to the political institutions, that might be involved in bringing about the social changes that he thinks necessary. . . . The second great void is to be found in the language that he uses, particularly when he speaks of 'making' people interested in this or that by social pressures: the void is an absence of any psychological theory." Stuart Hampshire
N Y Rev of Books 19:13 S 21 '72 600w

"[Professor Gabor] offers some mildly technocratic suggestions . . . but it must not be thought that [he] believes in 'technological fixes' for all problems. He has a very good chapter on 'autonomous technology', that from a combination of individual gadget-worshipping and corporate vanity, has produced such abominations as the Americans' ecocide in Vietnam, and our own Concorde. Some critics will find Professor Gabor an inconsistent mixture of generally reactionary tendencies: an elitist in social philosophy, an opponent of material progress, and an admirer of drop-out communes. But for those who doubt whether the promise of civilization is adequately achieved by enabling Everyman to fly to Majorca for his fish and chips, Professor Gabor offers insights and aphorisms worth having." TLS p714 Je 23 '72 800w

GADDIS, JOHN LEWIS. The United States and the origins of the cold war, 1941-1947. (Contemporary Am. hist. ser) 396p $12.50; pa $3.95 Columbia univ. press

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—Russia. U.S.—Politics and government—20th century.
World politics—1945-1965
ISBN 0-231-03280-7; 0-231-08302-5 (pa)
LC 75-186388

The author of this study "of United States policy toward the Soviet Union during and immediately after World War II . . . [argues that] well as] economic considerations other forces—, domestic politics, bureaucratic inertia, quirks of personality, perceptions, accurate or inaccurate, of Soviet intentions—also affected the behavior of Washington officials. This book seeks to analyze these determinants of policy . . . [and to consider] the impact on Soviet-American relations of such issues as Eastern Europe, Germany, international communism, military strategy, economic assistance, the atomic bomb, and postwar planning." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"It is gratifying to read a well researched, sensible book on the origins of the cold war. . . . Essential for all college and university libraries."

Choice 9:1036 O '72 190w

Reviewed by J. W. Spanier
J Am Hist 59:768 D '72 450w

"In a striking counterattack upon recent revisionist historiography, Gaddis, an associate professor of history at Ohio University, has produced strong support for the orthodox position that the U.S. was less responsible for bringing about the cold war than was the Soviet Union. . . . Carefully researched and lucidly written, [his] study is a valuable contribution to our understanding of the most crucial period in modern American foreign policy making." Charles DeBenedetti
Library J 97:1323 Ap 1 '72 200w

Reviewed by D. F. Fleming
Nation 216:24 Ja 1 '73 460w

"The cold war [say recent revisionists] ensued only because suspicious Washington policy makers mistakenly identified the Soviet dictator as the sponsor of the revolutionary left."

[Gaddis] refocuses on specific Soviet-American differences as the real nucleus of the cold war. In the most satisfactory post-revisionist treatment of American policy making to date, [he] has assimilated some of the specific revisionist criticisms, even while rejecting the frame of economic causality in which they are often presented. . . . As ex parte history, [this] account cannot be a final evaluation. Its limitations, however, are compensated by a sensitivity to the context of [the author's] ample documentation—a quality too often lacking in the revisionist excerpting of policy statements—and an awareness of the genuine uneasiness that helped generate the policies of 1945-46." C. S. Maier
N Y Times BK R p6 ■ 10 '72 1150w

GADEA, HILDA. Ernesto; a memoir of Che Guevara; tr. from the Spanish by Carmen Molina and Walter I. Bradbury. 222p pl $6.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Guevara, Ernesto
LC 76-160869

Guevara's first wife gives an account of how she met him in "1953, and of the period that preceded his departure [for Cuba] aboard the ship Granma in November 1956. . . . [It] covers mainly the period spent in Guatemala and Mexico, which [she] considers to have been the formative stage in Ernesto's life." (Introd)

"How stilted the portrait of Guevara! The reader is not even certain that the two were lovers until the author drops the news, quite casually, that she is pregnant. Except for those readers determined to track down every episode of Guevara's early life, [R.] Rojo's book [My friend Ché, BRD 1968] remains a better choice. Gadea's most valuable contribution is her revelation of a close intellectual relationship between her husband and American Marxist Harold White. Some of Guevara's letters and statements by his friends of this period, which are quoted in an appendix, afford a far richer view of the man than Gadea's text. Recommended for academic libraries." Mark Falcoff
Library J 97:2574 Ag '72 260w

Reviewed by J. G. Daly

Library J 97:3824 N 15 '72 110w [YA]

"I have a suspicion, but it is no more than that, there may well have been a very deep and meaningful relationship between the author and Ernesto Guevara, but in these pages it seems one of the most desultory and passionless affairs of all time. The dialogues between them, even allowing for the faults in a translation that often reads as though English were the translators' second—or third—tongue, have all the verve and color of a Stalinist-era epic of the kolkhoz. . . . [This portrait is] bathed in the same aureole as that used by the propagandists and the legend makers. Hilda Gadea . . . has done a disservice to Che, and to the revolution for which he died, by painting him like just another of those plaster saints that are sold for a handful of coins outside churches." Richard Seaver
Sat R 55:56 S 2 '72 1050w

GADNEY, REG. Somewhere in England. 181p $5.95 St Martins

LC 74-174645

The plot involves "a Nazi war criminal loose in England . . . a researcher writing a thesis about extermination camps, a missing body [and] an important reel of film." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Although there is a modicum of suspense, this effort lacks the pace and style of good suspense writing."

Best Sell 32:22 Ap 1 '72 60w

"The Nazis in Gadney's [novel] are shadowy faces waiting to be identified on old German film clips which form an historical movie collection in the desolate depths of Suffolk. The collection is partly destroyed by fire, and Peto, a cataloger who has become very suspicious, tries a little sleuthing. Naturally, the obligatory nasty beating takes place, and he uncovers to his cost far more than he had bargained for. This nightmare of too inquisitive people asking too many questions has a realistic feeling for sinister atmosphere and a nicely obfuscated plot." Henry Veit
Library J 97:903 Mr 1 '72 70w

Reviewed by Susan Hill

New Statesman 82:340 S 10 '71 50w

"There are no heroics here. But . . . there is the feeling of fatal inevitability as a secret organization moves in to stop the research work. Gadney is a master of tightly-packed prose and fast-moving narrative, and with a few words can suggest a sleazy milieu, the desperation of the hunted, the patience of the hunter. He is one of the most successful exponents of the genre." Newgate Callendar
N Y Times Bk R p41 Mr 19 '72 130w

Reviewed by Haskel Frankel

Sat R 55:86 My 13 '72 130w

GAGE, NICHOLAS, ed. Mafia, U.S.A. 397p il $10 Playboy press

364.1 Mafia. Crime and criminals—U.S.
LC 72-85960

A collection of articles and excerpts covering "the Mafia's history in Sicily and in the U.S., its more notorious personalities, its 'home life' (the families and the women), its structure and finally its . . . grip on American business and politics." (Publishers' Weekly) Index.

"It had to come. Somebody had to print a 'Portable Mafia Reader.' Some of the best-known, if not the best-qualified authorities on organized crime are here. . . . For anybody who glances at a good daily newspaper, or reads a 'magazine of opinion' there is little new in this book. Several sections may be worth re-reading." Rev. J. M. Murphy
Best Sell 32:373 N 15 '72 170w

"Gage has compiled a sourcebook on the Mafia. His selections are primarily from already published material. . . . Also included are a few pieces 'commissioned . . . specifically for this book' on such topics as the Mafia's activities in New Jersey. Authors, most of whom are reporters, include Peter Maas, Hank Messick, Stanley Penn, Gage himself, and Fred J. Cook among others. . . . The treatment is popular. No doubt much of the material will duplicate present holdings; however, the balance and scope for the collection justify consideration for purchase where interest is high." D. W. Harrison
Library J 97:3609 N 1 '72 170w

"[The] author of The Mafia Is Not an Equal Opportunity Employer [BRD 1971] has compiled a book that is highly readable, if necessarily uneven. . . . The most valuable contribution of Mafia, U.S.A. is the exposition of Mafia muscle in supermarkets, labor unions, Hollywood, and small businesses, and a discussion of the standard Mafia fare—hijacking, bookmaking, policy, dice games, and loan-sharking. The best section of the book deals with the lesser known victims of the Mafioso, —his wife, his sweetheart, and his daughter. . . . Gage [has] put together a book with a unifying theme of corruption rather than sensationalism." James Conaway
Sat R 55:86 N 18 '72 1000w

GAINES, CHARLES. Stay hungry. 262p $5.95 Doubleday

LC 79-186023

"Craig Blake is a rich young Birmingham (Ala.) sport who fancies himself an experienced collector. At one time or another he has been in love with game fishing, sky diving, trap shooting and rodeoing, usually for peripheral, atmospheric reasons. One day during his lunch hour he comes across a body-building emporium, and is immediately transported into a nightmare alleyful of subcultural relationships. . . . He works out with Joe [Santo, 'Mr. Alabama'] and his cronies, and revels in the exotic flavor of their lives and its 'closeness to the heart of things.' Craig gets too close to the heart of things when he takes Santo's girl, a champion water skier from Opp (Ala.)." (N Y Times Bk R)

"One looks for promise in a first novel and it is here, in the raunchy dialogue—especially when Franklin is speaking—and in the graphic description of the strongmen at work. The weakness in Mr. Gaines' novel is that he sets up an expectation which is not fulfilled. For all of his selfish indulgence, Craig Blake with his fine body and quick response is a likable man, and his common sense should have warned him that he had nothing to gain from these weirdies. But he does not mature as the story proceeds and it is for this reason that I prefer the impressionable chapters to what follows." Edward Weeks
Atlantic 230:90 Ag '72 650w

"Blake goes on to ruin his low-caste friends, and herein lies the flaw in the book. The Establishment characters are sadly stereotyped, and Blake, while not a strong man, appears too well-intentioned and too thoughtful to be their unwitting instrument. Consequently, the underlying themes—the 'Authentic's' vulnerability and the Establishmentarian's inability to learn—are not quite compelling. The book has compensations, however. There is good use of detail in describing the health club milieu. Gaines has a good ear for dialogue, a strong sense of plot, and a restrained lyrical fluency which is frequently powerful. The characterization of the health club people, especially Santo, is well-done. This is a serious work by an unusual talent, and it will be widely read." Lee Sullenger
Library J 97:3333 O 15 '72 200w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p31 Ag 13 '72 170w

"Most of the [body] builders, as Blake is warned, are rough as cobs. But Joe Santo is another matter. He is not only an athlete of mythic skill but a knockabout saint whose sort last surfaced in the works of Kerouac and Kesey. In short, he is good, clean wish fulfillment, and author and hero fall in love with him, in the manner of small boys. Santo does an impromptu star turn at a rodeo, befriends and soothes some strung-out hippies, and finally hands over his golden girl friend to Blake. What is very good in the novel is Blake's undeluded but cheerful acceptance of people and things that he knows are both second-rate and a bit flaky. . . . Charles Gaines, who is able to write about muscular matters without sounding as if he were arm wrestling with Hemingway's ghost, . . . [gives the body builders'] posing contests a kind of loopy dignity." John Skow

Time 100:67 Ag 14 '72 430w

GAINES, ERNEST J. A long day in November; drawings by Don Bolognese. 137p $4.95; lib bdg $4.58 Dial press

LC 70-147131

"The life style of a cane-plantation worker in the early 1940's is . . . re-created through the eyes of a child, Sonny, who recounts the events of that momentous day when his parents quarreled, separated, and were finally reconciled through the aid of Madame Tous-saint, an old woman skilled in the arts of voodoo." (Horn Bk) "Grades five to eight." (Library J)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin

Book World p6 (children's issue) N 7 '71 230w

"[This book] calls for a reader sufficiently sophisticated to appreciate the subtle nuances of characterization, the skilled uses of contrast, and the superbly realized setting of the rural, black Southland. Indeed, rather than a story about a child, it is about adult relationships. . . . Consequently, what makes the book succeed from the adult's point of view may tend to limit its appeal for children: first, because the child narrator, a first-grader, is too young to interest the average adolescent; second, because he is acted upon rather than being the prime mover; third, because he senses the problems but plays no real part in their solution. Listing these points for consideration is not intended to discourage, but rather to encourage, those working with young people to find the right audience for a well-wrought story which is very real and touchingly human." M. M. B.

Horn Bk 48:153 Ap '72 290w

"Developed from a story that originally appeared in the author's adult collection, Bloodline [BRD 1968], this remains essentially an expanded short story. Yet, given the single track on which it runs, the story succeeds exceptionally well. . . . The viewpoint of an engagingly egoistic six-year-old is perfectly sustained: his parents' separation concerns him only as it affects his own well-being (e.g., because his preoccupied mother didn't help with his reading lessons, he 'wee-weed' in his pants at school and disgraced himself). The dialogue is sharp and believable and the Louisiana sugar cane plantation background is perfectly realized." P. D. Pollock

Library J 96:4184 D 15 '71 200w

"Ernest Gaines, maybe because he is black, and can see people moving under their skins, has written a story about a black family, and has made them sound like people. Not only that, he has written a wonderfully funny book, funny the way Sholom Aleichem's shtetl stories are funny. It treats of a vanished world, the author tells us, an insular, superstitious world of back-breaking work and near poverty. . . . That humor can rise out of such a setting makes it all the richer and more powerful. . . . This is a very satisfying book. Ernest Gaines includes those small, human details that so many authors neglect. The passions and humor in this story may climb to epic proportions, but the people stay little and for real. Don Bolognese's illustrations are fine and flavorful." Marilyn Sachs

N Y Times Bk R p8 F 13 '72 400w

GAINHAM, SARAH. Takeover bld. 191p $5.95 Holt

ISBN 0-03-084910-1 LC 73-102143

This is a novel about the "struggle for power in a large modern corporation. The setting is Brussels. . . . [The] cast is international; a cultivated Irishman who works as the Brussels representative of an American computer firm; a . . . young Australian woman whom the Irishman hires for his office; the American chief of the firm, who comes to Brussels on a business trip and promptly collapses in an alcoholic mess . . . and an unpleasant lawyer named Creech, who is sent to Brussels by some of the firm's scandalized shareholders to have the chief put out of the way on medical grounds." (New Yorker)

Best Sell 31:472 Ja 15 '72 90w

Reviewed by Henri Veit

Library J 97:699 F 15 '72 170w

"With her customary narrative elegance, Sarah Gainham tells the story through one of the tycoon's henchmen, who stands miserably by while stress, drink, tranquilizers and a delinquent game finish off his boss. Money won't buy happiness, the author intimates—and, if I didn't know it before, I know it now." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p32 Ja 9 '72 120w

"The story is briskly told and often entertaining, but it is also quite pessimistic. One notices, almost with relief, a few anachronisms."

New Yorker 47:99 Ja 22 '72 130w

"As a tense, fast-moving, and admirably authentic narrative [this novel] is much to be commended; Miss Gainham not only knows the world she describes, she succeeds in packing into it, with remarkable economy, a good deal of caustic comment about its values and rewards. . . . Where she is much less successful is in the characters of the girl and the Chief himself; neither quite escapes caricature. This is a less thoughtful and less deeply felt book than Miss Gainham's earlier successes."

TLS p328 Mr 26 '70 600w

GALARZA, ERNESTO. Barrio boy. 275p $7.95 Univ. of Notre Dame press

301.45 Mexicans in California. Mexicans—Social life and customs
ISBN 0-268-00440-4 LC 70-146805

"The author tells what he remembers from his childhood days [starting] in the small Mexican village of Jalcoctan (not far from Tepic), where he was born, and lending when as a teenager he is about to enter high school in his adopted hometown of Sacramento. . . . He recounts the way of life of the poor in Mexico and his experiences during the Mexican Revolution of 1910 that led to his being brought to America. The latter part of the book describes what it is like to grow up in the barrio, or the lower part of town." (Library J) Glossary.

"Galarza has written other books concerned with Mexican-Americans, but none as effective as this one. . . . A timely book for libraries with a demand for Chicano literature, this also should be of interest to the general reader here and abroad." A. D. Trejo

Library J 96:1358 Ap 15 '71 140w

"The opening pages on Jalcoctán [the author's] native village in the Sierra de Navarín, are a soft and excellent evocation of how a child takes root in tradition. The section on his family's 'peregrinations' down to Tepic, the state capital, and then to Mazatlán, in the next state north, in search of peace and work, is an illuminating record of the forebodings of ordinary rural Mexicans at the beginning of the revolution. The passage on the flight north from Mexico to Nogales, Tucson, and finally Sacramento, where Uncle Gustavo and José had found work 'on the track,' belongs among the choicest accounts of debarkation into America." John Womack

N Y Rev of Books 19:15 Ag 31 '72 200w

GALBRAITH, CATHERINE ATWATER. India: now and through time [by] Catherine Atwater Galbraith and Rama Mehta. 148p il $4.95 Dodd

915.4 India—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-396-06318-7 LC 72-145392

"The wife of former American Ambassador to India John Kenneth Galbraith and a former Indian Foreign Service Officer have collaborated on this . . . survey. . . . The emphasis [is] on India's historical and cultural past and the physical features of the country, way of life, the family and caste. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades six to nine." (Library J)

Best Sell 31:433 D 15 '71 20w [YA]

"The description of modern India seems far more interesting than the historical sections."

GALBRAITH, C. A.—Continued

... The book's strongest asset, ... is the authors' open acceptance of India on its own terms—they refrain at all times from making Western value judgments about the country. The writing is remarkably clear, and only a few times (as in the footnote on Indian music) does the book confuse rather than elucidate. [It is a volume], more for reference than for pleasure reading." A. L. S.

Horn Bk 48:158 Ap '72 180w

"While India's relations with Pakistan are not sufficiently explored here [the authors present an] excellent chapter on India's problems and progress since independence. ... [The book's] straightforward style and well-chosen photographs recommend [it]." Elva Harmon

Library J 97:784 F 15 '72 150w

"[This] is a graceful and accurate book—discerning in the selection of details it makes to describe Indian life and also in the choice of photographs. Here and there its bland and unpretentious text is even enlivened by a morsel of personal anecdote of first hand description." Joseph Lelyveld

N Y Times Bk R p8 F 27 '72 300w

GALLANT, ROY A. Man's reach for the stars. 201p il col il $5.95; lib bdg $6.70 Doubleday 629.45 Manned space flight. Space medicine. Outer space—Exploration LC 74-129895

About one-third of the book is taken from the author's Man's Reach Into Space (BRD 1960); "the rest is new. After five, ... 'case accounts' in the history of man's ventures above the earth, the discussion focuses on the major physiological and physical problems inherent in space travel, and presents descriptions of what is being done to meet and overcome these hazards." (Library J) Index.

"This informative book will be a delight to those who wish to learn more details about man's conquest of space. [It] is especially helpful in presenting some of the challenges of aerospace travel to both man's mind and body. ... The book offers a fine chronicle of the progress in medicine and engineering that has made it possible for man to realize his goals in space. Included ... are some spectacular photographs taken from spacecraft." Rev. F. R. Carmody

Best Sell 31:433 D 15 '71 160w [YA]

"The final two chapters discuss planetary exploration and the possibility of other life forms with a fresh approach, factual and technical knowledge and just enough supposition and educated guessing to tantalize readers and stimulate them to further investigation. ... One will not easily (if at all) find elsewhere a discussion of the Grand Tour (the sweeping unmanned survey of the outer planets projected for the late 1970's) ... that is as detailed. ... Only minimal reader knowledge of space travel is assumed, and there is a very good explanation for the age level of the theory of relativity as applied to time dilation in interstellar travel. ... Unfortunately [the book] lacks a bibliography." P. M. Mitchell

Library J 96:2928 ■ 15 '71 320w [YA]

GALLER, MEYER, comp. Soviet prison camp speech; a survivor's glossary; supplemented by terms from the works of A. I. Solzhenitsyn; comp. by Meyer Galler and Harlan E. Marquess. 216p $10 Univ. of Wis. press

491.77 Russian language—Slang—Dictionaries. Prisons—Russia. ISBN 0-299-06080-2 LC 75-176411

"According to the compilers the purpose of this work is to record and define a ... sector of Russian vocabulary not properly recorded elsewhere, and incidentally to facilitate the reading in the original of the works of Solzhenitsyn and others. ... [The authors attempt] to sift out, from Russian argot at large, those entries most pertinent to the prison-camp milieu—proverbs and sayings, abbreviations, criminal argot, and miscellaneous terms other than these. A few obscenities general to Russian are also included." (Library J) The words are arranged alphabetically in Cyrillic with English definitions and examples of usage in Russian. Bibliography.

"The work is remarkable not only for the void it fills, but for its scholarly quality, harmoniously fusing as it does Galler's 'field knowledge'—ten grim years of it—with Marquess' expertise in Russian proper, lexicography, and English stylistic practices. It should be emphasized that to use this glossary a knowledge of Russian is not absolutely required: it is essentially an English-language document (the Russian entries, and Russian words and phrases elsewhere, are nearly always followed immediately by an English translation in kind). The compilation will have a useful place not only in Russian language and literature studies, but also in history, sociology, political science, lexicography, and linguistics collections, and (for its some 50 proverbs) even in folklore." B. H. Smeaton

Library J 97:1694 My 1 '72 190w

"[This] may call itself a glossary, but it is far from being a simple word-list. It contains an account of Russian argot in general and of prison-camp speech in particular, together with a discussion of the possible sources of and reasons for their special vocabularies. It also has a useful survey of other works on Russian argot, and since each entry gives at least one sentence showing how a particular word or phrase is used, the Glossary is an excellent guide to the syntax of spoken Russian. ... The Glossary emerges as a fascinating description of life in Soviet prison camps. The authenticity of the descriptions cannot be doubted, since the survivor of the title is also one of the authors."

TLS p838 J1 21 '72 230w

GALLO, MAX. The night of long knives; tr. from the French by Lily Emmet. 310p il $8.95 Harper

943.086 Germany—History—1933-1945. Röhm, Ernst SBN 06-011397-9 LC 79-138715

This is an account of the events which led to the murder and assassination of Ernst Röhm and the leaders of the SA, Sturmabteilung or "Brown Shirts", by which Hitler broke its power. Bibliography.

"Another move-by-move historical reconstruction, mildly overwritten in regard to weather and setting and romantically unspecific as to information sources, but on the whole well organized." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:92 Ag '72 80w

"'Long Knives' was first published in France, and this edition is a translation. ... It is characterized by the author as a historical narrative, source material for it being the Institute of Contemporary History in Munich, trial documents, newspapers, memoirs, historical studies, interviews, and trips to the scenes of the events. ... The writing is vivid and suspenseful, with background descriptions of the beautiful German countryside. There are eighteen pages of illustrations, appendices of extracts of Hitler's and Röhm's speeches, and bibliography." R. E. O'Brien

Best Sell 32:213 Ag 1 '72 550w

"Gallo has written a dramatic account of the dreadful night and the events which led up to it. The essential details are not new: they appeared in Sir John Wheeler-Bennet's authoritative account of the rise and fall of Hitler's Germany, 'Nemesis of Power' [BRD 1954]. ... The Gallo book treats the same material in more detail, a d in a style perhaps more suited to today's readers. As retold it puts to rest convincingly the question of whether there was a plot against Hitler. The answer is no. ... [The book] adds up to a dramatic reminder of what truly dreadful things happened in Germany under Adolph Hitler—not so long ago." J. C. Harsch

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 23 '72 500w

"[Gallo] tends to sacrifice analysis for mood and description [and] is held prisoner by his you-are-there approach; because of it, questions lie unanswered, and interpretations are never rendered. The account is peppered with verbatim quotes and dialogues, but there are virtually no footnotes and only an emaciated bibliography. In short, Hitler's 'Omnibus Purge' deserves a clearer, more precise treatment."

Library J 97:2390 J1 '72 160w

GALLO, MAX. Robespierre: the incorruptible; a psycho-biography; tr. by Raymond Rudorff. 336p $8.50 Herder & Herder

B or 92 Robespierre, Maximilien Marie Isidore de France—History—Revolution, 1789-1799 LC 73-147034

"Within the context of French history and revolution, ... [Gallo] describes Robespierre's childhood as an orphan, the poverty in his youth, the frustrations of his career, his solitary nature, his obsession with death. ... He [also] examines the rigid morality and incorruptibility of a fanatical mind. Robespierre's almost perverse desire not to be liked [and] his refusal to ingratiate through charm or favors." (Publisher's note) Chronology.

"Gallo has given us what he calls ■ psychobiography, something far more ambitious than a slice of conventional history and immensely less reliable. . . . [He] approaches his subject armed with Freud and with a lack of subtlety well suited to his topic. . . . Gallo does his job well enough; he is orderly and thorough and from time to time casts an eye around, to note that France was troubled by more than his hero's agonizing over an unhappy consciousness. The result, inherently a dubious job, is fairly well carried off. . . . Gallo has explored every likely corner of Robespierre's character and personality. The whole adds up to a compelling portrait . . . [and his] insights into the man's deepest sentiments and aspirations lift his narrative, finally, to lyrical heights." J. P. Reid

Commonweal 96:219 My 5 '72 850w

"[Gallo] provides a number of imaginative insights into the thoughts and motivations of this complex individual, but too often he has merely strung together snippets from the 'Incorruptible's' speeches, presenting a rather pat psychological pronouncement for each. Unless the reader is thoroughly conversant with the bewildering revolutionary period, he will become bogged down and confused. Gallo writes very well indeed, but the title seems to promise so much more than the text delivers. Buttressed with footnotes and bibliography (which this volume curiously lacks), Gallo's conclusions might have formed the basis for a shorter, more incisive monograph. Recommended for larger academic collections." M. R. Yerburgh

Library J 96:2762 S 15 '71 120w

"Translation of a silly piece of French journalistic history, taken from potted French Revolution books. . . . The author is neither biographer nor psychologist, just a hack. Poor Robespierre, lonely man, always hoped the People would be Daddy. Off with his head! Gallo's too!"

N Y Times Bk R p56 S 26 '71 70w

GALLUP, DICK. Where I hang my hat. 80p $5 Harper

811
LC 70-123977

This first collection of Gallup's poems concerns his "memories, his reflections on his loves, his travels, and the way of the world." (Library J) Some of these poems appeared in such periodicals as Columbia Review and Paris Review.

"As one might expect, this first collection of poems encompasses a great deal that is personal. . . . Gallup is a resident of New York's East Village, and many of his poems reflect the life style of that unique place. I was put off by both over-simple and murky poems that call for a kind of 'in' understanding. [Gallup] is at his best when he writes of music; then a sensitive lyricism is apparent. Here is a rough poet, with good possibilities for growth. For large collections." Jerome Cushman

Library J 96:1985 Je 1 '71 120w

"A superb craftsman, Gallup displays a fine wit and great control over a number of different tones of voice. There is the tongue-in-laughing-cheek of A Chinese Murder, the bewildered irony of The Door to the Future, the mockingly bitter Call It Egypt. . . . What disturbs me, however, is the slightness of some of these poems, their unwillingness to grapple with 'the somber light/Of history'. . . . [Gallup raises] issues in his poems in language that is often vague and ambiguous; then he sidesteps them—neatly, deftly, and wittily—but frustratingly nonetheless." David Lehman

Poetry 119:229 Ja '72 440w

GALLUP, GEORGE. Politics & the press. See Politics & the press

GALLWITZ, KLAUS. Picasso at 90; the late work. 221p il $35 Putnam

752.6 Picasso, Pablo
LC 76-157061

The text provides an introduction to Picasso's works of the last 25 years, discussing them under thematic headings (e.g., "portraits").

"[This book] will probably take its place among the more important books on the man largely because it provides the best overview of the last quarter century of Picasso's work. Gallwitz' contention that the work of the past 25 years is the finest of the career is at best questionable. . . . [The text] is thorough, sensible, and scholarly."

Choice 8:1576 F '72 200w

"[Gallwitz] does an especially nice job of reproducing and analyzing the large series of works, particularly those after earlier artists' masterpieces. While some are available elsewhere, the reproductions here are important as an up-to-date corpus of images in various media. Their quality does seem good."

Andrew Robison

Library J 96:4085 D 15 '71 130w

"[This is] a lavishly illustrated record of ■ great artist's decline." Hilton Kramer

N Y Times Bk R p75 D 5 '71 180w

"[The] title is misleading; originally called 'Picasso Laureatus,' it deals with what Picasso has done since 1944. Gallwitz's text is dreadful to the point of unreadability . . . and he fails to include complete sequences of drawings, but for all its sins it is a pleasant book, with lots of decent reproductions of the pipe-smoking men, sensual nudes and variations on old-master paintings that have occupied Picasso in the last quarter century, and which convey something of the exuberance and serenity of Shakespeare's last plays." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 78:103 D 13 '71 160w

GALVIN, THOMAS J. Current problems in reference service. 162p $9.95 Bowker

025.5 Libraries—Reference service
ISBN 0-8352-0425-1 LC 77-162527

This "is a collection of thirty-five . . . problem case studies intended for instructional use in both formal and informal teaching-learning situations in the field of librarianship. . . . [These case studies] deal with issues of current concern to reference librarians and library administrators (such as service to the disadvantaged and to minority groups, reference inquiries in controversial or sensitive areas, application of performance budgeting to reference service, and the like)." (Pref) Bibliography.

"[This volume] may be used in conjunction with the thirty case studies published in Mr. Galvin's earlier collection, Problems in Reference Service: Case Studies in Method and Policy [BRD 1965]. . . . This new collection should be attractive to anyone engaged in the training of library personnel. The cases are drawn from actual library situations. . . . Many older problems are of perennial concern, and thus four cases contain variations on the theme of censorship. The situations presented sometimes go well beyond the usual concept of general reference. . . . As raw material, the cases vary in quality. Some are much richer than others in the possibilities offered for investigation, interpretation, evaluation, and resolution." L. N. Yarbrough

Col & Res Lib 33:152 Mr '72 450w

"The cases are quite varied, dealing not only with bibliographic problems, but with ticklish situations like that of the problem teenager 'seemingly caught in the act of destroying an expensive encyclopedia and the librarian must decide quickly whether or not to call the police.' . . . All are interesting and all have been tested on the author's students at Simmons." F. N. Cheney

Library J 96:3301 O 15 '71 390w

"[This book] is as 'current' as the latest sit-in in the reference room or the most recent library reading list on sex education. . . . The great amount of thought and care expended in constructing these cases tends to indicate that the author could contribute many insights in the content of the cases and their utilization in the classroom situation. . . . Galvin strives to include [a multitude of elements]—personalities, situations, environments, policies, limitations of collections, and pressure of time. [He] is concerned with specific books only when he wishes to indicate that, as part of an environment, they are present or absent. In fact, some cases in Current Problems in Reference Service could be more useful as the basis of sensitivity training sessions for librarians than as a problem for reference sources." M. B. Mickey

Library Q 42:349 Jl '72 1250w

GAMOW, GEORGE. The moon; rev. by Harry C. Stubbs; ill. by Bunji Tagawa and with phot; introd. by Isaac Asimov. 126p $4.95 Abelard-Schuman

523.3 Moon

ISBN 0-200-71761-8 LC 73-137588

This revised edition, first published in 1953, is "about the moon and its properties, and the history of lunar observation. It covers the preliminary results of project Apollo." (Choice) Bibliography. Index. For the first edition see BRD 1953.

"[The book] is illustrated with drawings and photographs obtained on recent flights to the moon. . . . Those subjects which are covered are explained in terms of elementary scientific principles, and there is considerable anecdotal detail concerning scientists and writers about the moon. In sum, a good book which ought to be available to any interested teen-ager, and could be recommended by science teachers."

Choice 9:77 Mr '72 190w [YA]

"[This revision] is not up to the late author's usual high standard. The necessary corrections following the Apollo lunar landings usually appear as paragraphs added to the original sections which present now-incorrect or outdated material. Otherwise helpful diagrams and photographs are not well correlated with the text and lack identification numbers. . . . As a presentation of lunar facts, it's acceptable only as a replacement for earlier editions."

P. M. Mitchell

Library J 97:2488 J1 '72 190w

GANN, L. H., gen. ed. Colonialism in Africa, 1870-1960, v3. See Turner, V.

GANN, L. H., ed. Colonialism in Africa, 1870-1960; ed. by L. H. Gann and Peter Duignan. [5v]; v2. The history and politics of colonialism, 1914-1960. (Stanford Univ. Hoover inst. on war, revolution & peace. Publications) 563p maps $17.50 Cambridge

960 Africa—History—Colonial period. Africa—Politics. Europeans in Africa
SBN 521-07732-X LC 75-77289

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Marcia Wright
Am Hist R 77:1164 O '72 700w

Reviewed by Harvey Glickman
Am Pol Sci R 66:232 Mr '72 1600w

Reviewed by D. K. Fieldhouse
Engl Hist R 87:387 Ap '72 300w

GANNON, FRANKLIN REID. The British press and Germany, 1936-1939. 314p $10.50 Oxford

070.4 Germany—Foreign opinion, British. English newspapers. Germany—Politics and government—1933-1945
ISBN 0-19-821490-1 LC [79-28781]

Basing this study "of British attitudes towards Germany during 1936-39 . . . on the material printed during this period in 10 British daily and Sunday newspapers, and supplementing it with material from the archives of The Times, the Manchester Guardian, and several collections of personal papers, Gannon concludes that . . . what emerged was a single policy of appeasement." (Choice)

Reviewed by M. A. Fitzsimons
Am Hist R 77:797 Je '72 400w

"This study . . . holds no surprises, but it does provide the why to England's posture of appeasement. It relates that while the press generally shared a common revulsion to the Nazi methods of barbarities, it reacted to the German government along left-right political lines. Many of the issues taken by the newspapers concerned attitudes formulated in Germany a decade before the Nazis came into power."

Choice 9:423 My '72 140w

"Gannon assesses the performance of the leading dailies and weeklies impartially in turn—their reports from Germany . . . their editorial comment, and some of their internal discussion as recorded in inter-staff correspondence. All but one, the Daily Express, came sooner or later to recognise the magnitude of the threat posed by Nazi Germany, politically and militarily. . . . The British press on the whole handled the phenomenon of Germany [with] . . . an honest perplexity and confusion difficult to appreciate with today's hindsight. Mr Gannon's conscientious research absolves the former leadership of The Times from the frequent charge of having been party to a 'plutocratic conspiracy based upon property interests' that recommended giving Hitler a free hand in the east so as to secure the west against encroachment. Things were by no means as straightforward as that." Economist 240:49 Ag 7 '71 800w

"[This is] a lively, opinionated book in which the author achieves an original approach to the well-worn issue of British appeasement in the 1930's. Though I found the case which Dr Gannon tries to prove basically absurd, I am grateful to him for collecting so much information in his effort to prove it. After all, what matters in a book of this kind is not the rightness of the author's conclusions but the new ideas he throws up in trying to reach them. . . . This [is an] entertaining and instructive book." Richard Crossman

New Statesman 82:240 Ag 20 '71 1000w

"For the purposes of his study Mr Gannon has taken the British press to be the London newspapers of that time plus The Manchester Guardian. . . . [His] major conclusion that appeasement was the product of a crisis of the liberal conscience is justified. . . . His revelations are valuable. His use of the correspondence between Crozier, The Manchester Guardian's editor in those years, and Vogt, the paper's diplomatic correspondent, is fair to both men. It is also of absorbing interest. . . . Whether the economic factors, both newspaper and national, were as important as Mr Gannon thinks in deciding editorial policies is doubtful. . . . [He] is on his strongest ground when noting the British press's 'fundamental inability to understand the potential depths of Nazi brutality'. This was true of the actual depths also."

TLS p959 Ag 13 '71 850w

GANSHOF, F. L. The Carolingians and the Frankish monarchy; studies in Carolingian history; tr. by Janet Sondheimer. 314p $12.50 Cornell Univ. press

944 Charlemagne. France—History—To 1328
ISBN 0-8014-0635-8 LC 72-147074

"Collected in this volume are sixteen of . . . [Ganshof's articles] devoted to the Carolingian monarchy. In some his purpose has been to clarify the institutional, legal, and ecclesiastical structure of the Regnum Francorum under Charlemagne; in others he has outlined the activity of [Charlemagne's] personality as it affected particular fields. Two articles deal with the . . . Frankish empire under Charlemagne's son and successor, Louis the Pious, who despite attempts to consolidate his father's achievement ended by precipitating its dissolution. The break-up occurred in 843, with the treaty of Verdun; the immediate causes of this tragedy are discussed in the concluding article." (Publisher's note) Select bibliography of the publications of F. L. Ganshof. Index.

"This particular volume is new in the sense that for the first time 16 articles and/or addresses to learned societies have been assembled and 12 of the 16 have been translated into English for the first time. The articles/addresses were originally delivered during the years 1947-65. Sondheimer should be commended for her accurate and readable translations. The readership audience of this book should be large among medievalists, those interested in the history of institutions as well as in origins of Western Europe. . . . Two maps . . . useful index; each article followed by a complete set of notes. Recommended for purchase by college libraries."

Choice 8:374 D '71 180w

"The value of such a collection from the pen of a big historian is that it enables one to see the writer's mind extended over a number of related topics. His approach to the past stands out more clearly, and one begins to understand why certain matters attract him while others do not. The last thing one could say of Ganshof is that his interests were narrow. In fact, his range is very great. . . . Here we have a beautifully integrated picture of the Carolingian age from Pippin III to the first Lothar. . . . What is certainly not good is the index, which describes itself as 'not exhaustive'. Indeed it is not. It is worthless. But nothing can seriously detract from the great value of the collection as a whole, which is entirely worthy of a great scholar." J. M. Wallace-Hadrill

Engl Hist R 87:106 Ja '72 650w

TLS p1255 O 20 '72 500w

GARAUDY, ROGER. The crisis in communism: the turning-point of socialism; tr. from the French by Peter and Betty Ross [Eng title: The turning-point of socialism]. 255p $7.95; pa $2.95 Grove; for sale by Random house

335.4 Communism. Socialism
ISBN 0-394-47587-9; 0-394-17763-0 (pa)
LC 74-155124

The author's "thesis is that both capitalism in the U.S. and communism as presently constituted in Russia have failed to take advantage of the twentieth century scientific and technological revolutions. . . . [He points out that in] the United States it has been thought that the development of productive forces alone will settle the problems raised by this new revolution; in the U.S.S.R. it has been similarly thought that mere changes in the relations of production with their abolition of private property will automatically solve these new problems. Garaudy believes that new models of socialism that will avoid these errors are truly possible." (Publisher's note)

"Garaudy's thesis is an amalgam of the 'post-industrial society' and 'convergence' themes that have lately become popular in left-liberal and neo-Marxian intellectual circles here and in France. . . . On the whole the book is well written, and it would make a satisfactory introduction to [its] topics were it not for Garaudy's unrelenting addiction to preaching and to showing ad nauseam that his analysis is in the true spirit of Marx and Lenin, in contrast to the rigid dogmas of the misguided faithful (often the book reads as if it were a dissident Communist's effort to straighten out the party.) The mold, it seems once again, is exceedingly difficult to crack." L. S. Kaplan

Library J 97:3173 O 1 '72 350w

"At the 19th party congress in February, 1970, Roger Garaudy . . . was expelled from the Central Committee and Politburo. His book 'The Crisis in Communism,' was exhibit A in the Garaudy case and is now published in this country. . . . Garaudy perceives a 'new historic bloc' on the horizon: an alliance of workers with the engineers and technicians of the post-industrial world. Communist parties, Garaudy believes, must adapt to these new conditions or perish. . . . Empirical studies of the 1968 strikes cast some doubts upon a 'new historic bloc' as the basis of a specifically French model of socialism. In the French Communist Central Committee, however, the Garaudy affair was not an empirical issue. Garaudy resembles a modernist Biblical scholar loose in a fundamentalist camp meeting." R. O. Paxton

N Y Times Bk R p48 S 24 '72 500w

GARBER, FREDERICK. Wordsworth and the poetry of encounter. 195p $7.95 Univ. of Ill. press

821 Wordsworth, William
ISBN 0-252-00184-2 LC 71-157888

Following a consideration of "The Solitary Reaper" in which the author "identifies the Highland Lass and her song in Erse as the encounter that leads Wordsworth to a heightened awareness of self, Garber points out similar events in many of the poet's familiar lyrics. In this study, the enlargement of the self in the apprehension of the 'palpable' event becomes the central, though evanescent, experience in Wordsworth's poetry and the nexus of his characteristics as a poet." (Choice) Index.

"Despite its modish title, Garber's book is a distinguished analysis of elements that make up the experience often at the center of Wordsworth's poetry. . . . [The author] enriches his treatment of Wordsworth's poetic method with illustrations drawn from French and German as well as English poets. His book will put the advanced undergraduate in closer sympathy with Wordsworth's poetry."

Choice 9:813 S '72 150w

"Professor Garber's characteristic mode is overemphasis, and his criticism is full of earnestly elaborated statements of the obvious. There may be those who are pleased by [his] work as an intellectual construct, but few will find it increases their pleasure in the great and beautiful and moving poetry that is nominally his subject."

TLS p1186 O 6 '72 370w

GARBERI, MERCEDES PRECERUTTI. Frescoes from Venetian villas; with a pref. by Antonio Morassi; tr. from the Italian by Patricia Larmar. 509p il $38.50 Phaidon

751.7 Mural painting and decoration
ISBN 0-7148-1442-3 LC 78-112413

"At the fall of the Venetian Republic in 1797 there were about four thousand villas in the provinces of Venice, Padua, Treviso, Vicenza, Verona, Udine, Belluno and Rovigo. . . . The author of this book has selected the seventy-five most important of [those still standing] and describes . . . not only their painted ceilings and walls but also some of the . . . interior settings of trompe-l'oeil architecture and ornaments. . . . [The artists] discussed and illustrated include . . . masters such as Giambattista Tiepolo and his son Giandomenico and the Ricci brothers, as well as local artists. The author is curator of the Musei Civici in the Castello Sforzesco, Milan." (Publisher's note) Bibliographies. Index of places. Index of names.

"The book contains new information and many previously unpublished illustrations and will therefore be used as a reference work by specialists despite its great inadequacies. Both the text and general presentation oscillate between coffee-table book and scholarly tool and meet the requirements of neither one. The decorations are only partially described in many instances. The illustrations are not titled, and there is no comprehensive list of plates. The black-and-white illustrations are of very poor quality. There is no index of subjects, which should be an essential tool for a proper reference work. A preface . . . that attempts to put the material in historical perspective is verbose and largely irrelevant. . . . The translation from the Italian is adequate but naive."

Choice 8:1442 Ja '72 130w

"[This is a] beautiful picture book on the frescoes, great and small, in the villas behind Venice. Leo Spitzer once referred to the rococo 'sense of the immediate accessibility to man of the enchanted garden of sensuous love.' It is nowhere better illustrated than in these luminous pastorals for summer people." Lawrence Alloway

Nation 213:666 D 20 '71 50w

"[Mural painting's] curious fusion of majesty and artifice reached its finest expression in Tiepolo's ceilings, but Tiepolo is only the name-star of this book. For anyone who thinks of 18th-century Venetian decoration only in terms of Tiepolo and two or three followers, the surprise will be the discovery of half a dozen provincial artists who make up in charm whatever they lack in stature." John Canaday

N Y Times Bk R p10 D 5 '71 100w

GARCIA MARQUEZ, GABRIEL. Leaf storm, and other stories; tr. from the Spanish by Gregory Rabassa. 146p $6.50 Harper

ISBN 0-06-012779-1 LC 76-138784

"Leaf Storm is a selection of early and late work by Garcia Márquez, the title piece (1955) being a short novel which introduced Macondo, the setting of A Hundred Years of Solitude [BRD 1970], a steamy, quintessential Latin American town. . . . 'Monologue of Isabel Watching It Rain in Macondo' is a companion piece written in the same year. 'Nabo' is an earlier story (1951), and the other four works are fables written in 1968, a year after the appearance of A Hundred Years of Solitude in Spanish." (N Y Rev of Books)

"Each of the stories, in its way, describes veneration of a far from ordinary sort. . . . [and] all are marvelous fables. . . . To call these allegories would be to suggest that they are 'symbolic' somehow and perhaps plainly stated. They are not; the texture is that of the prose poem, and the intention a restatement of religious belief. But the feeling one comes away with is that of enchantment, which is a sense of having endured terror and magic." Paul Theroux

Book World p3 F 20 '72 500w

Choice 9:820 S '72 170w

"Wild, comic, surreal, these stories will bear comparison with Kafka's tales or those of Borges. They feature a Marquesian blend of the wonderful and the probable. . . . The present translation shows us a major writer at his minor best, in materials written between 1951 and 1968. A savory potpourri of first-rate South American gothic." Victor Howes

GARCIA MARQUEZ, G.—Continued

Christian Science Monitor p8 F 24 '72
550w

Reviewed by Ronald Christ
Commonweal 96:504 S 22 '72 1150w

Reviewed by Earl Shorris
Harper 244:102 F '72 950w

Reviewed by Robert Lima
Library J 97:699 F 15 '72 130w

Reviewed by Ronald De Feo
Nation 214:632 My 15 '72 1900w

"[The translations] are impeccable throughout. . . . I am tempted to say that . . . [the author's] best work balances the elements of fantasy and reality perfectly, but that is too tidy a statement. His best work shows a slight tilt away from fantasy, shows that reality is winning ground, but only just." Michael Wood
N Y Rev of Books 18:26 Ap 6 '72 1700w

Reviewed by Alfred Kazin
N Y Times Bk R p 1 Ja 20 '72 1700w
New Yorker 48:125 Mr 11 '72 130w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 79:88 F 28 '72 550w

Reviewed by Martha Duffy
Time 99:84 Mr 13 '72 450w

GARDAM, JANE. A long way from Verona.

190p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

LC 76-171923

"Set in Yorkshire during the Second World War, [this] is a first-person novel 'written' by Jessica [Vyel] who is thirteen and suffering accordingly. . . . [Jessica] was told when she was very young that she was 'a writer beyond all possible doubt' and [has] spent the rest of her school life developing her literary talents (forty-eight-page essays scornfully dismissed by the English mistress). [Her] father had been a housemaster but decided late in life to become a curate. . . . [Mother] is now plunged into an almost penniless existence and is pulled this way and that by the conflicting demands of parish and household. . . . Age thirteen and up." (TLS)

Reviewed by Jane Langton
Book World p5 (children's issue) My 7 '72 140w

Reviewed by E. M. Graves
Commonweal 97:156 N 17 '72 180w

"The English background and vocabulary (how many American teen-agers know what 'smalls' are?) will put off some, but mature readers will appreciate the style and wit of Jane Gardam, who [as the heroine,] proves in her first novel that she also is a 'writer beyond all possible doubt.'" Sister Avila

Library J 97:2243 Je 15 '72 150w

Reviewed by Ann Thwaite
New Statesman 82:661 N 12 '71 90w

"Nothing . . . tips the book toward young readers until the close when, in a Dickensian flurry, old scenes are revisited and the departed send greetings. . . . One inclines naturally to identify Jessica with Jane Gardam: the book has the nubbinness of memoir and, in the conventional sense, no plot. But no plot does not mean no progression. Equally critical—what sustains 'A Long Way from Verona' as the novel it would be—is the fact that Jessica's narrative is less confession than revelation. . . . That is to say, Jessica's telling, her first-person (help!) narrative, is not a device or a dodge, it is itself the story. Just as the subject isn't for once alienation or angst or antithesis/Establishmentarianism. . . . The book is Jane Gardam's, and this, her first novel, makes her immediately an author to watch for, but the story is Jessica's in all its glorious passage from self-intoxication to tentative self-searching. Read her." Barbara Bader
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p28 My 7 '72 1100w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 55:75 Je 17 '72 120w

"Jane Gardam is a writer of such humorous intensity—glorious dialogue, hilarious set-pieces—that when one reads her for the first time one laughs aloud and when re-reading her, the acid test for funny books, one's admiration increases a hundredfold. . . . Through Jessica Mrs Gardam recreates the fun of being thirteen, the naivety, the self-absorption, the definite opinions, the lack of respect for establishment views—coupled with the awareness that there are such things as great novels, poems and paintings. . . . Jane Gardam has created a heroine whom most girls a little older than the acutely observant Jessica will find outrageously funny, breathtakingly outspoken and enviably offbeat. . . . The flavour of this brilliantly witty and agonizingly true-to-life first novel is impossible to convey. One wants to quote endlessly."

TLS p1512 D 3 '71 700w

GARDI, RENÉ. African crafts and craftsmen:

tr. by Sigrid MacRae. 243p il col il $24.95 Van Nostrand & Reinhold

745 Folk art, African. Arts and crafts

LC 73-126874

An "eyewitness description of 16 crafts of Western Africa, ranging from metal casting to fabric dyeing." (Choice)

"Superb plates (50 color, 142 black and white) generally face the pertinent text, but are only meagerly captioned. Good map. . . . Gardi has beautifully recorded with nostalgia and humane interest the crafts which are fast disappearing as even rural Africa is infected with the modern world. [He] raises ethnological questions, still impossible to answer, as to the origins of not only many tribes, but their craft techniques which are often mysteriously similar to those elsewhere in time and/or place. . . . Expensive, but recommended."

Choice 8:1324 D '71 130w

"One day tradition will succumb to technology," but meanwhile Gardi has recorded the major crafts of West Africa by means of this book's superb photographs and readable and authoritative text. Every step in the 16 crafts studied is detailed in a way that will enthrall any reader who appreciates the excitement of creation and loves to work with his hands. . . . Recommended for wide purchase for general libraries as well as special collections of Africana and art." M. D. Herriek

Library J 96:1601 My 1 '71 150w

GARDNER, BRIAN. The East India Company; a history.

319p pl maps $8.85 McCall pub. co.

954.03 East India Company (English). British in India. India—History

ISBN 0-8415-0124-6 LC 73-154262

This book describes how the East India Company "ruled over nearly one-fifth of the world's population; possessed its own army and navy, its own civil service, its own church; became the most powerful military force in Asia, and had a revenue greater than that of Britain. . . . Its heroes and villains [included] . . . Clive of India, Warren Hastings, Raffles, Lord Cornwallis (after Yorktown), Arthur Wellesley (and others)." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by E. D. Schmiel
Best Sell 31:457 Ja 15 '72 330w

Reviewed by G. M. Fraser
Book World p12 Ja 30 '72 1100w

"How a handful of Britons serving the Honourable East India Company came to control, directly or indirectly, the destinies of 250 million Indians and how that company then faded from the scene is something of an epic tale. And Mr Gardner tells it well. Using the many scholarly monographs already written on the company's activities, he manages to keep above the level of a boy's annual adventure story. The only defect is that he appears to think that the way to prevent dates from cluttering up a narrative is to tuck them away in tiny footnotes."

Economist 240:47 Ag 21 '71 600w

"This is a compact, popular account of the company. . . . It is well written, entertaining and informative. The author . . . does not pretend to have produced a history in depth. His book should, however, prove useful to those who want a reliable and accurate overview of the subject." T. E. Smith

Library J 97:69 Ja 1 '72 140w

"The story of the British East India Company is an epic of enterprise, fortitude, honor—and the dirtiest politics imaginable. It is also a fit theme for popular historian Brian Gardner, whose well-documented and entertaining account of the Company's rise, fall, and influence may be his best work in a prolific career of writing about the British Empire." Charles Miller

Sat R 55:65 Ja 22 '72 800w

GARDNER, R. F. R. Abortion: the personal dilemma: a Christian gynaecologist examines the medical, social and spiritual issues; with a foreword by J. A. Stallworthy. 288p $5.95 Berrmans

173 Abortion. Law—Great Britain
ISBN 0-8028-3414-0

"Beginning with a report on abortion in England before and after the 1967 British Abortion Act, Gardner goes on to discuss the ethical question: 'Is abortion ever justified?' Here he considers the answers offered historically by the church: . . . [This section includes a chapter on] . . . the spiritual status of the fetus. . . . Turning next to the medical and social question, Gardner . . . discusses such instances as those involving a diseased mother, an unwanted child, an illegitimate pregnancy, and the possibility of a deformed or retarded child. Gardner recognizes that the physical, mental and spiritual effects of abortion must be taken into account when deciding whether or not to terminate a given pregnancy." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. General index. Index of authors cited. Index of scriptural passages.

"Gardner [is] both an ordained minister of the United Free Church of Scotland, and a practicing obstetrician-gynecologist in Great Britain. . . . While in severe circumstances abortion can be morally right . . . the author fears abortion on request will lead women to be 'immature, psychopathic or unmotherly.' On balance, an excellently written, highly readable presentation of the case against abortion on request presented from a conservative Christian theological perspective. Good subject and author indices."

Choice 9:1048 O '72 130w

"Of British provenance, this generally conservative, largely antiabortion book raises many questions for the thoughtful. A humane Christian approach—though not necessarily the only position than can be congruent with Christian norms."

Christian Century 89:466 Ap 19 '72 40w

GARDNER, RICHARD A. Therapeutic communication with children: the mutual storytelling technique. 970p $25 Science house

616.8 Child psychiatry. Storytelling
SBN 87668-042-2 LC 71-155063

A psychiatrist at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University "describes and illustrates with 39 cases a procedure he has devised and used effectively in child psychotherapy. To the children, it is a fascinating game in which they tape-record a story as they would tell it to a TV audience. The therapist then tells his story—similar to the child's but suggesting more positive resolutions to elements that express anxiety, hostility, and other self-defeating attitudes. The examples are presented in verbatim transcript." (Library J) Bibliography. Patient index. Subject index.

"As described by Gardner, . . . [the storytelling technique] is imaginative, constructive, challenging, exciting, and pleasurable. . . . The verbal child responds readily to the technique, although it is contraindicated for psychotic and characterological problem children. It provides efficient, effective communication and is particularly useful in drawing out repressed and borderline-intelligent children. Gardner's ample illustrations with a variety of cases give substance to the effectiveness of this new approach. His contribution in systematizing the technique and spelling out its applicability is a very great one. A beautifully produced book."

Choice 9:136 Mr '72 130w

"The author is skilled in applying his method and in utilizing therapeutically the data obtained. He offers the method as a substitute for dream analysis, of limited application in child psychiatry." J. H. Di Leo

Library J 96:3768 N 15 '71 130w

GARDNER, W. J., ft. ed. Speeches and documents on New Zealand history. See McIntyre, W. D.

GARFIELD, LEON. The strange affair of Adelaide Harris; ill. by Fritz Wegner. 223p $4.95 Pantheon bks.

ISBN 0-394-82322-2 LC 72-160360

"'You snare and trap us with your charms,' the foppish rake Ralph says hopefully, as he guides his latest victim, Tizzy Alexander, to a hidden dell in the fields. But his evil intent is balked, for there lies a deserted infant upon whom Tizzy swoops with such fervor that she knocks her swain down. The infant is Adelaide Harris, placed there by her older brother, who—emulating the Spartan practice described by his history teacher—hopes to see the child suckled by a wolf. . . . Ages eleven to fourteen." (Smt R)

Horn Bk 48:153 Ap '72 300w

"The oh-so-tangled web of events and the comically treated 19th-Century stock characters—e.g., the saccharine heroine; the unreformed rake; the uncomprehending elders; etc.—make this spoofy title a delightful read." Nancy Berkowitz

Library J 96:3909 N 15 '71 270w

"The book doesn't quite live up to the possibilities of its beginning. But Wegner's illustrations help things along, the hideously entwined plot is neatly resolved and many felicities make up for some tediousness." Ann Thwaite

New Statesman 82:661 N 12 '71 80w

"Garfield's Dickensian tale romps through a web of cross-purposes, misunderstandings, and low-comedy chicanery, as Adelaide's removal to a poor-house perpetrates a chain reaction of volatile events." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:80 F 19 '72 180w

TLS p1509 D 3 '71 500w

GARFIELD, SYDNEY. Teeth, teeth, teeth; a treatise on teeth as related parts of man, land & water animals from earth's beginning to the future of time; includes thorough description of modern teeth care and advance dental treatment. 448p il $9.95 Simon & Schuster

617 Teeth, Dentistry

ISBN 0-671-21097-1 LC 74-162711

"In the first chapter . . . Dr. Garfield presents a . . . history of dentistry. He then describes the education of a dentist, the psychology of going to the dentist and routine dental hygiene. The major portion of the book deals in considerable detail with dental examination, diagnosis, treatment, and repair . . . nutrition, the protection of teeth in sports, and the teeth of fish and animals." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 8:1352 D '71 130w

"This is a fascinating and frustrating book. Dr. Garfield is a dentist with a good sense of humor, immense curiosity, above-average understanding of human reactions and feelings, and substantial artistic sense and ability. On the negative side the book shows little respect for the English language—as witnessed by misspellings, bad grammar, typographical errors, and wordiness. . . . Throughout, the text is enlivened and clarified by pertinent and imaginative illustrations, many by the author. . . . Garfield has gathered a vast amount of useful and entertaining information, and the book will have a broad appeal (a few of the stories are unsuitable for children). [The book] should be in all public, college, and dental libraries." W. K. Beatty

Library J 96:2332 Jl '71 210w

GARLAND, JOSEPH E. Eastern Point: nautical, rustical, and social chronicle of Gloucester's outer shield and inner sanctum, 1606-1950. 424p il maps $12.50 Noone house

917.44 Eastern Point, Massachusetts—History. Gloucester, Massachusetts—History
SBN 87233-019-2 LC 70-153378

"The Eastern Point of the title is a rocky spit of land that forms and protects Gloucester's harbor. This is a . . . history of that three-square mile peninsula. . . . [Included are] tales of shipwrecks, land feuds, military fortifications, yacht races, and the fishing industry . . . as well as anecdotes of the . . . diverse characters who have populated the cape." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is a labor of love, a mixture of scholarly and sentimental history. . . . A good selection of drawings, maps, and photographs supplements the text. Adequate bibliography, thorough index and chapter notes. Author's style ranges from literary to chatty. This is good local history and public and academic libraries in the New England area will wish to purchase."

Choice 9:275 Ap '72 120w

GARLAND, J. E.—Continued

"Garland, a native and a descendant of an early owner of the area, has indeed written what he calls 'lively local history.' . . . An example of the fine local history research and writing." R. C. Hilton

Library J 97:1321 Ap 1 '72 150w

GARNEL, DONALD. The rise of teamster power in the West. 363p $12.50 Univ. of Calif. press
331.88 International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America
ISBN 0-520-01812-5 LC 72-121185

"This study traces the growth and development of the Teamsters Union, and particularly the highway drivers organized and led by Dave Beck, during the . . . period prior to World War II." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Although Garnel has placed a number of limits on his study of the rise of the Teamsters in 11 Western states both as to time (ending 1942) and segment of the industry studies, he also offers the reader far more than the title promises. The book is an excellent combination of early history of the Teamsters, a study of Tobin and Beck, and an analysis of organizing and bargaining strategy. Garnel's study is based upon written documents plus extensive interviews with management and union officials."

Choice 9:689 JI/Ag '72 140w

"This book is balanced and well written. The author has carefully handled a controversial subject. . . . This otherwise excellent study is somewhat weakened by the author's too close attention to economic causation and his general neglect of political and social causes. Thus, teamster violence is never fully explained. Nevertheless, this is an important and valuable addition to labor history." F. L. Grubbs

J Am Hist 59:762 D '72 330w

"The literature dealing with the history and internal organization of our important unions is sparse, and this scholarly study of the emergence of the teamsters as a powerful national union is a welcome addition. . . . Garnel brings a wealth of new information to the argument that the emergence of the intercity trucking industry, as a result of great technological advances in vehicle size and performance, as well as highway design, changed the teamsters from a weak federation of nearly autonomous local unions into a powerful national force. Regional superseded local organization; and astute leaders like Dave Beck, a Seattle organizer, parlayed the new development into a leadership in which the focus of power moved from the locals to the national office." Ronald Filippelli

Library J 97:1429 Ap 15 '72 160w

GARNSEY, PETER. Social status and legal privilege in the Roman empire. 320p $10.50 Oxford

342.37 Law—Rome. Rome—History—Empire.
30 B.C.—476 A.D.
ISBN 0-19-825194-7 LC 71-574750

"In the opening three chapters it is demonstrated that even if there was no sharp distinction between the two sets of criminal courts in the early empire—the senatorial/imperial court as opposed to that of the urban prefect—the accused who were members of a higher status fared much better than those defendants of a low status. This is followed, in a second part, by the tracing of the evolution of dual systems of penalties, meting out lesser punishments to person of higher rank in contrast to the severe penalties imposed on those of low status. The third part of the volume, with chapters devoted to practice before the praetor and iudex, would extend the incidence of improper influence and actual discrimination to the field of civil actions." (Class World) Bibliography.

"The value of the book is in the cogent analysis of the development and use of legal privileges. . . . It is a valuable contribution to the field." Arther Ferrill

Am Hist R 76:1138 O '71 380w

Reviewed by J. L. Teall

Ann Am Acad 399:207 Ja '72 290w

"[This] is remarkable work and fundamental for all serious study of the Roman Empire. Every undergraduate can profit from it. Its style is clear, its organization coherent, its scholarship impeccable. Excellent bibliography; two full indices. Unconditionally recommended."

Choice 8:275 Ap '71 170w

"The volume follows a trend recently discerned among some young scholars which would substantially diminish the high regard given to the Roman Law fashioned by the jurists of the classical era. . . . [The arguments advanced] are closely knit and well presented. The citation of authority is formidable, and the whole is extremely interesting. On the other hand, there appears to be a somewhat easy sloughing off of conjectured interpolations made by reputable scholars of an earlier generation—which, if accepted, would vitiate many of Garnsey's arguments—and a tendency to mingle late third and fourth century data with second and early third century evidence as if there were no great social and economic, and hence legal, distinctions between the two epochs. Occasionally, the data are palpably irrelevant." A. A. Schiller

Class World 64:242 Mr '71 430w

"The book is chiefly concerned with criminal trials (including a long account of the senate's persistent claim that a senator should be tried before his peers), but Dr. Garnsey considers civil trials also. . . . His book is full of interest, well argued, and extremely readable."

TLS p873 Ag 7 '70 850w

GARRATY, JOHN A., ed. The Columbia history of the world; ed. by John A. Garraty and Peter Gay. (A Cass Canfield bk) 1237p maps $20; lib bdg $14.95 Harper

909 World history

ISBN 0-06-011432-5 LC 76-181621

This volume "concentrates not just on Europe and America . . . but also contains . . . chapters on Asian and African history. . . . [It deals with political as well as] social and cultural history." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[This] is a truly monumental undertaking calling for 101 reviewers, each a specialist in the 101 chapters. The sketchiest description of such a work suggests the inevitable strengths and weaknesses. For each chapter encapsulates, in readable, untechnical prose, a significant area of the human story as seen by a specialist. Despite the fact that the editors were allowed 'a remarkable latitude in organizing and editing,' I feel that they did not do their work as well as one might have hoped." C. J. McNaspy

America 127:160 S 9 '72 300w

"This book is immensely readable. Anyone with a modicum of historical knowledge and a real appetite for understanding man's history can . . . read it from cover to cover without boredom. It is reasonably comprehensive; it is, by and large, accurate in judgment as well as fact; it is, more often than not, a pleasure to read. . . . Its success on the campus will be immediate and it deserves a wide public success as well. . . . After a judicious survey of man's evolution to the neolithic revolution, the book gets off to an exceptionally brilliant start; indeed, the first 21 chapters, apart from three which deal all too cursorily with the East, are written with such élan, interlaced with sardonic and amusing wit, that one is almost impelled through the rest of the book. . . . [However] the chapters on Eastern history, particularly Chinese history, are absurdly short . . . and the few paragraphs on Red China are concerned almost entirely with its international relations." J. H. Plumb

Book World p3 Ap 30 '72 900w

"This is a carefully planned and brilliantly executed collaborative effort by scholars who have known each other well, and whose work emerges as an integrated synthesis. . . . The chronological tables and maps should be helpful to many readers. The bibliographical selections are often very inadequate; many indispensable titles have been omitted. . . . This book should be acquired by academic and public libraries of all sizes; one copy should go to reference and at least one other to circulation. It may also find a deserved place in high school libraries for use by more ambitious students." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 97:2587 Ag '72 250w

GARRETT, SHIRLEY S. Social reformers in urban China; the Chinese Y.M.C.A., 1895-1926. 221p $7.50 Harvard univ. press

267 Young Men's Christian Associations
ISBN 0-674-81220-4 LC 74-133213

"Aided by doctors and scholars . . . [the YMCA] sought, through the mass organization of native college students, to make Chinese cities better places in which to live. Garrett's . . . volume chronicles these YMCA activities from the founding of the Chinese YMCA on December 8, 1895 through 1926, when the 'Y' lost, to left wing philosophies, the college students it had relied upon." (Choice)

"Mrs. Garrett uses YMCA archives, the papers of its secretaries, and interviews to put together the story of the Chinese YMCA. . . . [She] is too brief. She owes her readers an expanded volume on her topic and a sequel for the years 1926 to 1937." Eugene Boardman
Am Hist 77:187 F '72 360w

"This is a scholarly account of the YMCA's efforts."
Choice 8:1074 O '71 160w

GARTNER, ALAN. Children teach children: learning by teaching. [by] Alan Gartner, Mary Conway Kohler [and] Frank Reissman. 180p il $5.95 Harper

371.3 Education—Experimental methods
SBN 06-013553-0 LC 75-83619

"This volume describes current projects in which young people have been learning through teaching, and it shows how these . . . programs have worked." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Gives an excellent presentation of an interesting approach to teaching through tutoring and learning through teaching. The authors are very thorough in covering the research being done throughout the country and they also have been involved in the development and operation of tutoring programs so they know whereof they write. . . . Very good for pre-service and in-service teachers."

Choice 8:1492 Ja '72 100w

"The book includes a brief historical background, information on the values to be obtained when children teach other children, and some suggestions for implementation. An appendix provides tutoring plan outlines as well as a 'case study' of a child tutor. The use of initials (YTY, NCRY, etc.), poor organization, and numerous references to miscellaneous programs detract from the book's readability; but the basic idea is highly significant, offering great promise for educational innovation and improved learning." Marian Wozencraft

Library J 96:2636 S 1 '71 170w

"There are some promising reports of success presented in the pages of this book. . . . The quotations from interviews with children are moving indeed—so much so that one at times gasps at the sense of isolation and loneliness that seizes children in our technological and urban society. . . . I do not mean to quarrel with the authors of this brave little book . . . but it does seem to me that placing the emphasis on the learning boon to the teacher leads the authors to lose sight of the full power of their proposal. The teacher may learn more mathematics, but he and his charges may both get a better sense of what it is to share, what it means for the better equipped to give a lift to the less gifted." J. S. Bruner

Sat R 55:62 Ja 15 '72 2300w

"Most readers of the Record are likely to accept the basic premise that 'children and youth learn far more when performing the teaching role than when acting as students in the classroom,' particularly if they have had any teaching experience. . . . Where such readers may want more information is in the area of systematic assessment of the process, which this book does not offer. What the reader will get are rich descriptions of these programs, and considerable reporting of first-hand experiences in starting such programs. The intent of the book is to describe and to help implement similar programs, and this it does in an interesting way, with attractive photographs of children teaching each other." M. A. White

Teach Col Rec 73:606 My '72 380w

GARVE, ANDREW. The case of Robert Quarry. 178p $5.95 Harper

ISBN 06-011454-1 LC 72-181671

This story "takes place in an English country town. A local industrialist, a person of great disagreeableness, threatens to close a factory as a result of labor troubles, and is subsequently found dead in the trunk of his car. A militant labor organizer, equally unattractive, is suspected of the crime, but matters turn out to be a great deal more complicated." (Library J)

"[This is] a most convoluted case, with a surprise twist at the end. Another Garve puzzle that is quite up to his usual standards."

Best Sell 32:126 Je 1 '72 60w

"There is a considerable amount of police routine and detective ratiocination; it is an honest puzzle, not particularly memorable, but diverting." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:2439 J1 '72 100w

"Hardly anybody writes this kind of book any more. The title itself is sober and traditional; the writing is sober and traditional; the plotting, what with a murder involving unshakable alibis, is sober and traditional. Garve is a veteran who has been writing this kind of book year in and year out. His performance here will disappoint none of his admirers. Yet the book is rather hard to read. It is so predictable: its devices are so familiar; its denouement is so orthodox; its writing is so tedious." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p30 My 21 '72 120w

New Yorker 48:148 My 13 '72 130w

GARVEY, GERALD. Constitutional bricolage. 160p $7.50 Princeton univ. press

342.73 U.S.—Constitutional history
ISBN 0-691-07539-5 LC 73-141503

"Bricolage is the art of the handyman who must solve problems with limited tools, and Garvey argues that the process of constitutional interpretation has been essentially an activity of fabricating make-do solutions to problems as they arise. Using anthropological theory, he attempts to show that the 'bricolage' pattern of interpretation has resulted in solutions which would have been suitable in a society based primarily on the free market, 'buyer-seller' pattern of human relations, but that in American society a 'ruler-subject' pattern has actually been dominant. He feels that the courts are gradually becoming more aware of ruler-subject patterns in American life." (Library J) Index.

"The framework for analysis and its application are probably the strongest aspects of the book. . . . [One does not] have to agree that ruler-subject is increasingly the dominant mode of interaction nor that we are now faced with 'a mass revulsion against society as currently patterned' . . . to find the book intellectually rewarding and stimulating. As with any finely reasoned work, it will not be read quickly. . . . It is clearly written, however, which is almost a unique accomplishment in its genre." D. F. Hughes

Ann Am Acad 400:169 Mr '72 600w

"The book is an interesting attempt to utilize anthropological concepts and vocabulary in explaining a political problem. This reader wished that the author had devoted more space to the assaults on individual freedom which can sometimes unfortunately result from governmental imposition of its own 'ruler-subject' patterns on the population." Hindy Schachter

Library J 96:3330 O 15 '71 170w

GASCOIGNE, BAMBER. The great Moghuls: phot. by Christina Gascoigne. 264p $15 Harper

954 Mogul Empire, India—History
ISBN 0-06-011467-3 LC 77-152348

The Moghul emperors fostered painting, architecture, "and the system of administration which stabilized the greater part of India and was largely adopted by the British. . . . Babur, the founder of the dynasty, was a soldier-poet; . . . Humayun . . . lost his father's empire, largely through his love of opium and astrology; Akbar . . . regained the empire and put it on a firm footing. . . . Jahangir . . . brought Moghul painting to its perfection; Shah Jahan did the same for architecture, building . . . the Taj Mahal; Aurangzeb . . . reversed Akbar's principles of toleration and presided with relentless energy and self-denial over the gradual dissolution of the empire." (Publisher's note) Genealogy. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 31:443 Ja 1 '72 270w

Reviewed by Christopher Hibbert

Book World p6 D 71 350w

GASCOIGNE, BAMBER—Continued

"The volume should appeal to Indologists of this period, to Eastern art historians, to tourists, even to high school students. . . . The synthesizing religious philosophy of Akbar is especially illuminating."

Choice 9:419 My '72 110w

"What raises this book above the usual level of its kind is the use of travellers' tales and, more important, of Moghul sources. Two Moghuls wrote memoirs and so did several of the family and servants; others left correspondence and there were several contemporary historians. Akbar's paternal advice, Jahangir's daily thoughts and Badauni's wry comments on Akbar's seminar on religion . . . allied to the Gascoigne style, produce an exuberant and original piece. The illustrations (56 in colour and 87 in monochrome) are excellent. Their quality is good and, apart from some neglect of Shah Jahan's Delhi, so is the choice of subjects. There are . . . some fine pictures of less well-known aspects of Moghul art in pietra dura work, jewellery, glass and fabrics."

Economist 241:xx N 6 '71 400w

Reviewed by S. L. Hopkinson

Library J 97:495 F 1 '72 190w

"Six months on the subcontinent, and a wife with a very good camera and an honour's degree in Persian, have enabled Mr Gascoigne to produce a digest of the first six Moghul emperors that feasts the eye and should not seriously affront the pundits. In a tract of history so stiff with potential texts and morals on the mutability of power—and even Bangla Dosh—he avoids equally the trite and the ornate, preserving the outline of personality and achievement through a great melting-pot of intrigue and skirmish that could have boiled the shape out of any book. . . . Full marks to the author for the way he takes it in his stride. . . . The illustrations express something of the Moghul's feeling, 'If there be a Paradise on earth it is here, it is here!' One may pick small quarrels; no reason advanced why Fatehpur Sikri became a ghost town." Christopher Wordsworth

New Statesman 82:623 N 5 '71 700w

Reviewed by J. H. Plumb

N Y Times Bk R p73 D 5 '71 70w

Reviewed by A. T. Embree

Pacific Affairs 45:447 fall '72 240w

"If one closes one's eyes to all the dazzling display of monochrome and colour reproductions [this proves to be] a most readable text. . . . Mr Gascoigne tells us a great deal about the personal lives of the six great Moghuls; but, by concentrating on them as individuals he fails to place them in the broader context of the history of Islamic India. . . . [However] he has provided a great deal of background information most useful in the interpretation of the wealth of architectural monuments which Moghul India produced at this time."

TLS p1589 D 17 '71 1200w

"Skill in composition and sensitivity to densities [in the photographs] is evident throughout the whole volume. And Mr. Gascoigne's achievement in reducing the complex history of Moghul India to manageable terms is no less striking; his narrative moves smoothly through the matrix of intersecting plots and counter-plots, through the welter of military campaigns and disguised tiger-hunts, through the complex of petty jealousies and magnanimous gestures. Mr. Gascoigne's footnoting system may have been used before, but whoever devised it certainly deserves recognition in the highest terms. Its compactness leads to a beautifully uncluttered page. There is only one severe criticism to be made of this book: Whoever thought they could successfully print pictures (monochrome, as it happens) to span the inner margins of two consecutive pages should have his head examined."

Va Q R 48:xxxii winter '72 250w

GASCOIGNE, BAMBER. Murgatread's empire. 191p $5.95 Viking

ISBN 670-49555-7 LC 72-75750

This novel is set in "the jungles of New Guinea. Murgatread, a demotic tycoon, a Sweeney fallen among Pygmies, wants their gold but does not know what they want. . . . [He offers them breast plate, cuisse, and sword—the full panoply of medieval arms. The Pygmies take the new weapons with delight and flourish them at their now defenseless neighbors. These unfortunates rightly demand superior weapons in return for newer gold. Murgatread, scornful of a weak-kneed and unprofitable favoritism, sells them slightly better arms and so finds himself the sole begetter of a calculated and nicely escalating arms race." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. S. Phillipson

Best Sell 32:298 O 1 '72 490w

Economist 243:73 My 13 '72 130w

"This [is a] cool, amusing, and satirical first novel. . . . In no time at all, Europe's malign traditions are lushly born and bloodily spread, and Murgatread fails to profit from his bloody work. Gascoigne's debt to Evelyn Waugh is palpable. His narrative is clear; his bookish incongruities amuse. Unfortunately, however, his ideas are so shopworn and his characters are so sentimentally symbolic that the book becomes a cliché." P. W. Boytinch

Library J 97:2859 S 15 '72 220w

Reviewed by Kenn Stitt

New Statesman 83:611 My 11 '72 200w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p42 S 17 '72 250w

"Gascoigne has no intention of being coy about framing comparisons or drawing moral lessons; he has every intention, though, of being funny about it, and the book's other ingredient—farce—is often used to good effect. There are some subtle touches too, which cunningly verge on credibility. . . . It is all a bit flippant, perhaps, and Mr Gascoigne works too hard for the laughs now and then, but the book is an enjoyable piece of blackish entertainment."

TLS p565 My 19 '72 480w

GASKELL, RONALD. Drama and reality; the European theatre since Ibsen. 171p $6.75; pa $3.25 Routledge

809.2 Drama—History and criticism

SBN 0-7100-7145-0; 0-7100-7146-9 (pa)

LC 72-179717

This is a "commentary on modern drama and its relationship to the world. [The first section] establishes four categories for dramatists' visions: naturalistic, subjective, religious, and poetic. In the second section, Gaskell examines nine plays ranging from Peer Gynt to Endgame as contemporary theater pieces." (Choice)

"There is grace and insight in this fine [study]. . . . Highly recommended for all libraries, this volume would be most useful in modern drama courses."

Choice 9:1144 N '72 80w

"The valuable element of the book [is] the running critical discussion of specific plays, the perceptive remarks about general trends or local effects. . . . The discussion is enthusiastic and in places perceptive, but there is no attempt to do more than scratch across the surface: Peer Gynt is discussed in seven pages, The Cherry Orchard in four. Presumably this book is the record of a series of lectures which introduced undergraduates in the Bristol English School to modern European drama, and for that purpose the text would serve reasonably well. The general sense of enjoyment and enthusiasm, except in the cases of Pirandello and Eliot, would send students to read the plays with eagerness. But from a full-length study on this much-explored subject we have the right to expect something more substantial and accurate."

TLS p739 Je 30 '72 850w

GASQUE, W. WARD, ed. Apostolic history and the gospel; biblical and historical essays presented to F. F. Bruce on his 60th birthday; ed. by W. Ward Gasque and Ralph P. Martin. 378p $7.95 Eerdmans

225 Bible. N.T. Acts—Criticism, interpretation, etc. Bible. N.T. Epistles—Criticism, interpretation, etc. Bruce, Frederick Fyvie LC 70-135629

"The essays presented to . . . [the] professor of New Testament at Manchester focus on the Acts of the Apostles and Paul." (America) Bibliography of writings of F. F. Bruce.

"[This book is] for the serious student." R. J. Clifford

America 125:461 N 27 '71 40w

"Generally of a very high level of scholarship by an international group of critics. In a number of cases representing a conservative theological position. Most of the articles presuppose an advanced knowledge of New Testament critical issues and thus are not addressed to the typical undergraduate. . . . Well indexed; . . . nicely edited and printed."

Choice 8:687 J1 '71 110w

GASS, WILLIAM H. Willie Masters' lonesome wife; designed by Lawrence Levy; phot. by Burton L. Rudman. (A Tri-quarterly bk) unp $3.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-47245-4 LC 74-154912

The author presents "the tragic plight of his heroine, once a whore and stripper, now a wife, lonely and fading, facing an empty and barren existence." (Va Q R) This first appeared as a special issue of TriQuarterly Magazine in 1968.

"[Here is] a text that regales the eye with combinations of italics and bold face, footnotes and headnotes, asterisks and treble clefs, placards that tend to dominate the page and parabolical tails of words that go wagging off it . . . and interleaved shots of nudes that sometimes have the text itself elbowed into a corner as if in parody of Life's ousting Art. All in all, it's a defiant, ingeniously staged typographical concerto for eye and berserk compositor, in the course of which Gass keeps the mind at full stretch as he feeds it information from all quarters of the page and sustains as many as three parallel streams of narrative all competing for simultaneous attention." Paul West

Book World p12 N 21 '71 1350w
Choice 9:368 My '72 90w

"This is a statement about language in the form of a raunchy dramatic monologue that cheers sexual appetite and laments 'the reduction of the human to the mechanical.' . . . In another sense, it is a statement that the medium is the body, whose inevitable primacy in our experiencing Babs playfully celebrates. Thus the parallel to language, which is, similarly, our inescapable medium for thought. The author helps, leaping in to editorialize. . . . The lady gives herself to (among other things) the life of imagination—she is a lusty, funny female principle. And, she is that element in all of us that surrenders itself to currents of vigorous creativity. . . . Is there a novelist anywhere who enjoys writing more than Gass does? This one will drive most readers up the wall. Which it should." Bruce Allen

Library J 96:4030 D 1 '71 210w

Reviewed by Michael Wood
N Y Rev of Books 19:12 D 14 '72 800w

Reviewed by Nathaniel Tarn
N Y Times Bk R p5 N 14 '71 800w

"As a compositor's nightmare, presenting in alternate paragraphs not necessarily in sequence a variety of typefaces constituting authorial asides when they are not outright stream-of-consciousness projections, or highly introspective musings by an elusive narrator, Mr. Gass's experiment in prose fiction offers innovations in form, imagination in concept, and complete originality in execution. Falsely labeled a novel-la, the author's brief disquisition [is] conveyed largely by indirection. . . . On occasion a stray passage of taunts, even a gratuitous insult or two, is tossed at the hapless reader, already bewildered by type reversed as a mirror image, or prostrated by Joycean puns of considerable ingenuity. . . . Plain fun aside, the book is lyrical and above all poignant, ending in impeccable symbolic fashion with the picture of an umbilicus stained by the ring of a coffee cup."

Va Q R 48:xviii winter '72 150w

GASSIER, PIERRE. The life and complete work of Francisco Goya, by Pierre Gassier and Juliet Wilson; with a catalogue raisonné of the paintings, drawings and engravings ed. by François Lachenal; pref. by Enrique Lafuente Ferrari [Eng title: Goya: his life and work]. 400p il col pl $50 Reynal & co. 759.6 Goya v Lucientes, Francisco José de LC [73-887333]

"Essentially, three books are kept going simultaneously [in this one volume], a biography in the main text, a critical history by way of extended comments on individual illustrations, and a catalogue raisonné of 1,870 works divided into chronological sections at the end of each chapter. A skeleton outline of the text runs throughout the book on the margins of the pages." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography, Indexes of works, of works and subjects, of collections, and of names.

"[Of catalogs of Goya's] work, the Gassier-Wilson alone offers his production in all media in a single volume—of 10-pound heft. And it illustrates, if only in the diminutive reproductions accompanying the 1,870 catalog entries, all the works accepted as genuine by the authors. Thus the catalog . . . enables the user to view Goya's efforts, large and small, public and personal, in one source. Up-to-date scholarly data abound in notes to catalog entries, while reading of the text alone would enlighten the general reader. Although, inevitably, Goya specialists will find lacks (provenances must be sought in other catalogs, to which concordances are given), errors, and points for disagreement in attributions and datings, this volume will undoubtedly serve as the primary general reference for Goya's oeuvre for some time to come." P. E. Muller

Library J 96:3999 D 1 '71 190w

"If you are going to put out one more book on an artist who has been the subject of hundreds, a good model to follow would be [this volume] which takes just about everything known about Goya and combines it with pertinent political and social aspects of his Spain in a way that makes all the information accessible. . . . And bravo for this: the illustrations are used as they should be—as adjuncts to the authors' text. Most are in black and white, in which Goya reproduces very well. Those in color, in which he does not, are only fair to quite good; their occasional shortcomings, however, are unimportant in what adds up to an interesting and usable presentation of a complicated subject through an astounding job of organization." John Canaday
N Y Times Bk R p8 D 5 '71 140w

"As Ortega y Gasset has rightly said, 'if there is an artist who needs to be understood and explained as well as seen it is Goya, especially if, as would seem essential, his work is looked at as a whole.' It is this total view, coupled with the right degree of detachment, which makes a book such as that by M Gassier and Miss Wilson so valuable both as a critical biography and as a comprehensive reference tool. . . . [This is] a vast, impeccably researched and carefully coordinated compilation. . . . It will clearly be a long time before biographical and analytical studies of Goya in this depth are superseded."

TLS p97 Ja 28 '72 700w

GATELL, FRANK OTTO, ed. The growth of American politics; a modern reader; v 1. Through reconstruction; v2. Since the Civil War; ed. by Frank Otto Gatell, Paul Goodman, and Allen Weinstein. 544;569p ea $12.50 Oxford

320.973 U.S.—Politics and government
LC 73-182423

This two-volume work is intended as an introduction to the political history of the United States from colonial times to 1968. "Each volume contains twenty-one essays by . . . historians and political scientists. . . . The essays are accompanied by editorial introductions. . . . Volume I traces the evolution of American political institutions from the pre-Revolutionary War period through Reconstruction. It includes articles on the making of the Constitution, the establishment of the two-party system, the emergence of class and race as major political factors, and the Civil War. . . . [Volume II] deals with the ferment of the 1890's and the 1920's, the reforms of the New Deal, and the post-war period from the Truman administration through the Johnson administration." (Publisher's note) Bibliography to volume one in volume one. Bibliography to volume two in volume two.

"The compilers have assembled essays representing their opinion of the best recent writings on American political history. They have culled their selection from dozens of sources—learned journals, monographs, biographies, essay collections—not readily available to the general reader. . . . The choices are, in the main, not merely thoughtful and scholarly but even readable. . . . Many of the essayists are pure thoroughbreds. . . . As the subject matter draws nearer our own time . . . we descend to bathos with studies of Eisenhower and Johnson by two disgruntled former courtiers. . . . In origin, the book is a 'reader,' designed to be studied during a college survey course in American history. . . . [One] could not find a nicer introduction to recent scholarly work in so convenient a summary form." J. L. Connolly
America 127:17 J1 8 '72 600w

"[The editors] have put together a collection of excerpted books and articles (some of which are classics) which might well constitute the best history of American politics in existence. Organized chronologically, the approach espoused, nonetheless, is interdisciplinary. The result is a richly detailed and analytical study."

Choice 9:1202 N '72 90w

GATTEGNO, CALEB. The adolescent and his will. 142p $5.95 Outerbridge & Dienstfrey; for sale by Dutton

155.5 Adolescence
ISBN 0-87690-026-0 LC 76-157096

The present work is a revised version of the English translation (Adolescent and his self, 1962) of a book written in French more than 20 years ago. The author "centers on the theme that adolescence is the time when young people are receptive to matters of the spirit and emotions and that 'the future belongs to the educator who has seized the reality of the spiritual nature of man.'" (Library J) Originally published as Introduction à la psychologie de l'affectivité et à l'éducation à l'amour.

"Chapter titles will convey something of the content: 'Man, a spiritual being'; 'The psychology of affectivity'; 'Education for love'; and 'On inspiration, spiritual contagion and brotherhood.' The author seems to say very little about adolescents or will but rather seems to set forth a philosophy or a world view. A minimum of citation of other authors and works and no reference list. Not recommended."

Choice 8:1383 D '71 120w

"With the current stress on affectivity as the cornerstone of education, it is interesting to find that Gattegno . . . was writing on this subject 20 years ago. . . . This is a significant and inspiring book, especially pertinent in view of the widespread concern about today's youth; but, like most of Gattegno's writings, it is not easy reading. Although the editing has been done well, the book still requires careful study, and it may not attract the attention it deserves." Marian Wozencraft

Library J 96:2309 J1 '71 200w

GAUDIN, COLETTE, ed. & tr. On poetic imagination and reverie. See Bachelard, G.

GAULLE, CHARLES DE. Memoirs of hope: renewal and endeavor; tr. by Terence Kil-martin. 392p $10 Simon & Schuster

B or 92 World politics—1945-
SBN 671-2118-8 LC 76-16303

"The first volume of de Gaulle's last memoirs came out last year in France: the second, and the first two chapters of the unfinished third, earlier this year. For this English edition the first has been omitted and the second and third published as one volume: they have also been serialised in the [London] Sunday Times." (Economist) The book reaches the point in 1962 when the Algerian war is ended and the principle of electing the President of the Republic by universal suffrage is established. Index.

Reviewed by R. L. Carol
America 126:325 Mr 25 '72 500w

Reviewed by Jeanne Kinney
Best Sell 31:500 F 15 '72 650w

"These 'memoirs of hope' are of interest mainly for the light they shed on [De Gaulle's] interpretation of events. As history, or autobiography, they have little new to reveal, and the style, though ably translated, is below his earlier brilliant best. He was, after all, a very old man. The passages I most enjoyed were his accounts of meetings with his great contemporaries. . . . But personal touches of this kind are few, and de Gaulle's accounts of his working routines at the Elysée, and leisure and family pursuits, have the unbending reserve you might expect." John Ardagh

Book World p8 F 6 '72 1050w

Choice 9:564 Je '72 200w

"It had better be said at once that these new memoirs of Charles de Gaulle, even allowing for the fact that they are incomplete, are not up to the great 'Memoires de guerre' [Complete War Memoirs, BRD 1964]. . . . There is no material here for an artistic pattern of the kind that informs the earlier book. Moreover, the new work is historically unreliable. The 'Memoires de guerre,' while providing the basis of a Gaullist myth, were accompanied by a selection of documents which enable the historian to check the accuracy of the text. There is nothing of the kind here. On the contrary, there is much internal evidence that the narrative contains serious distortion—if not downright errors. . . . Nonetheless, this book remains the work of a man of greatness." Anthony Hartley
Christian Science Monitor p10 Ja 27 '72 850w

"The march of triumph is unrelenting in this volume. Barely a qualifying thought mars the inelegant but utterly convinced prose used to describe de Gaulle's actions. Each page sees a French colleague or opponent, a foreign politician or statesman, set up with patronising praise in order then to be felled by the logic with which de Gaulle, writing some years after the events, invests his insights at the time. . . . From all these encounters de Gaulle's interlocutors emerge as cardboard figures brushed aside by the conceits of gallic power. But what arrests one when reading de Gaulle is not the tiresome character of the man, but how often he was right. . . . His memoirs are well worth reading: but perhaps it is the fate of prophets to be bores, particularly when writing about themselves."

Economist 241:60 O 30 '71 420w

Reviewed by Max Beloff
Encounter 39:50 J1 '72 270w

Reviewed by B. S. Viault
Library J 97:194 Ja 15 '72 200w

Reviewed by P. P. Witonski
Nat R 24:351 Mr 31 '72 2350w

Reviewed by Denis Brogan
New Repub 166:25 Mr 18 '72 1550w

Reviewed by Geoffrey McDermott
New Statesman 82:593 O 29 '71 650w

Reviewed by Stanley Hoffmann
N Y Rev of Books 18:23 F 24 '72 2500w

"It is only the first part [of this volume] 'Renewal,' 1958-1962 that has the sweep of language and vision that characterized [De Gaulle's] earlier 'War Memoirs.' The memoirs as a whole, however, constitute an achievement unequalled in our time: the statesman as artist. Only Churchill rivals him in this respect, and even given the difficulty of comparing French to English prose, de Gaulle outranks Churchill both as an artist and as a statesman. The spare classicism of the French style wears better than the rotund prose of the British Prime Minister." James Chace

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ja 30 '72 2100w

New Yorker 48:126 Mr 11 '72 120w

"Whereas [De Gaulle] would appear an emulator of Machiavelli, all too frequently he seems merely self-righteous, devious or pompous. . . . But as a disciple of Chateaubriand, epic poet of the French genius, de Gaulle is at his best. . . . Totally new here is the most unusual intrusion of de Gaulle himself, of his personal feelings, his prejudices, his rancors, his pride. . . . Gone is the royal 'we'; almost forsaken is the magisterial 'he' or 'General de Gaulle.' For the first time a de Gaulle text is liberally sprinkled with 'I' and 'me'. He is defensive, replying as never before to accusations. He is bitter, angry, and scornful as he refutes his foes." David Schoen-brun

Sat R 55:60 F 5 '72 750w

TLS p1435 N 19 '71 180w

GAUNT, WILLIAM. The great century of British painting; Hogarth to Turner. 240p pl col pl $25 Phaidon

759.2 Paintings, English. Painters, English
ISBN 0-7148-1452-0 LC 70-117415

"British 18th-Century painting has been studied for its romanticism, neoclassicism, social commentary, and recognition of the rise of technology. . . . Gaunt has tried to cover all of these areas, giving examples of the works of 47 artists and comments on the people and movements that influenced them." (Library J) Index.

"[This book] contains 180 plates, with only 23 in color, but the text and the selection and variety of painters and paintings presented recommend it to the student of art. . . . [Gaunt] appends Biographical Notes and the work is well indexed."

Best Sell 31:361 N 1 '71 140w

"The heart of this handsome book is the . . . excellent plates. . . . [The text] is very general to say the least. . . . Very good index, but, alas, no bibliography of any sort. . . . If price is not a factor, this book is recommended for the excellent survey of 18th-century British painting it provides through its illustrations."

Choice 9:204 Ap '72 190w

"Author of A Concise History of English Painting [BRD 1965], Gaunt has here undertaken a much more ambitious project. . . . He has been careful to select lesser-known works as well as famous ones; and the detail reproductions are especially useful. As a study of social history and the humanities, this volume is important for the opinions expressed and the quick coverage of a large amount of material. . . . Gaunt's book would be a handsome addition to a large public or university general collection." J. B. Lopez

Library J 96:4084 D 15 '71 180w

"The text of [this] book . . . is printed like tasteful publicity on coloured paper twice the thickness of the plates. It is rather thin and far from perceptive."

TLS p1377 N 5 '71 450w

GAUNT, WILLIAM. William De Morgan: Pre-Raphaelite ceramics, by William Gaunt and M. D. E. Clayton-Stamm. 176p il col il $20 N.Y. graphic

738 De Morgan, William Frend. Tiles. Pottery

ISBN 0-8212-0390-8 LC 75-161611

"De Morgan was associated with the Pre-Raphaelite group and was . . . influenced by William Morris; in later years his designs reflected the Art Nouveau. He is known for his designs in tiles, his experimentation with Persian luster, and his use of Persian designs, examples of which are . . . reproduced, as are the marks known to have been used on De Morgan's work. [Included also is a] biographical sketch . . . of De Morgan's life." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Here is a rich record of De Morgan as a potter who for 35 years reinforced the tenets of the pre-Raphaelites while remaining independent of William Morris' firm. . . . The color plates are especially valuable for conveying the characteristic metallic lusters and iridescent effects with which he heightened the appeal of designs inspired partly by the sinuosity of plant forms observed in nature, and partly by adapting related motifs from Isnik pottery. The book concludes with a useful record of the marks used on his pottery, plus an index and extensive bibliography."

Choice 9:204 Ap '72 190w

Reviewed by Paul von Khrum

Library J 97:64 Ja 1 '72 100w

"In providing a new brief life of De Morgan and a survey of his artistic and literary career, the authors have fulfilled a need, although most of it is taken from Mrs [A.] Stirling's comprehensive if garrulous and highly personal biography [William De Morgan and His Wife. BRID 1922]. . . . They have, however, added new information here and there. The most valuable parts of the book are the description of De Morgan's methods of work, the reprinting of the paper of lustre pottery which De Morgan delivered to the Society of Arts in 1892, and the 144 illustrations, of which twenty-four are reproduced in very fair colour."

TLS p1183 O 1 '71 1600w

GAUQUELIN, MICHEL. How atmospheric conditions affect your health; tr. by Joyce E. Clemow. 188p il $6.95 Stein & Day

613.1 Health. Atmosphere. Man—Influence of environment
SBN 8128-1337-5 LC 74-126999

"In an introduction, the author states the aim of the book is to review discoveries of researchers around the globe relating to atmospheric conditions and their influence upon health. In addition to giving a summary of the research to date, Gauquelin gives implications for future study." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Written by an established French researcher of cosmic and biological phenomena who has a background in psychology and statistics, this work is translated ably from the French into simple English. Through the translation, the book retains its clarity and conciseness. . . . Through careful footnoting and documentation, the author acknowledges the work of many other individuals throughout the world. A two page list of basic references may be found in the appendix. The book is a worthwhile beginning discussion of the substance of biometeorological medicine and can be utilized as a source of reference to earlier studies."

Choice 8:1470 Ja '72 140w

"Though appropriate research is cited explanations are proffered in stilted prose. And in the chapter on cosmic medicine, dealing with cosmic rays, solar eruptions, and other distant phenomena, the research tends to be at least 20 years old and unconfirmed. . . . This book is not needed by libraries." S. B. Hesslein

Library J 96:2661 S 1 '71 120w

GAY, GEORGE R., jt. ed. "It's so good, don't even try it once". See Smith D. E.

GAY, PETER, jt. ed. The Columbia history of the world. See Garraty, J. A.

GAY, PETER, ed. Historians at work; 2v; v 1, ed. by Peter Gay and Gerald J. Cavanaugh; v2, ed. by Peter Gay and Victor G. Wexler. 431;406p ea $15 Harper

908 History—Collections. Historiography
SBN 06-011473-8 (v 1); 06-011472-X (v2)
LC 75-123930

A collection of selections chosen "from those historical writings valued for their durability and those historians who 'for all the distance that separates them, equally deserve the name of historian.' [The selections are arranged chronologically]. Volume I includes works from Herodotus, the first historian, to the chroniclers of the Middle Ages." (Publisher's note, v 1) Volume II includes writings from the Renaissance through the Enlightenment. A third volume will cover the nineteenth century. Chapter bibliographies.

"Put this on your gift list for Father's Day—or some such occasion—should someone you know need summer reading. A pleasure-inducing experience of a kind people often overlook is assured when historical classics are uncovered. Too bad these samples are so expensive; the volumes are elegant."

Christian Century 89:672 Je 7 '72 60w
(Review of v 1, 2)

"A general somewhat rambling essay defining historical thought as 'critical thinking about the past' introduces this anthology. . . . What really unites the various authors or selections? What criteria of selection were used? What precisely is critical thinking on the past? Why Julius Caesar and not Dio Cassius? A brief biography and selected bibliography preface the selections of each author, the latter perhaps the best aspect of this gargantuan volume." J. P. Hershbell

Library J 97:1012 Mr 15 '72 100w (Review of v 1)

"This significant anthology [is] the best of its kind in both size and scope. . . . [The editors] have selected an excellent representative list of scholars: Lorenzo Valla, Machiavelli, Guicciardini, Bodin, William Camden, William Bradford, Clarendon, Mabilon, Bishop Bossuet, Charles Rollin, David Hume, William Robertson, Voltaire, and Edward Gibbon. The most important sections of the works of these historians, several of whom are appearing in modern English for the first time, are reproduced."

W. W. MacDonald

Library J 97:1430 Ap 15 '72 200w (Review of v2)

GEBHARD, DAVID. Schindler; pref. by Henry-Russell Hitchcock. (A Studio bk) 216p il $7.95; pa $3.95 Viking

720.973 Schindler, Rudolph. Architecture, American
SBN 670-62063-7; 670-02022-2 (pa)
LC 71-172899

This is ■ reevaluation of the work of Rudolph Schindler. Formed in Vienna in the school of Otto Wagner and Adolf Loos, Schindler went to America in 1914 and worked for Frank Lloyd Wright before settling in Hollywood in 1922. There, over the next thirty years—which included a period of partnership with Richard Neutra—he developed a personal style that responded to the hot California climate and the cool California mood. . . . [This study discusses his] buildings [which], with the rise of the 'New Brutalism' and Pop Art, are coming to be recognized as . . . alternatives to the International Style." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 9:498 Je '72 130w

"[Schindler appears] as the eclectic who adapted the work of the modern masters, his contemporaries, to the common building techniques of southern California. Gebhard recognizes this, but tends to belittle such masters as Le Corbusier to bolster Schindler's standing as a 'pioneer'—an effort perhaps more specious than sound. [This book is] well written and fully illustrated. [It also] has a chronology of . . . [Schindler's] major works. Recommended for academic and public libraries."

M. E. Landgren

Library J 97:2176 Je 15 '72 110w

Reviewed by Carey McWilliams
Nation 214:830 Je 26 '72 90w

GEBHARD, DAVID—Continued

"Readers of this book might well start with the last chapter, which is entitled 'Schindler's Place in Architecture' and succinctly relates the work of Rudolph Schindler . . . both to the so-called International Style that became crystallized in the 1930s and to the reaction against it—or, rather, against its didacticism and its claim to represent the only path forward—that began in the 1960s. . . . [This definitive study] has been most expertly done by Dr Gebhard, and puts on permanent record the material he collected for the major exhibition of Schindler's work held in 1967 at the Santa Barbara art galleries of the University of California. All architectural historians will be in his debt."

TLS p161 F 11 '72 700w

GEKAN, MICHAEL, ed. Seen through our eyes; introd. by Charles A. Reich. 240p $6.95 Random house

917.3 U.S.—Civilization. Counter culture. Youth—Attitudes
ISBN 0-394-47266-7 LC 71-37038

"These 18 essays, stories, memoirs, reflections were originally written for Charles Reich's course at Yale, 'The Individual in America.' They represent for Reich an attempt by his young students to begin some communication about the more permanent aspects of the counterculture. The first part of the book suggests how young people experience the daily routines of American life; the second deals with painful emergence of a new identity; the last is an expression of emerging values." (Library J)

"My response to the book is necessarily complex. Am I to observe that while some of the pieces display real talent, the others do not? Should I remember that the essays and stories that formed a part of the search for meaning and identity in my own 1950's differed little in tone, texture, mood, etc? Or should I suggest that these exercises too often (but not all—see the pieces by Bill Littlefield, Jr., or Leigh Crystal, or William Boly) miss the real complexity of life and reduce it to stereotypes no less one-dimensional than the targets of their shots? But to respond on a strictly 'intellectual' level is to slight the book's invitation to share in experience and feeling. That invitation is, of course, diluted by the verbal-linear form of presentation." Henry Steck

Library J 97:1338 Ap 1 '72 210w

Library J 97:2972 S 15 '72 120w [YA]

"Reich [the author of The Greening of America BRD 1970, 1971.] claims in his introduction that these greeners 'are telling about a transformation that is more permanent' than mere counter-culture 'trips.' The reader will have to decide for himself whether this is authentic greening or just reports on how some youngsters spent their summer vacations."

N Y Times BK R p10 Ap 23 '72 50w

"The reader's first reaction will have been one of déjà vu. Is this really a college literary magazine from the Fifties? One essay describes the pain of having to help Dad work on the lawn every Sunday. One takes us to Dallas to play basketball; we find that Dallas is full of mean bastards. One tells us about working for the Post Office and being hassled about long hair. One reveals that some social workers are insensitive. . . . These egocentric, rather self-indulgent students (unexposed by teachers more discreet than Reich) have surely been around for thousands of years. There are four exceptions among the eighteen, however. William Boly and the editor offer intelligent and sensible essays, the first of which destroys many of Reich's claims for Consciousness III. There are also two very mod essayists. . . . This is a book to delight the heart of every Harvard man." J. D. O'Hara

Sat R 55:58 J1 22 '72 370w

GEDDES, SIR PATRICK. Patrick Geddes: spokesman for man and the environment; a selection; ed. and with an introd. by Marshall Stalley. 476p il $15 Rutgers univ. press
309.2 City planning. Ecology
ISBN 0-8135-0697-2 LC 75-163963

This volume contains a "100-page biography, [and an] updated, nearly complete version of Geddes' . . . Cities in evolution [BRD 1970]." (Choice)

"[This is] a fresh assessment of Geddes ■ ■ ■ spokesman for man and the environment' . . . This new presentation of [his] life and thought is the legacy of ■ truly inter-disciplinary mind—one whom today we hail as ecologist." C. S. Ascher

Ann Am Acad 401:213 My '72 300w

"Since the three biographies of Geddes are o.p. as are his writings except for Cities, the present volume is essential for urban planning and ecology collections. Highly recommended as a compact yet comprehensive introduction to the ideas, prophetic and practical, of one of the major forebearers of the contemporary planning profession and ecology movement."

Choice 9:844 S '72 150w

"Sir Patrick Geddes (1854-1932), a Scotsman, was an important figure in the development of modern city and regional planning. . . . He concerned himself with such fields as biology, botany, ecology, sociology, economics, civics, and city planning. This is one of the few books to give a broad view of his varied career and ideas. . . . [It] should be enjoyed by anyone concerned with approaches to urban problems." E. B. Murphy

Library J 97:1454 Ap 15 '72 140w

GEDULD, HARRY M., ed. Focus on D. W. Griffith. (A Spectrum bk) 182p pl $5.95; pa $2.45 Prentice-Hall

791.43 Griffith, David Wark. Moving pictures—History
SBN 13-365205-X; 13-365197-5 (pa)
LC 78-153435

"Geduld offers the reader . . . [a] picture of Griffith the man and Griffith the creator. . . . [An] essay by the editor is followed by three autobiographical and biographical selections. Then come twenty of Griffith's own published writings from 1914 to 1928. . . . Twelve critical essays comprise the major portion of the book. . . . [Included also are a] list of his films since 1914 (existing sources of information concerning his pre-1914 films are cited), and the chief sources for rental or purchase of Griffith films." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"One would like to see more provocatively critical essays included to check what frequently verges on idolatry. . . . The book should be enjoyed by anyone interested in film history, and should be acquired by any library building its film history resources."

Choice 9:228 Ap '72 200w

"Unfortunately Focus on D. W. Griffith doesn't come off; it's interesting because of the lengthy section with Griffith's own remarks and the reprinted contemporary outcries against The Birth of a Nation, but most of the better material here is more entertaining when read in the original context. The bibliography is peculiarly selective and of doubtful value." J. A. Avant

Library J 96:3156 O 1 '71 90w

GEHLEN, REINHARD. The service; the memoirs of General Reinhard Gehlen; tr. by David Irving; introd. by George Bailey. 386p pl $10 World pub.

B or 92 World War. 1939-1945—Secret service. Espionage, German. Spies
ISBN 0-529-04455-2 LC 73-183092

The author "was the head of Fremde Heere Ost (Foreign Armies East), the German military intelligence service on the eastern front during World War II. After the war, he surrendered himself, his men, and his files to the Americans on the condition that he be allowed to operate autonomously. In 1955 the 'Gehlen Organization' was transferred to the Federal Republic under the name of 'Bundesnachrichtendienst' (BND). From then until he retired in 1968, . . . Gehlen ran a West German espionage service with branches and agents all over the world." (N Y Rev of Books) Chronology. Glossary. Originally published in Germany in 1971.

"Had it an index, [this book] would be extremely useful for historical purposes. It is not merely narration; it is also comment and analysis . . . [on a member of political confrontations since World War II]. . . . General Gehlen of the German General Staff . . . [is still] hostile to Russia and its communist government. He follows this attitude into the Caribbean, into Vietnam, into China. No wonder his organization became the target of a distorted and mendacious Russian smear campaign. The book's value derives from its being rich in fact and attitude on a hot point." Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 32:167 J1 1 '72 490w

Choice 9:1189 N '72 220w

Economist 244:61 S 9 '72 700w

"Gehlen's memoirs . . . are somewhat of a disappointment because of the lack of detail and documentation and because of the long sermons on the dangers of Communism. They are valuable, however, as a personal evaluation by an expert on Soviet affairs who was intimately involved in the cold war for over 20 years. [This] book is recommended but [E. H.] Cookridge's [Gehlen: Spy of the Century, BRD 1972] gives more information and provides more interesting reading." B. D. Loynd
Library J 97:2719 S 1 '72 70w

"Gehlen's memoirs, though utterly unreliable and at times deliberately misleading, retain some historical interest. In the first place, they tell us something about Gehlen's world outlook. Secondly, they confirm beyond doubt the . . . campaign waged by Gehlen and his men against the Social Democrats and their . . . effort to dismantle the cold war ramparts . . . which separated West Germany from Eastern Europe. . . . The best part of [the book] . . . is the introduction . . . which explains the unique importance of intelligence and staff work to the Prussian military tradition: a country without natural frontiers was drawn to . . . attack as the means of defense, which in turn entailed precise preparations and knowledge of hostile forces." Neal Ascherson
N Y Rev of Books 18:3 Je 1 '72 800w

Reviewed by S. K. Oberbeck
Newsweek 79:94 Je 19 '72 900w

Reviewed by R. G. Deindorfer
Sat R 55:66 Je 24 '72 120w

GEISINGER, MARION. Plays, players, & playwrights; an illustrated history of the theatre. 767p $20 Hart

792 Theater—History
ISBN 0-8055-1091-5 LC 77-162054

"Using a chronological format—from the drama of the Greeks to the modern American musical—the author discusses in encyclopedic entries the high spots and the top figures of the theater." (Library J)

"[This is a] surface skimming of theatrical history. . . . The simply written text at times goes into much detail—as concerning the acting styles of David Garrick vs. John Quin—while important highlights are scamped: Molière gets short shrift. Too little information is given for the serious theater student, and too much for the browser. However, this is a delightful general introduction, easy and fun to read, and the over 400 illustrations are its strength. But why no bibliography?"
Choice 9:74 Mr '72 180w

"More than 400 illustrations (portraits, production shots, playbills, and art works) are reproduced in this handsome volume. . . . It is not so much a book to be read through, but rather one to be used for ready reference. . . . It has been some time since such a volume appeared, and this one closes dates and includes recent credits and entries on current innovative stage practices. The introductory notes are clear and concise, and the sourcing of the pictorial material is helpful." Paul Myers
Library J 97:697 F 15 '72 120w

"Included is a special chapter on Russian theater (mainly because of Stanislavsky's importance), but virtually ignored is the French theater of Anouilh, Montherlant and Arrabal. The impact of Ionesco and Beckett gets only passing attention. On the whole, there's more nostalgia here than information."
N Y Times Bk R p18 D 19 '71 60w

GEISMAR, MAXWELL. Ring Lardner and the portrait of folly. (Twentieth-century Am. writers) 166p $4.50 Crowell

818 Lardner. Ring Wilmer
ISBN 0-690-70234-5 LC 77-175105

A biography of the satirist, sportswriter and short story writer, known for his contributions in the 1920's and 1930's to such magazines as The Saturday Evening Post and Cosmopolitan. Bibliography. Index.

"[This book is] apparently aimed at young adults but could be read with profit by anybody interested either in the author discussed or the critic. . . . [It] is intended as an introductory reading. It is a polite and thorough introduction to Lardner's work, from his early sports writing, through his satiric stories about the American mentality of his time, namely, greed, to his late Dadaistic comic drama. . . . Carefully selecting passages in Lardner's work, Geismar allows us to come to know the man he is introducing directly, and we come to share the same enthusiasm that is so noticeable in the critic's relationship to the author." P. T. Majkut Best Sell 32:214 Ag 1 '72 350w [YA]

"This work will be well-nigh indispensable in any comprehensive American literature collection. . . . Geismar attempts, in this brief critical study, to rehabilitate the satirist and social commentator in Ring Lardner without diminishing the author's stature as an entertainer and sports writer without peer. There is scarcely a scrap of Lardner's writing not touched upon. Inevitably, some of Geismar's interpretations will seem strained, even far-fetched, but they are never dull or pedantic."
Choice 9:1291 D '72 190w

"This basic book will encourage young people to read Lardner's stories, and those familiar with Lardner will appreciate the fresh and modern approach." M. L. Savage
Library J 97:4077 D 15 '72 110w [YA]

"Geismar, obviously a fan from away back, has written an affectionate reappraisal under the title, 'Ring Lardner and the Portrait of Folly.' Affectionate, yes, but suffering from the fact he is trying to explain Lardner to a generation that (almost certainly) never heard of him—and, again, taking his turn at the analysis of the Twenties. . . . Mr. Geismar quotes copiously from the stories and the pieces. If he stops a bit too often to say that something is pretty funny, forgive him and regard his book as a sampler. In the original, the stories stand up fine." Lewis Nichols
N Y Times Bk R p8 S 10 '72 400w

GEIST, VALERIUS. Mountain sheep; a study in behavior and evolution. 383p il $14.50 Univ. of Chicago press

599 Mountain sheep
ISBN 0-226-28572-3 LC 77-149596

"This book documents a . . . behavioral study of the bighorn sheep, Ovis canadensis, in several regions of British Columbia and Alberta [from 1961 to 1966]. It also includes data from the author's studies of Dall's sheep, Stone's sheep, moose, and mountain goat. . . . Geist advances a theory of sheep evolution which suggests that evolutionary changes can be adaptations not to the physical habitat but to changes in the social environment." (Science)

"Geist is highly qualified to write on the behaviour and evolution of mountain sheep. . . . The theory of mountain sheep evolution is integrated through social behaviour, population dynamics, bioenergetics, zoogeography, and ecology into a functional whole, and Geist compares sheep ecology with moose ecology in a unique way. . . . The book is interestingly written, easy to read, well documented with tables, photographs, and many references, and will be an authoritative source of information for years to come. This outstanding contribution to the literature on mountain sheep will attract behavioral scientists, naturalists, laymen, and students."
Choice 9:80 Mr '72 110w

"The book is not without minor faults. Several references are made to a paper by Watson et al., 1956, but it is not listed in the bibliography. . . . It is occasionally difficult to determine in the text exactly which species the author is referring to. And Geist gives little information on his method of individual identification of animals, which is crucial in a behavioral study. The book is very well illustrated by clear drawings and first-class photographs. There is a wealth of tabular and graphical data. To wildlife biologists this book provides an excellent basis for the management of wild sheep. There can be no doubt that [it] will prove of considerable value to all those interested in mammalian behavior, ecology, and evolution." R. M. F. S. Sadleir
Science 175:1231 Mr 17 '72 550w

GELBER, H. G., ed. Problems of Australian defence. 359p $12.50 Oxford

355.03 Australia—Military policy
ISBN 0-19-550353-8 LC 71-27829

These essays center "upon Australia's defense requirements. . . . [The authors] discuss maritime strategy, procurement, trade, and other aspects of defense. The first six chapters analyze the positions of India, China, Indonesia, Japan, Great Britain, and the U.S. regarding Australia." (Choice) Index.

GELBER, H. G.—Continued

"Good writing by well qualified authors. For large libraries."

Choice 8:1509 Ja '72 160w

"Several papers are contributed by non-Australians and present a relatively unbiased view of Australia's foreign relations. Many of the chapters are at best obliquely relevant. . . . While there is some material here for a coherent analysis of Australia's concerns about defense, particularly in terms of Australia's place in a polarized world, only large research collections should consider paying the inflated price of this book." E. G. Hamann

Library J 96:3766 N 15 '71 180w

"[Gelber] has not provided synthesizing comment or an introduction for the benefit of non-specialist readers. . . . This reviewer holds certain reservations about the book's consistency of approach and immediate relevance to Australia's own defense problems. Nonetheless, Dr. Gelber has assembled a book which, in somewhat different ways, should appeal to specialists and non-specialist readers, and persons concerned with areal-international as well as technical, aspects of Australia's defense." H. S. Albinski

Pacific Affairs 45:148 spring '72 430w

GELVEN, MICHAEL. A commentary on Heidegger's Being and time; a section-by-section interpretation. 234p lib bdg $6; pa $2.95 Harper

111.1 Heidegger, Martin—Being and time
LC 76-112895

This commentary on "Being and Time [BRD 1963] is intended to provide the English-speaking student with 'clarification of difficult passages, explanations of the structure of Being and Time, and occasional examples of human experience to elucidate Heidegger's points." (J Philos)

"This commentary by a young American philosopher fills a large need, since Heidegger's major work is formidably difficult in its native language and frequently unintelligible in the inadequate translation that exists. Gelven is conscientious and careful, makes his own translations of excerpts frequently, and manages to be clear throughout. He does commit errors of interpretation here and there, particularly in reading Kant's influence into Heidegger's notion of time. But the number of things he gets right in the interpretation of this much misunderstood work is more impressive. Until we possess a good translation of the original, this commentary will be more useful for students and specialists than anything yet published. Even then it will continue to be a valuable aid for beginners. All libraries should have it, and serious students of Heidegger will want to purchase it."

Choice 8:237 Ap '71 170w

"[This study] confuses and misleads as much as it clarifies, the abundant examples often serve instead of detailed explanations, and the analyses of the structure of Being and Time are not even consistent. The commentary rarely gives more than a summary of the most obvious of Heidegger's theses and evinces little consciousness of the philosophic issues involved. [It] interprets Being and Time as a sort of Kantian transcendental psychology. . . . In general, the treatment of basic concepts and terms in the commentary is quite inadequate. . . . This is not a work to consult for close exegesis of Being and Time or for a more general presentation of Heidegger's philosophic views. At best, the treatment of the text is cursory and superficial—difficult individual passages are rarely dealt with at all. And finally, the overall philosophic level of the explanations and 'argumentation' is low." Raymond Geuss

J Philos 68:349 Je 3 '71 2900w

GEMMING, ELIZABETH. Blow ye winds westerly: the seaports & sailing ships of old New England. 183p il maps $4.95 Crowell 917.4 Whaling—Juvenile literature. Fisheries—New England—Juvenile literature. Seafaring life—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-690-14797-X LC 71-158692

This is a "history of the seafaring people of New England. Three sections cover: merchant ships and the seaports of Salem, Boston, Nantucket, and New Bedford (where girls sometimes received whales for dowries); the fishing industry; and the whaling fleet. [Annotated bibliography. Glossary. Index.] Grades six to eight." (Library J)

"[This is] a very colorful, anecdotal (account). . . . Black-and-white reproductions of old portraits and seascapes, figureheads, scrimshaw, etc. add authenticity to . . . this lively account." Elizabeth Gillis

Library J 97:1921 My 15 '72 190w

"Much of this book fails to penetrate the deodorized and sanctimonious surface of history so visible in the replicas supplied by New England's flourishing nostalgia industry. Just as cowboy movies have created a West that never was, souvenir vendors sell us a version of New England history that never existed either, and this book does little to correct our vision." Feenie Ziner

N Y Times Bk R p8 Mr 19 '72 300w

GENAUER, EMILY. Chagall at the "Met." See Chagall at the "Met"

GENTILE, GIOVANNI. The philosophy of art; tr. and with an introd. by Giovanni Gullace. 292p $15 Cornell univ. press

701 Art—Philosophy

ISBN 0-8014-0664-1

LC 75-162548

"Published in the original Italian in 1931, La filosofia dell'arte presents a systematic treatment of esthetics from a . . . philosophical point of view. The book is divided into four main sections. An introduction explains the universal human character of the problem of art and its relationship to the problem of philosophy. Part one restates . . . ideas expressed by Gentile in previous writings. It examines the nature of art and its place and function in the life of the spirit, giving particular emphasis to the essential character of 'Form' and 'Feeling.' The second section deals with . . . the nature of language, literary technique, the differences between the various arts, taste and genius, criticism, art and morality, etc. The conclusion presents an outline of the development and major steps of esthetic thought from antiquity down to Croce." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The 90-page translator's introduction by Gullace . . . discusses the development of Gentile's philosophy with specific references to his other works. . . . The distinctive element in Gentile's aesthetics seems to be that he would not consider sensual conception and formal imagery as separable from a total 'spiritualizing' of art. Since this differs from many contemporary theories Gentile's position should be studied. . . . Recommended for undergraduate libraries which furnish materials for advanced courses in aesthetics. Despite the translator's attempt to modify the original Italian there exists still much effusiveness."

Choice 9:825 S '72 240w

"[This work is Gentile's] major contribution to aesthetics. . . . [The introduction] offers a contextual basis for further investigations. This reasoned presentation in itself makes the volume worth inclusion in contemporary philosophy collections." Rosemary Neiswender

Library J 97:2100 Je '72 250w

GEOFFREY OF VINSANF. The new poetics. See Murphy, J. J., ed. Three medieval rhetoric arts

GEORGE, JEAN CRAIGHEAD. Who really killed Cock Robin? an ecological mystery. 149p $4.95 Dutton

SRN 0-525-42700-7 LC 76-15794

"As a publicity gimmick for the fall elections. Mayor Joe of Saddleboro, whose Clean Environment Party won the previous election, is entertaining a pair of nesting robins in his old campaign hat. Across the street from the mayor, Tony Isidoro is keeping notes for his brother who was drafted before he could complete his master's thesis on the robins of Saddleboro. Then, one day, Cock Robin was dead. . . . Tony and the other children track down all the potential killers of the robin: detergents. . . . fungicides from the golf course, aniline dyes [etc.]. . . . Grades four to seven." (Library J)

"The true incident of a little girl's dying robin and a real town's struggle with its ecology problems inspired this 'ecological mystery.' . . . It is a fascinating new kind of mystery. . . . [The] prime investigators . . . come upon many puzzling and complex evidences of a dangerous imbalance in the area before they trace the troubles to their source and find the villains. The search, which eventually involves everyone, makes an absorbing, highly informative story that points up dramatically how difficult—and how important—it is for all of us try to 'live in balance with all beasts and plants, and air and water.' " Polly Goodwin

Book World p14 (children's issue)
N 7 '71 180w

"Add to [Tony's scientific manner] . . . a boy's love of intrigue, of sleuthing among swamps and chemistry labs, and a clutch of townfolk as vividly drawn as a cast of Our Gang characters, and the result is sure to appeal to inquiring youths. What's more, the observations about wildlife and man's ecological bloopers are dropped as 'clues,' making the story a superb example of investigative learning which few classroom teachers could hope to match." R. C. J.

Christian Science Monitor p6 D 30 '71
250w

Horn Bk 47:610 D '71 160w

"This engrossing ecological mystery will be read by many children, among them those who might not tackle standard non-fiction accounts on the subject. . . . Characterization is only fair, but the integration of factual material into a suspenseful story is outstanding." M. I. Purucker

Library J 96:4184 D 15 '71 200w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 55:80 F 19 '72 100w

GEORGESCU-ROEGEN, NICHOLAS. The entropy law and the economic process. 457p il $16 Harvard univ. press

330.01 Economics
ISBN 0-674-25780-4 LC 78-115186

The argument of this critical analysis of economic philosophy is that "the entropy of the physical universe increases constantly because there is a continuous and irrevocable qualitative degradation of order into chaos. The entropic nature of economic process, which degrades natural resources and pollutes the environment, constitutes the present danger. The earth is entropically winding down naturally, and economic advance is accelerating the process. Man must learn to ration [his] meager resources . . . if he is to survive in the long run when the entropic degradation of the sun will be the crucial factor." (Library J)

"The introductory essay, 'Some Orientation Issues in Economics,' from the author's Analytical Economics: Issues and Problems [BRD 1967] has been revised and expanded, and it now serves as the introduction to a monumental synthesis of science and social science . . . a 'poetic' philosophy, mathematics, and science of economics. [This] is the quintessence of the thought that has been focused on the economic reality. Henceforth all economists must take these conclusions into account lest their analyses and scholarship be found wanting. . . . [This volume] is an essential acquisition for college and other comprehensive collections." H. S. Camenson

Library J 96:1705 My 15 '71 220w

"This is a blockbuster of a book. It should be reviewed by at least three people—an economist, thermodynamicist, and a philosopher of science. As a mere economist, even with some amateur interests in the other two fields, I have to confess that there are considerable parts of the book which I cannot appraise. . . . There are not many concessions to the reader. . . . [The] economics in the last half of the text . . . does not fit very well into the rest of the volume. It would probably better have been published as a separate essay. . . . In spite of some very real defects, this is a remarkable book. . . . [It may not] appeal to a very wide circle of readers. If, however, the right 500 people were to read it, science perhaps would never be quite the same again." Kenneth Boulding

Science 175:1099 Mr 10 '72 1450w

GERALD, JOHN BART. Conventional wisdom. 135p $5.95 Farrar, Straus
ISBN 0-374-12892-8 LC 74-186097

Gerald "uses a collapsing marriage as the subject of his second novel. Will, the major character, evades Sarah's desire to have a baby by taking up with Maggie, thus losing Sarah. The novel's first two sections focus on the marriage and the breakup; the last section presents some somber 'conventional wisdoms.' Will has gained from living through the collapse." (Library J)

"The elimination of plot in [the] short last section makes for a very modern and, as it turns out, a very dull conclusion. Will remains self-absorbed and uninteresting. As a whole, the novel is opaque, seemingly intended to make its foundation out of tone rather than plot. Robbe-Grillet has shown that is possible, but it does not work well here. Larger libraries may want the novel anyway, since it shows promise despite its weaknesses." Peter Dollard

Library J 97:2200 Je 15 '72 170w

"The final part . . . includes advice on the proper handling of plumbing problems, dogs, sharks, parents, the death of lovers, wives who have children by men other than their husbands. It is thoroughly detached. . . . The themes themselves grow out of what has passed before, though the relationship is purposefully vague. This section is wryly wrought and diverting. Gerald is the author of A Thousand Thousand Mornings [BRD 1964]. He is sure of himself and has certainly considered what is to be gained by his structural design. I found the first part at times cloying; the second I would have preferred extended; the third, while it instructs and entertains, is evasive and beguiling. I did find the book readable, admired the author for the risks he took, and think of 'Conventional Wisdom' as an accomplishment." John Deck

N Y Times Bk R p6 Je 8 '72 400w
New Yorker 48:110 Je 3 '72 100w

"Lyrical, even poetic treatment of essentially sordid material . . . becomes transmuted from base metal into something that at least glitters, for the author writes with becoming skill, much reticence, and glowing eloquence, thus conferring dignity and persuasiveness to an otherwise commonplace story. Mr. Gerald's second book is hardly more than a novella, but it affirms his stature and augments his promise for the future."

Va Q R 48:cxx autumn '72 90w

GERASIMOV, I. P., ed. Natural resources of the Soviet Union: their use and renewal; ed by I. P. Gerasimov, D. L. Armand, and K. M. Yefron; tr. from the Russian by Jacek I. Romanowski; English ed. ed. by W. A. Douglas Jackson. 349p maps $12.50 Freeman

333 Natural resources—Russia
ISBN 0-7167-0248-7 LC 74-138667

These "essays (arranged under five basic headings—water, climate, land, vegetation, fish and game) attempt to present . . . a comprehensive picture of Russia's natural resources (exclusive of minerals resources)." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"The authors are members of the national Academy of Sciences of the Soviet Union and as such have presented an excellent assessment of the subject matter. Since the English translation is expert, it compares very favorably with the original. Detailed bibliographies after each chapter are a helpful tool for further research on the subject matter although all the sources are Russian, Ukrainian, or White Russian. Compares very favorably with any book on the subject matter in the West. A must for every good library."

Choice 8:1620 F '72 120w

"Since under Stalin scholarly works of this type were rarely published, this book, which appeared in 1963 in a limited edition, did not have many companions. Though some footnotes have been added, the presentation is in general almost ten years old; this does not, however, reduce the validity of the material. Of real value in various fields such as geography, economics, agriculture, and even biology." H. H. Bernt

Library J 96:4027 D 1 '71 140w

GERE, J. A. Taddeo Zuccaro: his development studied in his drawings [catalogue raisonné and introduction]. 239p pl $28.50 Univ. of Chicago press

741.9 Zuccaro, Taddeo. Drawings. Italian
SBN 571-08756-6 LC [79-484123]

This is "a study of the artist's development at the hand of the surviving drawings. It . . .

GERE, J. A.—Continued

outlines [his] career, and [shows that] many of the drawings turn out to be studies for paintings, several of which are also illustrated." (TLS)

"There is nothing directly comparable to this definitive volume. It is important in clarifying the artistic personality of Zuccaro and in relating his development to that of the Roman Maniera. In the admittedly difficult matter of identifying and distinguishing between the drawings of Taddeo and Federico, Gere's honest and scholarly connoisseurship disposes one to accept his attributions."

Choice 7:1501 Ja '71 120w

"Virtually every study of Mannerism contains the name Zuccaro at the end of the index, but hitherto we have had to be satisfied with little more. It is the supreme merit of John Gere's admirable and beautifully produced book that that name now comes to life and that we are introduced to an artist (or, at least, a draughtsman) of absolutely superb gifts. . . . [Though] most attractively written, the book is austere and scholarly, and it is a pity perhaps that Gere is so reluctant to give us any general conclusions based on his detailed studies."

Francis Haskell

Encounter 35:69 S '70 1150w

"A great effort has been made to assemble illustrations from obscure sources. Zuccaro emerges as a virtuoso draftsman of the 16th-Century Roman school. The long introduction is a closely reasoned though somewhat partisan argument in favor of the master's originality. The ample and excellent illustrations with their careful descriptions give great insight not only into this artist but into the entire Mannerist orientation of the time. A specialized study suitable for art libraries and collections on the High Renaissance." Peter Fingesten

Library J 95:3900 N 15 '70 90w

"All that one had come to expect from Mr Gere's previous writings can also be found here: the sure eye, the combination of clarity of exposition and cautiousness of statement (all signs of someone in full command of his material), as well as an elegance of style, only too rare in art-historical writings, which makes the book a real pleasure to read. In fact the slow emergence, piece by piece, of the stature of a major artist is as thrilling to follow as the intricate plot of a detective story. . . . The 'apparatus' of the book too is excellent. The catalogue entries, which form the second part, are precise and illuminating. But as students will inevitably consult this book from now on as the only authoritative study of Taddeo, they might wish to be informed of the provenance at least of some of the more important drawings. . . . There is an annotated table of dates in the lives of both the Zuccaro brothers, and four indexes enable one to find any work from whatever angle one approaches it."

TLS p676 Je 25 '70 1400w

GERHARDT, JAMES M. The draft and public policy; issues in military manpower procurement, 1945-1970. (Ohio state univ. Mershon center for educ. in nat. security. Publication) 425p $15 Ohio state univ. press

355.2 Military service, Compulsory
SBN 8142-0143-1 LC 70-105723

Gerhardt "chronicles the events that led to acceptance of the selective service system over universal military training as a means of guaranteeing a continuing supply of manpower for the nation's burgeoning military, and it examines the history of selective service and the controversy surrounding it since inception." (Library J) Index.

"Gerhardt has carefully written a mostly non-controversial historical analysis of draft policy over the past twenty-five years. Emphasis is on official sources of documentation, presidential messages, congressional records, and military proposals, with much less consideration of sources as interest groups and student movements concerned with manpower procurement policy. The views of public officials have been well covered in the area of a particular political system output, draft policy, but conclusions are not as well presented in terms of societal effects and outcomes." O. W. Eads

Ann Am Acad 399:218 Ja '72 550w

"[This] is a comprehensive study (an outgrowth of Gerhardt's doctoral dissertation) of manpower procurement by the armed services since 1945. . . . Students of political science will find the book particularly useful for its analysis of the interaction of the various branches of government and pressure groups in the formulation of public policy. Due to its price and specialization, it is recommended only for strong military and political science collections." Mike Gabriel

Library J 96:3338 O 15 '71 120w

GERIN, WINIFRED. Emily Brontë; a biography. 290p il $9.95 Oxford

B or 92 Brontë, Emily Jane

ISBN 0-19-812018-4

LC 79-881328

This account of the life of Emily Brontë also includes a discussion of "Wuthering Heights" in which "Miss Gerin . . . reveals its 'origins' in the life and psychology of its author." (New Statesman) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Mary Ellmann

Am Scholar 42:170 winter '72-'73 800w

"Fortunately (or ironically), . . . [this] biography provides numerous glimpses of an Emily in whom vitality abounded without overflowing. A girl of singular reticence, she was never studious. Housework (of which she did a lot) she never chafed at, for her mind was always on something else. In spite of the presence of Branwell and her father, she was a Hausfrau without a Herr." Paul West

Book World p11 Mr 5 '72 1000w

Choice 9:968 O '72 380w

"Charlotte, attractively and sympathetically though she is drawn in Miss Gerin's biography of her [Charlotte Brontë; the Evolution of Genius BRD 1967], in this latest book is assigned the secondary role of a more extrovert, more successful, slightly bossy elder sister. . . . Emily's image is remote and sybilic: Miss Gerin puts into the balance her childhood, . . . her practical management, her prettiness. But she was always withdrawn. . . . Miss Gerin's careful reading of Charlotte's many comparisons of Emily's and Anne's deaths does not give a picture of either resignation or of a wish to die. In Charlotte's words, Emily 'turned her dying eyes reluctantly from the pleasant sun.' That, perhaps, gives the sharpest impression of all of that strong character, the oddest and most mystic of . . . the Brontës."

Economist 241:xii N 6 '71 400w

Reviewed by Shirley Chew

Encounter 39:82 S '72 700w

Reviewed by F. P. Riga

Library J 97:1423 Ap 15 '72 230w

"Winifred Gerin, who has already written on Charlotte, Anne [Anne Brontë, BRD 1960] and Branwell [Branwell Brontë, BRD 1962] with prizewinning efficiency, does more than justice to Emily, given the paucity of facts and documentation. It is in many ways an exemplary, if somewhat plain, narrative. Her unrivalled experience and expertise—much in evidence throughout her book—should not deter the critical. Miss Gerin's approach is weak in its literary critical perspectives. Perhaps that is not the concern of every literary biographer, but in the case of Emily Brontë there are good reasons why it should be. Miss Gerin's assessment of Emily's character falls a little short of persuasive because she never suggests the biographical implications of the self-pity and sentimentality of some of the poems, and it is the poems themselves . . . that provide the nearest thing to an autobiography that we have." Douglas Dunn

New Statesman 82:704 N 19 '71 300w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Hardwick

N Y Rev of Books 18:11 My 4 '72 4200w

"Miss Gerin stresses that the essential key to Emily's personality will be found in her interior life. This is true: none the less flashes of insight into this interior life are certainly also given by means of her relationships at home, even such a relationship as that with her dog, Keeper. Some of these relationships Miss Gerin does discuss most discerningly. . . . There are difficulties for the biographer . . . in concentrating on Emily's interior life. With the exception of three short letters, there is no extant correspondence. . . . The poems, however, illuminate the scope and depth of Emily's emotional and imaginative life more widely and sympathetically than does Wuthering Heights. Miss Gerin quotes from them, generously to make her points. . . . One does feel that [her] interpretation, particularly when taken in conjunction with her other Brontë studies, comes somewhere near the heart of the truth."

TLS p1569 D 17 '71 1400w

Yale R 62:XIII D '72 1000w

GERSON, NOEL B. Because I loved him; the life and loves of Lillie Langtry. 255p $5.95
Morrow

B or 92 Langtry, Lillie
LC 70-151901

This is an account of the love affairs and theatrical career of Lillie Langtry. Bibliography. Index.

"The author has spanned the adult years of Mrs. Langtry's life, giving the reader a hodge-podge delineation of her astute managerial abilities, her flawless acting, and a musical-chairs performance in the matter of husbands and lovers. There is a certain amount of fact-relating that leaves the reader wondering whether Lillie was for real, and if so whether she could be the person portrayed in the pages of Mr. Gerson's biographical effort. . . . [This book] will be fodder for those who think and live in the world of glamor; the movie magazine set will be duly impressed." Al Phillips
Best Sell 31:226 Ag 15 '71 330w

"What a subject . . . for a romantic biography, since it is rare indeed to find such an alliance of looks and talent. Unluckily, Noel Gerson has muffed it. His book is insensitively written, and unreliable in matters of fact which a little research could easily have cleared. What should have been the portrait of someone very much a person in her own right is never enlarged beyond the scale of the penny photographs of her sold by the hundred in the early days of her fame." Alan Pryce-Jones
Book World p23 N 21 '71 300w

GERSTEIN, LINDA. Nikolai Strakhov. (Russian res. center studies, 65) 237p $8.50 Harvard univ. press

B or 92 Strakhov, Nikolai. Russia—Intellectual life
ISBN 0-674-62475-0 LC 79-139720

This is a portrayal of the life and career of the "Russian philosopher, literary and social critic, and journalist who was . . . involved in the major intellectual controversies of the second half of the 19th century." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Generally dismissed as a conservative writer of secondary significance, [Strakhov] is viewed by Gerstein . . . as a misunderstood victim of 'purposeful historical forgetfulness.' In this first English-language study of Strakhov, he is shown to have been a deep, complex, and sometimes prescient thinker. Despite the soundness of this brief intellectual biography, however, Strakhov remains less important for his own life and thought than for his reflection of the diversity of Russian intellectual life in this period. Footnotes, bibliography, index. Recommended for large university libraries." Choice 8:1029 O '71 110w

"[This is] a most interesting contribution to the history of Russian nineteenth-century thought. . . . A bibliophile, Slavophile and hermit, Strakhov seems never to have raised his voice loud enough to be a public tribune, yet he clearly attracted the attention of the leading intellectual figures of his time. Mrs Gerstein's very informative and warmly sympathetic biography explains the paradox almost without noting it. . . . [She] makes out a good case for her subject as one who has been unjustly neglected in the historiography of the period. But in the final estimate it is not positive aspects of Strakhov's work and influence which strike the sparks. He seems to have been at his best in his eloquent and subtle attacks on such quotidian enthusiasms as the adulation for John Stuart Mill, Darwinism and Spiritualism and so much else from the West which was admired indiscriminately in the Russia of his time." TLS p44 Ja 14 '72 600w

"Mrs. Gerstein's fine biography . . . is one of the better products so far of the new orientation in this country's study of Russia." Va Q R 48:xiv winter '72 120w

GERTH, DONALD R. An invisible giant [the Calif. state colleges, by] Donald R. Gerth, James O. Haehn, and associates. 239p $8.75 Jossey-Bass

378 Colleges and universities—California
ISBN 0-87589-110-1 LC 79-173855

Provided in this collection are "fifteen individual chapters written by a corps of fifteen authors. . . . [Topics covered include] such subjects as the historical development of CSC [California State College] functions of the Board of Trustees and the Chancellor's Office, statewide and local campus academic senates, allocation and management of money, minority group problems and programs, and trends and issues in the coordination and governance of higher education in California." (J Higher Ed) Bibliography.

"The essays are somewhat uneven in quality and tend toward the bland side. Nevertheless, the book is a valuable contribution since the large and growing network of state colleges throughout the nation has received little analytical attention. And such institutions have special problems which deserve analysis. For example . . . the kinds of students attracted to state colleges are different than those attracted to more prestigious schools. And in California this contrast is particularly dramatic because of the existence of the University of California. This book will be of interest to those concerned with higher education and is strongly recommended for research libraries." Choice 9:552 Je '72 180w

"In general [the] kind of descriptive information and commentary [offered] would probably have more appeal to 'outsiders,' since most of the information on CSC problems . . . are common knowledge to Californians and others interested in the subject. Some of the more general interest topics are those that deal with major current problems in higher education, for example, minority group needs . . . trends and issues about faculty unionism, and politicization and political relationships in higher education policy matters. From an analytical perspective, this book is less useful. Cumulative findings and conclusions of the fifteen authors are somewhat lost because of the absence of a common framework." J Higher Ed 43:578 O '72 800w

GEVA, TAMARA. Split seconds; a remembrance. $7.95 Harper

B or 92 Ballet
SBN 06-011512-2 LC 72-79666

In this account of her life, the ballerina "concentrates on her childhood. . . . Growing up before, during, and after the Russian Revolution, she . . . describes the life of a sensitive child neglected by a . . . self-centered mother and a scholarly, withdrawn father. . . . [Her governess] provided the love, understanding, and encouragement she needed and . . . gave her life's savings for Geva's special dancing lessons. . . . Parts of the story deal with her dance training [and] her marriage to [George] Balanchine." (Library J)

"The names and places used in 'Split Seconds' differ from those in other memoirs of this type but the pattern of poverty, aspiration, rejection, heartbreak and final success is all too familiar. By far the most refreshing element in the book is the portrait drawn of Fraulein Rosalia, the governess who, until her death, loved, fought for, sheltered and sustained Tamara. This one you can by-pass with a clear conscience." Sister Gregory Duffy
Best Sell 32:374 N 15 '72 350w

"[Geva] is a gifted writer and the author of a superb book. . . . [Her] career will be a special interest to dance lovers; but this is a work for anyone wanting to read a good book." G. L. Mayer
Library J 97:3144 O 1 '72 200w

GEYER, GEORGIE ANNE. The new 100 years war. 318p $7.95 Doubleday

956 Arab countries—Description and travel.
Israel—Description and travel. Jewish-Arab relations
LC 72-139023

"This anecdotal account of reporting from the Middle East in 1969-71 focuses on the Arab-Israeli conflict and emphasizes the attitudes on each side that perpetuate the fighting and mistrust. Geyer, correspondent for the Chicago Daily News, finds the Egyptians appealing but politically self-deluding, and shows the Palestinians as being torn by the contradictions between their ideology of deprivation and their marked degree of modernity. . . . [She describes] the growing strain [in Israel] over the policy toward the occupied areas and the general conflict between the generations." (Library J) Index.

"About a third of the book is a superficial whirl, with some inaccuracies, through Libya,

GEYER, G. A.—Continued

Sudan, Eritrea, Saudi Arabia, Morocco, etc. The report on Israel is more successful. . . . The author states her intention to help the reader understand—everything—but she obscures this aim with overblown rhetoric and occasionally loses sight of the issues." E. R. Hayford

Library J 97:202 Ja 15 '72 210w

"[This account] of a war in Lebanon, a rebellion in Eritrea and diverse adventures from Morocco to Jordan . . . is a flying carpet woven of lively anecdotes and piquant local color. Some of it is very revealing of the Arabs and their ways. . . . Running through [Geyer's] reports is the theme that Zionism has engendered Palestinian nationalism, which paradoxically has failed to awaken all Arabs. An interesting, sometimes illuminating, footnote to one of the world's big problems."

N Y Times Bk R p14 J1 16 '72 210w

GHIBERTI, LORENZO. Ghiberti's bronze doors, by Richard Krautheimer. 17p 155pl 4col pl $7.50 Princeton univ. press

730.9 Florence. San Giovanni (Baptistry)
ISBN 0-691-03874-0 LC 78-154999

This work republishes "the photographs of Lorenzo Ghiberti's two sets of bronze doors for the Florentine Baptistry from Krautheimer's . . . monograph on this artist." (Choice)

"Krautheimer's meagre seven-page introduction does not measure up to his usual standards. In attempting to popularize the material under consideration this otherwise commanding writer is working in an area beyond his forte. The rather breezy essay betrays the talent of both Ghiberti and Krautheimer and insults the capacity of the general public to absorb serious, knowledgeable, challenging, and exciting discussion of the two doors. Libraries should ignore this volume and purchase instead (if they have not already done so) the 1970 reprint of Krautheimer's imposing study, Lorenzo Ghiberti [BRD 1957]."

Choice 9:52 Mr '72 110w

"[This study] defines admirably a unique achievement of the early Renaissance." Lawrence Alloway

Nation 213:664 D 20 '71 50w

"Though the names both of the author and the publishers might in themselves appear to guarantee some measure of seriousness, [this] is a frankly commercial publication. . . . Tourists in Florence may buy Ghiberti's Bronze Doors as a memento of their visit to the Baptistry, but Professor Krautheimer's admirers (and they must be legion) will deplore his association with [this] book."

TLS p620 Je 2 '72 230w

"Krautheimer's commentary succinctly describes the meaning and style of the doors and gives pertinent biographical information. As an introduction to Ghiberti or as a handy guide to the doors it would be hard to imagine a better book than this one—particularly at the price."

Va Q R 48:cvi summer '72 120w

GHISELIN, BREWSTER. Country of the Minotaur. 115p $6 Univ. of Utah press

811
LC 75-11676

A collection of poems. Six poems in Italian are gathered at the end.

"Ghiselin's vision of land and sea is one of vast processes in which man is only a part. This is especially true of the two superb long lyrical meditations, 'Sea' and 'The Wheel'; but it appears also in shorter poems like 'Vantage'. . . . Some of these prophetic poems seem to echo the tones of Robinson Jeffers, but Ghiselin resists Jeffers' misanthropic tendency. . . . The love poems are admirable for their grave gaiety. . . . Ghiselin's Italian poems are beautifully made, and the rightness of their language is obvious; they reveal, in their distinctive way, the high craftsmanship of this substantial poetry." Henry Taylor

Nation 212:122 Ja 25 '71 600w

"There is a tidal movement in Ghiselin's lines, and an expansive scriptural eloquence in his language: these characteristics show to best advantage in his longer poems, like Sea or The Wheel. But he has memorable short lyrics also, like Upland, Nocturne, Laguna Beach, and the title poem. Recently The Hudson Review featured a section of articles on the new trend in American verse: nature poetry. Looking over Ghiselin's work of many years we may wonder how new this is. Perhaps it is simply more noticed. If nature poets have really incorporated as a Movement, they owe a great deal to Ghiselin, as to Roethke, for having opened the way." R. B. Shaw

Poetry 119:343 Mr '72 420w

GIACOMETTI, ALBERTO. Alberto Giacometti drawings [by] James Lord. 266p il col ii $30 N.Y. graphic 741

ISBN 0-8212-0381-9 LC 73-155487

This work 'illustrates many of Giacometti's . . . drawings: 11 are in color and 107 in black and white. . . . [Lord's introduction adds] information about the artist's graphic media, the paper he used, and his attitude towards signing and dating his drawings.' (Choice)

"The book is attractive [and] large in format. . . . [The black and white drawings] suffer from a pervasive and monotonous tone of greyness and uniformity in texture, so that . . . [they] often fail to come alive. Yet they are a fascinating display of Giacometti's most intimate conceptions and of his startling development as an artist. Highly recommended." Choice 8:1576 F '72 140w

"The selection appears the most comprehensive and well reproduced to date, covering the years 1915-1965, and about as wide a variety of subjects as was typical of Giacometti. For those reasons, recommended to all art collections." Andrew Robison

Library J 97:65 Ja 1 '72 70w

"Excellent reproductions of what are to me the best work of Giacometti, his drawings, in which the realistic basis of his art is seen at its least revised or abstracted. To see the forms of visual observation coming together in their concreteness is a stronger experience than their subsequent attenuation in the sculpture and painting." Lawrence Alloway

Nation 213:664 D 20 '71 50w

"So much has been written about the art of . . . Giacometti that it is a genuine surprise to discover a new essay which actually illuminates his work. Yet this is precisely what one finds in James Lord's introduction. . . . This is a beautifully written text, sensitive to all the nuances of Giacometti's complex sensibility and most especially to the artist's concern for what he regarded as the 'truth' in art. The plates illustrating Giacometti's drawings range from the excellent to the blurry, with the bulk of them quite acceptable." Hilton Kramer

N Y Times Bk R p74 D 5 '71 110w

GIANAKARIS, C. J. Plutarch. 177p $5.50 Twayne

888 Plutarch
LC 78-120499

"After an initial chapter on the life and age of Plutarch, Gianakaris devotes two chapters to the Lives . . . [stressing that] they must be read as biography, not history. . . . Summaries with running commentaries are provided for Theseus, Romulus, Lysurgus, Numa, Demosthenes, Cicero, Alexander, and Caesar. . . . Chapter IV presents various topics treated in the Moralia, such as customs and cosmology. An overview, 'Plutarch's Thought Crystallized,' follows. . . . [The last] chapter presents a sampling of the results of studies of Plutarch's notable influence on Shakespeare, Emerson, Montaigne and many others." (Class World)

"Gianakaris has attempted to present 'the full dimensions of Plutarch as an intellectual figure, and of his impact on the civilized world.' . . . Inaccuracies and misunderstandings damage the book's usefulness. . . . [But it] is an easy-to-read introduction." P. A. Stadter

Class World 65:23 S '71 360w

"Gianakaris' Plutarch joins R. H. Barrow's Plutarch and His Times [BRD 1967] as a book that undertakes to introduce Plutarch to a general audience. This is no easy undertaking. . . . Both Gianakaris and Barrow have achieved a commendable rapport with their author, though their emphases differ. . . . Gianakaris offers a more extensive consideration of Plutarch's effect on post-Medieval thought and literature. However, a historical and critical naiveté, absent from Barrow's study, flashes throughout Gianakaris' references to historical matters. . . . The last chapter ('The Influence and Significance of Plutarch') is Gianakaris' best. The treatment of Plutarch's impact on Emerson and Shakespeare is especially successful, and only when he comes to Plutarch's fall from intellectual grace in the latter nineteenth century does Gianakaris' account falter." Hubert Martin

Mod Lang J 55:532 D '71 800w

GIBRAN, KAHILIL. Beloved prophet; the love letters of Kahlil Gibran and Mary Haskell and her private journal; ed. and arr. by Virginia Hilu. 450p il $7.95 Knopf

B or 92 Haskell, Mary
ISBN 0-394-43298-3 LC 70-79342

These "letters and journals, covering roughly from 1908 to 1931, reveal the . . . spiritual relationship between the Lebanese-American mystic poet-artist and an American headmistress of a girls' school in Cambridge. . . . [The book reveals] the mundane and the spiritual struggles of the rising young poet and his experience with celebrated persons of the world in his time." (Library J)

"This particular collection, for all the prosiness of many of the items, gives such a provocative picture that I can see how many students might be inclined to probe much further. . . . There are some peculiarities about this collection—inevitably, no doubt, since it had to be selective—and they do puzzle the mind a bit. There is very little evidence in the letters of that talent for insight and expression that has won for Gibran his great following. Actually, it is Mary who says the most glorious words; aside from a tentative development of a vague pantheism there is nothing tremendously thoughtful in Gibran's letters. Another oddity is the rather singular attitude of the two toward sex; they decided against marriage because of the difference in their ages; yet their discussions about going from the platonic to the fully sexual relationship sound almost clinical." W. B. Hill
Best Sell 32:118 Je 1 '72 650w

"What I didn't expect [of these letters] was a total non-event. Quite honestly, one might as well read the Manhattan Yellow Pages—they are slightly the more interesting. The harvest of 600 letters and 47 journal excerpts, filleted by Miss Hilu, don't amount to six loaves and two small fishes. There is barely enough matter here for an anchovy canapé. . . . A guru of [Gibran's] stamp lives and exerts his influence through a penetrating and, to his disciples, a transcendent sense of ordinary life. That kind of person may only emerge through direct contact. On paper, Gibran doesn't. Something has evidently gone wrong—these sayings aren't simple so much as trifling. . . . It is incredible that two intelligent human beings could really have spent all those years swapping mottoes out of fortune cookies; if it is nevertheless true, the letters could have stayed in the archives of the University of North Carolina." Alex Comfort
Book World p11 Mr 19 '72 700w

"Since Hilu, an editor at Harper & Row, has cut and edited the voluminous collection to present what she considers most vital in a single volume, there are chronological gaps, admittedly. But . . . [this book] is definitely a worthwhile purchase." Raleigh De Priest
Library J 97:676 F 15 '72 110w

"Throughout this collection of letters and diary entries, so carefully winnowed and annotated by its editor . . . the recurrent theme of burning physical attraction and painful voluntary self-denial runs like a scarlet thread. . . . In spite of Gibran's continuing fame it is Mary's personality, as revealed in her own words, that here arouses the reader's deeper interest. She is the one who remains the real enigma. Although surely no prude, she plainly chose to live within the confines of the puritan tradition. . . . In the lines and between the lines of this seemingly candid record of an unusual relationship there lurk psychological mysteries not too easily evaluated in the terms of our contemporary analytical vocabulary. Beloved Prophet might well be described as a mystery story of a very special genre." N. W. Ross
Sat R 55:63 Ap 15 '72 1800w

TLS p986 Ag 25 '72 350w

GIBSON, ARRELL M. The Chickasaws. (Okla. Univ. The civilization of the Am. Indian ser. v109) 312p pl maps $8.95 Univ. of Okla. press
970.3 Chickasaw Indians
ISBN 0-8061-0945-9 LC 76-145499

"After an opening chapter on tribal ethno-history, Gibson begins his treatment of the Chickasaws with the first recorded contact with Europeans, the DeSoto expedition of 1540. From there he carries the story forward through the years of alliance with the British into the decades of dealing with the Americans and the period of removal to life in the Indian territory. The final chapter deals with dissolution of the Chickasaw by the U.S. government in the early 20th century." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The first book-length study of the Chickasaws. . . . In a straightforward narrative style, Gibson provides us a thorough description of the life of one of the major Southern tribes. Maps, photographs, footnotes, and a bibliography increase the usefulness of this volume. Since it is at one and the same time the first and standard study of the tribe, no library should be without it."

Choice 8:1507 Ja '72 140w

"[This] is a truly splendid book. . . . In fact, this may be the finest single volume history of a North American Indian tribe . . . [and it] is a model for the Indian historian who seeks to integrate tribal traditions with documentary accounts." Jack Gregory and Rennard Strickland
Commonweal 96:288 My 26 '72 100w

"The book is a work of genuine scholarship. . . . This volume . . . will [not] win plaudits for beauty of language, but it is from such solid works that poets and playwrights create epics." Dee Brown

N Y Times Bk R p18 Ag 29 '71 300w

GIBSON, LINDA HODGES. The off-campus, on-campus cookbook. 191p $4.95; pa $2.95 Collier bks.

641.5 Cookery
LC 72-143781

"Chapters are arranged to follow the general course of a meal from appetizer to dessert." (Library J) Glossary. Index.

"The emphasis here is on ease of preparation, economy in purchasing ingredients, and individual experimentation. Just the right combination for an intended audience of students and other fledgling cooks—teen-agers, brides, etc. The author has given special attention to the chicken and the egg; both are used in inexpensive main dishes. . . . Recommended for active collections. (Those considering the book for a YA collection may wish to know that the section on beverages is limited to alcoholic cocktails.)" V. D. Becher

Library J 96:2506 Ag '71 100w

Reviewed by Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p36 D 12 '71 10w

GIBSON, RICHARD. African liberation movements; contemporary struggles against white minority rule; pub. for the inst. of race relations. London. 350p $8.50 Oxford 322.4 Nationalism. Africa—Politics—1960- .

Guerrilla warfare
ISBN 0-19-218402-4 LC 72-191600

The author discusses "movements against white-minority rule in Africa, including those in South Africa, Southwest Africa, Rhodesia, Angola, Mozambique, and the Comoro Islands. The book is arranged by territory and includes . . . historical and social background information." (Library J) Bibliography.

"This is a useful, concise handbook to Africa's liberation movements which, however shambolic, still look like the most powerful force for change in white-ruled Africa. Mr Gibson, who is sympathetic to the aims of most of the nationalist organisations that he discusses, is sufficiently objective to be critical and realistic in his assessment of their failings and achievements. His book is valuable for that, and for its guidance through the morass of acronyms and initials from ANC to Zapu."

Economist 243:83 My 13 '72 80w

"Gibson, an Afro-American journalist who has traveled widely in Africa, offers a timely, 'behind-the-headlines' analysis. . . . [The book] presents little new material, and its main value lies in its grouping together the basic facts and chronology (to early 1972) of the various territories, otherwise only obtainable in monographs and scattered newspaper articles." T. F. Hirsch

GIBSON, RICHARD—Continued

Library J 97:3301 O 15 '72 150w

"[The book] tells little more than one can learn from a diligent review of handouts, communiqués and newspaper reports. Because of its selectivity, moreover, it often tells less. . . . Displaying the grand indifference of those who know better, [Mr. Gibson] sweeps through the 'liberation movements' with a transatlantic certitude which appears to suppose that these Africans cannot, really, have minds of their own. Consequently the greater part of the story is missing: all that part in which, surely, one expects to read of the evolution of thought and the development of possibilities. There is here a monumental lack of empathy . . . and there is also, one suspects, a comparable lack of personal experience 'in the field'. Mr. Gibson harps a great deal on his absence of bias. Rather too often, in these pages, it seems a mere absence of knowledge."

TLS p598 My 26 '72 850w

GIDDENS, ANTHONY. Capitalism and modern social theory; an analysis of the writings of Marx, Durkheim and Max Weber. 261p $11 Cambridge

301 Marx, Karl, Durkheim, Émile, Weber. Max
ISBN 0-521-08293-5 LC 70-161291

Twelve of the fifteen chapters examine the "basic sociological ideas of the three writers. . . . Then, in his concluding section the author examines some of the main points of divergence between Marx's views and those of the two other writers." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] has written a useful and timely book . . . worthy of attention for at least two reasons. First, since much of modern social theory can be traced to these three writers, a review of their ideas and the interrelationships among them helps to clarify areas of contemporary thought; and second, this is particularly true with regard to the major problem of adequately defining the roots of modern alienation. . . . Giddens's treatment will be enlightening to those concerned with prognosticating the health of post-industrial society."

Choice 9:402 My '72 160w

Reviewed by Robert Bierstedt
Contemp Sociol 1:507 N '72 800w

"[This] careful and scholarly account . . . will certainly be of the greatest utility to many students of sociology, who will be able to add Dr Giddens's extensive knowledge of the French and German secondary literature to their own exploration of these founding fathers. . . . [The author] is careful to point out how different are the political traditions against which we have to set their work, and how different, also, are the intellectual assumptions which came naturally to them. He . . . gives welcome attention to the austere neo-Kantianism of Weber's moral and methodological outlook. . . . The reader gets no critical comment or evaluation at all. . . . The omission is a deliberate one."

TLS p1415 N 12 '71 650w

GIDE, ANDRÉ. The André Gide reader; ed. by David Littlejohn. 978p $20 Knopf 848

ISBN 0-394-41531-0 LC 72-111251

In presenting these writings by the French author, the editor attempts to cover a number of "aspects of Gide's work including the complete texts of The Immoralist (1902) and The Pastoral Symphony (1919). There are excerpts from the Journals, The Counterfeiters (1926), the sofies, the imaginary interviews, the travel-notebooks on Russia and Africa, the letters to Proust and Claudel, and the essays on Montaigne, Dostoevsky, and Valéry." (Choice) Bibliography of Gide's writings in English translation.

"This monumental single collection of selected writings of Gide is the first of its kind. . . . Littlejohn has generally improved on most of the original translations and notes. The necessary link of Gide's personal life to his work is always preserved; and the total synthesis provided by this volume is overwhelming in its clarity and impact. This huge book is a definite requirement for English readers and a valuable organizational aid to scholars in French and comparative literature."

Choice 9:220 Ap '72 130w

"[This reader] may assist the student in establishing a perspective on Gide and in understanding the relationship between his life and works [but] its approximately 1000 pages will overwhelm the casual reader, while leaving the scholar unsatisfied. Littlejohn's necessarily selective emphasis on such chosen themes as Gide's sensuality and religious vacillation (especially in the selections from the Journals which comprise over half the book) results in a volume which lacks the variety necessary to maintain interest. The final impression is of repetitiveness when Gide's fundamentally consistent expressions of basic themes are grouped together without . . . any real in-depth annotation to alleviate the homogeneity. . . . [The value of] this excessively expensive item is . . . open to question." Karen Horny

Library J 97:502 F 1 '72 160w

GIES, JOSEPH. Franklin D. Roosevelt; portrait of a president. 233p il $9.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Roosevelt, Franklin Delano, President U.S.
LC 70-160870

For the most part, this picture album . . . is based on the FDR library collection of photographs (including family albums). Many of the photographs have never been published before. The selection . . . represents both historical events and intimate human scenes. Bibliography. Index.

"This pictorial history covers F.D.R. from infancy to his burial. Most [of the pictures] are of F.D.R. and his immediate family or Roosevelt with various dignitaries. This tends to limit the appeal to Roosevelt aficionados. The narrative accompanying the pictures is irreverent in places and has more verve than might be expected. . . . In a time of stringent budgets, this book should prove expendable to most libraries."

Choice 9:275 Ap '72 70w

"The concisely written text is based on the best secondary accounts. A delightful little book for anyone interested in FDR." Hubert Humphreys

Library J 97:490 F 1 '72 50w

GIFFORD, PROSSER, ed. France and Britain in Africa; imperial rivalry and colonial rule; ed. by Prosser Gifford and William Roger Louis. 989p maps $30 Yale univ. press

325.6 French in Africa. British in Africa. Great Britain—Foreign relations—France. France—Foreign relations—Great Britain. Africa—History
ISBN 0-300-01289-6 LC 70-151574

"The companion volume to the Gifford and Louis, Britain and Germany in Africa [BRD 1968]. Part I treats of imperial rivalry (10 essays with a conclusion by Henri Brunschwig); Part II discusses colonial rule (11 essays with an overview by Leonard Thompson)." (Choice) Annotated bibliography.

"The focus is on the motives, methods, and actions of the colonial powers—little is said about what effect colonial rule had upon African societies. (In this sense the volume is inferior to the 'Colonialism in Africa' series edited by Gann and Duignan). Still, this is a book to be purchased by all university and college libraries. The excellent bibliographic essay by David Gardinier provides an indispensable guide to French literature on the colonial period. There are, however, only five maps."

Choice 9:860 S '72 190w

"Like its distinguished predecessor . . . this is a scholarly and substantial volume. Its 22 essays reveal competent craftsmanship both by such mature scholars as Henri Brunschwig, Jean Stengers, and Hubert Deschamps and by younger scholars as well. It is a good mix . . . In the first section, the pieces are chiefly concerned with diplomatic history. Happily much attention is paid to 'faceless' officials in Paris and London. . . . In Part 2, there is some Africa-centeredness. . . . On appraisal, the volume concentrates mostly on north and west Africa. Thus east Africa and Madagascar receive only small attention, and such giants as Lyautey and Gallieni are largely passed over. There is also little about southern Africa. However, Africa is so large and varied that we must perforce expect some omissions, and I am rather grateful for what is included in this major contribution to African studies." (Garland Downum

Library J 97:495 F 1 '72 340w

GIL, DAVID G. Violence against children; physical child abuse in the United States. 204p $6.50 Harvard univ. press 364.1 Cruelty to children
ISBN 0-674-93941-7 LC 77-130809

This is a "sociological study of the incidence of and public response to child abuse. Surveys were made of popular knowledge and opinions about the problem of the battered child, and a nationwide epidemiological investigation of 13,000 incidents of child abuse reported through legal channels during 1967 and 1968 was carried out. Information was compiled concerning the characteristics of abused children, their families, and the perpetrators, along with data regarding the circumstances surrounding the abusive incidents." (Library J)

"If one [expects] a discussion of practical preventive measures based on an interpretation of the data, he is bound to be frustrated . . . [for] what Professor Gil appears to be saying is that physical child abuse cannot be eliminated and that he would have us direct our attentions to more important problems in society, such as . . . poverty, racial discrimination, malnutrition, and inadequate provisions for medical care and education." This reviewer feels that fine research is done a disservice when the interpretation of data is stretched so far afield. . . . This work serves a useful purpose by answering, in a very readable fashion, many questions concerning the quantity and quality of child abuse in American society. The author's enthusiasm for the grand-scale curing of social ills detracts from, but does not destroy, the high quality research effort." Gordon Halpern
Ann Am Acad 400:207 Mr '72 390w

"Gil concludes that the cultural sanction of using physical force in the socialization process of a child in our society is fundamental to the problems of violence against youth. He also makes suggestions to alleviate this problem. Recommended for academic libraries." B. J. Kalisch
Library J 96:488 F 1 '71 150w

GILBERT, ALICE. Poems from Sharon's lunch box; il. by Ellen Gilbert. unp $4.95; lib bdg $4.58 Delacorte press 811 Nonsense verses
LC 77-107037

These poems tell about "three-foot Drucilla Sarsaparilla with six-foot hair, Esmerelda Slink who swallowed a bottle of ink, Melissa Molasses wearing sunglasses, the black sheep shampooing in the shower, the llama on the shelf in the library and many others." (Publisher's note) "Grades one to four." (Library J)

"Although the format is attractive with alternating orange and green pages and charming illustrations by Ellen Gilbert, the poems are only so-so." Judy Johnson
Library J 97:2933 S 15 '72 200w

"[These poems] were written, one a day, for a daughter's school lunchbox; they sound like it. The drawings are much better." L. E. Sissman
N Y Times Bk R p8 Je 25 '72 130w

GILBERT, ELLIOT L. The good Kipling; studies in the short story. 216p $7.50 Ohio univ. press 823 Kipling, Rudyard
ISBN 8214-0985-1 LC 73-122098

Through textual analysis of some of Kipling's short stories, the author endeavours "to show how simplicity of theme, complexity of literary technique and even the countenancing of imperial power and violence are integral parts of Kipling's artistic expression and therefore aesthetically valid, though all have been used as weapons against Kipling. He defends Kipling as much against those who would divorce his art and politics in the hope of isolating the former, as against those who berate him on extraliterary grounds as the champion of imperialism, the sympathetic chronicler of complicity and brutality, instead of analysing him as a serious author." (Economist) Index.

"In effectively rescuing Kipling from his detractors, Gilbert's treatment challenges readers to return to the great stories themselves with new excitement and awareness. Warmly recommended for academic and larger libraries."

Choice 8:1585 F '72 160w

"Professor Gilbert's book is a work for literature specialists. . . . He argues that the authentic voice of 'the Good Kipling' speaks of a chaotic world immanent with disaster, on which man can never impose order. Here is no consistent view of the historical phenomenon of imperialism. Imperialism is a metaphor for daily work, 'an almost mystical act' by which man discovers himself. Such a defence is satisfying at the level of close textual analysis of specific works by a skilled craftsman; but as an over-all view of Kipling it is less convincing."

Economist 243:suppl 13 Ap 8 '72 200w

GILBERT, JAMES. Designing the industrial state; the intellectual pursuit of collectivism in America, 1880-1940. 335p $10 Quadrangle bks.

330.973 U.S.—Economic conditions. Socialism. Industry and state—U.S.
ISBN 0-8129-0219-X LC 73-152091

The author is concerned with "collectivist thinking, tracing it . . . from the 1880's to the liberal rhetoric of the 1930's. Within the general assumptions of the collectivists, he distinguishes a number of diverse plans for social rearrangement: Fabian Socialism . . . industrial Democracy . . . economic pluralism . . . and a series of managerial schemes. . . . Mr. Gilbert offers six intellectual biographies of collectivist thinkers who took . . . different paths to reform: Edmond Kelly, founder of the New York City Club; King C. Gillette, founder of the Gillette Razor Company; Charles Steinmetz, the inventor; William English Walling, the socialist theoretician; the theologian Reinhold Niebuhr; and James Burnham, the political commentator." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"In an ambitious (and largely realized) undertaking, Gilbert synthesizes the political thought of a diverse group of late 19th- and early 20th-Century intellectuals who recognized that America was becoming a mass society and foresaw the huge institutions that would become dominant in the mid-20th Century. . . . This profound book is an important addition to American intellectual history." R. L. Filippelli
Library J 97:495 F 1 '72 170w

"[This] is an original study written in firm, sinuous prose that should appeal to the general reader as well as the academic. The author keeps well within his own bounds, from 1880-1940, without attempting, in the manner of most radical historians, to speculate on its contemporary import." George Charney
New Repub 166:25 My 27 '72 2250w

GILBERT, MARTIN. Winston S. Churchill; 5v; v3, The challenge of war, 1914-1916. 988p $15 Houghton

B or 92 Churchill, Sir Winston Leonard Spencer. European War, 1914-1918—Great Britain
LC (66-12065)

This third "volume in the . . . biographical series on Churchill begun by his late son Randolph . . . [deals with Churchill's] role in the first two years of World War I. . . . [It] recounts his achievements including the mobilization of the Fleet, . . . the safe transport of troops from Britain and the Empire to the zones of war, . . . the clearing of the German raiders from the oceans, the maintenance of Britain's naval and maritime supremacy, the check to the German advance at Antwerp, the success of the armoured cars and naval airmen [and] the confidence inspired by his public speeches." (Christian Science Monitor) For volume one, Winston S. Churchill: Youth, 1874-1900 by Randolph S. Churchill, see

GILBERT, MARTIN—Continued

BRD 1966, 1967; for volume two, Winston S. Churchill: The Young Statesman, 1901-1914 by Randolph S. Churchill, see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by F. X. J. Homer
America 126:550 My 20 '72 120w

"Forty pages of fine print are required merely to index the documents quoted, documents studied by Mr. Gilbert during the past nine years. Ten pages are used in order to give the reader some helpful information about the sources used. These facts are being mentioned to show that this is not just 'one more book' about Churchill, but rather a truly exhaustive study of him and his relation to World War I and to English politics 1914-1916. . . . Churchill himself would perhaps admit that this book is more objective than it would be if he had written it. A very detailed index increases the usefulness of this excellent work." Paul Kiniery
Best Sell 31:412 D 15 '71 1150w

Reviewed by E. M. Yoder
Book World p4 N 28 '71 1400w
Choice 9:423 My '72 160w

"Although as tight-packed with details as caviar in a can, this book ably catches and transmits the breathtaking extent of Churchill's genius. Even to dip into it will show what those who scorn history miss to their own impoverishment." J. G. Harrison
Christian Science Monitor p28 D 2 '71 600w

"Mr Gilbert has made an engrossingly good start—with painstaking scholarship in scouring and sifting old and new evidence; nice judgment in arranging it to tell the tale of those unexampled months as Churchill and his contemporaries saw them; and shrewd perception, without intruding retrospective verdicts of his own, of the human dramas and melodramas disclosed. It is not a new picture or portrait that Mr Gilbert displays. It is a familiar work of art that has been expertly cleaned to reveal fresh lines and colours. The achievement is that a book of over 800 pages covering only 30 months, made up of letters, minutes, memoranda, speeches and conversations, mostly reads as easily and as excitingly as, appropriately enough, a Buchan thriller."

Economist 241:viii N 6 '71 800w

Reviewed by H. J. Steck
Library J 97:192 Ja 15 '72 320w

Reviewed by Anthony Lejeune
Nat ■ 24:163 F 18 '72 1150w

Reviewed by Paul Johnson
New Statesman 82:590 O 29 '71 1700w

"Compared with its predecessor . . . [this volume] presents a much greater appearance of artistic completeness. In classical tragedy, which Martin Gilbert's volume so closely resembles, it is character which provides the springs of action and justifies the outcome. He has provided plenty of material from which the reader can decide to what extent Churchill's downfall was the result of his faults of character; and a judicious assessment of the same question forms the closing pages of the book. . . . [Gilbert] is a worthy successor [to Randolph Churchill] and interestingly enough more partisan than the hero's son. Stylistically he is rather less racy . . . [and the] potted biographies of minor characters are distinctly less diverting in this volume. . . . [But] every page bears evidence of the immense work of research which backs the book."

TLS p1359 O 29 '71 3750w

GILBERT, MICHAEL. The body of a girl.
249p $5.95 Harper

ISBN 0-06-011523-8 LC 76-175153

"The body of a girl is found buried on a small island in the Thames; the problem is to determine who she is, and in so doing all kinds of wicked goings on are uncovered in the Stockbroker Belt. Bent policemen, crooked garage owners, suspicious solicitors, dirty old men, and local roundheels are among the characters." (Library J)

"[This] is a gripping English police procedural by a real master of his craft . . . [and is a] surprisingly plausible and completely enjoyable mystery." H. C. Veit
Library J 97:1351 Ap 1 '72 90w

"What is especially interesting is Mr Gilbert's picture of the police. He doesn't paint them black—there's a partly-bent copper, and another who likes an uncomplicated life and fiddles the statistics to get it, but these are individuals rather than the norm—and the main impression is of a brave, capable and somewhat self-righteous bunch of men who see themselves as the thin line between the 'public' and the forces of evil. There is, of course, an element of truth in this, but Mr Gilbert only hints at the thought that, if not properly controlled, it's an attitude likely to lead to a need to play God." Jim Burns

New Statesman 83:285 Mr 3 '72 250w

"Gilbert is a smooth performer. His style is logical and flowing and full of deft touches. 'The Body of a Girl' does what a good mystery should do: open up into all kinds of ramifications, with untold menace behind the action. At the end, there is a bang-up climax, and it is a pleasure to see how skillfully Gilbert wraps everything up." Newgate Callendar
N Y Times Bk R p34 Mr 5 '72 100w

New Yorker 48:108 Ap 1 '72 80w

Reviewed by Haskel Frankel
Sat R 55:104 Mr 25 '72 50w
TLS p500 Ap 28 '72 70w

GILES, LANCELOT. The siege of the Peking legations; a diary; ed. with introd: Chinese anti-foreignism and the Boxer uprising, by L. R. Marchant; foreword by Sir Robert Scott. 212p il $10.70 Int. scholarly bk. services

951 Peking—Siege, 1900. Boxers
ISBN 0-85564-041-3 LC [78-123328]

This diary, published in its entirety for the first time, was "kept by Giles during the . . . Boxer Uprising in China in the summer of 1900. The writer . . . was then a student-interpreter in Britain's China Consular Service stationed in Peking." (Choice)

"[Giles's] running account adds little to what has long been known about the Boxer Uprising but his personalized observations help to transform an otherwise impersonal historical incident into a lively and human affair. By far the more valuable part of the book is the lengthy and scholarly introduction by Australian historian Marchant, analyzing the phenomenon of Chinese anti-foreignism particularly as it manifested itself in the late 19th century. With this lucid background the upheaval generated by the Boxers becomes all the more meaningful."

Choice 8:1499 Ja '72 160w

"[This publication] helps to place the siege in perspective. The Diary makes fascinating reading, conveying the atmosphere of the siege with telling effect. . . . The text has been richly supplemented with Giles' own photographs." B. L. Evans

Pacific Affairs 45:321 summer '72 250w

GILL, DEREK L. T. Dove. See Graham, R. L.

GILL, JOHN, ed. New American and Canadian poetry; ed. with an introd by John Gill. 280p $12.50; pa $3.95 Beacon press

811 American poetry—Collections. Canadian poetry—Collections

ISBN 0-8070-6408-4; 0-8070-6409-2 (pa)
LC 72-156449

This book of contemporary poetry contains "biographical notes on . . . 18 American and 16 Canadian poets. . . . [Included are] the Canadians—Irving Layton, Harley Elliot, Margaret Atwood, and Milton Acorn, among others; [and] Americans—such as Tom Schmidt, J. D. Reed, and Marge Piercy." (Library J)

"Gill's stated thesis is no thesis; each poet is an individual voice. His implied thesis: Canadian poets are extraordinarily talented."

. . . There is a disturbing consistency in the poetry, on both sides of the border; except for the obvious place names, many of these poets could live anywhere. The book is much a projection of John Gill's taste, which seems to have gone to school in The new American poetry, 1945-1960 [BRD 1961], edited by Donald M. Allen. . . . This collection appears representative of nothing except the editor's taste. Bowering, Etheridge Knight, J. D. Reed, and Dennis Saleh are fine poets, but it is not clear what is 'new,' 'Canadian,' or 'American' about them."

Choice 9:504 Je '72 200w

"As Gill points out, the Canadians are fantastically good poets and largely unknown in the U.S. Piercy, probably the best-known American is well represented and always excellent. . . . No public or academic library of any size should hesitate to include this anthology." P. H. Marvin
Library J 96:2778 S 15 '71 140w

GILLEN, MOLLIE. The prince and his lady; the love story of the Duke of Kent and Madame de St Laurent. 314p il $8.95 St Martins

B or 92 Edward Augustus, Duke of Kent. St. Laurent, Julie de
LC 70-162367

"For 27 years Edward Augustus, Duke of Kent, George III's fourth son and the father of Queen Victoria, shared his life with a mistress who styled herself Madame de St. Laurent. This . . . work [deals with] the myths created by previous studies of their relationship and offers new insight into the character of Edward and his . . . companion." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The author is to be much lauded for her dedicated scholarship, for she has delved into every available source in search of facts relating to her subjects. I must say at this juncture that I, as a much less academic and much more casual reader of history, found the book a bit tedious. It is unmistakably a treasure for historians; the more unstudied reader, however, may find, as I did, that the terribly staid language of the period, as well as the constant quoting (there are very few of the author's own passages in the book) from documents of the time act as an obstacle to one's enjoyment. Mrs. Gillen in no way insinuates her own thoughts or prejudices into her work. She allows her sources . . . to present their own explanation of the Duke's rapport with Mme de St. Laurent." Lael Pritchard
Best Sell 31:425 D 15 '71 500w

Reviewed by J. A. Casada
Library J 97:66 Ja 1 '72 100w

"[This is] a sympathetic account of Victoria's father . . . [and] Thérèse-Bernadine and of his brief military career, which coincided with the first period of their liaison. The story gives us few villains (only Kent's august brothers of Wales and York) and no heroes but the Duke and son amie." J. D. Futch
Nat R 23:1478 D 31 '71 260w

"[This book] which is impressively worked out by Mrs. Gillen, deserves a warm welcome. . . . Out of deference to Queen Victoria and to the Duchess of Kent it was always pretended that Edward's French lady had never been. . . . Largely because of this attempt to smother the truth, a great wealth of romantic twaddle has sprung up and has been too readily believed by the gullible twentieth century. . . . We can only be deeply grateful to Mrs. Gillen, who . . . puts the whole story on a firm foundation of sense and truth. Her book is at once enjoyable and completely convincing." TLS p35 Ja 8 '71 500w

"The story of the [Duke's] long attachment with Madame is lovingly set out in well-fleshed detail here, and a very domesticated story it seems." Va Q R 48:lx spring '72 120w

GILLESPIE, D. CRAIG. Weeple people; attribute concepts; il. by Garry Clark Hamilton. 35p $3.95; lib bdg $3.83 McGraw
ISBN 0-07-023221-0 LC 72-175348

"Each page introduces a new family of . . . illustrated 'weeple people' such as 'Kankos,' 'Boings,' and 'Twopeds.' The reader is invited to study the members and nonmembers of each new family in order to detect the clue to their kinship." (Book World) "Grades one to four." (Library J)

"[This] is a somewhat self-conscious but commendable effort to develop a popular children's book from a game of logic used by the prestigious and innovative Elementary Science Study. . . . Problems range from the simple to those that will challenge the classification skills of the most mentally agile 10-year-old. Coded answers are given at the end of the book." Helen Andrejevic
Book World p14 (children's issue) My 7 '72 130w

"This undistinguished concept book aims at heightening children's ability to distinguish among and classify objects. . . . While no final answers are given, there is a list of clues in an alphabet/number code at the back of the book which itself must be puzzled out. Some of the problems are misleading: e.g., the only clue given to distinguish Byjors from other pets is that they have two body sections and four legs. But one third-row animal which would qualify on this basis has feet pointing in different directions unlike the first-row figures. . . . Many of the other puzzles are so difficult that children will certainly fail to solve them. Moreover, the book is physically unsuitable for libraries: the hardcover trade edition will fall apart with frequent handlings, and the format invites children to write their guesses on the pages." Diane Gersoni-Stavn
Library J 97:2933 S 15 '72 280w

GILLESPIE, MOYA, tr. How men discovered the world. See Hecke, H. R.

GILLESPIE, PAUL. No-fault; what you save, gain, and lose with the new auto insurance [by] Paul Gillespie and Miriam Klipper. 164p $5.95 Praeger

368.5 Insurance, Automobile
LC 73-184337

"In its history of the concept of 'fault,' the authors concede that a grave injustice has been done to the victim of automobile accidents. With [an] analysis of the Massachusetts no-fault law, the first state law on the subject, and a discussion of legislation in a few other states, each with its own bundle of auto insurance benefits under the guise of no-fault plans, Gillespie and Klipper stress their thesis that no-fault is not a panacea. They feel that there are favorable alternatives to no-fault plans, and that there are features of the old insurance fault system which are . . . worth saving." (Choice) Index.

"The fact that Gillespie has extensive experience as a lawyer in the trial of personal-injury cases may have considerably influenced the shaping of the main thesis. This work may serve as a considerable corrective to the optimism of no-fault proponents. It is obvious that the experience with no-fault legislation will point up its weaknesses as well as benefits. An agonizing reappraisal may well be in order in the near future. [W. P.] Rokes' No-fault insurance should be read along with [this]. Highly recommended for college and university students of insurance." Choice 9:852 S '72 300w

"No-fault insurance is perhaps the most widely discussed insurance problem today. This is a stimulating, clearly and concisely written work that calls for the exploration of a middle ground which can include both fault and no-fault techniques." H. M. Burns
Library J 97:2169 Je 15 '72 200w

GILLETT, EDWARD. A history of Grimsby. 328p il pl maps $11.25 Oxford

914.2 Grimsby, England—History
SBN 19-713411-4 LC 79-495527

"Beginning with the founding of Grimsby in the 13th century, each local political event is recited and documented with material from the Grimsby archives. There are two . . . chapters on the 19th-century fishing trade and the problems faced as Grimsby expanded after 1850." (Choice)

"In the last chapters of this general survey, Gillett . . . describes with warmth and without sentimentality Grimsby's change of character in the nineteenth century. . . . [This story] is an exciting one for which the five tediously fragmentary chapters on the medieval port town and the six extremely locally focused chapters on the silted-up, depressed, agricultural, gentry-ridden village of the sixteenth through eighteenth centuries might well have been curtailed. . . . The profits to be made through freedom of the borough from the rights in the common lands and from parliamentary electioneering . . . form the most interesting parts of the book prior to those chapters that deal with the nineteenth century." R. G. Lang
Am Hist 76:1549 D '71 360w

"Gillett is an archivist, not a historian. His History of Grimsby, port located on the mouth of the Humber river, does not meet the standards for a good historical narrative. . . . [It] is a pedantically written chronicle of an isolated and impoverished village with little information on the 20th century. Few major developments seem to have affected life in Grimsby. Although well documented and supplemented by appendices and index, the book is not highly recommended for the smaller library because of its very limited appeal."

GILLETT, EDWARD—Continued

Choice 7:1724 F '71 160w

GILLETTE, PAUL J. The vasectomy information manual; prepared with the coop. of the Assn. for voluntary sterilization; introd. by John R. Rague; foreword by Jim Bouton. 235p il $5.95 Outerbridge & Lazard; for sale by Dutton

613.9 Sterilization (Birth control)
ISBN 0-87690-078-3 LC 75-190492

This is a "summary of vasectomy, considering the sexual, emotional, physical, religious, and legal aspects of the operation. Female sterilization, utilizing old and new methods, is touched upon. Gillette describes the possibilities for successful reversal of vasectomy. . . . looks at the practicality of frozen semen banks. . . . [and] describes a vasectomy in detail with both text and illustration." (Library J)

"[This is] an important book that should be useful to both laymen and professional audiences. . . . The book provides current scientific material derived from the First Congress on Vasectomy held in Chicago in the fall of 1971. . . . This text is clear [and] concise. . . . A readable and worthy book."

Choice 9:839 S '72 250w

"[The author] has written an up-to-date, balanced [account]. . . . He raises some of the problems attendant upon vasectomy becoming a status symbol. . . . [He lists vasectomy clinics] and gives lists of Planned Parenthood affiliates (U.S. and abroad) and Zero Population Growth offices (U.S., Canada, and Japan). . . . [This book is] worth having."

W. K. Beatty
Library J 97:1452 Ap 15 '72 190w

"A reliable, not too technical handbook which openly promotes vasectomy as the thinking man's answer to birth control. . . . Gillette handles the difficult question of regaining fertility honestly. . . . Only when dealing with Roman Catholic opposition does [he] resort to casuistry. . . . [He] also provides several testimonials from those who have undergone the operation, including a Foreword by Jim Bouton the former baseball player."

N Y Rev of Books 18:34 Ap 6 '72 200w

GILLIATT, PENELOPE. Nobody's business; stories. 185p $6.95 Viking

ISBN 0-670-51497-7 LC 77-186943

A collection of nine short stories.

"Several of the tales are overtly futuristic; for example, . . . 'Property,' which finds three people chained to their beds and their electrocardiographs, talking about their claims on each other when none owns even himself. To posit man as an extension of machines, as an adjunct to technology, is to make a point about our society—but it is an oft-made point, and has been done better. Far more successful are the author's more deeply human stories, where her skill at characterization is seen—as in the picture of the British upper-class family in 'Foreigners,' in the sympathetic and witty title story, and in the strange tale of a talented musician who suddenly takes to his bed, letting his friend live out his life for him. All in all, this is a good collection, and many readers will be drawn by the author's name." A. M. Burk

Library J 97:2751 S 1 '72 150w

"The sad hero of 'Frank,' the first story, . . . is programming a Family Robot Adapted to the Needs of Kinship. Mrs Gilliatt's story turns on the comparison between the simple clumsiness of this creature and the infinitely more complex clumsiness of human beings. She is, of course, 'on the side of' human beings, but sometimes in such a simplified way that one feels her stories may themselves have been written by a robot programmed with the standard outlook of a particular class and generation. . . . The trouble with Mrs Gilliatt's fiction, from her first novel One by One [BRD 1965] up to and including these new short stories, is that the characters are organised on Calvinist principles. The minor characters are analysed, probed and dislodged from their secure perches with considerable skill and enjoyable ferocity; the central characters, the justified sinners, are also analysed but for reasons unexplained by the author remain 'good', 'true', 'human'. John Spurling

New Statesman 84:403 S 22 '72 140w

Reviewed by Anthony Burgess

N Y Times Bk R p4 S 10 '72 1100w

"[These short stories] are as fine, literate and fresh as any being written today. . . . As a collection [the book] is uneven only in the sense that some of the stories are bound to please a given reader more than others. What is clear, beyond the question of favorites, is their collective excellence and sparkle, their demonstration of a unique literary sensibility at work. . . . [Miss Gilliatt's characters] are concerned, above all, with coping and, as a result, virtually adopt irony as a life-style. . . . In Miss Gilliatt's hands this irony is fine-edged, rich, and funny—a species of literary humor rare in contemporary writing." Joseph Kanon
Sat R 55:73 S 9 '72 500w
TLS p1087 S 22 '72 550w

GILLIATT, PENELOPE. Sunday bloody Sunday; the script of the John Schlesinger film; produced by Joseph Janni for United Artists. 135p $5.95 Viking

822 Moving picture plays
ISBN 670-68338-8 LC 79-184786

The screenplay for the recent film of the love story of an unconventional triangle in present day London.

"Reading this screenplay evokes the sanity and the controlled poignancy that attracted us to the characters on the screen. Divorced from its cinematic context, however, and judged solely on its dramatic strength, the script retains the craftsmanship but not the artistry one would expect from seeing the film. To demand more of it is perhaps unfair—the screenplay is merely a bouquet cut from the garden of the film, and it wilts without its soil. Gilliatt writes fitfully, as though she intended a film composed entirely of jump cuts; and the continual British colloquialisms . . . sound like overripe Pinter. But since the actors have turned in such smooth performances in the film, one cannot register a major complaint against the unevenness of the screenplay." Sammy Staggs

Library J 97:2199 Je 15 '72 140w

"[Gilliatt] is, it's true, a sharp and often witty observer of the weaknesses of these liberal to left-wing, predominantly professional-class intellectuals whose tide came in with Suez . . . and began to ebb with the Beatles and the new cult of violence. But this eye for one's own shortcomings, this almost Christian joy in self-exposure and failure for its own sake, is, after all, one of the most recognisable traits of the class, with the rider that the failure must be small and shabby rather than grand or exotic. The English Sunday, the day of colour supplements rather than worship, has remained for Mrs Gilliatt's generation and class the richest symbol of their aimless and guilt-ridden liberation."

John Spurling
New Statesman 84:403 S 22 '72 140w

GILLIE, OLIVER. The living cell. (The World of science lib) 216p il col il $6.95 Funk

574.8 Cells
LC 76-119033

"Significant discoveries in cellular biology and chemistry have occurred in recent years. In 1965, the Nobel prize was awarded to three Frenchmen—Jacob, Monod, and Lwoff—for their elucidation of cellular feedback control. The Watson-Crick work on the nature of DNA has achieved Nobel fame earlier. Gillie discusses these break-throughs as well as studies by the founders of cell theory, Schleiden and Schwann." (Library J)

"Enormous scope for so small a book. Coverage includes subcellular structure and function, molecular genetics, bioenergetics, development, cancer, drugs, and senescence. While the style is intended to be popular and provocative, the background material is insufficient in any area to enable lay readers to comprehend the processes covered. The book is most suitable as supplementary reading for advance secondary or first-year college biology students; it will not be particularly useful as a reference work. Many beautiful illustrations."

Choice 9:235 Ap '72 80w

"Many of the 24 colour illustrations [in this beautiful book] belong on the wall rather than on the shelf, particularly those of the poetically named unicellular organisms . . . and, above all, the diatoms. Dr Gillie's . . . exposition of some familiar subjects . . . indispensable though they are to the narrative in this kind of book, is complemented by the less familiar. His account, for example, of the structure and function of the cell organelles . . . is both intelligible and exciting."

Economist 238:64 Mr 6 '71 370w

"Many diagrams and illustrations augment this popularly written text. It is for the college-level student and could be used by the nonscience major. An index, a glossary, and a short reading list are included. Recommended." R. E. Swinburne

Library J 96:4101 D 15 '71 110w

"[The author] lays stress on molecular biology and the most fashionable discoveries of recent years and surveys them in a series of more or less standard chapters. The last two, 'Embryos and Cell Specialization' and 'When Cells Go Wrong' are the best and give the impression of a real interest on the part of the author. For some reason, popularizers of science often seem to assume that their readers have the mental age of schoolchildren. . . . Thus books on biology begin with dismissals of vitalism and The Living Cell is no exception. . . . Dr. Gillie treats the reader like a tourist on a scientific day-trip. . . . In [his book] there is little sense of science or of life, only of scientific journalism."

TLS p542 My 7 '71 400w

GILLIS, JOHN R. The Prussian bureaucracy in crisis, 1840-1860; origins of an administrative ethos. 269p $8.75 Stanford univ. press 354.43 Civil service--Prussia. Prussia--Politics and government--1815-1861 ISBN 0-8047-0756-1 LC 70-130826

"The author is concerned . . . with the impact of revolution on the [Prussian] bureaucracy as a social group. . . . [He has constructed a] picture of an organization caught between the forces of reform and reaction. A . . . consequence of increasing professionalization was political conformity; modernization went hand in hand with social exclusiveness and institutional conservatism. In order to survive, the career bureaucrat learned to develop a professional neutrality that could and often did degenerate, under authoritarian pressure, into political irresponsibility." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Gillis's study] offers significant insight into the Prussian bureaucracy during an important epoch. His last chapter, a description of the social composition of the bureaucracy from the 1850s, is especially helpful for the information it presents on the new governing class that emerged on the eve of German unification." R. M. Berdahl

Am Hist R 77:1469 D '72 490w

"Gillis traces the sociology of Prussia's bureaucratic estate and shows the implications of its changed circumstances with great skill and conviction and with fine scholarly care, using archival materials to the best advantage. The book is a well argued and exact study of a subject likely to receive closer attention from specialists in the field as a result of its publication. Research like Gillis' is the stuff of which scholarly progress in the area of history is made." Robert Schwarz

Ann Am Acad 399:200 Ja '72 450w

"This [is a] well written and stimulating study . . . though it is unfortunate that the broader generalization the sparser the documentation. . . . Excellent index and bibliography. Recommended for specialized collections in Prussian, German, and bureaucratic history for use by advanced undergraduates."

Choice 8:1502 Ja '72 150w

"[Gillis] has based his work in part on secondary sources, and on published primary sources, such as government reports or records and the memoirs of contemporaries; and in part on archival materials in West Berlin and in the Federal Republic of Germany. He did not have access to archives in the German Democratic Republic, containing materials on the former eastern provinces of Prussia. . . . It is difficult to analyze this book in a way which does it justice. . . . Architectonically, the book combines detailed, concrete, and often perceptive observations with highly general concepts, of which some have little content and seem to fail really to catch up with what the author is trying to say, while the meaning of others is quite unclear, and the relation of others to the concrete observations is problematic. The author presents many of his concrete observations in quantitative form. . . . [His] more general conceptualizations often leave this reviewer, at least, unsatisfied." V. K. Dibble

Contemp Sociol 1:508 N '72 2100w

TLS p771 J1 7 '72 490w

GILLMOR, C. STEWART. Coulomb and the evolution of physics and engineering in eighteenth-century France. 328p il $13.50 Princeton univ. press

B or 92 Coulomb, Charles Augustin. Physics --History. Engineering--History ISBN 0-691-08995-X LC 79-155006

This is an "account of the career of Charles Augustin Coulomb, . . . engineer, physicist, and a . . . member of the French Academy of Sciences. Two biographical chapters are followed by . . . summaries of Coulomb's work on beams, piers, and retaining walls, his studies of friction, of the torsion balance, and of electric and magnetic forces. The author places Coulomb's contributions in context, showing how his studies of the laws of magnetic and electric forces supported Newtonian theory as opposed to Cartesian vortex theory." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The biographical chapters are spare and pedestrian (not much seems to be known of Coulomb's life except his career); the four chapters on his scientific contributions are detailed and clear. The content and organization of the notes and bibliography are excellent. Two useful appendices give manuscript citations for Coulomb's memoirs and for all known references to his activities contained in the Procès-verbaux of the Academy. A useful source for historians of science, but Gillmor fails to convey to the general reader Coulomb's contribution to the flourishing of French science in the 18th century."

Choice 9:831 S '72 170w

"[This account] is presented with grace and clarity, and it is clear that Gillmor is fully competent to understand the magnitude of Coulomb's achievement. The bibliography and the attention to detail show that the research was not merely adequate but exhaustive. . . . The only ingredient lacking in Gillmor's story is information on Coulomb's personality, information that is, apparently, simply not to be found. . . . [This book is a welcome addition to the literature of 18th-century science . . . [and] we are fortunate that [Coulomb's] story has been told so well." J. M. Briggs

Science 176:667 My 12 '72 550w

GILLY, ANTOINE. Antoine Gilly's feast of France; a cookbook of masterpieces in French cuisine by Antoine Gilly and Jack Denton Scott; phot. by Samuel Chamberlain. 433p $15 Crowell

641.5 Cookery, French ISBN 0-690-09384-5 LC 76-170993

The arrangement of the more than 300 recipes "is traditional, from hors d'oeuvre and soups through sauces, eggs, fish, poultry, meats (plus bats, variety meats such as sweetbreads, liver, kidneys, brains); pasta, rice, pancakes, doughs; vegetables, salads . . . then desserts; wines, kitchen equipment, [and] chef's reminders. . . . Index." (Best Sell)

"Gilly is the deservedly famed propriétaire of [New York's] La Crémillère restaurant and the later La Crémillère à la Campagne, two distinguished houses of fine food. . . . [One chapter is] a particularly fine collection of Favorite Peasant Dishes. . . . [The whole book represents] superbly authentic French cuisine. This is an elegant cookbook decorated with monochrome photographs of towns and the countryside of France . . . together with many line drawings. . . . The rich-brown binding is sturdy and practical." Freide Gruenrock

Best Sell 31:332 O 15 '71 240w

"For once, the blurb is truthful. This book is no instant introduction to haute-cuisine chefdom. Instead, a very great chef . . . shares his knowledge with you and carefully instructs you in his art. There is a great variety of recipes, carefully and thoughtfully presented. This does not claim to be a book for beginners—so I can forgive Maitre Gilly for not telling us that American ducks are far fatter than French ones and must be treated accordingly. I also think the vegetables are overcooked—

GILLY, ANTOINE—Continued

but then, alas, most French vegetables are. A beautiful book, in contents, appearance, and joie de vivre. A must for any gourmet who has visited La Cremaillère, town or country." Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p32 D 12 '71 90w

GILMAN, DUGAN. Upstate. 64p $4; pa $2 Wesleyan univ. press

811

ISBN 0-8195-2055-1; 0-8195-1055-6 (pa)

LC 79-142724

There are forty-two poems "in this first volume of verse by a young geological consultant from upstate New York." (Library J) Some of these poems have appeared in Hudson Review, Chicago Review and Poetry.

"In my opinion, these pieces simply are not real poetry. The rhythms are unpronounced, the images mundane, the forms uncontrolled, the themes too generalized. . . . True poetry must capture the heart and mind of the reader. Gilman's pallid verses fail to do this." Robert Cayton

Library J 96:1986 Je 1 '71 80w

"[Gilman] writes mainly of his own experiences; but . . . he too often makes them seem falsely significant. . . . There are a few good short poems here. This Past Summer is a lovely impression of small town life. October and Returning . . . are both fine. But they are exceptions in a weak first collection." Dick Allen

Poetry 120:235 J1 '72 400w

GILMORE, JOHN. The Tucson murders. 274p il $5.95 Dial press

364.1 Murder. Schmid, Charles Howard

LC 71-76970

This "account of the life and crimes of Charles Schmid Jr., convicted slayer of three teen-age girls in the mid-1960's, is an exploration of the killer's mentality and attitudes, often as expressed in Schmid's own [words]. (Library J)

"The emphasis is on the background and execution of the crimes rather than on the trials, but Gilmore has included brief mention of F. Lee Bailey, a fixture in recent factual crime stories. Well written and soundly researched, Gilmore's first book deserves a place in public library factual crime collections." J. L. Breen

Library J 95:2507 J1 '70 100w

"I do not recommend [this book] to the sensitive of spirit. Gilmore's account of the casual depravity of Charles Schmid Jr. . . . is a narrative of shadow-life, death and trial that is revealing and shocking and most disturbing." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p64 N 15 '70 120w

GILPIN, ALEC R. The Territory of Michigan [1805-1837]. 234p $8 Mich state univ. press

977.4 Michigan—History

SBN 87013-151-6 LC 77-130281

This book is concerned "with the history of the territory. It tells of the Indian problems, the legal, educational and economic problems, of a pioneer area. It relates the experiences of Stevens T. Mason, probably the youngest Acting Territorial Governor in the country. . . . The 'Michigan Ague' and cholera epidemics of the early settlers, the slave incidents . . . are [described]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"A puzzling book because it is not clear exactly what Gilpin sought to accomplish. It is a disappointing book because he does not provide much more information about the period than can be found in a textbook. . . . Adequate footnotes; good index. On the whole, this book cannot be recommended except for libraries specializing in Michigan materials." Choice 8:468 My '71 130w

"[Gilpin] covers such topics as legislation, courts, Indian relations, land development and settlement, and military actions. . . . The data on the political life in the territory is extensive. There are a number of minor flaws. . . . One might also wonder why the author did not utilize the extensive primary source materials available and document more fully some of the controversial material presented. The index is particularly disappointing. Numerous typographical and paging errors abound and important subjects covered in the book are not included. . . . The most serious shortcoming of Gilpin's book is its lack of synthesis and interpretation." P. P. Mason

J Am Hist 59:127 Je '72 400w

GIMSON, A. C. An introduction to the pronunciation of English. 2d ed 320p il $9 St Martins

421 Phonetics. English language—Pronunciation
LC 74-137434

"The aim and organization . . . of this book . . . [are] to offer a general introduction to the pronunciation of contemporary English, and to place the study of English phonetics within a . . . linguistic, historical, and acoustic framework. . . . [Included also are] notes of advice to foreign learners." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Subject index. First published in England in 1962.

"The approach is that of articulatory phonetics and classical phonemics, with some passing comments about the acoustic properties of English sounds. The principal expansion in the second edition is the section on English phonotactics. It may still serve well as an [introduction] . . . but for many linguists it will have been superseded by [N.] Chomsky and [M.] Halle's The sound pattern of English [BRD 1969]."

Choice 8:1338 D '71 100w

"The second edition contains a larger bibliography and takes account of changes in the spoken language during the past eight years, especially in the rewritten section on 'Received Pronunciation.'"

TLS p165 F 5 '71 60w

GINDIN, JAMES. Harvest of a quiet eye: the novel of compassion. 370p $13.95 Ind. univ. press

823 English fiction—History and criticism.
American fiction—History and criticism
ISBN 253-32705-9 LC 75-135006

A "trend in the English and American novel of the last hundred years has been described by James Gindin and labeled 'the tradition of compassion.' The novel of compassion reflects the complexity facing man living within a society he can seldom control or completely understand. . . . The fiction [surveyed begins] . . . with Trollope and Meredith and lends with Saul Bellow and other contemporary novelists. . . . Mr. Gindin further clarifies his principle by negative example by discussing the 'fables' written by Faulkner, Goiding, and others." (Publisher's note) Index.

Am Lit 43:632 Ja '72 70w

"[Gindin] does not succeed in this new book. Treatments of authors suggest that almost any novelist could be a compassionate one and make us wish Gindin had done more of the close analysis he deems unnecessary for his investigation. . . . The style is suitable for undergraduates though few will have read many of the authors listed. . . . Hardy, Howells, H. James, Bennett, Forster, Woolf, Lawrence, Joyce, Fitzgerald, Cary, Wilson. . . . [The book contains] a list of editions used for quotations, but one misses the listing of criticism and theory favorable to such a study."

Choice 9:58 Mr '72 140w

GINGRICH, ARNOLD. Nothing but people; the early days at Esquire; a personal history. 1928-1958. 328p $6.95 Crown

E or J2 Esquire
LC 70-168304

"The present publisher of Esquire magazine relates the story of his numerous experiences during his time as editor of that periodical, which had its inception in 1933. A . . . section is devoted to his association with David A. Smart, with whom he worked issuing booklets for banks and institutions, calendars, memo pads, date books, and trade papers prior to entering the magazine business. Gingrich considers his years as editor the active phase of his career, his publisher's role, the passive." (Library J) Index.

"Gingrich's memoirs provide a storehouse of information; students can learn a great deal about the magazine business from an expert who must certainly be considered among the leading editors of our time. Recommended for public and university libraries and for schools offering courses in advertising and journalism." S. J. Riccardi

Library J 96:3128 O 1 '71 230w

"As far as [this] account goes, it's almost great. . . Lots of tangy backstairs strife went on during the financing of this [magazine] . . . and Gingrich does not stint the tang. But naturally he's best when it comes to the . . . editorial side. . . Randy gossip? No, meatier than that. Gingrich, with his raconteur's prose, knows that the anecdote sits in the very heart of history, and each of his vignettes has reverberations larger than itself. . . But the book also touches graver matters, like the Postmaster General's disapproval of Esquire's moral tone in 1943, even after Gingrich had started clearing each issue in advance with one of the Department's solicitors. Gingrich is frank about 'bending over backward' to keep second-class mailing privileges." Frederick Morton

N Y Times Bk R p27 D 12 '71 1500w

GINZBERG, ELI. Career guidance; who needs it, who provides it, who can improve it. 356p $7.95 McGraw

371.42 Vocational guidance
ISBN 0-07-023284-9 LC 72-150776

The author presents "the history of the guidance movement as it has . . . existed during the past several decades in the U.S. He states the assumptions at the basis of guidance and questions which of these are realized, realizable, or unrealistic. Ginzberg [also] describes the type of guidance and counseling needed in the 1970's." (Choice)

"The title is deceptive in that it fails to indicate the true breadth of the contents. Ginzberg speaks with great knowledge and authority and presents [his material] in a very easy to read and clearly written style. . . He is particularly sensitive to the needs for career, educational, and vocational guidance and to these needs as they exist in all levels of education and society. The author is sensitive to and aware of social issues involved. He questions much of the underlying training and practice of guidance workers and suggests directions and policies more in keeping with satisfying the needs of the future. Should be in the collections of any college or university library, especially if there is any work done at the particular institution in the preparation of teachers and/or counselors."

Choice 8:880 S '71 190w

"In the opinion of this reviewer, when describing and marshalling the evidence about the chief problems in the field, Ginzberg is at his best and makes a most important contribution. He exposes publicly some dirty linen that needs washing, and challenges a few of the overprecious conventions of the kind that professions tend to be reluctant to examine. If anything, he does not go far enough in describing the problem. . . [Yet he] and his associates have made a most important contribution to the field of career guidance." W. R. Adkins

Teach Col Rec 73:328 D '71 1850w

GINZBERG, ELI. Manpower for development: perspectives on five continents. 331p $10 Praeger

331.1 Underdeveloped areas. Labor supply
LC 72-163914

This study of the world's manpower policies "surveys Japan, Korea, Afghanistan, Pakistan, Singapore, Thailand, Malaysia, Ceylon, India, Egypt, Israel, Ethiopia, Eastern Europe, Sweden, Venezuela, the Bahamas, and Canada." (N Y Rev of Books) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Although the chapters on the countries/regions make for interesting reading, for all practical purposes a person reasonably familiar with the developmental process can get at the heart of [Ginzberg's] dissertation by reading the first and the last chapters. . . In general, Ginzberg's economic views are more traditional than those of many others in the 'nation-building' business." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 96:3603 N 1 '71 190w

"[This is a] Cook's tour of the world's manpower policies, largely composed of old speeches, lectures, symposia, and chapters of previous books by Ginzberg. . . The style is distracted; widely divergent topics are jumbled in one paragraph, the logic of first sentences is often unpursued, and random trivialities abound concerning traditions, democracy, and the market place. One is hard pressed to find their relation to the text."

N Y Rev of Books 17:40 D 16 '71 200w

GIOBBI, EDWARD. Italian family cooking; with il. by Cham, Lisa and Gena Giobbi. 252p $8.95 Random house

641.59 Cookery, Italian
ISBN 0-394-46242-4 LC 70-140706

"The author has written down and tested for the American kitchen recipes from his mother, from a Sicilian neighbor, from Tomasso, his father's old friend whose sauces none of the women in the neighborhood could duplicate. . . [Interwoven with these recipes are] stories of the life of a . . . poverty-stricken Italian family to whom food was a sacred thing. . . Mr. Giobbi also describes the importance that good food has had in his own survival as a creative artist." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This is a] joyful, perfectly balanced book in which the prose is as tough-minded as it is sentimental. . . [The author] mentions modestly that 'though the reader will have to judge the quality of the recipes in this book, I am perfectly willing to comment on the art work. I will say simply that this is the best-illustrated Italian cookbook ever seen.' It is. The drawings by the author's three small children are delicious and so are the recipes." Nora Magid

Book World p12 F 13 '72 170w

"The dishes are so varied and authentic that they will be eye-openers to many people who only know what passes for Italian food in America. The recipes are clearly written. This is lovely food in a lovely book." Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p31 D 12 '71 50w

GIOVANNI, NIKKI. Gemini; an extended autobiographical statement on my first twenty-five years of being a Black poet. 149p $5.95 Bobbs

B or 92
LC 75-161244

This "is a collection of miscellaneous essays—roughly half of them autobiographical; the rest, critical and political. . . In the autobiographical sections we learn that the author grew up in Knoxville, Tennessee; that she was part of a middle-class family which consisted in large part of teachers and social workers; that she attended Fisk University, but was asked to leave because her attitudes were unbecoming to a Fisk woman. . . [Her] social and literary criticism . . . [deals] with the work of Charles Chesnutt, . . . James Baldwin, John O. Killens, John A. Williams, and Ralph Ellison . . . [as well as] the relationship between black men and women, the character of African and West Indian blacks, . . . [and] the question of poetry and politics." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Donez Xiques

America 126:186 F 19 '72 600w

Choice 9:368 My '72 160w

"The book is more acceptable as autobiography, than Giovanni's poem books are as poetry, but not much. Along with personal history, Gemini contains a lot of militant rhetoric, and, except for one little section on the writer Charles Chesnutt, most of the book is simply boring. One can't completely dismiss it, however, since Giovanni does get around, and her poetry is widely read." J. A. Avant

Library J 96:4087 D 15 '71 120w

"Giovanni's feelings are expressed openly and honestly, and they should provide an almost overpowering reading experience for older YA's." Elizabeth Storey

Library J 97:1182 Mr 15 '72 120w [YA]

Reviewed by June Jordan

N Y Times Bk R p6 F 13 '72 950w

"[The author] mixes her engaging autobiographical essays with dubious exhortations to a black revolution. The former are written with wit and the compressed rhythms she brings to her poetry, but in the latter the truth of concrete experience yields to the rhetoric of abstract argument. Expressions of hope become assertions of fact: 'the revolution,' as she writes elsewhere, . . . will go on,' when in fact it has not begun." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 79:80 Ja 31 '72 360w

"[The author] describes herself a black revolutionary . . . [and] allows her sense of

GIOVANNI, NIKKI—Continued

commitment to lead her into making some rather foolish assertions. . . . The glimpses we are given of Miss Giovanni's childhood are, as it were, seen from a distance and through a haze. Nor does the author . . . ever reveal herself, either as an artist or as a woman. She writes a great deal about love, but she seems to be a little frightened of it. . . . Much of this book's weakness . . . stems from the attitude Miss Giovanni has chosen to adopt: the pose of childlike defiance. This role, she appears to believe, entitles her to the same privileges and protection that are a child's due. It permits her to meander, to contradict herself, to throw logic to the winds. Carried to an extreme, however, this rebellious ingenuousness can only do Miss Giovanni harm—as a woman, as a poet, and as a revolutionary." J. H. Bryant
Sat R 55:34 Ja 15 '72 550w

"[The author] is one of the most talented and promising black poets. She is also one of the most visible, not only because she is beautiful but because she is a shrewd and energetic propagandist. In this interim autobiography, both poet and propagandist underscore that point about black love and happiness. Part memoir and part manifesto, it is a plain-spoken, lively, provocative, confusing book. . . . On the subject of her childhood, Miss Giovanni is magical. . . . The later chapters are less autobiography than polemic. The tone swings wildly from bitterness to defiance, from humor to cant, from wisdom to frenzy. . . . One senses a dynamic intelligence behind the shrillest page of Gemini. It is a report about a life in progress that demands to be seen." Martha Duffy
Time 99:63 Ja 17 '72 600w

GIOVANNI, NIKKI. Spin a soft black song; poems for children; il. by Charles Bible. unp $5.50 Hill & Wang

811 Negro poetry—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-8090-8795-2 LC 76-163572

Thirty-five poems recount the feelings of black children about their neighborhoods, American society, and themselves. "Preschool to grade three." (Library J)

"The attempt to emulate childish language is painfully evident throughout the introduction and the 35 poems. Most of the 35 are unsuccessful in capturing or conveying feelings of childhood . . . or in providing black children with points of identification. And the illustrations are stereotypes of black faces. There are many other books which can be especially enjoyed by black children, as well as children of other races, among them . . . Langston Hughes' Don't You Turn Back [BRD 1970], [N.] Larrick's On City Streets [BRD 1968], and [R.] Lewis' Miracles [BRD 1966]. All of these should be selected before this one." A. M. Bregman
Library J 97:2230 Je 15 '72 200w

"Giovanni's poems for children, like her adult works, exhibit a combination of casual energy and sudden wit. No cheek-pinching auntie, she explores the contours of childhood with honest affection, sidestepping both nostalgia and condescension. . . . The people in Bible's gently stylized drawings are black, but this book is not for black children alone. The poems that represent the black experience are open to any reader, and the others, like 'spring-time,' . . . record the changeless traditions of all childhoods." Nancy Klein
N Y Times Bk R p8 N 28 '71 500w

GIOVENE, ANDREA. The book of Sansevero; tr. by Marguerite Waldman. 384p $6.95 Houghton

LC 70-108312

"The novel ends with the beginning of the hero's mature life, the moral, religious, and social questionings of youth finally behind him. . . . It details the growth and wanderings of the second son of a declining Neapolitan aristocratic family from 1904 to 1934. We follow the youth from Naples to a monastery high in the mountains above Naples, post-World War I Milan, Rome, and Paris before his return to become an enlightened aristocrat-landlord. All of this is projected against the historical background of Mussolini and Fascism." (Library J)

Reviewed by Sister M. W. Brady
Best Sell 30:317 D 1 '70 410w

"The figures and landscapes in Sansevero's youth are intermingled in brilliant detail and constitute a grand tapestry of events and sensations that is clearly a work of art. The same cannot be said of the rest of the book, which is a kind of retrogressive Pilgrim's Progress, in which the pilgrim's conclusions are never quite believable. . . . The publishers are bragging when they suggest that there is some resemblance between the art of Giovene and that of Proust and Lampedusa. This novel has none of the drama or narrative pull that made The Leopard [by G. Lampedusa, BRD 1960] totally absorbing. And although the author is nearly as narcissistic as Proust in his literary viewpoint, he has neither Proust's profundity nor his passionate involvement with other human beings." Jerre Mangione

Book World p16 N 22 '70 650w

"Occasionally you encounter a book which so appeals to you that you want immediately to declare it a masterpiece. This is one of those. . . . This powerful, exceedingly well written novel recalls the glories of Stendhal, Proust, and Lampedusa." R. D. Olson
Library J 95:2826 S 1 '70 130w

"[The style is] too full of swoons and the plot quivers a mite too often with melodramatic palpitations of the heart. . . . [Behind] this overblown writing and feeling is also the mistaken European notion that civilisation, the fine spirit of man, has something to do with piles of old stone and mortar and that living in the wilds of Latin or North America will somehow give one a primitive soul. . . . No doubt someone even in this bad century could write a novel that defended the aristocratic idea and the European spirit of civilisation; but Don Andrea hasn't done it." Stanley Reynolds
New Statesman 80:185 Ag 14 '70 600w

"This is, in a rather old-fashioned way, a very masculine book, an authentic expression of male feeling, with its poles of codified honor and passion. . . . There is a remarkable sense of period. The rebellion against society of the 1920's pervades the book. Giovene is not accomplished enough as a writer to find his way to the heart of his age and its myth, but he gives us an authentic if rather mysterious sensation of the counter-culture of 50 years ago. . . . [This is] a complex and uneven book, but one that seems to me to contain a hoard of good things. Worth reading? Yes—but do not try to hurry it; and be prepared for a sadly clumsy translation that sets small puzzles and dulls the tone, though it does not destroy it." Elizabeth Janeway
N Y Times Bk R p5 O 11 '70 1250w

New Yorker 46:190 O 10 '70 160w

Reviewed by Serge Hughes
Sat R 53:42 N 21 '70 700w
TLS p941 Ag 28 '70 650w

GIRL scouts of the United States of America. Girl scout cookbook [ed. by Ely List]. (Cowles bk. co.) 160p il $4.95 Regnery

641.5 Cookery
LC 70-144349

This book contains recipes for snacks and beverages, main dishes, soups, salads, vegetables, breads, and desserts, as well as suggestions for serving. Bibliography. Index.

"From simple brownies, soups, and sauces, the 'Girl Scout Cookbook' is a perfect guide. It makes use of the best incentive of all, for the child who learns to cook these favorite recipes will be able to eat the foods she enjoys. The simply illustrated instructions take the frustration out of learning."

Christian Science Monitor p11 Mr 9 '72 100w

"The junior high school comprehension level restricts the use of this cookbook to older girls who are usually beyond the Girl Scout phase. Included is a good pre-chef section, 'Before You Cook' . . . and lots of savory extras in such sections as . . . 'Cooking Out in the Back Yard.' Print and spacing are palatable, size and shape are designed for ease of handling, and the book is sturdily bound and well indexed with good cross references. However, initial procedural steps in food preparation are occasionally omitted, and the infrequent illustrations are not likely to tickle any taste buds. . . . There are few recipes here that can't be found in any of the numerous kitchen anthologies for school-age chefs." N. P. Kurtz
Library J 97:1922 My 15 '72 200w [YA]

GIROUARD, MARK. The Victorian country house. 220p il $38.50 Oxford

728.8 Architecture, English. Architecture, Domestic
ISBN 0-19-817183-8 LC 75-884893

"Between 1835 and 1889 five hundred country houses of unparalleled size were built in Great Britain, and these are the subject of Mark Girouard's . . . book." (N Y Rev of Books)

"Mr Girouard's good and plentiful illustrations give an overwhelming impression of indestructible determination—a sensation confirmed by the demolishers of such houses. For while the frailest, most jerry-built regency facades are propped up and lovingly preserved, Mr Girouard rightly describes the fate of Victorian country houses as painful obsolescence."

Economist 241:xiv N 6 '71 200w

"This sumptuous volume is not a coffee-table book but an elaborate work of original scholarship. . . . [The author also provides] an informed and sparkling commentary on how the British upper classes lived in the years 1840-90. . . . Looking through this wonderful book, one is amazed not merely by the prodigious size of the houses, but their sheer numbers, and the speed with which new technologies were recruited." Paul Johnson

New Statesman 82:792 D 3 '71 700w

"I am not sure that Mr. Girouard convinces me that the taming of the aristocracy and upper classes by Christianity affected their relations with their architects to a great extent. The architect had his way because the sheer problem of organizing all the variables in the building was beyond the competence of an amateur. But he has written a masterly book. Not only does he discuss the social and technological conditions which shaped these buildings. He also adds the detailed history of twenty-nine of them together with a host of photographs and plates. The book is as handsome as the houses themselves are purported to be." Noel Annan

N Y Rev of Books 18:22 My 18 '72 1550w

"Every possible question or quibble is anticipated. . . . If one wonders what was the dividing-line between castle and houses, or why vicarages are excluded when they provide the background to so many outstanding Victorians, it is all there: answered succinctly and from wider sources of knowledge than the question put. . . . [He] uses articles that have appeared in Country Life from his own pen and from those of other contributors, notably John Cornforth. . . . Admirable as are Mr Girouard's study and his comprehensive provision of illustrations, one may ask the simple question whether these houses were beautiful? Looking through them, the main impression is of eclecticism. . . . The houses [are] period pieces at which we may marvel if we do not admire."

TLS p1627 D 31 '71 800w

GIRVAN, RITCHIE. Beowulf and the seventh century; language and content; with a new chapter by Rupert Bruce-Mitford. rev ed 106p $4; pa $2 Barnes & Noble

829 Beowulf, Anglo-Saxon literature—History and criticism
LC 75-23942

"For this reissue Professor Girvan's text has been reprinted without alteration. A new chapter, on the discoveries at Sutton Hoo, by Rupert Bruce-Mitford has been added together with a select bibliography by Christopher Ball, the archaeological section of which has been contributed by Dr. Bruce-Mitford." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"Reissued now after more than 35 years, Girvan's work is still not the casual reader's companion or guide through the poem. Still interesting for its fine scholarship-detective work, analyses of language forms and historical and folk sources, much of this is now familiar to Beowulf scholars, but it is good to see again the origins of some of our ideas that we take for granted. The new chapter on Sutton Hoo . . . does not add much to the growing treasure of Sutton Hoo material."

Choice 8:1176 N '71 90w

Reviewed by R. R. Harris

Library J 96:2297 J1 '71 40w

GITLIN, TODD, comp. Campfires of the resistance; poetry from the movement. 295p $7.50 Bobbs

811 American poetry—Collections
LC 72-123226

"The editor calls this collection of poetry 'a chronicle of radical vision in the Sixties, on the long march from issue-centered protest to total revolt against the capitalist-imperialist-racist death system.'" (Library J)

"Although this anthology contains a few intriguing new poems, its appeal will be quite limited: only to those deeply involved within the movement itself. As honest as many of these efforts are, one soon tires of reading bad poetry. And for the most part that is what this is—a collection of not very good poetry having only limited political interest."

Choice 9:504 Je '72 60w

"This somewhat too large anthology (about one-half the size would have eliminated a lot of well-meaning yet poor poems) opens with an explanation of the 'movement.' . . . The works are arranged by poet, in chronological order of the movement's activities. Each author is introduced by a short biographical note. Poets range from Paul Goodman and John Beecher to Di Prima and D. A. Levy. Perhaps the primary value, aside from content, is to introduce readers to some lesser known poets. On balance, the volume can be recommended for most libraries." Bill Katz

Library J 95:4266 D 15 '70 150w

"The poems compiled here reflect neither the positive gains made by the Movement nor the great impact it has had on American life. Instead the despair, disillusionment, anger, and frustrations of the poets dominate the volume; moreover, in some cases, the negative feelings of the poets have been turned inward upon themselves, and the resulting verse tends toward self pity. These are the views of the people who were there, but they lack the ability to inspire, exhort, or sway and the anthology as a whole is unmoving." Sumika Yamashita

Library J 97:294 Ja 15 '72 120w [YA]

"This book will interest anyone who cares about the fate of the Counter-Culture. The poetry runs the gamut from genius to cheap slogans, from the insight to the blindness that politicization can bring to individual lives. Most of it lies between these extremes, and shows that, for many people, poetry and politics have remained mutually humanizing commitments."

Va Q R 48:cxiv autumn '72 100w

GITTELSON, NATALIE. The erotic life of the American wife. 380p $7.95 Delacorte press

301.41 Women in the U.S.—Sexual behavior. Marriage
LC 75-178720

"The author, worried by the increasing collapse of marriages, set out to discover the inner actuality of marriages . . . [and] gives here an account of the more than 600 interviews she conducted in Cross-country trips." (Library J)

"There is reason to believe that marriage, as an institution, is currently undergoing change. . . . This is probably especially true of middle-class, college educated people. In view of this, it is very important for us to obtain reliable information on these changes. The title of this book, clearly written for a trade audience, suggests that it contains some of this information, but it is misleading. It is based on . . . unsystematic interviews. . . . [The] 'findings' indicate that sexual happiness or any other form of happiness cannot be found in monogamy, and that many women are seriously disillusioned with it as a way of life. . . . The absence of any semblance of sampling design should put the reader on guard with regard to the representativeness of the data [presented]."

Choice 9:724 J1/Ag '72 240w

"Though she obviously has a penchant for purple prose and tends to the profeminist role for women, Gittelson gives an interesting account of the . . . interviews she conducted. . . . With over 600 varieties of reactions expressed, ranging from zero on a scale of sexual happiness to the acme of mutual marital satisfaction, the author arrives at what she calls the 'Green Marriages,' the still growing, vital, give-and-take of open, emotional lives. These people, she says, fight freely and frequently, make up easily, respect each other as persons, and interest each other. The only catch is that in most of these marriages, the women really seem to want to be dominated by strong men. So much for equality. Not essential, but should be popular, and probably controversial." B. G. Kohler

GITTELSON, NATALIE—Continued

Library J 97:1024 Mr 15 '72 150w

"Mrs. Gittelson is more a reporter than a feminist, and the anger in [this book] comes from the women interviewed, not from the interviewer, who seems surprised and somewhat dismayed. The book was over four years in the researching and the writing, while Mrs. Gittelson traveled back and forth across America trying to find a happy wife or a happy marriage and finding, instead, a generation of vipers. . . . But what these wives conveniently choose to forget is that they married . . . for security and position, to be wives, to be provided for, to 'fit in'; they willingly sold themselves. None of them seems to have married for love. . . . Mrs. Gittelson seems to suffer from the hang-ups sensitive layman journalists have: that if you are not a professor you have to over-research so people will believe you. I sympathize with her earnestness, but a little bit of a pack of snarling bitches goes a long way." Rona Jaffe

N Y Times Bk R p5 Ag 13 '72 300w

GLADWYN, HUBERT MILES GLADWYN JEBB, 1st Baron. See Gladwyn, LordGLADWYN, LORD. The memoirs of Lord Gladwyn. 422p $9.95 Weybright & Talley

B or 92

LC 72-87144

The author "begins this account of his diplomatic career with his first assignment in Tehran in 1924, then goes on to describe his work in Rome, Munich, wartime London, and at the conferences at Dumbarton Oaks and Yalta. Gladwyn was British ambassador to France [from 1954 to 1960]. . . . The book describes the birth of the UN and Gladwyn's role as British UN ambassador during the Korean crisis in 1950. An appendix contains his famous Korean debate speeches." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Kelly Fitzpatrick.

Best Sell 32:456 Ja 1 '73 490w

"Gladwyn has written an interesting account of his long, distinguished diplomatic career. . . . Throughout the book [he] stresses his belief that England must pursue a European, rather than a narrowly nationalistic, future, an interesting point in light of Britain's new membership in the Common Market. One regrets the lack of illustrations, but the book is pleasant and informative. Recommended for academic libraries." S. R. Herstein

Library J 97:3144 O 1 '72 150w

"[The author's lengthy period] as a policymaker inside the Foreign Office . . . has left its mark on these memoirs. Anyone who expects the usual diplomatic mixture of anecdote and worldly wisdom had better fight shy of them. . . . As I ploughed through this book I felt more and more regretful that Lord Gladwyn had decided to rehash his current comments on past crises instead of . . . telling us what he now thinks." Richard Crossman

New Statesman 83:794 Je 9 '72 950w

"[The author] is formidable in achievement, in the scope of his views on world affairs, and in the manner in which he deploys them. This is the best volume of British diplomatic memoirs since Vansittart's The Mist Procession. . . . What makes [Gladwyn's] book so readable is his good fortune in meeting so many famous world figures over so long a period, and his ability to bring them to life in a few swift sentences. They are all here: De Gaulle and Khrushchev, Macmillan and Hammarskjöld, Stettinius, Molotov, Malik, Hiss, Dulles, Acheson, Bevin, Adenauer and scores of others, with the author as an entertaining and perspective impressario." Paul Johnson

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ja 7 '73 380w

New Yorker 48:190 N 11 '72 130w

"[These] Memoirs will not please everyone—indeed it is possible without much difficulty to think of many whose blood pressure will rise to new and spectacular levels of hypertension as the saga unfolds. Lord Gladwyn does not often resist the temptation to say I told you so. . . . To those, on the other hand, who find the patrician style endearing, [they] will give great pleasure and occasionally a delight not untinged with malice. They are . . . urbane and civilized, the recollections of a man of sense and sensibility. . . . His wit ranges from the faintly Rabelaisian to the delicately ironic; yet at times he can seem surprisingly resistant to the humour of others. . . . Even more interesting than the great figures of recent history who appear, often as familiar acquaintances in Lord Gladwyn's world . . . are his views on the principle and techniques of foreign policymaking and diplomacy."

TLS p619 Je 2 '72 750w

GLASBY, JOHN S. Boundaries of the universe. 296p il $11 Harvard univ. press

520 Astronomy

ISBN 0-674-08015-7

LC 76-162638

This is a book "of descriptive astronomy for the lay reader. There are no mathematical equations or derivations, though numbers are mentioned throughout (for example, to express distances)." (Library J) Index.

"[This book] is generally well written and accessible, but scattered through the text are disorganized sections, repetition of material, blatantly contradictory statements of fact of interpretation, and factual errors. These lapses are infrequent, yet they will annoy and confuse serious readers. The author assumes a British readership with a sound background in physical science; thus, the book is suitable for only the more serious laymen in this country."

Choice 9:833 S '72 170w

"The discussions are interesting, not rigorous. Some previous familiarity with the subject would help the reader, but anyone who can handle the Scientific American can handle this. The book's most valuable feature is its lucid description of recent developments in astrophysics (new understanding of quasars, novae, and the evolution of stars) and cosmology (various theories, each with its own observational evidence). This well-written work is recommended for libraries without a recent addition in this subject area." R. L. Hough

Library J 97:2414 Jl '72 150w

GLASSER, RICHARD. Time in French life and thought; tr. by C. G. Pearson. 306p $12 Rowman & Littlefield

840 French literature—History and criticism. Time

ISBN 0-7190-0464-0

LC 72-183220

This "English translation of Glasser's Studien zur Geschichte des französischen Zeitbegriffs (Munich, 1936) . . . [is an] analysis of the concept of time in France, from the early medieval period to the 19th century. . . . [Glasser] devotes nearly one-half of his study to . . . the chanson de geste and the chroniclers of the later Middle Ages . . . [and also gives] attention to the Renaissance man's 'subjective' awareness of time. The Baudelairean and Proustian reactions to the temporal phenomenon are . . . [also] dealt with." (Choice)

"The translated text . . . [also contains] some 400 quotations in untranslated French, Latin, Spanish, and Italian. . . . As there is no translator's preface, it is difficult to ascertain the degree to which Glasser's original bibliographic apparatus has been updated, but such extension is not inconsiderable. No fewer than 30 post-1936 references appear in the chapter footnotes, many of these offering valuable material on further research into the subject. Students of (especially) French literature prior to the 17th century, to whom the original Glasser edition is inaccessible, will certainly welcome this translation."

Choice 9:1137 N '72 200w

"[Dr Glasser's study] includes new material—the elaboration of points, with additional bibliographical information—so that the work under review is a revised edition. . . . [This] study, which is an original and scholarly one, merits appreciation. . . . It is a pity, though, that the narrative is heavy and cumbersome, and the pattern smothered with exposition of the evidence. . . . Dr Glasser's long view, however, is a remarkable achievement, and discerns the main attitudes to time which future scholars can investigate further. His precise and accurate notes, found at the end of each chapter, will assist such studies, even though there is no bibliography. The study is well-furnished with an index of persons and also a general index."

TLS p1100 S 22 '72 500w

GLASSER, RONALD J. 365 days. 292p $6.95
Braziller

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- —Medical and sanitary affairs. Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- —Personal narratives
SBN 0-8076-0615-4 LC 77-156599

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 8:1440 Ja '72 170w

Reviewed by John Pilger

New Statesman 83:713 My 26 '72 550w

TLS p876 Je 16 '72 170w

GLASTONBURY, BRYAN. Homeless near a thousand homes; a study of families without homes in South Wales and the West of England; foreword by John Greve. 234p $10 Verry

361.5 Housing. South Wales—Social conditions. Great Britain—Social conditions
ISBN 0-94-301033-4 LC 76-865634

"Following a pilot study by the author and students, a . . . survey in South Wales and the West Country was made of over 500 families who became homeless between 1963-69. . . .
Focusing on housing as a primary unmet social need, the author demonstrates . . . that, in the absence of a unified program and coordinated policy, poor and homeless people are forced to move often, sometimes into better but still marginal housing, experiencing considerable personal trauma and family disruption in the process. He [also] depicts the conflicting roles of social workers of various degrees of professional training, housing administrators, and voluntary agencies." (Choice)

"A small gem, unique of its kind. . . . The book is well written, excellent in analytic use of case materials. Two appendices deal with 'Some special problems' and 'Homelessness in London.' Implications of the analysis extend far beyond the British setting studied in detail.
Highly recommended."

Choice 8:1253 N '71 140w

"[In this study] there is some extremely good material hidden among the thickets of case histories, such as for example the significance of the tied cottage in rural homelessness. . . .
[The account generates] endless examples of glaring inequity in the recognition and treatment of the homeless." Hilary Rose

New Statesman 81:773 Je 4 '71 750w

GLATZER, NAHUM N., ed. The complete stories. See Kafka, F.

GLAZER, NATHAN. Remembering the answers; essays on the American student revolt. 311p $7.95 Basic bks.

378.1 Students—U.S.—Political activities.
Radicals and radicalism
SBN 465-06912-6 LC 74-26948

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Joseph Gusfield

Ann Am Acad 399:228 Ja '72 600w

Reviewed by D. R. Segal

Contemp Sociol 1:91 Ja '72 600w

Reviewed by Stanley Rothman

Social Studies 63:42 Ja '72 350w

GLENNY, MICHAEL, jt. ed. Can we survive our future? See Urban, G. R.

GLICK, HENRY ROBERT. Supreme courts in state politics; an investigation of the judicial role. (Temple univ. Center for the study of federalism. Studies in federalism, 2) 166p $6.95 Basic bks.

347.1 Judges. U.S.—Politics and government. Courts, State
SBN 465-08338-2 LC 70-135566

"Concentrating his analysis on the state supreme courts in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Louisiana, and Massachusetts, Glick discusses . . . the judicial process in these states [and] examines the relationship between that process and the different political settings in each state. He also explores the judicial role perceptions of the various supreme court justices and then analyzes the relation between these perceptions and the judicial 'output' of the courts." (Choice) Index.

"[The author] holds the reader's attention, while making crystal clear the complexities of judicial behavior and procedure. He studiously avoids pedantry and ex-cathedra pronouncements. . . . The reader will be fascinated by Professor Glick's findings regarding the procedures and discussions by which supreme court justices arrive at their decisions.
. . . . Even more interesting is the explanation of the reasons for and the conditions under which dissenting opinions are filed. . . . Perhaps the most interesting and useful is chapter 6, which presents an analysis of politics, economics, and special interests which impinge upon the consciousness of the judges.
. . . . Every intelligent person can benefit by reading this book, but it is especially valuable for law students and lawyers. . . . Recommended for library acquisition." Morris Kominsky

Ann Am Acad 401:198 My '72 550w

"Should be of special interest to undergraduate students of the American judicial process . . . and to political scientists who specialize in the field of public law."

Choice 8:910 S '71 160w

GLICKMAN, ARTHUR P., jt. auth. The great American auto repair robbery. See Randall,
D. A.

GLOVER, ALBERT, jt. auth. Dylan Thomas in print. See Maud, R.

GLOVER, MICHAEL. Legacy of glory; the Bonaparte kingdom of Spain, 1808-1813. 353p il maps $10 Scribner

946 Joseph Bonaparte, King of Spain.
Napoleon I, Emperor of the French. Spain —History
SBN 684-12558-7 LC 71-162748

This account focuses on "the discord between the Emperor Napoleon and King Joseph.
. . . . Thus this book is largely a study of the relationship of the two Bonaparte brothers.
Nevertheless, since this fraternal struggle was conducted against a background of war, much space has had to be devoted to military history, chiefly . . . to the operations of Wellington and his Anglo-Portuguese army."
(Pref) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by F. X. J. Homer

Best Sell 31:458 Ja 15 '72 400w

"Glover [is] a military historian with great interest in and apparent fondness for the Duke of Wellington's role in the peninsular campaign. . . . The book, while weaving the personal relationship between the two brothers, is primarily a military history. . . . [Wellington's] success in outmaneuvering Joseph, and Marshalls Soult, Massena, and Jourdan (and implicitly Napoleon himself), and thus expelling the French from Iberia is well told. . . .
Will appeal mainly to military devotees and some undergraduates. The footnotes and bibliography are poorly stated; some errors of fact and noticeable editing problems."

Choice 9:268 Ap '72 150w

"In this most interesting account, Glover is quick to point out that during those five years of French misrule . . . Joseph was transformed gradually from puppet into scapegoat.
Napoleon's underestimation of Spanish patriotism and Wellington's army almost insured eventual failure. Clearly written and well-documented, this work is enthusiastically endorsed." M. R. Yerburgh

Library J 97:1430 Ap 15 '72 100w

"A very diverting and instructive tale, and very well told."

New Yorker 47:92 Ja 15 '72 220w

GLUBB, JOHN BAGOT. Peace in the Holy Land; an historical analysis of the Palestine problem. 384p $17.50 Verry

956.94 Jewish-Arab relations—History. Palestine—History. Jews—History
ISBN 0-340-10639-5 LC 75-862175

"Glubb seeks, through a selective history of the Jews from biblical times to the present, to demolish the arguments on which Zionists base their claim to Palestine. . . . He concludes with a peace plan for the present situation."
(Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Fortified by the Old Testament, various Bible commentaries and many books on Semitic civilisations. . . . [this] tale is so crowded with incident ('Hulagu wintered in Tabriz') that [the] main theme is often difficult to follow, but it seems to proclaim the following truisms: just as no man is an island, so is no nation a peculiar or chosen people. All races are mixed, not only in blood but in habits. . . . The problems of Israel are the same as the problems of all nations. Having built himself this platform, [the author] leaps from it into the whirlpool of modern politics, first adjuring the reader to 'make a determined effort to free his mind of preconceived ideas.' But here his argument falters, for . . . he starts to represent the current Arab and Israeli confrontation as unmatched elsewhere and the key to world peace. . . . [The] bibliography omits the dates of the books that it recommends, so that Josephus oddly jostles contemporary authors such as Glubb Pasha himself and Mr. Chaim Bermant."

GLUBB, J. B.—Continued

Economist 239:62 Je 19 '71 440w

"The book is very deficient in scholarship and highly controversial in its interpretations, but it has enough food for thought to be included in special collections." D. W. Littlefield
Library J 96:3608 N 1 '71 110w

"General Glubb's qualifications are many. . . . [He has] an unrivalled knowledge of the geography of the land east of the Jordan, of its inhabitants and, more particularly, of the Beduin who composed the Arab Legion. It is this intimate knowledge of Transjordan and his devotion to it which gives his book its value, but at the same time its limitations. . . . General Glubb is full of admiration for the splendour of the Arab past; he shares the view that European oppression of Jews does not justify the displacement of the Palestine people to make room for them. . . . [Despite some] reservations the book has much to recommend it. . . . There are thirty-eight clear maps, illustrating the various stages of Palestine's history. . . . Taken as a whole [this account] makes a useful contribution to the literature on the Palestine problem, and to the few books which have attempted to treat it from the beginning."

TLS p932 Ag 6 '71 950w

GLUBOK, SHIRLEY. The art of the new American nation; designed by Gerard Nook. 48p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

709.73 Art, American—Juvenile literature
LC 76-160073

The author has brought together a "collection of the American art of the period from 1776 to 1826. . . . [The book contains] portraits of America's heroes by Gilbert Stuart, Ralph Earl, Mather Brown and John Wesley Jarvis; . . . canvases of Revolutionary battles by John Trumbull; [and] paintings by Samuel F. B. Morse, . . . Robert Fulton, . . . [and] Charles Willson Peale. . . . [Included also are] public and private buildings, . . . furniture by Duncan Phyfe and John and Thomas Seymour and . . . silver." (Publisher's note) "Ages eight to twelve." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The photographs are excellent, although a few color plates might have added a new dimension; the brief text is competent if unexciting, perhaps because so slim a volume can only suggest rather than explore so large a topic. A functional compilation." M. M. B.
Horn Bk 48:386 Ag '72 100w

"[This] captivating pictorial record of our nation during its first 50 years . . . [contains] more than 50 works of art, a varied and original selection. . . . Miss Glubok's choices are fresh and sensitive, and in a gentle, richly detailed text she encourages young readers to make discoveries of their own. Strong background color is used to enliven the attractive layout and is sometimes carried through as a tint over the black and white illustrations. The yellow adds a warm antique cast, but the blue can be a little eerie. Tiny captions, meant to be unobtrusive, do become confusing when they omit information that has been woven into the text. All in all, this [is] a skillfully integrated book." Elizabeth Gemming
N Y Times Bk R p8 J1 2 '72 270w

GLUT, DONALD F., jr. auth. The great movie serials. See Harmon, J.

GO ask Alice; author anonymous. 159p $4.95 Prentice-Hall

613.8 Narcotic habit. Narcotics and youth
ISBN 0-13-357111-4 LC 74-159446

This is "the diary of a young American girl who got turned on to drugs at 15 and died of them three weeks after her 16th birthday." (Christian Science Monitor)

"Many parents will not want their children to read [this book]. . . . The subject is unpleasant, the language sometimes crude, the experiences often horrifying. And yet—precisely because of this reluctance to expose one's children to such material—the book must be read. More than anything else, it was the lack of communication that 'Alice' felt between herself and the world of her parents, teachers, and friends, and her lack of knowledge about drugs, that proved fatal. . . . No one can afford not to take the drug culture seriously. And no one can read this book without aching for the waste of a compassionate and talented girl who never quite managed to escape the nightmare of drugs." J. F. S.

Christian Science Monitor pB6 N 11 '71 300w

"[This diary] powerfully depicts all the confusion, loneliness and rebellion associated with adolescence. . . . Unlike other 'true-to-life' stories, this is true (it's based on an actual diary). The book expresses with an innocent and believable candor the attitudes which are so characteristic of adolescence, and its impact derives from its modest claims and unpretentious style. Laying bare her life to her diary, the author recounts her experiences . . . in four-letter word strewn language which undoubtedly offend many parents whose kids (not to mention the parents themselves) would benefit from reading this. . . . An important book, this deserves as wide a readership as libraries can give it." Jack Forman

Library J 97:1174 Mr 15 '72 180w [YA]

GOBHAI, MEHLI. The legend of the orange princess; retold and ill. by Mehli Gobhai. unpub bkg $5.95 Holiday

398.2 Folklore—India—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-8234-0196-0 LC 74-151760

A "retelling of the ancient Indian folktale about the lovely princess Narangi who was born in the form of an orange. Narangi, in human form, is seen bathing by Prince Pritivi when he passes through Chandpur. The prince falls in love with her beauty . . . and marries her. From then on every night as the sun goes down the orange unfolds and Narangi steps out; each morning she returns to the orange as the sun rises. One evening the prince is not there when Narangi emerges. She finds him lying near a stream and nurses him back to health until morning. When 'the sun [comes] blazing over the treetops, the orange princess vanishes in the morning air'; in her place an orange tree appears. . . . Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

Reviewed by Jane Yolen

Book World p4 (children's issue) N 7 '71 40w

"Princess Narangi . . . is a variant of many another fairy-tale heroine whose shape undergoes daily transformations—until a delay in transformation causes her complete disappearance. . . . Lush jungle scenes in warm tones of orange and green, and details of Indian architecture and costume add an important element to the story." V. H.

Horn Bk 48:45 F '72 160w

"The story, accompanied by flat, Eastern-style full-page illustrations in vivid colors, would be an excellent choice for storytelling, especially with large groups." Pauline Marcus
Library J 97:1596 Ap 15 '72 280w

GODBOLD, E. STANLY. Ellen Glasgow and the woman within [by] E. Stanly Godbold. Jr. 322p il $10.95 La. state univ. press

813 Glasgow, Ellen Anderson Gholson
ISBN 0-8071-0040-4 LC 71-165068

Godbold portrays Ellen Glasgow "as she relates to the backdrop of Southern literary history. . . . [He examines] her social and literary opinions, her . . . private life (including her . . . repulsion for men, her alienation from family, and her love for dogs), and her public 'literary' life. . . . [He] also explains the . . . problem of [her] literary reputation that was slow to build, finally grew to command the front pages of major reviewing vehicles, and then . . . waned." (Library J)

"[This] book is likely to be our standard biography of Ellen Glasgow for some time. . . . There are some weaknesses . . . but they are outweighed by its strengths. Mr. Godbold contributes little to the criticism of the novels, his accounts thereof being cursory and mostly running to plot summary. . . . He treats only in passing the intellectual influences molding Miss Glasgow, so that we have little sense of her ongoing intellectual life. . . . But whatever reservations we may have, Mr. Godbold's book emerges as authoritative. . . . [He] is alive to the elements of interest in the Glasgow personal story and career; he is awake, also, to the psychic implications of her split personality. He continually sparks our interest as he unfolds his narrative. His account of her last years is almost the best thing in his book." F. P. W. McDowell

Am Lit 44:500 N '72 900w

"Godbold makes no attempt to romanticize Glasgow. That she was frequently vain, self-serving, jealous, and arrogant is neither glossed nor blown out of proportion. In fact, the details are presented to shed light on problems raised in her fiction. . . . [He views] Glasgow as one who revolted against the romantic conventions of Southern writers. . . . Recommended." B. C. Bach

Library J 97:2098 Je 1 '72 150w

"[Godbold] has attempted to reconstruct from documents, letters, interviews, records, the notes taken by Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings for the biography she died before completing, 'The Woman Within' [BRD 1954], and Ellen Glasgow's fiction, the story of the life of the resident of One West Main Street, Richmond. The result is the most nearly complete biographical account available in English. . . . Godbold reads the novels in simplistic autobiographical terms, a dangerous strategem even with autobiographical novelists and a disastrous one with a writer as committed to the craft of fiction as Ellen Glasgow was. Certainly the value as art and as commentary on life which she preserved in the amber of her fiction has little attraction for Mr. Godbold; and if, . . . the meaning of her life is to be found there, it largely escapes his net." C. H. Holman

Va Q R 48:633 autumn '72 1150w

GODDARD, DONALD. Blimey! another book about London. 214p il $7.95 Quadrangle bks. 914.21 London—Description LC 72-188175

A Londoner describes his city. "This is a London for New Yorkers. Mr. Goddard himself lived in New York for 10 years." (N Y Times Bk R)

"In spite of the title, this is far more than just 'another book about London.' Its pages are filled with astute observations and absorbing descriptions. The author has an eye for detail and a talent for imparting atmosphere. No need for any tourist to join the stampede at known sights; Goddard enticingly describes numerous alternatives that are just as good and far less crowded. His 'pub crawl' is a vivid reading experience. . . . While Goddard states: 'There's simply no knowing [London] in any final sense,' his book has brought us a step closer. Bosshart's photographs contribute to the atmosphere; and Goddard's lists of shops, theaters, and emergency telephone numbers (to name but a few items) round out a book most libraries will want to buy." Hana Stranska

Library J 97:2596 Ag '72 110w

"Goddard has a little glossary, useful for visiting Americans who expect a fag to be a homosexual, but it is not a Cockney glossary. . . . [On] the character of Londoners, [he] is succinct, accurate, even wise. . . . Half the book is intelligent high-journalese exposition of generalities, the other half is totally trustworthy particularization. If you want Leadenhall Market, the Bloody Tower, the Cheshire Cheese and so on, Mr. Goddard will tell you how to get there and what to expect. He also has plain catalogues about synagogues, discotheques and hotels. He does not have maps, and that is a great pity. . . . Take this book with you to London." Anthony Burgess

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ag 13 '72 900w

GODDEN, GEOFFREY A., ed. Jewitt's ceramic art of Great Britain, 1800-1900; being a rev. and expanded ed. of those pts. of The ceramic art of Great Britain by Llewellyn Jewitt dealing with the nineteenth century. 282p $25 Arco

738 Ceramics. Pottery. Porcelain
ISBN 0-668-02595-6 LC 76-184414

"Godden has rearranged [Jewitt's] material in a more logical sequence, expanded the history to the year 1900, added . . . new information which later research has made available, and corrected errors. He refers the reader in search of more detailed information to recent specialist works and provides, in an appendix, a list of errors in the revised 1883 edition for the benefit of those possessing it or any subsequent unedited reprints. He has also provided a new pictorial glossary. A biographical sketch of the author is provided." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"Jewitt published his two-volume The Ceramic Art of Great Britain from Pre-Historic Times Down to the Present Day in 1878, and a revised edition appeared in 1883. . . . [Godden has] revised [Jewitt's] . . . text occasionally paraphrasing the original." R. R. Harris

Library J 97:2173 Je 15 '72 90w

"Jewitt's Ceramic Art of Great Britain is a great Victorian classic. . . . [Godden] has removed all that Jewitt wrote about wares produced before 1800 . . . [and has] provided numerous photographs to complement the old wood-engravings. Students of the subject will want to possess this book though many may still wish to refer from time to time to the majestic original."

TLS p900 J1 28 '72 110w

GODDEN, JON. Shiva's pigeons; an experience of India [by] Jon and Rumer Godden; photo by Stella Snead. 372p $17.95 Knopf; Viking 309.1 India—Civilization. India—Social life and customs SBN 670-64055-7 LC 70-179425

Two novelists and a photographer collaborate to portray 'India—its religions, customs, and the calm strength and wisdom of its people. . . . [The book is] woven together on a birth-maturity-old age theme, and . . . wanders through time and across geographical boundaries." (Library J) Chronology.

"[The authors] approach their subject with a nice sense of modesty. The writing is unpretentious—more like casual impressions recorded on the spot. . . . It makes for delightful reading and allows the Indianness of India to creep over the reader like a spell. And because they leave so much still to be explored, the writers convey some of the majesty and mystery that definitive guidebooks or too presumptuous authors clumsily destroy. . . . Stella Snead's photographs, superb enough and lavish enough to stand alone . . . are an integral part of the book. . . . The skill of the authors and photographer is that for all the squalor and disease they can still perceive man's essential vitality. Their book will not satisfy the expert. It is too brief in its appraisal . . . but of a sufficiently high standard that the poetry and art of Indian living lingers on long after the book is closed." David Winder

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 23 '72 900w

"Godden enthusiasts will welcome the new work of this redoubtable pair. . . . The small plot is heartily subsidized by the vigorous, yet moving Godden craftsmanship, which catches small details and transitory moments. This book is, indeed (as its subtitle suggests), an 'experience,' one that is most fruitful if the reader sits back and relaxes. India is presented at its best, with combined artistry, sensitivity, and intelligence. Highly recommended." R. S. Haas

Library J 97:2855 S 15 '72 230w

GODDEN, RUMER. The old woman who lived in a vinegar bottle; il. by Mairi Hedderwick. unup $4.95 Viking

398.2 Folklore—England—Juvenile literature
SBN 670-52318-6 LC 77-168563

Living alone in her "house with a peaked roof, the old woman and her cat are content with their small comforts. Pitying a small, gasping fish she has bought, the old woman throws it into the sea and is rewarded by the magic creature with a promise of wishes granted. But she finds her subsequent affluence a burden and goes gratefully back to her vinegar bottle. . . . Ages five to eight." (Sat 10)

GODDEN, RUMER—Continued

"[This provocative title] disguises only briefly the fact that this is simply the old tale about the fisherman and his greedy wife who receive a series of wishes from the king of the fish. In Miss Godden's version—witty and stylish—only the wife remains. And a happy ending blunts the moral point of the original. Nevertheless, with [the] straightforward and fresh illustrations, this pleasant trifle makes a nice bedtime story." Jane Yolen

Book World p 10 (children's issue) My 7 '72 100w

Reviewed by J. F. Smith
Christian Science Monitor p12 S 6 '72 250w

Horn Bk 48:367 Ag '72 120w

Reviewed by Patricia Kurtz
Library J 97:2950 S 15 '72 90w

Reviewed by John Fuller
New Statesman 83:763 Je 2 '72 70w

"A far cry from the woman in Grimm who wants to rule the sun and moon, this old woman eventually wants to have a car. . . . In the end, [she] is home again, in her vinegar bottle, poor again, yes, but also richer—as are we—for what she has truly lived through, not merely dreamed." Doris Orgel

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p36 My 7 '72 300w

"An adaptation of a folk tale with a familiar theme—the kindly soul who becomes more greedy with each gift—is illustrated with soft, fresh pictures that have a sprightly combination of sophisticated detail and bucolic charm. The tale is told with grace in a fluid prose that is a pleasure to read aloud." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:72 Je 17 '72 100w

TLS p808 Jl 14 '72 80w

GODDEN, RUMER, jt. auth. Shiva's pigeons. See Godden, J.

GODDEN, RUMER. The tale of tales: the Beatrix Potter ballet; including ill. by Beatrix Potter; designs by Christine Edzard and phot. from the E. M. I. film production 'Tales of Beatrix Potter.' 208p $17.95 Warne 791.43 Peter Rabbit and Tales of Beatrix Potter (Moving picture). Moving picture plays. Potter, Beatrix. Ballets—Stories, plots, etc.

ISBN 0-7232-1421-2 LC [79-166292]

This is the "chronicle of the making of the movie-ballet which combines five of Miss Potter's classics for little hands—the tales of 'Jemima Puddle-Duck,' 'Pigling Bland,' 'Jeremy Fisher,' 'Two Bad Mice' and 'Squirrel Nutkin.' Miss Godden . . . interviews all the participants (masters and minions), covers the music, script, costumes, set and the shooting [of the film]." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[Godden] was persuaded to follow the preparations for and the making of the ballet film shown here as Peter Rabbit and Tales of Beatrix Potter, and to make a book of her impressions and observations. The result is almost as delightful as the film itself. She employs her great skill as a writer to show the film's makers as personalities and as craftsmen. While the film presented the Potter stories silently through dance, Godden has devised a text from Potter's own writings to tell the tales used in the movie. Her presentation is lavishly illustrated with Potter's own work, the Potter-style sketches made for the production of the film by Christine Edzard, and stills from the films itself. Dance and film enthusiasts and fans of Potter will enjoy this." G. L. Mayer

Library J 97:897 Mr 1 '72 130w

"Miss Godden, long an authority on the English author and her works [blends] . . . all into a narrative that flows as smoothly as an English stream. Also included are Potter's delicate illustrations and some handsome stills, proving the remarkable fidelity of the movie." N Y Times Bk R p34 Ap 9 '72 120w

GODECHOT, JACQUES. The counter-revolution: doctrine and action, 1789-1804; tr. from the French by Salvator Attanasio. 405p $12.95 Fertig

323.2 France—History—Revolution, 1789-1799. Revolutions
LC 70-159820

This book "is divided into two parts. The first offers . . . analyses of the thoughts of a succession of theorists of the counter-revolution, men such as Abbé Maury, Edmund Burke, and Joseph de Maistre of the old society. The second part traces the actions of their adherents in espionage, conspiracy, assassination, and military insurrection from 1788 to 1804." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[This study] fills a gap in the historical literature. . . . The chapter on Mallet du Pan deserves special notice. . . . Godechot's immensely readable book is neither exhaustive nor definitive. Notwithstanding some minor errors . . . and the lack of documentation, the student will profit from the author's consummate scholarship. . . . Recommended for all academic libraries." Choice 9:269 Ap '72 210w

"Godechot is one of the finest contemporary French historians, and this is one of his better books. It is therefore recommended for academic and large public libraries." J. A. Clarke

Library J 96:2768 S 15 '71 190w

"Godechot's book, which was first published in French in 1961, now appears in an (unfortunately very careless) English translation. . . . Godechot maintains that between 1789 and 1804 the ideology of counterrevolution should not be thought of as reactionary since none of its apologists desired a complete return to the past [He considers mostly Frenchmen]. . . . Since, however, it is part of his thesis that the counterrevolution, like the Revolution itself, was not merely a French but also a European phenomenon, he includes . . . one Englishman—Burke—and a number of somewhat arbitrarily selected Germans. . . . It is unfortunate, however, that [his] preoccupation with the counterrevolution as a European movement should have led him to emphasize only the differences between individuals and not the differences between nations." C. B. A. Behrens

N Y Rev of Books 18:30 Ja 27 '72 1500w

"[Godechot's] book underscores time and time again that in situations of social pressure a whole class may split different ways—right as well as left as indeed did the peasantry of Revolutionary France. . . . Equally fascinating is Godechot's description of the turbulence of French society—White Terror following so rapidly on Red Terror, making us realize that social dislocation gives almost equal opportunity to violent right as well as violent left. There are overwhelmingly important issues in [this book] for America today." J. H. Plumb

N Y Times Bk R p6 My 21 '72 500w

TLS p949 Ag 11 '72 700w

GODLOVITCH, ROSLIND, jt. ed. Animals, men and morals. See Godlovitch, S.

GODLOVITCH, STANLEY, ed. Animals, men and morals; an enquiry into the maltreatment of non-humans; ed. by Stanley and Roslind Godlovitch and John Harris. 240p $6.50 Taplinger

179 Animals—Treatment
ISBN 0-575-01344-3 LC 74-883625

"Man's inhumanity to animals is the subject of this collection of essays written by 13 authors, philosophers, and scientists, most of them British. The approach is factual, moral, philosophical, or sociological, depending on the writer." (Library J)

"The arguments presented are openly one-sided, opposing opinions are given short shrift, and most of the essays are angrily written. The book presents few new facts, but its point of view that animals are entitled to all the blessings of 'life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness' to which humans (in theory, at least) are entitled is certainly unusual. The extreme moral tone of many of the essays and the difficult reasoning of some of them are likely to limit the number of converts the book will make." J. F. Husband

Library J 97:878 Mr 1 '72 150w

TLS p217 F 25 '72 800w

GODOY ALCAYAGA, LUCILA. See Mistral, G.

GODWIN, GAIL. Glass people. 207p $5.95
Knopf

ISBN 0-394-47283-8 LC 72-2238

The novel concerns "Francesca Bolt, a pampered young woman who is almost literally dying of emptiness and passivity as the treasured possession of her husband, powerful, remote, all-competent Cameron, who needs her to fulfill the only function he can't perform for himself: to be his flawlessly beautiful wife.

[The story] is about Francesca's attempt to bolt her role as Cameron-wife and beautiful object, to find if she is secretly harboring a life of her own." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[In] Godwin's first novel, The Perfectionists [BRD 1971] . . . the reader sensed reserves of energy. With her second novel [the author] has honed down her prose; the style is never excessive, and single phrases are both tense and witty. She tells her story . . . in a smooth, mocking tone with horror always underneath. . . . Not until the stunning last few chapters, when the husband literally transforms Francesca into a Byzantine madonna, does one grasp the totality of Godwin's idea; what has been an unusually absorbing short novel suddenly seems a minor literary feat, the incidents one has thought clichéd or strangely hallucinatory become parts of a whole, even the title discards its banality. . . . Godwin becomes a writer to watch, good to have around and to look forward to." J. A. Avant

Library J 97:2643 Ag '72 200w

"Because Cameron encourages no other function for her and because beautiful Francesca has been programmed in the first place to be simply a gorgeous object, four years of marriage find her numb with non-activity and unthought: Gail Godwin is very skillful at depicting the atmosphere of this excruciating malaise, the heavy, debilitating exhaustion conferred by its lethargy, the malignant, overwhelming sense of indifference which it visits upon its victims. . . . But the author, in not allowing Francesca even a glimmer of life beyond her victimhood, doesn't give us much to care about; she herself seems angry at and even slightly contemptuous of Francesca for being so taken in; and the result is an uneasy ambivalence: Are we really to root for blank-minded Francesca to break free, when her author has promised us throughout that she's totally incapable of doing so?" Sara Blackburn

N Y Times Bk R p2 O 15 '72 400w
New Yorker 47:159 O 7 '72 130w

"The characters in Glass People are meticulously drawn and effectively realized, the facets of their personalities subtly, yet precisely, laid bare. The author is coolly neutral, and she makes no judgments. This is the way it is, Godwin is saying, and you must decide who the villains are." Genevieve Stuttard
Sat ■ 55:83 O 28 '72 390w

GOEDICKE, HANS. The report about the dispute of a man with his ba; papyrus Berlin 3024. 248p $12 Johns Hopkins press

893 Egyptian literature. Manuscripts
ISBN 0-8018-1234-8 LC 70-131472

This "is a speculative work concerning the nature of the life of man. It takes the form of a dialogue dispute between a man and his ba, the man defending an idealistic view of the afterlife while his ba takes a more practical and material view and deprecates the excessive concern of the man with death and its aftermath." (Am Hist R) General index. Indexes of words discussed and passages quoted.

"The ancient Egyptian literary work commonly known by the title of the Lebensmide and here again a new title is one of the best known of all ancient works of literature, and many Egyptologists have made attempts to translate it and to understand its complexities. This new edition is an important contribution. . . . The nature of the ba, that important element in Egyptian religious belief sometimes translated as 'soul,' is discussed by the editor at some length." P. L. Shinnie
Am Hist R 77:750 Je '72 350w

"The translation of the text, while relying on earlier ones, is accurate and, in many points, fresh. A 100-page commentary justifies any translational differences. The book should be of special interest to those concerned with the history of ideas. Particularly attractive to Egyptologists will be the copious philological notes, photographs of the papyrus with opposing hieroglyphic transliteration. . . . Highly recommended for the specialist."

Choice 8:684 J1 '71 130w

GOETHE, JOHANN WOLFGANG VON.

Goethe's color theory; arr. and ed. by Rupprecht Matthaei; Am. ed. tr. and ed. by Herb Aach; with a complete facsim. reproduction of Charles Eastlake's 1820 tr. of the "didactic part" of the color theory. 275p il col il $27.50 Van Nostrand-Reinhold

535.6 Color
LC 77-140180

In these selections from Goethe's "writings on color, . . . sections of the 'didactic part' of the Color theory, marginally annotated and . . . illustrated in color, form the core of the book. A list of Goethe's color writings . . . is appended." (Choice) Index.

"Far more than the hobby of a literary genius, though less specialized than the nearly contemporary work of Chevreul, Goethe's studies of color are significant for their experiential rather than purely theoretical bias, while the acuity of his observations, recorded with a poet's sensitivity, is impressive even today. Matthaei as a physiologist is a qualified editor, and Aach has made a competent translation of the sections which are new to English. This edition is of interest to students in the sciences, artists, and art-historians, and, of course, to students of Goethe. Recommended for college libraries as a valuable companion to . . . [M.] Chevreul's The principles of harmony and contrast of colors [BRD 1968]."

Choice 8:1324 D '71 170w

"Although Goethe's color theory is not very scientific, it provides a philosophical method for considering the properties of color that no artist should ignore. . . . The Eastlake translation is included, with painfully reduced type. . . . Matthaei provides illuminating discussions and analyses of the scientific, philosophical, and artistic questions which Goethe poses. He also includes some material omitted by Eastlake and corrects many of Eastlake's errors. All of the original illustrations are included and many new ones have been added." Jack Goodwin

Library J 96:2624 S 1 '71 110w

GOFFMAN, ERVING. Relations in public: microstudies of the public order. 396p $7.95 Basic bks.

301.1 Behavior. Human relations
ISBN 465-06895-2 LC 76-167764

"This is a study of the habits and rituals which govern our social behavior in public. . . . [Goffman] analyzes how we greet acquaintances we meet every day, friends we have not seen for some time, relatives, employers, and employees. . . . One chapter is concerned with 'Normal Appearances,' and their simulation. Goffman believes that individuals exhibit two basic modes of activity. They either go quietly about their business, or else are alerted for flight or fight." (Book World) Index.

"Goffman has been known for a long time as a keen observer of social interaction, as a generalizer . . . and as an intrepid corner of new terms and concepts. His latest book shows all these characteristics to great advantage. . . . What [he] has provided is a guide for observation and systematic analogies of behavior. In a sense, what he has given us is a giant code book which will prove invaluable for future systematic research. And, different from most code books, it is fun to read." K. W. Back

Ann Am Acad 401:206 My '72 410w

"Professor Goffman, with a detached, perceptive, and penetrating eye reveals the complexity of the signals which habitually pass between us, but which are so ingrained that we have probably never thought about them. . . . Reading this study leaves one with two main impressions. First is admiration for Goffman's acuteness of observation. Second is to reflect upon why all this ritualization is obligatory." Anthony Storr

Book World p10 N 28 '71 700w

"Goffman's main concern is with 'the ground rules and the associated orderings of behavior that pertain to public life—to persons comingling and to places and social occasions where this face-to-face contact occurs.' . . . Among the topics covered: territories of the self, supportive interchanges, and remedial interchanges. The treatment of supportive and remedial interchanges is especially good. It should be of interest to upper division and graduate students and to professionals in social and clinical psychology, cultural anthropology, and sociology. An excellent book—probably the best of Goffman's to date. No bibliography, references appear in footnotes only."

GOFFMAN, ERVING—Continued

Choice 9:136 Mr '72 120w

Reviewed by Marshall Berman

N Y Times Bk R pl F 27 '72 7000w

Reviewed by Michael Argyle

Science 176:627 My 12 '72 1050w

"Professor Goffman has been highly praised for his powers of observation. Some of his findings, however, are remarkably self-evident. . . . What is a little disquieting in his readiness to generalize and to accept any allegation that suits his argument. . . . When considering 'Remedial Interchanges,' Professor Goffman seems to be on firmer ground. . . . In his final paper, 'The Insanity of Place,' [he] crosses over into psychiatry. . . . His description [of the hypomanic state] is full and accurate and covers a variety of petty symptoms. . . . There is no question that . . . his writings have a high curiosity value. Whether they deserve the rapturous reception they have had in some quarters is another question."

TLS p1633 D 31 '71 550w

GOKHALE, BALKRISHNA G., ed. Images of India. (Asian studies, 2) 196p $6 Humanities press

913.54 India—Foreign opinion. India—Civilization
LC 70-27298

"In this volume published in connection with the Asian studies program shared by Wake Forest College, Salem College, and Winston-Salem State College, seven of the nine papers were written by Wake Forest faculty members. . . . The papers are thematically tied together, in a search through centuries of time and across continents for historical and literary impressions of India and its people. Materials from the United States, England, France, Germany, Spain, Russia, and Rumania represent Western attitudes, while the two essays based on Asian sources explore Indo-Burmese relations and India's self-concept." (Library J)

"The nine articles are written by historians only some of whom are familiar with India itself. Several, notably the chapter on Spanish views of India, are particularly revealing of other cultures themselves. A brief but cogent chapter on Burma is the only one which shows the impact of political and social pressures on thought patterns. For India itself the most significant essay is the lucid chapter on 16th-century Englishmen. The other chapters vary from superficial to obscure. However, the collection is a moderately useful addition to the work of George Bearce, Francis Hutchins, and others."

Choice 9:416 My '72 110w

"The best of these papers are interpretative and stimulating, contributing as much to our knowledge of Europe as Asia. All in all, the book represents a rich, scholarly effort unique in its usefulness to student and specialist alike." R. S. Haas

Library J 97:693 F 15 '72 140w

"[This] is a mixed bag. Among the best articles are those by Shasta Bryant on 'The Spanish Image of India' (extremely good), Gokhale's 'Self-Images of India,' and an excellent piece on the influence of Indian literature on Rumanian popular literature by Keith Hitchins. Only two articles are particularly poor. . . . On the whole, the quality of the articles is very high and the subject has long been in need of study." J. W. Spellman
Pacific Affairs 45:444 fall '72 250w

GOLAN, GALIA. The Czechoslovak reform movement; communism in crisis, 1962-1968. 349p $16.50 Cambridge

320.9437 Czechoslovak Republic—Politics and government. Czechoslovak Republic—Intellectual life
ISBN 0-521-8246-3 LC 76-163059

"The decision of the 12th Congress of the Czechoslovak Communist Party to instigate 'de-Stalinization' in December 1962 . . . [led to a movement for reform which Golan traces] until its suppression on 21 August 1968. In addition to examining the forms taken by the struggle and the methods of the reformers in their efforts to liberalize and then democratize Czechoslovak society, the author also examines the content of the reforms proposed." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Miss Golan's study] traces the struggle for liberalization in every sphere of Czechoslovak society, discussing the economy, the mass organizations, the cultural world, the government, the minorities, and the realm of ideology. . . . The discussion of mass organizations is quite intensive and interesting; in addition to the usual and well-known 'transmission belts' of a Communist society, the author skillfully analyzes the role of mass organizations in the educational system, the arts and literature."

A useful and carefully structured bibliography, both of primary Czech and Slovak sources, as well as of selected books, articles and pamphlets adds to the relevance of this book to students of Eastern European politics." Andrew Gvory

Ann Am Acad 403:188 S '72 340w

Choice 9:1189 N '72 180w

"Some depth, of necessity, had to be sacrificed to show the Czechoslovak reform movement in its economic, social, educational, political, and ethnic aspects; but the total presentation is thoughtful, well rounded, and convincingly demonstrates the deep commitment of those parts of the nation that engaged in the struggle for freedom within socialism. The chapter on education is interesting. . . . Recommended for collections in East European studies and large academic libraries." Hana Stranska

Library J 97:1807 My 15 '72 110w

"Dr. Golan provides the most careful and detailed account so far published in English of the events of that 'last decade,' leading up to the reform and the invasion of 1968. She has based her work on the Czech and Slovak press rather than on secondary sources, and there is nothing in the small library on the reform movement which has accumulated in the last four years to approach her thoroughness. . . . She avoids any of the snap explanations of the invasion . . . and builds up her evidence to the careful conclusion, and surely the right one, that the invasion took place because the Soviet leadership could not conceive of a communist party acting as the Czechoslovaks did and still retaining the essential elements of its leading role in society. At the same time, Dr. Golan's facts are rather short of interpretation." Neal Ascherson

N Y Rev of Books 19:18 Ag 10 '72 490w

"By an unlucky accident of timing, the major part of [this] text was completed before January, 1968, and thus takes virtually no account of the torrent of revelations poured out by the Czech and Slovak mass media in the following few months and by the considerable number of Czechoslovak intellectuals who settled abroad after the invasion of August, 1968. The events which culminated in the invasion are discussed somewhat cursorily in an epilogue of just over fifty pages. . . . The essence of the book is a painstaking account of the reformist aspirations and efforts in various sections of Czechoslovak society during the . . . [period considered]. . . . The ground is covered comprehensively . . . [but] Dr Golan is open to the criticism that she has not adequately weighted her sources. . . . It must be added that the style does not make this book easy to read."

TLS p41 Ja 14 '72 700w

GOLD, HERBERT. My last two thousand years. 246p $6.95 Random house

B or 92

ISBN 0-394-47098-2 LC 72-4087

The "novelist and short-story writer organizes his autobiography around the theme of being Jewish—raised in an Ohio town where Jews were few, and educated at Columbia, where they were not; mildly picked on in the Army; married first to a Jew and then to a Gentile; visiting Paris, Haiti, and Israel." (New Yorker)

"Gold reflects on his past in a highly individual, impressionistic style. . . . His observations are sharp and pertinent. He is frank about his failures, modest about his successes. In some episodes, he comes on as a cerebral version of Portnoy, plagued by many of Portnoy's hangups, but with a difference. Gold wrestles with his demons until at the end of this book he has found identity both as a Jew and as a man. This work is thoughtful, honest, and absorbing." S. M. Batzdorff

Library J 97:2720 S 1 '72 100w

"This is an attractive autobiographical voice, one that promises the candor, or even indiscretion, that we relish in memoirs, and Gold sustains it effectively. But the material it has to work with, by a cruel irony, has been made virtually a cliché by the fiction of novelists like Herbert Gold. . . . Gold's treatment, by insistently dwelling upon incidents that carry the theme of tribal discovery, doesn't sufficiently complicate and enliven the scenario. . . . Even so, his account of his youth and early manhood is often quite wonderfully funny and poignant. It's later, when his theme seems to demand heavy thinking and large conclusions, that the life goes most troublingly out of focus and the writing gets soft and woolly." T. R. Edwards

N Y Times Bk R p4 O 15 '72 1150w
New Yorker 48:182 O 14 '72 100w

"Gold's life, from the evidence of this book, has been fascinating, but his book is not. . . . What has been good about Gold's life, particularly his enviable sex life, seems to have been specific, but the significance he lays on it is banal and abstract. . . . His best stories are appalling: in one, a friend throws kittens into a furnace to educate Gold's daughters in the tragic sense of life; in another, a PR man offers to market Gold as a fashionable commodity. . . . Such firmly realized episodes, however, are offset by a tendency to abstraction that is inimical to autobiography. . . . In Gold's best work, his characters are possessed by a goal that transcends selfconsciousness; what a pity to see their author so nervous as he glances in the mirror here." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 80:110B O 16 '72 550w

Reviewed by William Abrahams
Sat R 55:69 N 11 '72 650w

GOLD, JOSEPH, comp. The stature of Dickens: a centenary bibliography; pub. for Univ. of Manitoba press. 236p il Can$12.50 Univ of Toronto press

016 Dickens, Charles—Bibliography
ISBN 0-8020-3265-6 LC 70-151368

This book consists of four sections. . . . preceded by an introductory list of sources and aids to the bibliographer and scholar. . . . Section I lists books, essays, and articles primarily on Dickens and includes selected reviews of some . . . recent works of criticism. Section II lists books, essays, selected early reviews and articles on single novels and on A Christmas Carol and includes a section on Dickens' Letters. Section III lists Doctoral Dissertations. Dissertation Abstracts is given as the source except where not available (as at Harvard), and there the listing is by university and date. Section IV lists books either making significant mention of Dickens or which seem important to the background study of some aspect of Dickens' work. Foreign books for those countries where Dickens interest and scholarly production seems obviously greatest are included. . . . The listing is chronological." (Pref) Chronology. Index of authors and editors.

"An excellent bibliography. . . . Gold makes it clear that this is not a 'definitive' bibliography, if that is indeed possible; he rather argues that such a research tool would drown the scholar in trivia of all kinds. The principle of selectivity here is one which aims to gather materials 'especially useful to critics.' The results are over 3,600 items whose usefulness each reader will decide for himself. Gold's bibliography appears generally to meet the standard he sets, overlooking none of the really important criticism of the past century. . . . All items are nandily numbered and indexed. Recommended for graduate libraries and large undergraduate libraries."

Choice 8:1317 D '71 200w

"This bibliography based on careful, extensive scholarship is highly recommended." C. R. Andrews

Library J 96:3312 O 15 '71 100w

GOLD, MIKE. Mike Gold: a literary anthology: ed. with an introd. by Michael Folsom. 322p $9.50; pa $3.25 Int. pubs.

318
ISBN 0-7178-0344-9; 0-7178-0346-5 (pa)
LC 79-184672

This anthology brings together a selection of the writer's poems, stories, sketches, critical essays and journalistic pieces from the period 1914 to 1959. The arrangement is chronological.

The editor worked in collaboration with the author on this collection until Gold's death in 1967. Bibliography.

"This anthology of Michael Gold's best pieces is most invaluable and necessary at this time when the New Critics have gone bankrupt and a popular socialist movement, a radical mass struggle against monopoly capitalism, is in the making. Gold stands out as the most distinguished Marxist-Leninist writer of this country, in spite of the editor's reservations about Gold's handicaps. The editor even suggests the limiting 'Jewish quality' of Gold which presumably accounts for his love for 'justice and retribution.' Folsom's backhanded compliments, however, fail to blur the enduring boldness, lucidity, and incisiveness of Gold's poems, essays, stories and autobiographical sketches. . . . The editor's bibliographic data add usefulness to this timely collection which every library, public, private and college, should have on its shelves. Highly recommended for all libraries." Choice 9:505 Je '72 170w

"What the university presses and large commercial houses apparently still want no part of, International Publishers has given us. And just because that firm is known as a publisher of left-wing writing, [this book] may not attract as wide an audience as it might had the collection come from a different house. And in that case, more's the pity. . . . [Folsom] has chosen his selections well . . . and he provides a reasonably tempered and informative, if somewhat florid, introduction. What he has given us is a collection of some of the best pieces by a writer who, for more than a quarter of a century, was one of the most important figures in American letters. That is not to make an exaggerated claim in Gold's behalf; his importance was very real; his artistic talents were very limited. . . . Most of the pieces in this collection were written before the 1930s, and that seems right; they undoubtedly represent the time of Gold's most important work." Jack Salzman

Nation 215:22 J1 10 '72 1950w

"The mistake Gold made, it seems to me, was to try using a little enticement and coercion himself. . . . But enticement and coercion are the kind of striking seduction that cannot be used by just any class. They are, at least in this country, a shillelagh whose handle is carved for the middle-class. Without the affluence, where's the enticement? Without the command, where's the coercion? That explains why Gold's important early piece 'Towards Proletarian Art' (1929) is so Whitmanesque, so 'mystic,' so rhetorical, so insubstantial. . . . He tried to convince readers of the necessity of great literature growing out of the tenement, but the enticing is transparently overdone and transparently wishful. . . . It is certainly to his credit that he sensed early—the term 'proletarian literature' dates in America to Gold's essay—and sensed intuitively how dominated American culture was by the values of its predominant class. . . . [This] is a corrective book, useful for showing how truly difficult it has been to live in the spurious melting pot." W. T. Lhamon

New Repub 166:27 My 27 '72 1850w

GOLDBERG, LUCIANNE. Purr, baby, purr, by Lucianne Goldberg and Jeannie Sakol. 174p $5.95 Hawthorn bks.

301.41 Woman—Social conditions. Women's Liberation Movement
LC 76-130735

The authors "have written this book to explain the purpose of the [Pussycat] league." (Library J)

"I laughed a lot while reading 'Purr, Baby, Purr.' I wonder, though, for whom this book was really written. If it were written for those who already agree with the authors . . . for the purpose of giving them support and a few laughs, the book probably does a good job. If it were written for young levelheaded women in Women's Lib who are conscientiously seeking to become both feminine and liberated, the book falls short. It lacks the tact and diplomacy the authors recommend. The humor directed at the extremists is often cutting and seems to imply that all people connected with the movement are extremists. If the book were written to convert the extremists, I would label it a failure." Barbara Keffer

Best Sell 31:502 F 15 '72 550w

"'Purr, Baby, Purr' is the whimsical slogan of the Pussycat League, founded in 1969 as a half-serious, half-facetious answer to the women's liberation movement. . . . [Goldberg and Sakol] are in favor of childcare centers for working mothers, abortion reform, and equal pay for equal work, but they give no recognition to those who have urged and brought about these reforms. They despise the strident militancy of some women's liberationists and somewhat unfairly ascribe this trait to the entire movement. . . . A light approach in this area is welcome . . . but Goldberg and Sakol weaken their cause by unfair generalizations and a tendency to pooh-poo some of the real grievances. . . . Its catty approach may appeal to some potential 'Pussycats,' briefly amuse or annoy some other readers." S. M. Batzdorff

GOLDBERG, LUCIANNE—Continued

Library J 96:2336 J1 '71 190w

"[This is a] counterblast to Women's Lib. . . . [The authors] are serious but superficial. Still, they have done their homework on such matters as vaginal orgasm (not a myth) and the physiological differences between boys and girls (more than skin deep). Some women really want to be feminine, they say; and the Lib types often put their personal problems on society. Hardly the definitive rebuttal, but there's enough matter here to raise an argument; and some women who feel threatened by the Lib's more outré manifestations may take comfort from the book if they can stomach its breezy prose."

N Y Times Bk R p56 S 26 '71 100w

GOLDBERG, MARSHALL. The Karamanov equations. 269p $7.95 World pub.

ISBN 0-529-04516-8 LC 70-168379

"Karamanov is a Russian genius who has invented a near-perfect anti-missile defense but has been struck with a disastrous blood clot. Nicolas Sten is an American surgeon who has invented a gas-gun to remove such clots from areas otherwise not accessible. So, Sten is being called to save Karamanov. The trick is that the CIA asks Sten to kill Karamanov." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 31:580 Mr 15 '72 120w

"[This] first novel [is] a politico-medical thriller. . . . The action, which takes place largely in Paris and which includes French political influences, is eminently devious and ends up with a marvelously expert surgical operation." Henry Veit

Library J 97:903 Mr 1 '72 90w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Storey

Library J 97:1933 My 15 '72 130w [YA]

"The idea is a good one, though Goldberg is not the man to do it literary justice. He himself is a surgeon, and when it comes to the actual operation he writes with vivid accuracy. In this scene, the prose is taut and exciting. Elsewhere, it is flat. Nor is the construction of the book what it might be. The author uses constant flashbacks, a mark of the weak writer, and these get terribly annoying." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p22 Ap 2 '72 140w

GOLDEN, FREDERIC. The moving continents; drawings by Ingrid Niccoll. 124p $6.95 Scribner

551.4 Continental drift—Juvenile literature. Geomorphology—Juvenile literature
SBN 684-12511-0 LC 75-162765

The author "is the science editor of Time. In this book he expounds the theory that the continents were once assembled in a giant supercontinent and that this huge land mass somehow broke apart in the remote past. The explanation, given in the form of a scientific detective story, describes how, step by step the evidence was accumulated and promises a revolution in geological thinking. [Bibliography. Index.] Grade eight and up." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by Francis Carmody

Best Sell 31:522 F 15 '72 80w [YA]

"Both [this volume and Alan Anderson's The Drifting Continents BRD 1972], are very good, and I want both available to my students. Obviously, they overlap a good deal in content; but the authors differ in their presentations; they stress different aspects of the growth of the continental drift theory; and in short they are different people, a fact which has implications I think junior-high readers should be starting to appreciate. . . . I should hate to decide which is the better of the two. If geophysics is going to become a fad like ecology, or if Wegener turns out to have been the Newton or Darwin of the discipline, it will be good to have read both books. I'm for anything which will maintain the general interest in basic research." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 48:289 Je '72 120w

"This up-to-date account of the new geology focuses on the life of Alfred Wegener, the much scorned and ridiculed champion of the continental drift concept. No longer a theory, Wegener's 50-year-old explanation of movements of the earth's crust has been recently vindicated by geo-scientists. . . . Explanations are lucid and amateur geologists from grade seven up will greatly enlarge their knowledge of earth science." R. H. Maki

Library J 97:2488 J1 '72 100w [YA]

GOLDEN, HARRY. The golden book of Jewish humor. 252p $6.95 Putnam

817.08 Jewish wit and humor

LC 78-175262

The author offers his retellings of Jewish jokes and stories. Index.

"The mood of the country has caught up with Jewish humor—that marvelous, analytical way of perception bred in terror and adversity . . . that suspects one's place in the universe is, at best, tenuous, and knows that life is a tragedy sweetened only by the reminder that you can hang yourself tomorrow. . . . Some of the gags [in the collection] are so venerable . . . they should be retired permanently to the Old Jokes Home. Others have mangled punch lines which ruin the timing. . . . But there are gems in the muck. . . . As an anthology, this is more of a catchall. But I wouldn't be surprised if it sold like hot bagels." Robert Lasson

Book World p12 Mr 5 '72 230w

"A warm and gentle collection of Jewish jokes. Some go back to about the year 3, others can still be heard today being told by someone like Myron Cohen. A book like this provides a glimpse into the tough personality of a people who can joke about pogroms, Hitlerism, and their own Jewishness." H. E. Hutchinson

Library J 97:875 Mr 1 '72 50w

GOLDFARB, SIDNEY. Messages. 83p $6.95; pa $2.95 Farrar, Straus

811

LC 74-143298

In these poems, the author's concern is "for personal identity and personal fulfillment." (Library J)

"In general, the best of the unconventional, antiestablishment poets, Goldfarb also ranks among the foremost contemporary poets of any group. Readers will, no doubt, be put off by the author's attitude and diction; yet both seem consistent with his irreverent, dissident voice, which can be sensitive as well as vulgar, penetrating as well as banal." W. W. Waring

Library J 96:1986 Je 1 '71 80w

"Unlike many 'lyric' and 'confessional' poets, Goldfarb convinces us that his life is inherently interesting. The moments in his life from which he makes poems are surely chosen to parallel moments in his readers' lives. In addition, the natural language, the confident craft, the storytelling elements, the musical quality of these lyrics keep our attention highly focused. The harshest judgment I could make about this absorbing collection is that it contains uneven pieces, or shows off too much; but a more legitimate judgment would have to add that the energy and the daring and the experiments in plain language of this self-indulgent poet continue to cement his position as one of our finest, with a lifetime to go and probably great work ahead." Dick Allen

Poetry 120:235 J1 '72 400w

"Where other young urban (NYC) poets fall away into apocalyptic cant and rant, or surreal trivia, Goldfarb keeps talking and arguing and joking his way toward faith in the imagination and a faith in the language. . . . [He] sees politics and sex as more than curious human debris [and] is not satisfied with a detrital urban poetic jargon. . . . [His] subject in Messages is Time, how to spend it on the line of a poem, how to make the straight line of a poem include the topology of a complex vision. . . . These poems are by a man who wants to reach the others at some point that isn't Sartre's hell." James Whitehead

Sat R 54:37 D 18 '71 550w

"Much of [this book] rests on the Norman Brown/Susan Sontag idea that to break down the distinctions arising from sublimation (meaningful and meaningless, trivial and important, as well as decent and indecent) is automatically a liberating act. This quality will probably earn the book more blame and praise than it deserves."

Va Q R 48:xxii winter '72 140w

GOLDHILL, PAUL M. A parent's guide to the prevention and control of drug abuse. 185p $6.95; pa $1.95 Regnery

613.8 Narcotic habit. Drugs. Youth
LC 76-143853

The author attempts to show that "drug abuse is a product of emotional problems stemming from poor family relationships . . . [and] that the most effective way to handle the problem of drug abuse, or potential drug abuse, is to improve relationships among all members of the family. . . . The purpose of this book is to show parents how they can begin to build healthy family relationships, with or without professional help." (Introd) Glossary. Bibliography.

"[The author] provides a straightforward, clear program for parents to aid them in preventing and dealing with drug abuse by their children. His tone, however, is at times condescending and he writes for the affluent middle class. . . . [His book] should appeal to the suburban population. Recommended."

Choice 8:1646 F '72 80w

"This book, by a specialist in pediatric psychiatry, is one of the most enlightened of the many recent works addressed to parents. . . . [Goldhill] uses a series of abbreviated case studies to illustrate the effects of impaired communications between parents and their children, and a lack of a sense of self-worth in the young. For those instances where outside professional help must be sought, the author describes various alternatives such as psychotherapy, therapeutic communities, and methadone treatment." R. H. Lipsett

Library J 96:3995 D 1 '71 120w

GOLDHOR, HERBERT, ed. Education for librarianship: the design of the curriculum of library schools. See Education for librarianship: the design of the curriculum of library schools

GOLDIN, JUDAH. The song at the sea; being a commentary on a commentary in two parts. 290p $10 Yale univ. press

222 Bible. O.T. Exodus—Commentaries
ISBN 0-300-01409-0 LC 73-140530

A "commentary on the rendition of Exodus 15, verses through 20, the song, as found in the Tannaitic commentary Mekilta de-Rabbi Ishmael." (Choice)

"Exodus 15, the Song at the Sea, one of the gems of the Hebrew Bible, has invited the comments of scholars through the centuries. With a vividness and exultation born of nearness to the event, it celebrates Yahweh's victory over Pharaoh's army at the Sea of Reeds. . . . Goldin, professor of Classical Judaica at Yale, has translated and annotated this early commentary with smoothness and precision. Traditional Jewish biblical interpretation, unintelligible to the ordinary reader, is communicated in a 60-page introduction and running commentary. This book is highly recommended to those readers who wish to understand the world of the early rabbis and their serious quest behind word plays and poetry." R. J. Clifford

America 125:465 N 27 '71 160w

"With much linguistic and exegetical skill and some sensitivity to archaeological evidence since Albright, Goldin presents this first full commentary of the song (Shirta) in terms of providing insight into second century rabbinical attitudes as well as for its illumination of Exodus 15. . . . The book [is] necessary for specialized libraries."

Choice 8:848 S '71 130w

GOLDING, WILLIAM. The scorpion god; three short novels. 178p $5.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-1364910-0 LC 70-174508

In the title story "the Liar (a jester in the court of ancient Egypt) confounds the people of the land and reveals himself as the mysterious Scorpion God. In the second story [entitled Clonk Clonk], Charging Elephant (a tribal youth in Africa) passes into manhood through the services of She Who Names the Women and becomes the fierce Water Paw Wounded Leopard. In the third story, [Envoy Extraordinary], Panocles (an inventor in ancient Rome) impresses the Emperor by building ■ steamship and is rewarded with the post of Envoy Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to China." (New Yorker)

Reviewed by Scott Wood
America 127:159 S 9 '72 700w

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 229:109 F '72 110w

Reviewed by Paul West
Book World p4 Ja 23 '72 900w
Choice 9:368 My '72 160w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p11 F ■ '72 490w

Reviewed by C. W. Mann
Library J 97:898 Mr 1 '72 170w

Reviewed by Joni Bodart
Library J 97:1625 Ap 15 '72 120w [YA]

Reviewed by Malcolm Bradbury
New Statesman 82:594 O 29 '71 1050w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett
N Y Rev of Books 18:13 F 24 '72 700w

Reviewed by Edward Hoagland
N Y Times Bk R p6 F 6 '72 900w

"The Bookbuyer (a normally good-natured person in modern America), having tried to read three pretentious, clumsily told stories, gets fed up and becomes Outraged Customer Who Wants His Money Back."

New Yorker 47:94 Ja 29 '72 150w

"In each of the three novellas that make up [this book], Golding attempts to create an ancient society—Egyptian, prehistoric, Roman—in the spirit of ironic comedy. The tales are clever, and they are carefully crafted. The pacing throughout is admirable, the phrasing is elegant if slightly precious, and the archaic conventions are almost lovingly rendered. But the ironic discrepancies between quaint 'them' and knowing 'us' are too concocted, too remote from the actual histories of societies and individuals to put any force behind their satiric intention, which is, presumably, to remind us of our own shortsightedness. As a result of this lack of genuine drive, the elaborate development in each tale comes to seem excessive." D. J. Gordon

Sat R 55:71 F 5 '72 600w

Reviewed by John Skow
Time 99:78 F 21 '72 400w

"[The title story] turns on the moment when a man, by a leap of imagination, chooses to become a God. . . . By treating the unfamiliar with familiarity, explaining nothing, [the author] teases the reader into the strange world of the story. It is as brilliant a tour de force as The Inheritors [BRD 1962], if on a smaller scale. The other story, 'Clonk Clonk', is somewhat less satisfying. . . . 'Envoy Extraordinary' will be familiar to Golding's admirers from its first appearance in the collection titled Sometime, Never [BRD 1958] and, in dramatic form, in The Brass Butterfly. It is unique among Golding's writings in that it is witty and amusing, and quite lacking in the solemnity that rather weighs down his other work."

TLS p1381 N 5 '71 900w

GOLDMAN, EMMA. Red Emma speaks; selected writings and speeches; comp. and ed. by Alix Kates Shulman. 413p $10 Random house; pa $2.45 Vintage

335 Anarchism and anarchists
ISBN 0-394-47095-8 LC 77-37077

An edited collection of some of the "writings of Emma Goldman, the early 20th-century anarchist and feminist. . . . The book is divided into four parts, each containing an analytical preface and selections from a major topic of Goldman's writings. The four topics represented are the organization of society, social institutions, violence, and revolution." (Choice) Index.

"The value of the book is greatly enhanced by an excellent 25-page biographical sketch which emphasizes the influences shaping [Goldman's] writing and a well developed subject index. Recommended for those libraries seeking to build their collections of source materials in both American radicalism and feminism."

Choice 9:873 S '72 190w

"Shulman has written an excellent preface to each section, and a fascinating biographical sketch. Goldman is at her best when discussing her experiences as an exponent of anarchism, and not so good when she is being doctrinaire. Part of the problem is that what was so radical in 1910 is much less so now." Cynthia Harrison

Library J 97:2193 Je 15 '72 150w

GOLDMAN, MICHAEL. Shakespeare and the energies of drama. 176p $7.95 Princeton Univ. press

822.3 Shakespeare, William—Criticism, interpretation, etc.
 ISBN 0-691-06214-5 LC 70-166374

Shakespeare's texts are seen "as designs for theatrical experience. . . . Mr. Goldman's particular concerns are these: what the audience responds to in an acted play; how Shakespeare controls and shapes this response; what the response means, and why it matters. Combining a theatrical and a literary understanding of Shakespeare, Mr. Goldman's new methodology explores the total impact of the playwright's work on an . . . audience [and] . . . analyzes a number of the plays most widely performed today, the sonnets, and the poems Venus and Adonis and The Rape of Lucrece." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Goldman examines each play according to the pace and flow of its dramatic energy, as it might be felt by either the actor or director or by an audience coming to the plays for the first time. Although the basic themes Goldman is led to are not always new, his sensitive, thoughtful approach casts a fresh and often perceptive light on them; and this tends to expand, and enrich the meaning of the plays. . . . For theater collections, college and public libraries." D. E. Litt

Library J 97:3160 O 1 '72 160w

"Mr. Goldman writes sensitively of the 'meaning' of some eight Shakespearean plays—the unique significance of our experience' with them. . . . His comments on Hamlet as actor are telling, although he might have noted the influence of Richard II and even of Brutus on the enigmatic Dane; perhaps his reading of Lear is too much aimed at the idea of unrelieved nothingness. But throughout there are insights, almost asides at times, that reveal his considered responses to these great works."

Va Q R 48:cxxxiii autumn '72 140w

GOLDSBY, RICHARD A. Race and races. 132p il maps $5.95; pa $2.95 Macmillan (N Y)

572 Race
 LC 77-133082

This "book describes the cellular basis of inheritance and the diverse types of men around the world." (Sci Am)

"Goldsby avoids the controversy surrounding the concept of race simply by sidestepping the theoretical and practical difficulties that have plagued anthropologists. To him, races exist and no defense or apology is needed; to be sure, the idea has been misused and he is quick to point this out. On the touchy subject of race and intelligence he does not gloss over the high heritability of the IQ; neither does he fail to emphasize the role of the environment in the expression of individual potential. . . . The major contribution of this book lies in its simple, direct, and uncluttered presentation, clearly and economically written, and suited to a beginning audience, perhaps at the secondary school level." F. E. Johnston

Am Anthropol 74:1528 D '72 600w

"[This] is a simple review of aspects of human biology related to race. Too often it is oversimplified, which must leave the innocent reader with the feeling of an open and shut case, as if most of the answers are in. It would seem that there are not too many interesting problems left to tackle. . . . The style is easy, and the text flows and reads well. Although the author has tried to avoid technical jargon, this is not always possible; more explanatory footnotes seem to be required even for the well-informed lay reader. . . . No new data appear in this book; it is a well-written reshuffle of previously published views and evidence." Ronald Singer

Natur Hist 80:88 Ag '71 850w

"[The author] has written a crisp, closely argued book, based squarely on the biological evidence and cast in language both accurate and accessible. He says what he means, and what he means gets to the roots. Where we do not know, he tells us, so that we can form an opinion (or withhold one). . . . [The book includes] a short summary of what we know of human biological evolution, and an account of the present dominance of cultural evolution over the slower biological processes that in the deep, less mobile past made far-flung mankind adaptively polytypic. . . . This is an outstanding book for readers of high school age and beyond. There is still more to be said, but here is an honest, solid start." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 225:109 D '71 450w [YA]

GOLDSCHMIDT, WALTER, ed. The social anthropology of Latin America. See The social anthropology of Latin America

GOLDSTEIN, RHODA L., ed. Black life and culture in the United States. 400p il $6.95 Crowell

301.45 Negroes
 ISBN 0-690-14598-5 LC 74-146281

A collection of "essays written by a group of predominantly black authors (African, Caribbean, and Afro-American). The volume covers basically four historical periods: (1) precolonial West Africa. (2) slavery, (3) reconstruction, and (4) various themes on contemporary black American life. Its multidisciplinary focus covers history, sociology, black art and drama, psychology, politics, education, and community organization." (Am J Soc) Bibliography. Index.

"It is refreshing to read a work on blacks which does not focus on the so-called pathology, deviance, matriarchy, and male-castration themes. According to the editor, 'sociologists, like historians, are learning that much of their past analyses were facile, over-simplified, and at times biased when they dealt with black Americans.' In a very interesting essay, Julius M. Waiguchi, a Kenyan, argues that the survival of African cultural traits in America is a function of the genetic process and the transmitted cultural traits. Ivan Vansertima, a Guyanese, . . . refutes some of the common myths about the so-called bankruptcy of black language. . . . [There are] stimulating articles on survival techniques, black drama, slavery, the black middle class, and black art." J. A. Ladner

Am J Soc 78:452 S '72 1000w

"[This book], which covers an unusually broad spectrum of subject matter (topics as diverse as linguistics and music), is generally well written, and is perhaps useful for the library not already overwhelmed with similar texts. Aptheker, the . . . American Marxist historian, writes perceptively on the concept of self-pride as expressed in black literature, and W. M. Phillips Jr. describes 'survival techniques.' . . . Despite the relatively accessible language employed, the occasional originality of thought, and the competence of the editor, this is still primarily a textbook of readings having only marginal usefulness in libraries not aiming at comprehensiveness in their black studies collections." E. K. Welsch

Library J 96:2529 Ag '71 150w

GOLDSTON, ROBERT. The fall of the Winter Palace; November 1917, old Russia's tsardom is swept away by Bolshevik revolution. (A World focus bk) 66p il lib bdg $3.95 Watts, F.

947.08 Russia—History—Revolution, 1917-1921—Juvenile literature
 ISBN 531-02152-1 LC 70-152740

"Although the title refers only to the Bolshevik Revolution of November 1917, the revolution of 1905 and the rise of the revolutionary parties are [also] covered." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index. "Grade six and up." (Best Sell)

"A simple, interesting and profusely illustrated presentation of the involved history of the rise of the Bolsheviks which led to the terror in 1917." S. M. C.

Best Sell 31:470 Ja 15 '72 30w

"This is a dull partisan account. . . . The activities of the Soviet are discussed in some detail but the Duma, or parliament, is inaccurately described as 'shaking in their boots' during February and March of 1917 when in fact they had seized power at that time. In addition, the oversimplification of complex issues could be misleading. . . . Grades four to five." Susan Stanton

Library J 97:281 Ja 15 '72 150w

GOLDSTON, ROBERT. The long march, 1934-1935; a Red Army survives to bring communism to China. (A World focus bk) 66p il lib bdg $3.95 Watts, F.

951.04 China—History—Republic, 1912-1949—Juvenile literature. Communism—China—Juvenile literature
 ISBN 531-02153-X LC 74-157748

This is the "story of the retreat of the Communist Chinese forces . . . in which some 90,000 troops trekked . . . 75,000 miles from Kiangsi Province to sanctuary in Shensi Province . . . [and] survived to bring . . . the Communist way of life to modern China." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Chronology. Index. "Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"Even knowing how the story ends, readers and history students will be fascinated as . . . Goldston tells of the Communist rise to power in China. . . . Good, lucid chronology of Chinese history." Mrs. J. G. Gray

Best Sell 31:434 D 15 '71 120w

"[This account] does not describe the March itself so much as emphasize its importance as the turning point for the Chinese Communists, for the March taught them what they needed to know about themselves, about China, and about China's peasants in order to win their struggle. Essentially a background book on 20th-Century Chinese politics, this [book's] amply illustrated, spacious format and brief presentation (without distortion of the facts) will appeal to both younger and more reluctant readers." Susan Price

Library J 97:282 Ja 15 '72 100w

GOLDSTON, ROBERT. The Vietnamese revolution. 194p il $5.95 Bobbs

959.704 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- —Juvenile literature. Vietnam—History—Juvenile literature
LC 77-172347

An historical analysis of the Vietnamese conflict. "Bibliography. Index. Grade eight and up." (Library J)

"The Vietnamese conflict is a civil war waged by patriots attempting to drive out the lingering traces of colonialism. . . . This is the basic message of Robert Goldston in the latest of his series of books about significant world events. Entwined in an overly concise history of Vietnam are the author's antiwar views which tend to be obvious and at times clumsy. . . . The textbook-like presentation, frequent illustrations and less than two hundred pages of length may be attractive to junior high school teachers for inclusion on a selected bibliography. Unless you just plain don't have any background on the Vietnam War, however, your time, no matter how brief, would not be well spent on this one." D. W. Given

Best Sell 32:184 J1 15 '72 330w

"The slow and immoral—if not illegal—entry of the United States into Indochina and the resulting atrocities are particularly well documented through 1968, even without mention of My Lai and the Pentagon Papers. In the biographical chapter on Ho Chi Minh, Goldston states that he 'was never to meet Lenin' but Ho did in fact meet Lenin in Moscow in 1922. Aside from this minor inaccuracy, however, the text is well-illustrated and indexed and supplemented by a good map, bibliography and selected reading list." Ken Haycock

Library J 97:2960 S 15 '72 200w

GOLDSWORTHY, DAVID. Colonial issues in British politics, 1945-1961; from 'colonial development' to 'wind of change.' 425p $14.50 Oxford

942.085 Great Britain—Colonies. Great Britain—Politics and government—1945-
ISBN 0-19-822332-3 LC 77-569862

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by J. F. Naylor

Am Hist R 77:523 Ap '72 550w

Reviewed by Trevor Lloyd

Am Pol Sci R 65:1208 D '71 1050w

Reviewed by R. W. Lyman

Pol Sci Q 87:307 Je '72 650w

GOLDWERT, MARVIN. Democracy, militarism, and nationalism in Argentina, 1930-1966; an interpretation; pub. for the Inst. of Latin Am. studies. (Tex. Univ. Inst. of Latin Am. studies. Latin Am. monograph, no 25) 253p $8 Univ. of Tex. press

320.982 Argentine Republic—Armed Forces. Argentine Republic—Politics and government
ISBN 0-292-71500-5 LC 76-37843

"Goldwert describes the various factions in the military who sought power from 1930-66. He sets forth . . . the Peron regime as teetering on the brink of disaster, to be rescued each time by Peron's descamisados, who still today cling to the myth that was Peronismo. Cliques, juntas, and military conservatism are exposed . . . as serving only the elite soldier mentality . . . which failed to see until too late the impossibility in Peron's attempt to create an industrial state." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This] is a good book . . . [but] what Goldwert lacks in this volume is élan, and that is what interpretive history needs; otherwise, one remains the timorous describer, rather than the creative interpreter."

Choice 9:1194 N '72 180w

"[This] is a quite readable book which adds much to the general literature on [Argentina.] This reviewer would like to recommend the book to specialists, but unfortunately there is little here that will not be familiar to them; and the use of sources is—by the standards of the professional historian—quite shaky. However, this is a very satisfactory acquisition for a college or large public library." Mark Falcoff

Library J 97:2838 S 15 '72 110w

GOLLIN, JAMES. Worldly goods; the wealth and power of the American Catholic church, the Vatican, and the men who control the money. 531p $8.95 Random house

282 Catholic Church in the U.S. Catholic Church—Finance
ISBN 0-394-46330-7 LC 72-159345

This "survey of the finances and organization of the Roman Catholic Church [explains] how—and how much—the Pope gets paid; how bishops can act as bankers; how the Church organization deals with the many and varied enterprises it supports and runs; . . . [and] the historical economic policies of the Vatican. . . . [It] discusses how important is the economy of the Catholic Church—from local parish to the Vatican—to America. It also describes what percentage of the total wealth of the Church is generated in the United States, and what is the future of the Church's extensive private and parochial school system in the United States." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This] is a mirror held to catch the Catholic Church's financial profile. In his reflected image the church administrator will gaze upon a familiar face, for there is no distortion in the picture. . . . The book offers palatable reading for a broad public: laymen or clerics, hard hats or financiers. The author stimulates our appetite with a few hot peppers about individual churchmen, but mostly with the gentler relish of his own wonder and fascination, bending reliable detail with broad consideration of fiscal management. The necessary statistics, even when derived from uneven sources, are believable and are brought into focus by Gollin's happy facility for comparison with generally known economic data." D. E. Meier

America 125:492 D 4 '71 1150w

Reviewed by E. B. Gallagher

Best Sell 32:185 J1 15 '72 330w

"You'll hear much about this remarkably fair-minded analysis of Catholicism's ways with mammon. Gollin has put together a better picture of the church's financial situation than any we have seen. At times he writes about the problems with critical detachment, at others with empathy."

Christian Century 88:1298 N 3 '71 80w

"This is a book of deep-digging research. . . . Here is [also] a clear discussion of the parochial school situation. . . . Particularly pertinent, for social and moral as well as economic reasons, is the thorough discussion of bingo as a source of churchly revenue. . . . All in all, a fascinating and factual book, one which set in much clearer light both the obvious strengths and the not-so-obvious weaknesses of the church of some 49 million Americans." J. G. Harrison

Christian Science Monitor pB5 N 26 '71 650w

Reviewed by M. E. Schiltz

Commonweal 96:170 Ap 21 '72 1300w

"Of all the hordes of journalists, Catholic and non-Catholic, who have attempted to interpret the Roman Church in the last decade, James Gollin is easily the most balanced, the most intelligent, the most responsible. . . . There are some gaps in [his] reporting—though, as he says, you can't put everything in one book. It does put to rest the myth that the Catholic Church owns companies that make birth control pills, but it does not address itself to the many rumors of scandals or monstrous ineptitudes. . . . There are also inaccuracies." Andrew Greeley

GOLLIN, JAMES—Continued

Critic 30:84 Ja '72 1150w

Reviewed by C. J. Schmidt
Library J 96:4020 D 1 '71 330w

GONCOURT, EDMOND LOUIS ANTOINE HUOT DE. Paris and the Arts, 1851-1896: from the Goncourt Journal; ed. and tr. by George J. Becker and Edith Philips; with an afterword on Japanese art and influence by Hedley H. Rhys. 374p il $12.50 Cornell Univ. press

709.44 The arts, French. Paris—Intellectual life
ISBN 0-8014-0655-2 LC 72-161309

This is a "selection from the 22-volume journal kept by the Goncourts. It concentrates . . . on cultural life in Paris and the doings of the artistically creative elite. . . . [Included are] anecdotes about the personalities, private lives, jealousies, and (from time to time) the erotic exploits of men like Hugo, Zola, Flaubert, Degas, de Maupassant, and a good many others besides." (Choice) Index. Biographical notes. List of writings of the Goncourts.

"Throughout the excerpts, the Goncourts are conspicuously short on compassion and long on ad hominem denigration. But what saves the Journal is its concern for historical event over the babble of newspaper and magazine propaganda that marked the French press of la Belle Epoque. . . . People dart in and out [of these selections] often with radically different comments and ratings; the scorecard becomes confused and contradictory. We learn that the landscape painter Theodore Rousseau holds first place in the Goncourt heart among painters; later, Manet seems to gain a little. Degas is always curious, painting laundresses and other odd types, but Monet is O.K., and Rodin improves as things go on. None of the judgments are conclusive, though the gossip detail about life styles is fascinating, so the Journal drags on in tag ends of anecdotes and chatter." Edward Foote

Book World p10 O 17 '71 950w

"[This book] lacks the drama and the political and social observation of another the selections from the larger journal, Edmond de Goncourt's Paris under siege, 1870-1871, from the Goncourt Journal, edited by George J. Becker [BRD 1970], but it is an entertaining and informative chronicle nonetheless. . . . The Goncourts—whose prose is here presented in lucid translation—are concerned with but a tiny fraction of French life during this eventful half-century, but there is nobody who has left a better record of it."

Choice 9:356 My '72 120w

GOODE, WILLIAM J., jt. ed. The other half. See Epstein, C.F.

GOODLAD, J. S. R. A sociology of popular drama. 230p $12 Rowman & Littlefield

809.2 Drama—History and criticism. Television plays. Great Britain—Civilization
ISBN 0-87471-083-9 LC 72-180857

"This work analyzes drama of mass popularity presented on British television and in the West End theater of London from 1955 to 1965." (Library J)

"[This] book is a sober attempt to establish facts and techniques in the study of a decade of television and theatre plays. . . . It is, I think, a good and original book; not least of its merits is that it permits, aids, and encourages the conduct of further research. In this important sense it is a contribution to knowledge as a social process." D. G. MacRae
Encounter 38:75 Mr '72 320w

"Goodlad believes 'popular' drama (distinguished from 'serious' drama causing critical review) to be a form of mass communication concerned with the survival of the society. These plays may serve both as indicators of morality and as disseminators and determinants of morality. This 'drama of reassurance' is, in Goodlad's opinion, a secular substitute for the moral guidance once supplied by the church. While the specifics of this study concern British drama, its review of the literature and its general conclusions will be of interest to American readers." Lucy Caswell

Library J 97:2426 J1 '72 100w

"Unfortunately during the period of study there was a progressive diminution in the number of single plays in favour of serials and series. Common observation suggests that the latter type of programme is far more popular than the self-contained play, not simply cheaper to produce, so that the method of selection throws some doubt on the validity of the study. More doubts are raised by Dr Goodlad's use of content analysis as his principal tool of investigation. Listing the themes of popular plays brings him dangerously close to banality. Is there any form of drama which would not fit into these categories? Most of Shakespeare's plays would do so quite comfortably. The plot of Hamlet in three sentences is crudest melodrama. Content analysis as used here cannot discriminate between plays of very different artistic merit."

TLS p911 Ag 4 '72 450w

GOODMAN, ANTHONY. The loyal conspiracy; the Lords Appellant under Richard II. 212p $7.95 Univ. of Miami press

942.03 Great Britain—History—Plantagenets, 1154-1399. Richard II, King of England
ISBN 0-87024-215-6 LC 77-170141

In this "study of the opposition to Richard II (1377-99), Goodman . . . discovers that economic necessity as well as political differences drove the Lords Appellant (Thomas of Woodstock, Henry of Bolingbroke, Richard Arundel, Thomas Beauchamp, and Thomas Mowbray) to launch a successful Appeal of Treason in 1387 against Richard's friends." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The industry with which . . . Goodman has culled the sources of the reign for his book on the Appellants is not matched by either his analytical skill or the interest of his conclusions. . . . The book's title begs questions that are hardly raised and certainly not answered. How, for example, can it be reconciled with evidence that Richard was deposed for a few days? The state of the sources may make a more satisfying treatment difficult. But, even so, this effort is not worth a book." J. M. W. Bean

Am Hist R 77:1431 D '72 240w

"[This] valuable scholarly [study] . . . [is too] specialized and detailed for the undergraduate. . . . No portraits, maps, or genealogy."

Choice 9:423 My '72 120w

"Because past interpretations of the Lords Appellant are evaluated along with a careful analysis of the personalities and followers of each, more than a casual acquaintance with Richard II's reign is expected of the reader. Medievalists will be interested in the Appellant's relationships with their retainers and supporters among the gentry. But, even here little new is told us concerning Derby's (later Henry IV) role in the perplexing events of 1387-1389. Young Henry's actions are still an enigma." K. G. Madson

Library J 97:1430 Ap 15 '72 160w

"Goodman's greatest success has probably been to put some flesh and blood on to the hitherto shadowy character of Thomas of Woodstock. . . . [He] does not provide as full a treatment of Bolingbroke and Mowbray probably because, as younger men, there is not the same quantity of evidence for their activities; but he has a sensitive account of Warwick, the oldest of the Appellants."

TLS p636 Je 2 '72 750w

GOODMAN, FELICITAS D. Speaking in tongues; a cross-cultural study of glossolalia. 175p $7.50 Univ. of Chicago press

301.2 Glossolalia
ISBN 0-226-30324-1 LC 70-182871

In this "cross-cultural, cross-linguistic study, Goodman, assistant professor of anthropology at Denison University, reports her anthropological research of glossolalia . . . [and establishes] similarities in glossolalic performances among speakers of languages belonging to the Indo-European language family (English, Portuguese). . . . [Her] field work in Mexico among Spanish-speaking glossolalists as well as with a religious group whose native language was Yucatecan Maya, a non-European language . . . [enabled her] to test her hypothesis that common features in glossolalic behavior within groups of vastly different cultural and language backgrounds can be ascribed to an altered state of consciousness." (Library J)

"[This study] is neither reportorial, apologetic, or programmatic. . . . The thousands who gather at Pentecostal conferences . . . are not likely to make Dr. Goodman their patroness. Her findings imply potentially devastating questions for them and their claims. . . . She has come to the conclusion that there is nothing exclusive about Christian or any other kinds of glossolalia." Martin Marty

Critic 30:76 JI/Ag '72 280w

"It is exciting to follow an ethnologist in her interesting field work. . . . [The author's] book, however, is quite demanding in terms of specific analyses such as dissociation; therefore it would be most suitable for academic libraries where it can offer a variety of uses to researchers, teachers, and students of anthropology. Sociologists, linguists, and psychologists, as well as readers interested in religious behavior, might also find the material worthwhile." Miluse Soudek

Library J 97:2617 Ag '72 200w

GOODMAN, GEORGE J. W. See Smith, Adam

GOODMAN, JONATHAN. Posts-mortem; the correspondence of murder. 164p il $5.95 St Martins

364.1 Murder. Letters
LC 78-173564

This is a "compilation of letters relating to famous murder cases." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Goodman, perpetrator of the recent 'rhyme' collection Bloody Versicles [BRD 1971], adds to his reputation as a true crime expert and incorrigible punster in this [book]. . . . The letters are sometimes touching, often appalling, occasionally gruesomely funny (e.g., in the Clark-Fullam case in India, the gushily romantic letters recounting poor Fullam's slow death from arsenic administered by his wife). Many of the cases treated are familiar ones: Sacco-Vanzetti, Red Barn, Starr Faithful, Bywaters-Thompson." J. L. Breen

Library J 97:1732 My 1 '72 80w

Reviewed by Arthur Marshall
New Statesman 82:900 D 24 '71 260w

GOODMAN, MARY ELLEN. The culture of childhood; child's-eye views of society and culture. (Anthropology and educ. ser) 167p $6.25; pa $3.25 Teachers college press

155.4 Child study
LC 75-106992

"This book presents selections from . . . [the author's studies] on children's views and attitudes . . . within particular cultures. . . . The book brings together material . . . [from] studies of children from the Philippines, Java, Puerto Rico, New Zealand, Japan, Mexico, China, and Egypt." (Am Anthropol)

"The most important contributions in the book . . . rely heavily on [the author's] own researches in Japan, set within quotations from other studies and commentators on children. Her method was principally the pre-structured interview adapted to young children, making extensive use of pictures. Large groups of children were systematically interviewed, and the results analyzed under such headings as 'self and identity' and 'race and ethnic identity.' . . . This book in no sense can be said to draw on the vast amount of research in the field, but rather to present those attitudes of children which illustrated the points which Goodman's own work made most cogently." Margaret Mead

Am Anthropol 74:167 F/Ag '72 450w

"Although this book is short, it is highly stimulating and will doubtless inspire the reader to consult some of the studies referred to in the notes. Recommended for collections serving teachers, students of education, and parents." R. H. Lipsett

Library J 95:3773 N 1 '70 130w

GOODMAN, NELSON. Problems and projects. 463p $15 Bobbs

191 Philosophy
LC 73-165221

This work "deals with subjects ranging from the nature of philosophy and the role of logic and definition in science and life to . . . problems in the philosophy of knowledge, art, and science." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Name Index.

"Goodman's style is crisp and witty. Alas, his celebrated concision is too often the brevity of indecent impatience, and his charms rely too much on a cuteness that works against him by being overworked. . . . [He] is not easy reading because the issues are highly abstract and inherently difficult, and the discussion sophisticated and rigorous. . . . There are few issues he writes about that he does not significantly contribute to, and his writings span not simply the philosophy of science, but also philosophy of language, and the broader issues of metaphysics, epistemology, and aesthetics." Roger Wertheimer

Commentary 54:96 JI '72 1950w

"[This book] contains most of Goodman's previously published philosophical papers, excerpts from his earlier books, and six previously unpublished pieces. . . . The papers vary in difficulty, at least half presupposing philosophical training. Goodman is always clear, but rarely easy. Of the new papers, totaling about 27 pages, the major one, of about 13 pages, proposes a new way to measure qualitative similarity. The other new papers, all occasional pieces, are about art, Descartes, and C. I. Lewis. Essential for philosophy collections." Robert Hoffman

Library J 97:2100 Je 1 '72 90w

GOODMAN, PAUL. Homespun of oatmeal gray; poems. 120p $5 Random house; pa $1.65 Vintage

811
LC 70-102299

This collection of poetry "is divided into five sections. The first, Adam, contains mainly political and occasional verse. . . . The second section is called Little Prayers and consists of small complaints and reconciliations between Goodman and his God. . . . Section Four is a long poem about Goodman's experiences at the Oceanic Institute at Makapuna Point, Oahu. . . . The final section, North Percy, is a thirty section series of poems showing Goodman writing himself back to life from his grief [over the death of his son]." (Poetry)

"Especially since he uses it to express 'powerful feelings,' Goodman's poetry has value as autobiography even when it fails as literature. Here Goodman conveys his dismay over the tactics being used by campus dissidents. . . . He also explores both his religious and his sexual impulses. This third collection of poetry adds little, if anything, to the social criticism upon which Goodman's reputation is so solidly based. But, given Goodman's popularity, many libraries will choose to add the volume, if only to satisfy a gossipy kind of interest some of their readers might have." P. A. Dollard

Library J 95:3914 N 15 '70 100w

"It is extremely difficult to evaluate Goodman's Homespun of Oatmeal Gray, for the poet's work in this collection is so suffused by Goodman's deep grief in the aftermath of his son's tragic death. . . . The best individual poem in the book, Richard Savage Hokku, is in the third section—a plain, tense rendition of a waking, then screaming experience. . . . [The] poem about Goodman's experiences at the Oceanic Institute at Makapuna Point [is] interesting mainly if you're interested in Goodman's interest in Goodman. . . . [In the final section] one is taken by the strength and struggle of the man. The weakness in this book is a weakness of craft: many lines are flat, many poems simply fall into endings that shrug. . . . Goodman talks too much, and is too impressed with his own standard insights in these poems to bring the reader fully into his world. We feel for him but . . . Goodman has not made us feel through him." Dick Allen

Poetry 120:235 JI '72 400w

GOODMAN, PAUL. Speaking and language: defence of poetry. 242p $6.95 Random house 410 Speech. Language and languages. Poetry
ISBN 0-394-47089-3 LC 70-163470

The author's "thesis is that the whole modern phase of linguistics . . . has overstressed the abstract and systematic nature of language to the detriment of the . . . act of speaking . . . [Nearly half his case] deals not directly with linguistics but with poetry, the literary process, literary style, and a defense of poetry." (Sat R)

GOODMAN, PAUL—Continued

Choice 9:640 J1/Ag '72 180w

"[The author] has amassed a tremendous amount of data, but it is systematically arranged and his conclusions are confused. I can only recommend this book to those who collect Goodman for some reason." E. R. Maxwell

Library J 96:4012 D 1 '71 150w

Reviewed by Robert Merideth
Nation 214:437 Ap 3 '72 1450w

"Goodman has discovered that language is not, cannot be, will not let itself be, either the abstract meaningless notational system of the linguists or the precise inhuman computerized set of counters of the communications engineers. Language, Goodman discovers, is vital, changing, protean and, most important, it does mean. This is the good Goodman. The better Goodman. Maybe the best. . . . The important thing about Speaking and Language is that in it the good Goodman dominates. And here the riches embarrass, especially in the second half of the book." G. B. Tennyson

Nat R 24:290 Mr 17 '72 900w

"Any reader of Paul Goodman's earlier books will know in advance that his latest is just learned and personal enough to be most interesting for neither its learning nor its quirkiness. Of course it often parades both these qualities with Goodman's characteristic off-hand flashiness. . . . Yet, however much he quarrels with them, Goodman is seriously interested in the linguists, the logicians, the advocates of Basic English. There are few major aspects of linguistic theory that he has not thought about, so his reader has the assurance at least of a reasonably fair assessment of central issues. . . . There's no overlooking how [he] often unsettles one also by the annoying gregariousness of his tone. Or by the polemical crudeness of his summaries of positions different from his." E. W. Said

N Y Times Bk R p21 F 20 '72 2300w

"I can recommend [this] book to persons interested in literature generally and to linguists as well in full confidence that, as a polemic, it will be well worth their while to read. Mr. Goodman may mislead the novice in the realm of linguistics; more important, however, by whetting their interest in the mysteries of language, he may stimulate them to find out more regarding this very intimate part of themselves. . . . The content of the book's various chapters is richly idiosyncratic. . . . [but it] ends up by being a unified work. The key to its unity is Goodman's conviction that linguistic science has contributed to the present-day mistrust of language as a means of communication (which he defines in his own terms) and to the prevalent attitude that 'the literary use of language is simply outmoded in modern times.'" R. L. Chapman

Sat R 55:44 Ja 15 '72 1000w

GOODMAN, ROBERT. After the planners. 231p il $6.95 Simon & Schuster

711 City planning—U.S. Urban renewal—U.S.

ISBN 671-20981-7 LC 74-154100

The author, an "architect, planner, teacher, and advocate of change has written an indictment of his profession and its alliance with the Establishment. He charges that people are treated as objects, not as human beings, their wants ignored in favor of politics, profit and social control; that planning has become a sophisticated weapon to maintain the existing controls under a mask of rationality, efficiency and science. He points . . . to the record of urban renewal and public housing in contrast with appropriations for highways." (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography. Index.

"Never shrill or melodramatic, this writer quietly but effectively focuses attention on the way current urban planning perpetuates the oppression of ghetto dwellers and steps up their exploitation. . . . This eminently practical architect-author calls our urban sprawls 'factory camps' perpetuated by an alliance of politicians (both liberal and conservative) with reformers and businessmen. Amply documenting his findings, he makes such a devastating case because he is highly qualified. . . . Thought-provoking are the chapter on 'The Architecture of Repression,' his theories of guerilla architecture and squatter techniques. . . . Whether one agrees completely, partially, or not at all is irrelevant; the book is indispensable for insights afforded not only to city-dwellers but any thoughtful citizen. A must for any up-to-date library." W. H. Archer

Best Sell 31:484 F 1 '72 340w

"Goodman fervently believes that if the cities are to be saved and the environment reshaped to serve the people our entire economic system must be scrapped. His recommendations are nothing less than revolutionary; Consciousness III must conquer capitalism. The radical utopia Goodman proposes is a system he calls community socialism. . . . Given human nature, history, and our high level of industrialization and interdependence, Goodman's proposal is pure romantic fantasy. Placing it in perspective, it is also just a new brand of old-style frontierism, taken from the vein of the anti-city movement that runs through our history. Goodman's sweeping assumptions about human behavior and economics are unfortunate, for they detract from a stinging critique of the 'urban-industrial complex.'" Samuel Kaplan

Book World p13 Mr 19 '72 700w

Choice 9:402 My '72 150w

Reviewed by Jill Becker
Library J 97:999 Mr 15 '72 260w

Reviewed by R. W. Kennedy
New Repub 166:26 Mr 18 '72 1650w

Reviewed by Malcolm MacEwen
New Statesman 84:361 S 15 '72 1150w

"This provocative book by a young M.I.T. professor of architecture describes the reasons for his metamorphosis . . . to radical proponent of an activist 'architecture of liberation.' . . . The strength of [the book] is its personal, existential challenge; which is to say it is weakest in analysis (as opposed to critique), and in strategy (as opposed to tactics). . . . Radicals will simply have to offer something more than Goodman's polemical passages against the corporations and the evils of the profit motive. . . . [The book] will be of most use in the college teaching of young architects and planners. Except for 'Communitas,' by Paul and Percival Goodman [BRD 1947] (who are not related to the author), there is nothing to compare with it for power of critique, force of style, scope of attack. For this audience, moreover, the devastating chapters on the planning profession are decisive." Gar Alperovitz

N Y Times Bk R p4 F 6 '72 1300w

GOODRICH, LLOYD. Edward Hopper. 306p il $50 Abrams

759.13 Hopper, Edward
ISBN 0-8019-0187-0 LC 78-101620

The American artist who died in 1967 is the subject of this 34x41 cm book. Reproductions of Hopper's paintings are supported by notes on his life and work. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Vivien Raynor
Book World p6 D 12 '71 700w

"This book is a kind of Parsifal among art-books—enormous and good. . . . The color reproduction is truly superb. Curiously and sadly, the . . . black-and-white plates generally suffer by being printed too darkly. The text . . . provides a sensitive and intelligent view of Hopper, the man and artist, which will be of great value to future researchers as Hopper was a man of few words and fewer letters. . . . A highly recommended major book on a major artist."

Choice 8:1578 F '72 150w

Reviewed by John Hollander
Commentary 53:94 Ja '72 2650w

Reviewed by W. J. Dane
Library J 97:62 Ja 1 '72 200w

Reviewed by Lawrence Alloway
Nation 213:665 D 20 '71 80w

"This book succeeds in giving a very good idea of Hopper's art through the sheer number and scale of the reproductions, though the color plates are often far from the fidelity that one might hope for. The text is useful, as far as it goes: factual and warmly partisan; but many questions are left unanswered and paradoxes that arise from Hopper's curious situation in modern art are largely ignored. . . . A final qualification, but an important one. Hopper painted approximately twenty-five to thirty haunting pictures which will take their sure place in American art. . . . The value of this book is in assembling a large number of paintings and drawings for reference through reproduction. . . . But Hopper also made a large number of unexceptional paintings and many repetitive potboilers, especially in watercolor. The book makes no attempt to sort any of this out." Bryan Robertson

N Y Rev of Books 17:38 D 16 '71 3500w

"[Hopper] was a favorite of the Whitney Museum of American Art from its inception, and the museum's former director, Lloyd Goodrich, has long been the artist's staunchest official supporter. . . . Over the years he has written a great deal about the artist. Much of what he has written, unfortunately, has not been very illuminating, and his latest, presumably final opus on Hopper's art reads as if it were written for a class of backward schoolchildren known to be deficient in pictorial experience. . . . This volume is easily the most monstrously cumbersome and inconvenient piece of book production I know. . . . One's irritation over the physical inconveniences of the book would be tolerable if the plates were of a quality that justified having to cope with it. But the plates, alas, are poor." Hilton Kramer

N Y Times Bk R p72 N 21 '71 700w

New Yorker 48:126 Mr 11 '72 230w

"[This is] a decent production, more or less, though it presents problems. Books tend to come taller than wide, but Hopper painted horizontal pictures. The book, then, is absurdly shaped and, even so, one must unfold a great many of the pictures I suppose we should not care. Art books are not the thing itself; they are meant for reference and such delight as can be snatched along the way. Some of the black-and-white reproductions seem murky to me: 'Railroad Sunset,' for example, one of Hopper's best works, which should have been shown in color. Goodrich, who was one of the first to appreciate Hopper, might have written a more exciting text, but it is serviceable. Everything about the book is serviceable, and I am grateful. The essence of the man is here; one can ask no more." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 78:104 D 13 '71 200w

GOODWIN, GRENVILLE. Western Apache raiding and warfare; from the notes of Grenville Goodwin; ed. by Keith H. Basso; with the assistance of E. W. Jarnigan and W. B. Kessell. 330p il maps $10; pa $5.95 Univ. of Ariz. press

970.3 Apache Indians. Indians of North America—Wars
ISBN 0-8165-0297-8 LC 73-142255

This book contains "verbatim accounts, covering a 30-year period from the early 1850's, by six [Apache] men and women who talk about the fighting with the Navajos, Chiricahua Apaches, Mexicans, and the U.S. Army. . . . The second part of the book consists of comments by . . . [the author's] informants on various aspects of material culture that pertain to warfare." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Goodwin, a leading authority on the Apaches until his sudden death in 1940, had assembled [these] personal narratives. . . . Keith Basso, himself an authority on the Western Apache, edited Goodwin's notes to form the body of this book. Basso should be commended, not only on the abundance of photographs but on the excellence of the maps which accompany each personal narrative. . . . [Included also is an] orthographic key to pronunciation of Apache. . . . Should be in every college library. There seem to be few recent books on the Western Apache."

Choice 9:288 Ap '72 160w

"[This] is an Apache interpretation of the important period of transition from free to reservation life. Also there is a new look at Apache culture and the part raiding and warfare had in forming the social structure. A major contribution to American Indian history." Mary Gormly

Library J 97:1321 Ap 1 '72 190w

GOODWIN, LEONARD. Do the poor want to work? a social-psychological study of work orientations. 178p il $6.50 Brookings

301.5 Work. Poor—U.S.
ISBN 0-8157-3205-8 LC 72-146

"Interpreting data from a survey of more than 4,000 persons, from poor to non-poor, Goodwin . . . concludes that 'poor people—males and females, blacks and whites, youths and adults—identify their self-esteem with work as strongly as do the non-poor.' This finding stands in sharp contradiction to the notion of a 'culture of poverty.' . . . In that culture, we have been told, the poor live only for the present, are fatalistic about the future, and place little value on work. But Goodwin holds that these generalizations are wrong." (N Y Times Bk R) Index.

Choice 9:1322 D '72 180w

"[This is] an important, if slow-reading, study. . . . The complex methodology and analysis is all there, including cautionary discussion of the value of interviewing as a way to the truth about people's feelings, but if you want to get to the heart of [Goodwin's] findings, skip to the summaries at the end of each chapter. . . . He offers several meaningful policy suggestions. . . . These are not necessarily new ideas, but the structural framework on which they are based—proof that the poor do, indeed, want to work—is unique and worthy of consideration."

New Repub 166:27 Jl 15 '72 900w

"[This book] is the latest and the most systematic study of our welfare mythology. . . . Goodwin draws a portrait of the welfare recipient as a person who desperately wants to work at the start, but who is, over time, so often rebuffed by his lack of education or inexperience or both that he gradually loses all confidence in his own ability. . . . Rebuffed time and again, they eventually stop trying. This vicious and painful cycle was described more than six years ago by E. Liebow in 'Tally's Corner' (IBRD 1967). . . . Accepting Goodwin's arguments that the ways in which the poor differ from the non-poor lay not in the goals or the ethic they define, but in their different experiences of success and failure in the world, the primary objective of Government policy should be that of enabling more people to experience success." Doris Kearns

N Y Times Bk R p4 S 17 '72 700w

GOODY, JACK. Technology, tradition, and the state in Africa (pub) for the Int. African institute. 88p il pl maps $6.50 Oxford

309.16 Africa—Economic conditions. Africa—Politics. Technology and civilization
SBN 19-724184-0 LC 79-571446

The author starts "with an analysis of the elements of medieval European 'feudalism' and their application to African societies. He sees the root differences between European and African institutions as technological. Here he emphasizes the implications of the absence of much 'intermediate technology' (such as the wheel and the plow) in Africa for the development of social and political institutions. [He] concludes that it has been the failure of development planners in Africa to recognize and acknowledge the true level of traditional agrarian technology which has retarded potential development." (Library J)

"Two previously published essays and three new chapters have been combined to form a slender volume. . . . The author's insights are interesting and raise important questions. However, some reservations must be expressed concerning the treatment of Africa as a unity. In place of a systematic examination of case materials we are offered an impressionable survey. Thus, differences between indigenous systems are glossed over in favor of a pan-African approach. . . . Despite the reservations noted . . . many of the relationships suggested by the author seem plausible and this reviewer finds no substantial disagreement with most of his conclusions. While more precise data is needed, this is nonetheless a valuable book which offers interesting insights into traditional African systems." Betty Potash

Am Anthropol 74:1399 D '72 700w

"The distinctiveness of Goody's approach is that he sees technology in Africa's history not only in terms of its effect on the means of production but also in terms of its implications for the means of destruction. Even the emergence of the metal spear was a significant variable in the process of consolidating monarchical systems of government in Africa. . . . [Goody is] prone to moralize; [to address his] preaching to scholars generally and to those who live in Africa. . . . [For instance,] Goody advises contemporary scholars not to be ashamed of learning 'from the studies of medieval historians.' But having said all that, we are still left with a persistent admiration for the work. . . . [Goody has] done as [a] pioneer in the new subfield of 'the politics of technological change.'" A. A. Mazrui

Am Pol Sci R 66:633 Je '72 460w

GOODY, JACK—Continued

"This short but stimulating book should have a significant impact on the historical and anthropological study of precolonial African states. Goody develops a terse thesis. . . . A particularly interesting part of the book is his attempt to correlate political typology with the technology of warfare and destruction. Goody pays particular attention to the roles of iron weapons, horses, and guns in West Africa—the area in which he has his greatest first-hand knowledge. This discussion should lead to much fresh thinking about the origins of states, always a topic of much debate in African history. . . . This is the type of book which I like to highly recommend for its intrinsic merits; however, I cannot help believing that the price is about double what it should be." R. K. Rasmussen

Library J 96:2311 J1 '71 210w

GORAN, MORRIS. The future of science. 156p $8.50 Spartan bks.

500 Science
ISBN 0-87671-704-0 LC 71-133106

This book "seeks to look into the future for science and scientists, using past records as a basis for prognosis" . . . and devotes its consideration to an analysis of problems facing science in general in the current decade." (Choice)

"[The author] assumes that the reader has a fundamentally clear conception of what science is and has been . . . [and] uses historical examples—sometimes with a lack of discrimination as to pertinent historical interpretation—to illustrate the points he makes. . . . The selection of problems is appropriate and important for thoughtful discussion in classes in general education, beginning science courses, and in courses that might consider the social effect and responsibility of science. Recommended for libraries that have sections devoted to books written for these purposes." Choice 8:1599 F '72 160w

"Readers should not be misled by the title, because Goran's book has a great deal to do with the history of science. In fact, [it] is an engagingly organized potpourri of historical anecdotes about scientists themselves—some living, but most not. . . . The pleasant low-keyed style will make the book appealing to a varied audience, down through the high school level." R. E. Bilstein

Library J 96:3336 O 15 '71 90w [YA]

GORBANEVSKAYA, NATALIA. Red Square at noon; introd. by Harrison E. Salisbury; tr. by Alexander Lieven. 288p $7.95 Holt

345.47 Political prisoners. Trials. Moscow—Demonstrations
ISBN 0-03-085990-5 LC 79-138888

This book deals with "the case of the eight young intellectuals who sat down in Red Square to protest the occupation of Czechoslovakia. Gorbanevskaya, one of the eight, is a poet who was released because she had small children. She has collected various eyewitness accounts of the demonstration, the interrogations and searches that followed, and the transcript of the trial, which resulted in harsh sentences and, for Viktor Feinberg, incarceration in a prison mental hospital. The descriptions of the sit-down stress the role of the plainclothes secret police." (N Y Rev of Books)

Reviewed by D. W. Given
Best Sell 32:230 Ag 15 '72 550w

Reviewed by Anthony Arblaster
New Statesman 83:280 Mr 3 '72 340w

"In a rather high-flown introduction, Harrison Salisbury underlines the anti-intellectualism, anti-Semitism, and conformism of the Russian citizenry, used effectively against dissenters by the regime, as when the lumpen outside the court were bribed with drink to harass those sympathizing with the defendants. . . . [This] book is an important addition to the growing literature on Russia's 'human rights' insurgents and their suppression." N Y Rev of Books 18:35 Je 15 '72 350w

N Y Times Bk R p21 J1 30 '72 100w

"[This book] in an excellent translation . . . [is] slightly abridged from the Russian original, which went by the simple title Noon. . . . Anyone who might incline to think that Soviet justice gets a bad press in the West would be well advised to read this book. . . . [It] is a positive hymn to the courage of men and women like Litvinov and Larissa Daniel and Gorbanevskaya herself. They came to the Execution Place knowing full well what the consequences would be." TLS p589 My 26 '72 800w

GORDENKER, LEON, ed. The United Nations in international politics. 241p $7.50 Princeton univ. press

341.13 United Nations. International relations
ISBN 0-691-05615-3 LC 71-132239

"Six scholars, associated with Princeton's Center of International Studies, take the occasion of the United Nations' 25th anniversary to reexamine its work and its role, and to point out its possible future path. The subjects covered by the essays are the UN's relationship to the larger international system, the differences and similarities between the League of Nations and the UN in handling conflict, the response of member governments to the recommendations of the General Assembly, the reaction of member states to intrastate disorders, and the evaluative perceptions of the UN." (Library J) Index.

"[This work] offers a real challenge in emphasizing the need to examine critically and perceptively the mass of information generated by the United Nations and to search other relevant sources. The challenge is defined in presenting a comprehensive systems analysis as a framework in which to bring to bear all the talents and skills of a multidisciplinary approach to international politics. Its suggestions for further research should enable us to develop the standards for judging the roles and actions of the United Nations and provide forecasts of future roles for the Organization." W. J. Bruce

Am Pol Sci R 66:676 Je '72 1000w

"A common conception of the U.N. as a subsystem within the world political environment is the unifying element among the six new essays presented here. . . . The volume is refreshingly free of jargon and intrusive methodological argument. . . . [It] is a useful vehicle for bridging the gap between descriptive and theoretical materials in international relations. More importantly, it affords an excellent means for infusing new vitality into courses on international organizations." Choice 8:1512 Ja '72 200w

"All the authors are concerned with the need for the systematic application of scholarly analysis to the work of the UN so as to form a factual basis for future policies. Their work represented here points to the road such scholarship should take." Jean Deuss

Library J 96:3330 O 15 '71 130w

GORDON, ERIC. Freedom is a word. 350p 11 $7.95 Morrow

951.05 Political prisoners. China (People's Republic of China)
LC 79-166347

This "is a report by a young British Communist of his life and experiences in Peking. He was hired by the Chinese to 'polish' their foreign propaganda. He tells of his experiences from February 1965 to October 1969. Trying to leave in 1967, he ran afoul of the police for smuggling notes on the Cultural Revolution, and was detained for another two years. He is a trained Communist, still devoted to the Marxist-Leninist philosophy, and at first was enthralled at the successes of communism in China. He was soon disenchanted, however, by the deification of Mao." (America)

"This is the first personal report of the Cultural Revolution that this reviewer has seen by someone now in a position to write what he thinks. It is devastating and indeed frightening, and should be read by every student of Communist activity—and that should mean every worthy voter." W. T. Foley

America 126:326 Mr 25 '72 220w

"[This] narrative is a conglomeration of cloak and dagger, cops and robbers, and, for those who like their villains a bit on the style of the high hat and curling black mustache, this is the right book. After reading 'Freedom Is a Word,' almost any person will appreciate just getting out of the house to make the weekly trip to the supermarket." Al Phillips

Best Sell 32:14 Ap 1 '72 230w

Reviewed by R. S. Haas
Library J 97:1704 My 1 '72 220w
Reviewed by Anita Iceman
Library J 97:2496 Jl '72 180w [YA]
N Y Times Bk R p34 Ap 9 '72 170w

GORDON, GEORGE N. Persuasion; the theory and practice of manipulative communication. (Communication arts bks; Studies in public communication) 558p $16.50; pa $10 Hastings house

301.15 Communication
ISBN 8038-5774-8; 8038-5777-2 (pa)
LC 78-163184

This work "draws together both the history of persuasion as an historical facet of civilization and current practice, and the speculation concerning its many manifestations in modern life. Against a background of centuries of religious, educational and national influences, current sociological and psychological dynamics of, first, unstructured and, second, institutionalized persuasive aspects of culture are explained, analyzed and discussed. . . . The volume also includes a . . . section on the persuasive aspects of contemporary communications relevant to such . . . issues as violence, the revolt of youth, women's rights, Black power, pornography, censorship, advertising, public relations and the propaganda of professional prophesy." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"One would expect a volume on persuasion to be logically organized and that it would be able to convey to the reader what the author is attempting to say. But this is not the case. The volume is a bag of rhetorical acrobatics, wallowing in oozing flab. . . . [The table of contents] weaves in and out of ideas that have no apparent relationship, one to the other. . . . [The author] should learn how to communicate." E. L. Bernays
Ann Am Acad 402:184 Jl '72 390w

"Gordon has strong opinions and uses footnotes extensively to buttress them. His book is not easily compared with others in the communications 'field.' He may not have the stature at present of Kenneth Burke, Susan Langer, or David Riesman, but his work is in their rich and provocative vein. A book for adventurous minds, one to dwell on and to quarrel with, to enjoy and to learn from."
Choice 9:248 Ap '72 120w

GORDON, HAROLD J. Hitler and the beer hall putsch [by] Harold J. Gordon, Jr. 666p il $19.50 Princeton univ. press 943.085 Germany—Politics and government—1918-1933. Hitler, Adolf
ISBN 0-691-05189-5 LC 70-154997

The author evaluates the unsuccessful attempt of the Hitler-led National Socialist party to seize control of the Bavarian government in 1923. Gordon analyzes "the events leading up to the Putsch, the ideologies and people struggling for power in Bavaria in 1923, the Putsch itself, and its aftermath." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The roots of the Nazi military thrust, in the most extensive historical accounting to date. The focus on many moments of high drama, helps the reader through the detail-maze."
Christian Century 89:1106 N 1 '72 30w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Barraclough
N Y Rev of Books 19:32 N 2 '72 600w

"[In 1923 Bavaria was] a stamping ground of the diverse terror gangs and ultra-nationalist groups known as the 'Patriotic Movement.' . . . [The failure of] the Munich putsch . . . rashly conceived, ill-prepared and bungled in execution . . . [became] the starting point of [Hitler's] 10-year climb to power. As such it obviously merits careful attention, and this is what Gordon . . . has given it. . . . Professor Gordon is particularly interested in the class composition of the early Nazi party. . . . Another concern of the author is the . . . approach of historians who treat the Patriotic Movement simply as a predecessor of Nazism. He views it sui generis, but his findings will, I fear, interest few people other than subject specialists. . . . He sees the bungling of the putsch as infinitely beneficial to the Nazi cause." Richard Grunberger
N Y Times Bk R p54 O 29 '72 500w

GORDON, JOHN E., Jr. auth. The Khanna study. See Wyon, J. B.

GORDON, THEODORE J., Jr. ed. Ahead of time. See Harrison, H.

GORKI, MAXIM. Fragments from my diary; tr. by Moura Budberg. 265p $3.95 Praeger 891.7
LC 77-185595

To this previously published work the translator has added an introduction and new material. This volume contains notes the Russian author had composed portraying unknown peasants, shepherds, petty merchants and eccentrics. Other pieces concern political and social topics such as poetry, revolution, anti-semitism and war. Part of these fragments have never been published because of censorship. For the first edition see BRD 1924.

"[This volume] contains brief anecdotes collected during the years 1922-24. . . . This excellent translation by Baroness Budberg, who was a lifelong friend of Gorki, adds some fresh material and brings a new dimension to some of the original pieces. Entries range from long tales that are virtually short stories to brief vignettes condensed into a single paragraph. Their strength lies in the superb characterization, the vigorous prose and the evocation of a Russian past that seems light years away from Sputnik. . . . In the portraits that emerge, one can see a people disappointed in the purported freedoms they enjoy, a frustrated people not yet converted to anger. . . . Gorki originally intended to call this volume The Book of Russians as They Have Been, and he consciously attempted to preserve an era he foresaw as finished." R. T. Reilly

America 127:211 S 23 '72 650w

Reviewed by Charles Bazerman
Nation 215:537 N 27 '72 1350w

"A varied, luxuriously intelligent collection of vignettes and anecdotes about pre- and post-Revolutionary Russians. . . . The title is misleading; little of Gorki's private life is conveyed here. But the bilious tramps, the mystical peasants, the pyromaniacs, and the erudite obsessive cynics that fascinated him are here in force—all complaining as usual, worrying about God, and consoling themselves with tea, toast, and cherry jam. The translation is excellent."
New Yorker 48:196 N 4 '72 110w

GORKI, MAXIM. The life of a useless man; tr. by Moura Budberg. 240p $6.95 Doubleday
LC 71-144254

"Yevsey Klimkov, the protagonist [is] orphaned at seven and through inertia and cupidity a czarist police informer, and inept at that. . . . His blundering espionage machinations are set against the background of the Revolution and general strike of 1905, and the attempts of the czarist regime to track down liberal and revolutionary elements." (Library J) This book "was written in 1907 and the first third of the novel appeared in a periodical, Znanie, in St Petersburg in 1908. . . . The entire book was printed in Russia in 1914 but was not allowed to be published. . . . The book was finally published with lacunae in 1917. This is the first full translation of the Russian text which Gorki completed and revised before his death." (Pref)

Reviewed by J. J. McAleer
America 125:561 D 25 '71 380w

Choice 9:222 Ap '72 120w

"Klimkov is possibly the most loathsome anti-hero in modern fiction: slow-witted, cowardly, and morally impotent. . . . This is one of the more provocative compelling of Gorki's many novels, and it is good to have it in an intelligent, readable, contemporary translation." Rosemary Neiswender

Library J 96:3345 O 15 '71 120w

"[Gorki's novel] has been faithfully translated by his close friend and one-time secretary Moura Budberg. Revolutionary Russia is here obliquely seen in a provincial town through the eyes of a wretched, dull-witted government spy, Yevsey Klimkov, the 'useless man' of the wholly unironic title: to decent human beings Klimkov is repellent and unnecessary, and to the police he serves, easily expendable. Gorki draws him full length, and in damning him, damns his country." Helen Muchnic

N Y Rev of Books 18:37 Mr 23 '72 650w
Newsweek 78:71 S 6 '71 550

GORKI, MAXIM—Continued

"By 1917, forces more powerful than literature had swept away the regime Gorki had excoriated in this novel, and now it can be of interest to us only as a stage in his literary and ideological development. . . . No amount of cruelty could dissuade him that men were essentially good, but he clung to no simple dogma to explain why they were often the reverse. By the time Gorki wrote [this novel] some of the compassion and much of the uncertainty were gone. He held the sources of human waste and destruction lay with the tsarist regime, just as he was certain that virtue resided with the revolutionaries who were trying to overthrow that regime. His novel is a chronicle of such waste and an indictment of the destroyers." Edward Wasiolek

Sat R 54:59 O 16 '71 850w

GORKIN, MICHAEL. Border kibbutz. 247p $6.95 Grosset

335 Collective settlements—Israel
ISBN 0-448-00686-3 LC 73-172023

This book "examines both life in a kibbutz under constant military harassment and the gropings of an American Jew trying to understand his own relationship with the ideals of the kibbutz and Israel itself. Gorkin went to Israel in 1970 with a religious indifference and a New Left dislike for Israeli policy. During his five-month stay he remained critical of the . . . residents of the kibbutzim, but gained sympathy for their personal tragedies, from Russian programs to Nazi death camps to Israel's three wars with her Arab neighbors." (Library J)

"[Gorkin's] colorful and readable portraits of his friends and experiences stress particularly the communal raising of children and the democratic process of working and decision making. Somewhat superficial, this book does convey the author's growing appreciation of the strength and dedication of the people and his hesitant decision to make his life with them." E. R. Hayford

Library J 97:1030 Mr 15 '72 140w

"[The author] conveys the reality of post-war Israel . . . brilliantly. He does it mainly through compassionate but critical vignettes of kibbutzniks he meets. . . . In the tight kibbutz society . . . criticism is perceived as treason. For example, Victor, a South African Jew . . . at the beginning of the Six Day War told several friends that he thought Israel was the aggressor. After that, he was treated as an apostate. . . . Toward the end of the book [Gorkin] confesses, 'I was becoming bigoted. I no longer tried to see the Arab point of view'. . . . Yet he is too honest a reporter to let those emotions blind him. . . . He writes freely out of the tensions and confusions inside himself, and that's what makes his book so very powerful." Paul Cowan

N Y Times Bk R p10 D 26 '71 700w

GORKY, MAXIM. See Gorki, M.

GORMAN, JOSEPH B. Kefauver: a political biography. 434p il $10 Oxford

B or 92 Kefauver, Estes. U.S.—Politics and government—20th century
ISBN 0-19-501481-2 LC 77-159645

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by J. J. Huthmacher
Am Hist R 77:1181 O '72 550w
Choice 8:1637 F '72 140w

Reviewed by R. W. Schwarz
Library J 97:490 F 1 '72 100w

Reviewed by Ernest Gruening
Nation 214:88 Ja 17 '72 750w
TLS p264 Mr 10 '72 200w
Va Q R 48:xi winter '72 170w

GORNEY, RODERIC. The human agenda. 698p $12.95 Simon & Schuster

301 Man. Social psychology. Evolution. Civilization, Modern
ISBN 671-21049-1 LC 70-156147

This work "is concerned with the evolution of human values, man's specific tool for adaptation and survival. [Gorney] attempts to examine the processes that have produced the universe and to trace man's efforts to understand them. The book is divided into four sections: the first traces evolution in general; the second examines the characteristics of human love, work, and play, past and present, and projects them into the future; the third appraises a number of alternative themes for value systems of the future . . . and the fourth summons up some implications of the material presented. The author [also] discusses some of the past and current views on man's nature." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is] a protracted, almost endless statement by an eminent psychiatrist about what he thinks and feels about practically everything, ranging through anatomy, anthropology, archaeology, biology, chemistry, economics, ethnology, psychiatry, psychology—you name it. But the author is not over-gifted with the power of synthesis, whatever his occasionally penetrating insights, and the reader frequently hasn't a clue where he is. . . . Yet there is charm through the whole thing: perhaps my problem with the work is that it is more of a friendly conversation than a straight treatment of a weighty subject. It might be an excellent livre de chevet. Certainly no stranger is going to read the whole thing, except a book reviewer." Edward Gannon

Best Sell 32:168 J1 1 '72 400w

"Writing as an optimistic rationalist, with a liberal or humanist religious viewpoint . . . [Gorney] succeeds in making a good deal of sense of human history, together with a challenging prognosis. . . . Pleasantly colloquial, for a well read and and thoughtful general audience."

Choice 9:1166 N '72 170w

"[Gorney's] own view is one of considered optimism; he disagrees in particular with the theories of both Storr and Lorenz: that aggression is the instinctual basis of all human attempts to master reality. He has drawn on a sizable amount of material, mostly popular, some scientific. The book lacks the sheer impact of Alvin Toffler's Future Shock [BRD 1970], but it is fascinating reading." Lelde Gilman

Library J 97:689 F 15 '72 200w

"In this book Gorney, a practicing psychoanalyst and professor of psychiatry at UCLA, has in a sense put man on the couch, tracing him back to the beginning of evolution in order to chart a safe course to the future. . . . Gorney's prose tends to ramble but it does emit flashes of insight. . . . In a fascinating section, 'The Quest for Blondness,' he attempts to demonstrate a parallel between white man's worshipful attitude toward blondes and his racial fear and hatred of blacks. . . . Gorney believes man is on the threshold of a brave new world . . . [which] raises profound moral issues. . . . [He] has achieved an intellectually impressive work, and it is an undeniably important one. But I would like to hear more from him on the new moral imperatives. If we are to live in a society of benign—one hopes—monsters, we deserve to know who's going to be Dr. Frankenstein." Arthur Cooper

Newsweek 79:100 Je 12 '72 1050w

GOSSMAN, LIONEL. French society and culture; background for 18th century literature. 149p $6.95 Prentice-Hall

914.4 France—Intellectual life. Eighteenth century. France—Social conditions
ISBN 0-13-331293-4 LC 75-172404

The author "has attempted to focus on non-literary aspects of the French Enlightenment—i.e. history, economics, philosophy, and sociology. . . . Tracing the formation of the 18th century through its 17th-century antecedents, Gossman discusses a . . . range of nonliterary subjects from class structure to capitalism to Descartes and Locke, and includes numerous literary statements from Voltaire, Diderot, Montesquieu, Meslier, et al." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

